TRIBUTE TO MAY KAPLAN

(BI-CENTENNIAL CHAIRMAN)

Our genial and capable chairman of the Bi-Centennial Committee deserves special consideration.

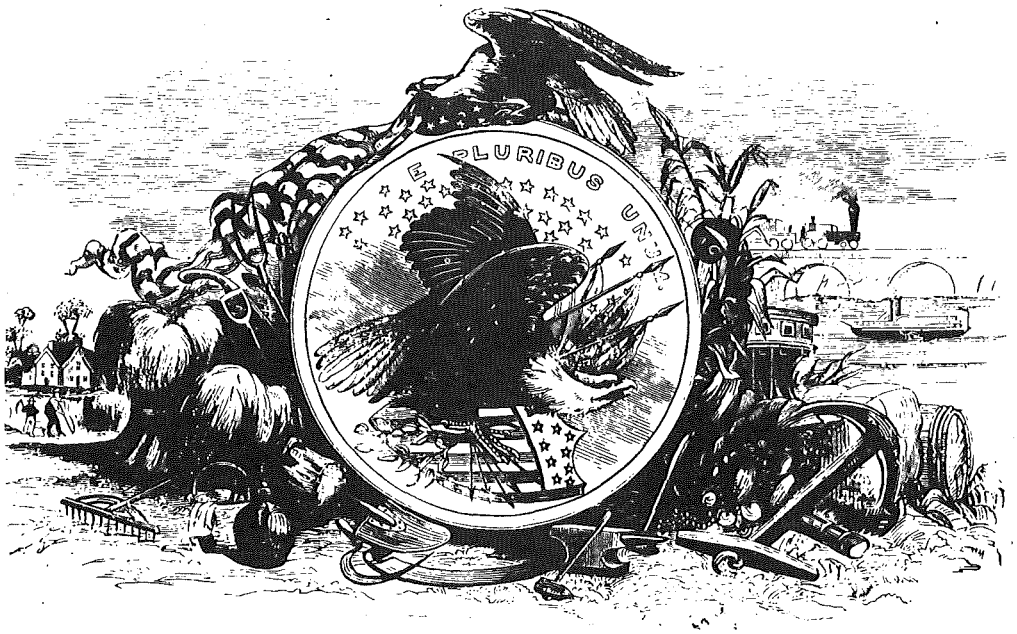
Her time, energy, interest and patriotic attitude relates to all that promotes the progress and execution of this great birthday celebration of our country. Her qualities reflect the endurance, the patience, the integrity and the faithfulness of the American pioneer. She also has the distinction of being an all "A" student — from kindergarten through high school.

Part of her Americanism is manifested in the tenacity she has shown in maintaining an independent enterprise throughout the years.

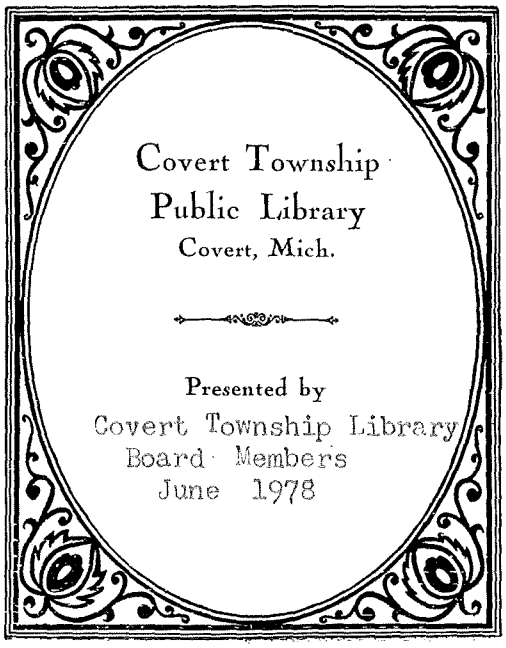
Trite, but true, — "If you want the job done — ask a busy person!"

A PRAYER FOR OUR COUNTRY

O Christ, Strong Son of God, who art always speaking to man and showing Thyself among us, we pray this day for a blessing for our country. Make her strong in her devotion to truth. Make her great in her desire for honor. Make her wise in her labors with the nations of men. Make her trustful in more than armed might. Make her ready to sacrifice all else, but never righteousness or virtue. Strengthen our leaders that they may walk with Thee as they carry burdens of responsibility. Strengthen our people that in honorable service and humble spirit we may bring peace by doing Thy will. Judge of the nations, spare us yet by Thy mercy, Thy love and Thy peace. Amen.



Dedicated to the Pioneers of Decatur Michigan



PREFACE

Arba N. Moulton, dedicated editor of the Decatur Republican for fifty-four years, had vision and prudence in preserving historical stories, letters, diaries, informative articles, etc. for the oncoming generations. Much of local history could have been lost to posterity had it not been for his constant effort and influence in persuading the older citizens to write their memoirs and stories which had historical significance for Decatur. Because the Decatur Republicans at the time were replete in local and area history, the library of the University of Michigan was eager to obtain his files.

It is our purpose in researching the material from the files of the local paper to preserve this history, in part. Thus it is hoped that the painstaking work of Arba Moulton shall not have been in vain. He leaves a rich heritage for the future generations of our community. This has been the motivating reason for the compilation of this book. Those who know the village best will, therefore, enjoy these pages most. The publication is designed chiefly for their enjoyment, and it would fail in its purpose if it were less intimate.

The files of the Decatur Republican are not readily accessible to the general public — for obvious reasons. Practically all of the issues of the Republican are recorded on micro-film in the Webster Library for the use of the general public; however, few people seem to appreciate the privilege of using this facility.

Most of the articles in this book have been taken from the files exactly as they were printed — primarily to preserve the archaic style in which many of them were written. We ask your kindly indulgence if the full story of certain events has not been included. We trust that all who read this book will have a further knowledge and a deeper appreciation of the courageous sacrifices that were made by our forefathers.

Catherine M. Howland

I know of no way of judging the future but by the past.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The publication of this history could not have been accomplished without the generosity and cooperation of the editor — David Moorman — who permitted us to research the files of the Republican.

Grateful acknowledgement is due Robert Traverse and his son, Kim Traverse, for their professional help, which was invaluable in the preparation of this book; also, grateful acknowledgement is due Willma Spaulding Sink for her advice and assistance regarding specific sections of the book.

I also wish to express my gratitude to the following people who contributed to this publication: Betty Kemp Traverse, Louis G. Hall, Theresa Arbanas Grahek, Paul Lohroff, Helen Olson Lohroff, Walter Squier William Stewart, Marian Lyle Stewart, William Beek, Isabelle Orr McLeese, Robert Orr, Elmer (Red) Wolfe, Winna Reynolds Wolfe, Bert Kidman, Marion Davis, Joseph Winchester, Gaylord Miller, Lowell Mattox, James Abshagen, Sabina Arnold, Florence Earl Goens, Marjorie Thomas Helmer, Wilton Abrams, Helen C. DECATUR GOT NAME FROM NAVAL HERO

Decatur, Mich., Aug. 2.—The village and township of Decatur were named for Commodore Stephen Decatur, ranking captain of the United States Navy and renowned as the hero of Tripoli before his twenty-sixth birthday. He served in the War of 1812, adding to the reputation he had gained in the war with the Algerian pirates.

He was killed in a duel in 1820, more than 17 years before Decatur township was organized, but his memory remained bright in the minds of his countrymen. The youthful hero's name was chosen as typifying the spirit of the West.

INTRODUCTION

In 1834-47, the area, now called Decatur, was a wilderness. Early wanderers found it to be prime territory for hunting and fishing. The fish in Pickeral Lake were plentiful, and wolves, deer and all kinds of small game animals lived in the forests. Occasionally the larger animals wandered into the center of what is now Decatur.

The early publications — Decatur Tribune, Decatur Clarion, Van Buren County Republican and the Decatur Independent, published little of local interest in this community. The weekly issues contained topics of national or international scope, consequently few articles have been chosen from those printings.

The partial illegibility of many of the pages in this book is due to our inability to procure a sharp reproduction of old newsprint on the Xerox machine. In no way is the defection the fault, or inaccuracy of the printers or the photographers.

The following are some of the novel things that occurred in the year of 1839.

1. Wooden clocks had been in use only one year.
2. The mass abolition party was organized.
3. The banks in U.S. resumed specie payment.
4. 50 years ago the daguerreotype was invented in France.
5. The Mormons were driven from Missouri to Naurow, Illinois.
6. John C. Fremont and Jessie Benton were secretly married.
7. Beet sugar was first made by Dave L. Child of Northhampton, Mass.
8. J. Ericsson was allowed letters patent on a steam "propeller" boat.
9. The first patent was granted to Goodyear for vulcanized India rubber goods.
10. First Community College "Comer's College" of Boston.
11. First wheat was shipped from Chicago, amounting to 78 bushels. It was sent eastward by lakes to Buffalo.
12. The first power loom for weaving carpets was set in motion by E.B. Bigelow of Boston — ten yds. a day was its original capacity.
13. The Whig party held its first convention at Harrisburg, Pa. nominating Gen. Wm. Harrison of Ohio as president of U.S.
14. The first R.R. spike machine was put into use, making 50 a minute, forming both point and head. Henry Burden of Troy, N.Y. was inventor. It ranked among the best paying inventions of modern times.
15. The population of U.S. was only 17,697,420. The census cost the government $833,427. There were slaves in all the states except Main, Mass., Vt. and Mich.

HUYCKTOWN IN 1861

Let's take a few items out of that diary. "Tuesday, July 16, Howe, Breed and Halligan cradled and Ashly, North and Alva took up. I shocked." They harvested ten acres that day, the seven of them. Then he tells about a saw mill, grist mill, canning mill and cider mill but makes no mention of any divorce mill. Married folks just endured each other and raised large families in big homes. Now the family is rapidly growing less and the little home is just a place to return to when we are too tired to go any place else. Mr. Huyck took the grist to Whitmanville and got ten pounds of wool carded. Raised four kinds of wheat, the Boyd, California, Bald Mediteranian and Soules. Later they raised Diehl and Fultz. The first ice-making machine was invented that year. Peddlers came along nearly every day. Kept a couple over night and fed their team. $1.00. Took it in medicine.

In those days our watches, clothing, clocks, dishes, cutlery, harness, and many other things came from England. Those Britons were then very rich and dominated industry, commerce, finance, ruling the sea with an iron hand. They don't now. Too much beef, beer and snobbery maybe. Only a few people could stand up under great wealth and no nation ever did it. Shirt sleeve to shirt sleeve, who are happier and better, the rich or the poor?

Mr. H. in the fall of 1861 sold his pears to Mr. Wallace of Decatur at $1.00 a bushel. Got some fruit jars from Mr. Foglesong, the potter. Rained half the time during September making it hard to sow wheat and cut corn. Sold some wheat to Mr. Rawson for $.87. Some to Dolphin Morris for $.86 and some to Mr. Phelps for $.84. Sold a cow hide to Holden Wing, $1.50. Borrowe money of Billy Goodspeed to pay balance o saw mill. Paid Bennett Copley. Ira Ashley dug well and it caved in.

But how we superior males did razz the females because they ruined their health and looked like the devil with wasp waisted corsets, several heavy skirts, big hoops, bustles, balloon sleeves and hair and hats fussed up with nets, ribbons, feathers, jewelry, and artificial posies. We men folks were perfect. Chewed Navy Plug, smoked fine-cut in a clay or cob pipe, cussed and got drunk. Now the women are more sensible. Dressed healthily and prettible and think they excel us in many ways. Pish, tush and oddsbodkins! Don't we still wear the collars to keep the air away? 'Course we drink a little moonshine, bootleg because it is dangerous, and expensive but we have refined our other habits. Nobody knows what we smoke but it satisfies just the same as any dope does. It satisfies the trust that cleans up sixty millions a year. Tans our fingers and maybe the lungs and heart also. Gives a little hacking cough but what of it? We wise men know what we want, I guess.

J.E. Goble showed me the old piccola played by the pretty little Jay DeMoss in the 60's in the pouplar dance orchestra led by the tall, clever and E.Z. Stuyvesant. Perry Young skillfully played second violin and prompted Dollar a couple including supper at midnight.

There were scrub dances around the country but I cannot recall the names of the widow's son who fiddled but I think one of them was —

ON THE DEATH OF AN OLD INDIAN

By John C. Wright

An ag'ed brave and his mush'ke mood —
Splitter of splints and cutter of wood —
Many's the time, on a log for a chair,
I've watched him while making his baskets rare.
They've laid him to rest in the sand by the shore,
And claim he has gone to return no more.

Epitaph

To my call there is no answer,
But his spirit has not gone —
It dwelleth in the forest
And greets me there at dawn;
It lingers in the maples,
It murmurs in the stream,
I hear it in the branches,
It whispers in my dream;
It fills all living creatures.
With simple faith each day —
His spirit lives on ev'ry hill
And will not pass away.

Unreconstructed

I'll give ya all the jazz bands;
They don't sound as good to me
As a whippoorwill a-crying
In a drooping willow tree.
These new lights ain't so pretty
As the moonlight in the lane,
Where cows are waiting peacful,
And lamplight through the pane.

LETTERS WRITTEN BY A SOLDIER OF THE CIVIL WAR

John Bennett at the front to his wife in Decatur Camp on the bank of the high town river twelve miles south of Kindston June 5th, 1864

Dear Wife,

This is the south fork of the two rivers that form the Coosa River. We have been in camp here three days recruiting our horses. Where we go next I don't know, but I hope it is to Atlanta.

Our army extends about twenty miles in length. The right extends sixteen miles east of the railroad to a place called Dollar, the left wing four miles west of the railroad, so we show a front of twenty miles and the whole length of that line is filled with the best men of the north.

This line is drawn by the Rebs to whip us or die. This ground that they are holding is the Antoone (or Altoona Mountains) one of the worst places they could have chosen. The hills are very high, covered thick with bushes. There are several gaps or passes, but every one is well guarded and the hills are well fortified.

We have got to lose lots of men to drive them out of those hills, but it must and will be done, and in my opinion the Rebel army here will never make another stand. There is a rumor that Rosecrans has come with fifty-five thousand men. If so we will surround and whip them 'til they say enough.

The country along the river is level and fine, best I have seen, but the hills are good for nothing, just a vast forest of trees and bushes. Very few families live there and they have to leave now.

Whenever there is a fight one can see women and children crying, nearly scared to death, holding up their hands to us for protection, little ones with fear and hunger. There are thousands of women and children, crying for bread at sight of our men.

The rich people have gone farther south and taken all they could and the armies take the rest. May God help them for man will not.

We had a gay old dinner yesterday, new potatoes and sweet peas. The weather is hotter here than it is at home in August. It will burn the hair off a dog's back. Rain last night and cooler today.

THE FIRST DECATUR HIGH SCHOOL & ITS FIRST ENTERTAINMENT

By R.H. Lyon – 1865

Rumaging through an old chest in my den recently I came across an interesting souvenir of boyhood days in the shape of a program of the first exhibition given by the pupils of the Decatur High School. It is an insignificant scrap of paper, brown with age, yet a precious relic to me as scanning it I see faces of merry troop of boys and girls and there is brought to mind delightful memories of long ago.

I watched with pride the first high school building of the village grow from its stone foundation to what seemed to me a magnificent seat of learning although it was then when complete but half its present size. Again I was more than proud to be placed on the scholership roll at the organization of the school in 1864. It is not to be presumed that any of the pupils of the Decatur High School at the present day are aware that I am the "star" scholar, the original, the alpha of the list, the first on the roll of membership of the first session of school 40 years ago, but such is the historical fact. I was assigned to seat No. 1 in the northeast corner of the upper room and my seat mate was W. Scott Beebe, who afterwards became prominent in political and legal circles of the state of Oregon. Across the aisle sat Morris Foster with Ike Monroe, both of whom made good records upon leaving school, the first as a lawyer, the other as a banker. Nearby was Tompkie Riddle and Will Tuttle, the former the poet of the school, the latter still an honored resident of Decatur and was one of the most diligent and sedate of students. Not far away was John R. Carr, lawyer and jurist; then Bert Cole, no courriers at Paw Paw; Chas. Baker, Lon Lyle, Eugene Dunbar, Walter Crittendon, Riley Foster and others whose name I do not recall.

On the girl's side what a bevey of bewitching beauty and brilliant bunch of talent was there! Lottie Cole, Nellie Beattie (Mrs. John Collins) her sister, Fannie Beattie, now Mrs. A.W. Rogers, Ella Dodge, Percy Nash, Libbie Baker, Emma Dodge, Fannie Trowbridge and dozens of others who have passed out of mind.

The first principal of the school was Prof. C.F.R. Bellows, a grand man, a fine scholar and a thorough teacher in every respect. He afterward made his mark as a leading educator of Michigan, was the author of several leading text books and became principal of the State Normal institution of Ypsilanti.

But here I have been wandering among the cobwebs of the past with out saying anything of the exhibition which I started out to describe. The show indeed, marked a great event in the history of Decatur. A stage was built across one corner of the high school and fitted up with borrowed furniture, pictures and other adornments to represent a cozy parlor. A curtain of gay calico fastened to brass rings and strung on a tight wire served to shield the parlor from the audience, a door opened into the hall — latter being the dressing room. Professor Bellows officiated as state manager and curtain puller.

Decatur at that time had no printing office and the announcement for the exhibition was through the medium of little circulars of note size distribution through the village. They were printed at the Van Fossen office at Paw Paw and gave notice that the exhibition was given for the purpose of raising funds towards the purchase of a musical instrument for the school and that "a rich and varied scheme of exercises has been prepared and every provision made for a highly interesting and profitable entertainment." The program was a success; it began at the appointed hour and kept things moving to the end.

I well remember with what pleasure and enthusiasm Prof. Bellows received each number on the program for every number was a success. I distinctly recall that after I had delivered myself of the thrilling Webstirian sentiment of "Liberty & Union, one and Inseparable now and forever," and timed to go off the stage my eyes met the undignified spectacle of the professor lying on a lounge in one corner out of sight of the audience and kicking his heels in the air like a boy tickled all over. He flew up and startled me with a most affectionate hug, and a moment later was out in front in solemn mien announcing the next number on the program.

My school days ended abruptly in a few weeks following this famous exhibition when in early May with Will Tuttle I entered the employ of Rev. Moses Hull who started a weekly newspaper in Decatur called the Clarion. I contracted the newspaper disease then from which I have never fully recovered. For thirty years I have been connected with the South Bend Ind. Daily Tribune, most of the time in an editorial capacity. The Clarion dragged out a sickly existence for a year and a half, then peacefully departed this life. In 1867 Prof. Bellows & E.A. Blackman established the Decatur Republican which they conducted jointly for a few yars when the professor sold out to Mr. Blackman and returned to Ypsilanti.

I have not attempted in this brief article to give anything like a complete story of the exhibition or of the history of the school of that day but would be glad if some other member of the class of 1865 would take up the thread of reminiscence and continue with tales in later issues of the Republican.

FLOUR-DEALER.

DON C. ROGERS

He was born in Cincinnatus, New York, 1833. The following is an account of his war record:

"Hearing that the U.S. flag on Fort Sumpter was at half mast, I immediately opened my office for enlistments. I enlisted in 1861 at Decatur, Michigan. At that time I was deputy sheriff of Van Buren Co. and had my office with Hiram Cole, Attorney. Being Sunday, I had started for church when I met Carlton Wheeler and Orren T. Welch who were talking about General Scott being too old to take command of the army in the field. Just at this time Mr. Richardson stepped up and said that 'Jeff Davis was as good a man as General Scott.' I said, 'You should know better,' and knocked him off the sidewalk, saying, 'The war might as well commence in Decatur as in Charleston.' He got up and said that he 'would go home and get his gun and shoot me.' Henry Chamberlain was near by and told him it was 'all right to go home and as soon as he got there to go to bed — not to come up town with a gun as he might lose both his life and gun.' I went to my office and headed a sheet of foolscap paper for the war and signed my name to it, Chamberlain doing the same. Did not attend church — talked war and got a few boys to sign my paper."

May 1, 1861 — "The Lafayette Light Guards of Paw Paw was reorganized and we at Decatur joined the new organization. May 6, we went into camp at the fair grounds and had our first night's rest on straw. During May we drilled and prepared for war."

COURT HOUSE AND COUNTY OFFICES, VAN BUREN CO., PAW PAW, MICH.

DECATUR.

The first settlement in Van Buren County, was made in what is now in the township of Decatur, on Little Prairie Ronde, in 1829. On the 26th day of March, of that year, Dolphin Morris and Henry D. Swift were guided thither by one Squire Thompson, of Pokagon Prairie. Dolphin Morris settled on the farm which he now occupies, and Swift selected the farm now owned by LeGrand Anderson. For two years they were the only settlers in the County. About the year 1832, Samuel Morris, brother of Dolphin, LeGrand Anderson, David Curry and George Tittle, settled in the neighborhood, and in 1833, one Eckenberger, a hunter and trapper, settled on the place known as the old Charles farm. The year 1835 brought Thomas Scott, Wm. Wilson, Joseph VanHise and McKinster, to the settlement, and after that time the township filled up rapidly.

Many anecdotes of thrilling interest are related by the survivors of those primitive days. How they fought with poverty and wrestled with famine and destitution, how when starvation stared them in the face, the very elements took sides against them, and how nearly they fell victims to the blighting frosts and destructive storms of those unproductive seasons, how they stood in peril of wild beasts and how they were menaced by Indians, are all themes upon which those gray haired and honored pioneers love to dilate.

In December, 1830, death came to the settlement and removed a son of Dolphin Morris.

The first wedding was that of Elijah Goble to Miss Eliza Tittle; the first birth was that of Jonathan Curry.

Of the pioneers we have mentioned. Dolphin Morris and LeGrand Anderson still survive, and in a hale old age, enjoy the fruits of their early privation and toil. But the visitor of today, at Little Prairie Ronde, partaking of their generous hospitality, and viewing their princely estates, embodying all the material comforts and blessings of life, finds it difficult to carry his imagination back to the time when his host wrestled with privation and had very nearly his match in keeping the wolf from the door. Nevertheless, the retrospect is profitable, and it is meet that we should ever hold in grateful remembrance those who paved the way for the comfortable times which we enjoy to-day. When we go to bed in a palace sleeping car for a comfortable sleep to wake up in Detroit, let us not forget that, to them, this was a perilous and toilsome journey of weeks. And when we take a cushioned seat, upon steel springs, for a pleasant drive upon a plank road across the swamp, let us go back forty years and remember those who waded that swamp with bare feet in imminent peril of the deadly moccasin and massasauga. The independent farmer of to-day who walks with complacent pride among his well stabled and well fed flocks and herds, his granaries and cribs, his storehouse full of agricultural implements with all the modern improvements, will feel his complacency enhanced by contrast if he will but let his memory go back to the days of the sickle and the wooden plowshare, to the times when flocks and herds and crops were alike shelterless, and grain was beaten out of its husk with a flail, or trodden out by oxen with only the bare earth for a threshing floor. And if inclined to smile at the primitive johnny cake manufactured from corn, cracked with a wooden pestle, in a hollow excavated in a stump, let it be a reverent smile, for it was those early struggles and toils and privations of our grandfathers and grandmothers which made possible those beautifully white wheaten loaves from Abbott & Mathews' best XXX superfine which we so enjoy to-day.

The first school taught in the county was opened in 1835 in the house of Dolphin Morris, with about twenty pupils. It was taught by Wm. Alexander, a Virginian and a relative of Le Grand Anderson.

The Methodists were the first religious denomination to gain a foothold in the county. They held their first quarterly meeting at the house of George Tittle on the 27th of July 1834.

The primitive character of the dwellings of the early settlers may be inferred from the fact that no mill for the manufacture of lumber was built until 1846. In that year Hubbel Warner built one in the south-western part of the town.

For years the nearest grist mill was at Niles.

The year 1832 seems to have been one of peculiar trial to the early settlers. In the spring of that year the corn having been twice destroyed by frost, Dolphin Morris sent a man by the name of Kirkendall and John Tittle, a boy of fifteen, with a pack horse one hundred miles to Fort Defiance, on Maumee River, for two bushels of seed corn. They returned on Saturday night and on Sunday morning the settlers turned out en masse and planted it. That was the only corn raised in the settlement that year.

There was an Indian alarm in the spring of the same year, and the able bodied settlers were all ordered to report forthwith at Niles, armed and equipped and with ten days rations. It does not appear, however, that any of them lost their lives, or were detained from home for any great length of time.

In 1835 (June 20th) the settlement was again visited by a destructive frost.

Decatur and Porter were together organized as a township in the year 1837.

Porter was set off as a separate township about the yaer 1845.

The township of Decatur derives its name from our country's celebrated naval officer of that name. A belt of swamp land one and a half miles in breadth stretches across it from N. E. to S. W. This belt is heavily timbered with tamarack, black ash, etc., and is as yet almost entirely unimproved. With this exception the township has a fine soil and is in a good state of cultivation. There are a few sections of dry timbered land, but it originally consisted chiefly of openings. The soil is mostly sandy, productive and exceedingly easy of cultivation. About one-fourth of the township lies south-east of the belt of swamp and embraces a portion of Little Prairie Ronde. It is watered by Dowagiac creek and several lakes, the largest of which is called Lake of the Woods and lies partly in the township of Hamilton.

Decatur Village

The village of Decatur, the principal station on the Michigan Central Rail Road in Van Buren County, sprang into existence in response to the first scream of the locomotive in 1849. Previous to this, however, Chas. T. Tucker had settled on the present site of the village and built a house. This was in 1847. In 1848 L.R. Barker built a hotel on the site now occupied by Moore & Lisk, corner of Phelps and Sherwood streets. The following year the late Col. Phelps opened a store on the lot now occupied by the Downs House. For a year this was the only store in town. The first school house in the village was built in 1848. It was the building now fitted up and owned and occupied by the Baptist Society for religious worship. A school was opened with about twenty pupils, which was taught by Miss Sarah Cook in the winter of 1848-9.

The site of the village of Decatur was originally obtained of the U.S. Government by Messrs. Beers & Sherwood, of N.Y. City, in a grant to them of 5,000 acres. These gentlemen, though never residents of the place, seem to have left their impress upon it and to have, to some extent, given character to its institutions. In 1850 they built a steam saw mill in the south-western part of the village, on land now occupied by Anthony McKay. This mill was afterward converted into a distillery, which, in its turn, has happily disappeared, leaving only rank grass to mark the spott it once defiled.

In 1854 the present business centre of the village was occupied as follows: Ira Nash kept a dry goods store on the corner now occupied by Abbott Bro's. Trowbridge & Harris kept a general variety store on the corner now occupied by Aaron Hathaway; W.C. Tucker, a general variety store, on that now occupied by Trowbridge & Hill, and Henry Canoll, a drug store, where Higgins & Squiers now keep a grocery store.

The village was first incorporated by the Board of Supervisors in Oct. 1859, and afterward rechartered by the Legislature, by an act approved March 16th, 1861. The first president of the corporation was E. Parker Hill; the first Recorder, Orrin T. Welch. Since its incorporation the village has grown rapidly, and more especially since the close of the late war. Village lots have been and are in constant demand and new plots being constantly laid out and put in market. It is safe to say that no town on the line of the M.C.R.R. enjoys a greater degree of material prosperity. It now contains a population of two thousand five hundred.

Among its notable institutions there is none of which it is more justly proud than its Union Graded School. It consists of five departments and employs one male and five female teachers. The school building is a massive brick structure, occupying a most eligible site, overlooking the whole village, with ample and delightful play grounds ornamented with beautiful shade trees. A more particular account of the school, its organization and gradation will be found in its appropriate place in this book. The village contains four church edifices, viz: Presbyterian, Methodist, Universalist, and Baptist, and one (Catholic) in process of erection. It also cotains seven dry goods stores, two drug stores, six grocery and provision stores, two hardwares, three clothing stores, three shoe stores, four hotels, three harness shops, one banking house, two meat markets, one livery stable, one photographer, three millinery shops, four dress makers, two barber shops, one bakery, one flour and feed store and two jewelry stores. It has a first class printing office and weekly newspaper (Van Buren County Republican) a new and splendid flouring mill (Abbott & Matthews'), two planing mills, a stave factory, a heading factory a steam saw and grist mill, a tannery, cabinet shop and a carriage manufactory.

There are many institutions, enterprises and business operations in progress in the village that are deserving of especial notice and commendation, but lest the distinctions we might make should appear invidious we forbear. We have, however, taken the liberty of printing in capitals, in the village list, the names of those business men and women to whom the village is mainly indebted for its prosperity.

VAN BUREN COUNTY.

The county of Van Buren, at its first organization, was attached to the county of Cass, for judicial purposes, and was known as the township of La Fayette. A Supervisor was elected for the whole county, who met the Board of Supervisors in Cass, to transact the business of both counties, The two counties formed one Representative District, and sent two members to the Legislature.

The deeds and mortgages of lands in Van Buren were all recorded in Cass county — since recorded in this county at public expense — and all issues at law to be tried by the Circuit Court were tried before the Cass county court.

By an act of the Legislature, approved March 18th, 1837, Van Buren was detached from Cass, and the courts were held at such places as the Supervisors might select — and Paw Paw was selected. By an act of the Legislature approved March 6th, 1840, the county seat was located permanently at Paw Paw.

FIRST DIVISION INTO TOWNS.

By Legislative enactment, approved March 11th, 1837, the county was divided into seven towns, to-wit: Clinch, comprising the present towns of Pine Grove, Almena, Waverly and Bloomingdale; South Haven, South Haven, Deerfield, Geneva, Bangor and Columbia; Lawrence, Lawrence, Arlington and Harford; Covington, Keeler and Hamilton; Decatur, Decatur and Porter: LaFayette, Paw Paw; Antwerp, Antwerp.

The first election for county officers was held the first Monday in April, 1837, resulting as follows: Sheriff, Smauel Gunton, of Lawrence — Treasurer, Daniel O. Dodge, of Paw Paw — Clerk, N.B. Starkweather, of Lawrence — Register of Deeds, J.H. Simmons, of Paw Paw — Judge of Probate, J.H. Simmons, Paw Paw — Surveyor, H.P. Barnum, of Clinch — Associate Judges, Jay R. Monroe, of Lawrence; W.H. Keeler, of Covington — Coroners, Junia Warner, Jr., of Clinch; John R. Haynes, of Lawrence.

Samuel Gunton and D.O. Dodge having resigned, a special election was held September 20th, same year, and Col. Andrew Longstreet was elected Sheriff, and Joshua Bangs, Treasurer. The two latter were of Antwerp.

DISCIPLE CHURCH
Beginning 1855
(Elder Terry)

The Van Buren County Gazetteer published in 1869 says, "The village was first incorporated by the Board of Supervisors in 1859, and afterwards rechartered by the legislature by an act approved March 16, 1861. The first president of the corporation was E. Parker Hill and the first Recorder Orrin T. Welch. Since its incorporation the village has grown rapidly, and more especially since the close of the late war. Village lots have been and are in constant demand and new plots are constantly being laid out and put in market. It is safe to say that no town on the line of the Michigan Central enjoys a greater degree of material prosperity. It now contains a population of 2,500."

The last paragraph of the above quotation has been the basis for considerable argument over the population of the village. The Gazetteer states plainly enough that the village contained 2,500 inhabitants in those years of its greatest prosperity, but there is considerable evidence that the writers were mistaken in their statement and should have included the township of Decatur with the village in reporting 2,500. Principal Henry Houseman, who has made a study of local history, states positively that this is true, and if he is correct it can be easily verified by access to the records in the county clerk's office.

The Van Buren County Gazetteer was compiled by Delos Hill, son of the first president of the village, and Eddie Leavens, and printed by E. A. Blackman, editor and publisher of the Republican. It was a big undertaking and the three young men did a splendid job. We doubt if it paid them a cent of profit, for as late as in the eighties two or three hundred of the books were packed away in a big box under the counter of the Trowbridge drug store, and not long after the discovery they began to appear in circulation.

D. W. Leavens, father of the compiler, conducted the drug store, Theo. Trowbridge bought the store of him, M. S. Carney bought of Trowbridge, Robert Rudzinski bought of Carney and changed its location to the choice location on the corner. Harold Narregan bought of Rudzinski and the Mercury Cleaners have restored the drug store room to its brightness of early years.

Dowagiac's First Band.

Dowagiac had the first band in Cass county. It was organized in the early fifties. A. H. Mason played the cornopia, answering to the present cornet.

Bill Mesler played the tuba. It was a huge affair which Mr. Mesler named "Aunt Betsy." It could be heard 2 miles away when he was feeling good.

Dr. Morse and Noel B. Hollister were also members. Hollister ran a drug store and kept an old fashioned melodeon in the rear. He would sit at it and play by the hour, seemingly mad when a customer came in and interrupted him.

Daniel Lyle beat the bass drum. One man reported that he saw the band going to a picnic and Mr. Lyle sat in the rear end riding backward and pounding the drum till it awakened the echoes in the Jefferson hills.

Jacob Defendorf was the snare drummer. He had a little shop across the railroad track where they made snare drums.

Poor Bill Mesler enlisted in the Civil war and went to the front. He was notified of the serious illness of his wife and got a furlough to come home. He arrived while the funeral was in progress and when he walked into the church it was one of the saddest pictures of the war that the little city witnessed.

Hamilton Township.

Hamilton is described in the United States survey as township 4, south of range 15, west. It is one of the finest agricultural towns in Van Buren county, and is distinguished for the general thrift and prosperity of its farmers. The surface is slightly undulating, and is generally inclined to a level. The northern portion is heavily timbered—the central and southern portions are mostly oak openings. In the south-eastern part are several sections of low, unimproved lands. With this exception, the township is in a good state of cultivation. It has a rich and varied soil, partaking of the characteristics indicated by the timber in the different localities. There are no crops raised in western Michigan but what Hamilton produces in abundance. Like all the neighboring towns, it is well adapted to fruit growing. The northern part is watered by a branch of the Paw Paw river, on which the flouring and saw mills of Robert Nesbit are located. The south-eastern part is watered by a branch of Dowagiac creek, which rises in Lake of the Woods, a beautiful sheet of water about one and a half miles in diameter, lying between Hamilton and Decatur. The township also contains several smaller lakes or lakelets, the most important of which are School-lot lake, Knickerbocker Pine and Foster.

The old Territorial road from Detroit to St. Joseph, built more than forty years ago, passes through Hamilton. Upon this road the first settlers located as early as 1832. Zebina Stearns located on section 17; Lewis Johnson on section 16, and Philotus Hayden on section 16. In 1834, Aaron Barney located on section 30; Reason Comley on section 28, and Robert Nesbit on section 4. Soon after Calvin Fields and James Brooks located on section 33. In 1836, James Lombard located on section 15. Robert Nesbit built the first saw mill, in 1834. He also built the first grist mill, in 1856. The first school was opened near what is now known as Brown's tavern, in 1837, with twenty pupils.

Hamilton and Keeler were originally organized under the name of Covington, about the year 1837. In 1839 they were divided into separate townships. The first town meeting in Hamilton, was held at the house of Henry Coleman, who then kept what is now known as Brown's tavern.

Of the above named early settlers, Lewis Johnson, Reason Comley, Robert Nesbitt, Calvin Fields, James Brooks and James Lombard still survive; Aaron Barney died about 1857.

Philotus Hayden was a man of large means and extended influence. During the late civil war, he distinguished himself by his active patriotism and lively sympathy with the cause of his country. As a politician, his influence was felt in the politics of the State. As a neighbor, he was noted for his kindness of heart, and active benevolence, and when he died in 1866, he carried with him the benedictions of the poor.

Interesting Family Gathering.

A re-union of a portion of the Rawson Family, residing in this village, came off recently, seven of whom met at Palmer Rawson's and enjoyed an "old style chat" around their hospital board. Their ages were respectively 78, 74, 73, 70, 69, 67 and 67; united ages, 498; average age, 71.

The attendance of their social gathering was increased by their families, consisting of children, grand-children, great-grand-children and cousins. May they all and ever guide their barks clear of the shoals of intemperance.

KEEP A-GOIN'

Frank L. Stanton

If you strike a thorn or rose,
Keep a-goin!
If it hails or if it snows,
Keep a-goin!
'Taint no use to sit an' whine
When the fish ain't on your line;
Bait your hook an' keep a-tryin'—
Keep a-goin!

When the weather kills your crop,
Keep a-goin!
Though 'tis work to reach the top,
Keep a-goin!
S'pose you're out o' ev'ry dime,
Gittin' broke ain't any crime;
Tell the world you're feelin' prime—
Keep a-goin!

When it looks like all is up,
Keep a-goin!
Drain the sweetness from the cup,
Keep a-goin!
See the wild birds on the wing,
Hear the bells that sweetly ring,
When you feel like singin', sing—
Keep a-goin!

THE VILLAGE OF DECATUR

BEING A BRIEF HISTORY ENTERTAINLY TOLD BY A WORTHY PIONEER

The first settlement in Van Buren County was made in what is now the township of Decatur, in 1829, but the village of Decatur did not spring into existence until 1848, when the Michigan Central Railroad came through.

Previous to this, however, Charles Tucker, in 1847, had settled on the present site of the village and built a house. In 1848 L.R. Barker built a hotel on the now vacant lot at the corner of Phelps and Sherwood street. The following year Col. Phelps, who was post master for a long time and for whom our main street was named, opened a store on the corner of Phelps and St. Mary's street, now occupied by Mr. Upfield and for a year it was the only store in town.

The first school house in the village was built in 1848 on the lot where W.W. Greenman has his dwelling, and in 1869 it was used as a Baptist church. A school was opened with about twenty pupils and was taught by Miss Sarah Cook.

The site of the village was originally obtained from the U.S. Government by Messrs. Beers and Sherwood of New York City in a grant to them of five-thousand acres. These gentlemen were never residents of the place but in 1850 built a steam saw mill in the low swampy place at the west end of Delaware Street just out of the village. The mill was afterwards converted into a distillery which happily disappeared years ago.

In 1854, the present business center of the village was occupied as follows: Ira Nash on corner now occupied by Mr. Durkee; Trowbridge and Harris' general store, on Mr. Brook's corner; W.C. Tucker, general store, on corner occupied by Mr. Wood, and Henry Canoll, a drug store where Mr. Mosier now has a dry-goods store.

Village Incorporated in 1859

The village was first incorporated by the board of supervisors in October, 1859, and afterwards rechartered by the legislature March 16, 1861. A curious provision existing in the act was that the president and trustees should receive no compensation but might once a year have a free dinner at the expense of the village. The first president of the corporation was Hon. E.P. Hill, the first recorder, Orin T. Welch.

In 1869 Decatur claimed a population of 2,500 and was considered one of the most prosperous towns on the line of the M.C.R.R.

At that time the village contained four churches: Presbyterian, Methodist, Universalist and also Baptist, seven dry-goods stores, two drug stores, six grocery and provision stores, four hotels, three harness shops, two hardware stores, three clothing stores, three shoe stores, one banking house, two meat markets, one livery stable, one photographer, three millinery shops, four dress makers, two barbers, one bakery, one flouring mill, two planing mills, a stave factory, a steam saw and grist mill, a tannery, a cabinet shop, and carriage manufactory and — ten saloons.

The present school building was built in 1863-4 at a cost of $12,000.00. The Methodist Church was built in 1860-1 and cost $4,000.00. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1852, the present church cost $6,500.00 and was built in 1868. There was a Baptist Church organized in 1869 with twenty-six members. The First Universalist Church was organized in May 1868, and occupied what is now the Catholic Church and was originally the First Presbyterian Church. The present church was built in 1881 and cost $3,000.00.

In 1870 a town hall was built at a cost of $11,000.00. The First National Bank was established October 15, 1870. A.B. Copley, President, and E.P. Hill, Cashier. Mr. Copley was a member of the State Legislature in 1865, '71, and '75. S.N. Thomas was in business here longer than any other man on Main Street, having been in the hardware business more than thirty years, but retired from active life several years ago.

J.H. TUTTLE

OBITUARY

Passed from earth to spirit life on the 6th Inst., J.H. Tuttle, aged sixty-nine years.

Mr. Tuttle had lived in this vicinity during the past forty years and had won the esteem and friendship of a large circle of acquaintances. He was an ardent supporter of all moral reforms, and had the courage of his convictions to battle for right. His sympathies ever went out for the poor and afflicted and he was always ready to divide his substance with the needy. In every sense he was a humanitarian. In politics he was a prohibitionist; in religion, he was a Spiritualist. To be good and to do good was his religion. He realized that he was continually in the presence of God. He also realized that death of the body was as natural as its birth; that what we call death is only transition, passing out of the physical body into the spiritual body. He could answer the question which so troubled Job — "If a man die shall he live again?"

He was a good citizen and a staunch friend of the soldiers. He was the noblest work of God — an honest man.

Mr. and Mrs. William Tuttle of Kalamazoo attended the funeral.

SCHOOL

Many of our old readers will remember Prof. C.F.R. Bellows, the first principal of the Decatur Union School and his bright little son, Willie. They left here about 18 years ago and, a tall and handsome young man arrived here and we soon found that he was Willie Bellows, who 19 years ago when his father was part owner of the Republican used to make hickory whistle, pi type, pop his head out the front windows and yell at the boys, and otherwise bother us (the devil). He is now a promising young dispenser of Blackstone at Reed City and was here looking after his father's interests in some real estate. Time works wonders, Willie Bellows of 19 years ago is now M.W.E. Bellows, attorney at law, and his little boy chums are among our young business men. (Arba Moulton)

CORNELIUS PETER KEMP

To the judge of the Tippecanoe Circuit Court in the State of Indiana:

Cornelius Peter Kemp, being an alien and a free white person, makes the following report of himself; on his solemn oath declares that he is twenty-three years of age; that he was born in the Kingdom of Holland; that he emigrated from Rotterdam in the year of 1868; that he arrived in the United States at the port of New York, in the state of New York, on the tenth day of August, 1868; that he owes allegiance to King William III; and that it is bonafide his intention to become a citizen of the United States of America, and to remove forever allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to said King William the Third; of whom he is a subject.

MEMORIES OF EARLY PIONEER DAYS IN THE MICHIGAN WILDS

By: Lucy Millard Bennett

After several years my mother married Aaron Barney, a widower with a large farm, three sons and a married daughter. This new home was of logs but another large house was being built. The two famiies, hired man ndcarpenter made a large house full.

That farm was the one now owned by J.E. Osborn and w fe in south Hamilton. There were two large fireplaces, the wood for which was drawn in on a hand sled, a large log at the back, a smaller one in front on the andirons, and many still smaller ones piled high in the middle, which when fully ignited, made a grand fire and lighted the whole room. There was also a brick oven for baking, a fine light wood was especially prepared for this. oin place of cider and apples winter evenings, we ate turnips and greatly enjoyed them.

There was no village nearer than St. oep ad Kalamazoo.NO SCHOOLS AS YET, RELIGIOUS SERVICES IRREGULR ANDHELD IN LOG HOUSES AND BARNS. My mother and stepfather unite wthth Methodist Church about this time and I remember kneeling by a chair when a sister and I were baptized.

In time a log school house was built one and a half miles from our house. I can see it now and we children playing hide-and-seek about it. To make a path for the children to follow, a pair of oxen were hitched to a log which were drawn through the woods. I well remember my first teacher, Jane Morton, an aunt of J.S. Morton of the Graham and Morton Boat Line.

Our house was the largest of any in that vicinity and became the stopping place for many travelers. Two very tall ministers were frequent callers, (they seemed tall to me then) and used to carry me about the room to my delight.

A neighbor kept a barrel of whiskey in his house where anyone could help themselves, and my stepfather fell into evil ways and the drink habit grew on him, 'til one day he was brought home so dead drunk, he could neither move nor speak. I used to hide under the table, but he would drag me out and muss me over, 'til I was glad to escape as soon as I could. At last the situation became unbearable and after six years, we returned to the old home, my oldest sister was now married, my brother seventeen, so he and mother took up the burden of feeding and clothing the family.

There was no school in the vicinity of the home for a long time. Decatur had not yet appeared on the map. Several years passed and my second sister taught school one summer near Lawrence and I went there and worked for my board three months, that was all the school we had for a year at that early day. Another summer the school was in a small log house that had been used for a stable. At another time I walked three miles to school. About 1850 or '51 a good school building was erected which still remains with few changes in outward appearance. Here my school days ended, (with the exception of one winter in south Hamilton). Here I taught my first school at one dollar per week and boarded at home one and a half miles away. I did not quite finish the term (three months) for I was taken sick with neuralgia and rheumatism, was very ill for many months and from which I have never been entirely free.

But to go back a little. We still made sugar and I often stayed in camp all day, to help gather the sap and keep up the fire to boil it into syrup. We had three large kettles that held five pails full each. Sugaring off days were great fun. We did not have pails to catch the sap in but troughs made from blocks cut from large trees (white wood) split in four pieces and dug out with an axe.

In the early spring when my brother was doing this work, he cut through the heel of his boot and the thick flesh of his heel. He walked fully a mile to reach home. When he got his boot off and mother saw the blood and gaping wound, she fled up stairs, and I (about twelve) was left to care for the wounded, which I did the best I knew, washed away the blood, sewed up the wound with needle and thread and bound it up. This was my first attempt at surgery.

My sister and I later dressed a little pig, not a success, rather wooly, but after singeing, washing and scraping, it looked so well we were quite proud of the job. I shall never forget the first chicken we killed. I held its head on a block, she poised the axe, both shut our eyes, the blow fell but not the head, so we haggled and the poor thing was murdered at last.

About 1840, Uncle Ralph Mason built a fine house for those days, on the forty acres joining my mother's eighty on the north in Decatur Township. My brother, Hobart Miller, built a log house on this eighty. The logs were hewed inside and out. There was one large living room, bedroom and stairway and two beds above. We felt quite proud of such a fine house. I still retain a very vivid picture of the home also. Before we left the old home, my second sister died so now there were only two sisters left at home. My brother, not being a very strong man, did not get the heavy timber cleared away very fast.

My third sister was married from this log house; so now I was the only daughter left at home. In August, 1855, my aunt, who had lived with Uncle Ralph, died, leaving him alone. He persuaded mother and brother to go to his house and live with him which they did. He took a life lease of the property and when he died it passed to my borther. I was married in that home November 17, 1855 leaving my mother bereft of her last daughter. But what young happy bride appreciates the loneliness of the mother. We took a wonderful bridal trip to Dowagiac. I did not go far away to live, but went to housekeeping on father Bennett's farm known in these later years as Foster's Corners. The next spring, April 18, 1856, we moved to Decatur where we lived until August, 1865, after the close of the Civil War.

ROBERT SLOAN

Robert Sloan was born in Seneca County, Ohio in 1829. As a boy, he helped his father draw supplies for construction gangs in the building of the Michigan Central Railroad. He saw the first train come to Decatur in 1848. He assisted in clearing 993 acres of forest in Hamilton and Keeler Townships. At times the men used as many as eighteen teams of oxen. Robert Sloan did his share in clearing rough forests and preparing the land for the fine farms in Hamilton Township. He located in Hamilton in 1837, the year in which Michigan was admitted as a state. He married Esther Brooks of Hamilton Township in 1864.

HOLIDAY GAMES.

THE MUSICAL ORACLE.—Like all oracles of which we have any account, this requires a certain amount of intelligence both in the working and the interpretation of it. One of the players having been sent out of the room, the rest arrange among themselves some task that he is to perform, and, a player being seated at the piano, on his readmission the task is to be indicated to him by the music played and the manner of playing it. Suppose, for instance, he is to be required to walk three times round the table, and kiss the hand of a particular lady. On entering, the victim will be saluted with "All round my hat," played piano. He will probably look for a hat, and, finding none, will try going round on his own axis, on which the music will die away almost to silence. He then approaches the table, when the strain swells louder; he takes a few steps—louder still; and now recognizing what is required, he paces round once to the air, and is about to go away, when the tune keeps on persistently and loudly, until he guesses that he has to go round the table again. Having completed the three turns, he waits for the next musical indication, which perhaps comes in the shape of "How happy could I be with either," changing to "Nora Creina." He then perceives that it must be the question of a lady, and passes in front of all those in the room—the music becoming fainter as he leaves the lady selected and louder as he approaches her. At length he stands before her, and the piano strikes up "When the heart of a man is oppressed with care." He offers her his arm, but she makes no move. He kneels, when the music stops abruptly. He rises again, and the music begins with "The Kiss." He attempts a kiss on the cheek, when he is met with an awful chord and clatter. He then tries the hand, when the music increases in loudness and winds up with a grand flourish, and, if he has acquitted himself intelligently, he obtains the applause of the company.

OUR NEW COOK-BOOK.

SOUPS.

Poor Man's Soup.—Put one ounce of butter into a saucepan, with three large onions, shred fine, and fry them a pale brown color; add half a tablespoonful of flour, stir for a few minutes, but do not allow the mixture to darken; then add one quart of common stock previously flavored with carrots, turnips, celery, leeks, and parsley boiled in it; stir until the soup boils, and season it to taste with pepper and salt. Peel one or two potatoes, cut them into small dice, and put them to boil with the soup. Cut some crust of bread in long pieces, the size and half the length of French beans, dry them in the oven, and at the time of serving, throw them into the soup; then stir into it off the fire the yolks of two eggs, beaten up with a little milk and strained.

Stock: How to make it.—Four-pound shin of beef, one gallon of cold water, and two teaspoonsful of salt; put it on the back of the stove, let it slowly come to a boil, and keep boiling until the water is boiled away one-half; strain, and set to cool; when cold take the grease off the top, and it is ready for use. To make soup: For a family of six, take one quarter of the stock, to which add one quart of boiling water, and any vegetable you may desire, salt and pepper, and boil three hours; eat while hot. This stock will keep one week in cold weather.

White Vegetable Soup.—Two carrots, two turnips, two onions, three heads of celery, three potatoes; add half a pint of split peas, boiled and rubbed through a sieve; pass the vegetables through the sieve; add one quart of good white stock, and half a pint of cream or good milk; season to taste.

Tapioca Soup without Stock.—Mince an onion finely, fry it in plenty of butter till of a golden color, add pepper and salt to taste, and a pint and a-half of water; when the water boils, strain and put it back into a clean saucepan with two tablespoonsful of tapioca; let it boil till almost dissolved, then serve.

MEATS.

Cold Meat and Ham Croquets.—Take cold fowl or cold meat of any kind, with a few slices of cold ham, fat and lean, chop together until very fine, add half as much stale bread grated, salt, pepper, grated nutmeg, a teaspoonful of made mustard, one tablespoonful of ketchup, a small lump of butter. Knead all well together, make into small flat cakes (the yolk of an egg can be used to bind the ingredients, but it is not necessary). Brush with the yolk of a beaten egg on both sides, cover thickly with grated bread-crumbs, fry in a little lard or butter to a light brown. It is surprising how many of these croquets can be made from a very little cold meat and ham, and they are excellent.

An Economical and Delicious Way of Cooking a Rabbit.—Take a nice, fresh rabbit, cut it into joints, and fry it brown, with some slices of pickled pork, and some onions, shred fine. When nice and brown take it out of the frying-pan, and put it in a stew-pan, with water sufficient to cover it. Pepper and salt to taste, thicken with some flour and butter; add force-meat balls, but be sure not to put the fat out of the frying-pan. Let the gravy be the thickness of rich cream.

Stuffed Leg of Mutton.—Boil two large white onions until tender; then chop fine, add bread-crumbs and sage to taste, a little salt and pepper; then slit the sinewy part of the leg, and insert the stuffing, and roast.

DESSERTS.

Velvet Pudding.—Five eggs beaten separately, one teacupful of white sugar, four tablespoonsful of corn-starch, dissolved in a little cold milk and added to the yolks and sugar. Boil three pints of sweet milk, and pour into it the yolks and sugar while boiling. Remove from the fire when it has become quite thick. Flavor with vanilla, and pour into a baking-dish. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, with half a teacupful of white sugar; then pour it over the top of the pudding, and return it to the stove until it is slightly browned. Eat with sauce, the recipe for which is given below. It is delicious.

Scrap Pudding.—Put scraps of bread, crust and crumb, into a bowl, with sufficient milk to cover them well. Cover with a plate, and put it into the oven to soak for about half an hour. Take it out, and mash the bread with a fork till it is a pulp; then add a handful of raisins and as many currants, a teacupful of brown sugar, half a cup of milk, some candied lemon-peel, and one egg. Stir it up well, grease a pudding-dish, and pour the pudding in. Grate over a little nutmeg, put it into a moderate oven, and let it bake for an hour and a-half.

Open Tart.—Butter a tart-pan, roll out the paste to the thickness of half an inch, and line the pan with it; prick a few holes at the bottom with a fork, and bake the tart in a brisk oven from ten to fifteen minutes. Let the paste cool a little; then fill it with preserve, place a few stars or leaves on it, which have been previously cut out of the paste and back, and the tart is ready for table. By making it in this manner, both the flavor and the color of the jam are preserved, which would otherwise be lost were it baked in the oven on the paste; and, besides, as much jam is not required.

A Bachelor's Pudding.—Four ounces grated bread, four ounces currants, four ounces apples, two ounces sugar, three eggs, a few drops of essence of lemon, a little grated nutmeg. Pare, core, and mince the apples finely—sufficient, when minced, to make four ounces; add to these the currants, which should be well washed, the grated bread, and sugar; whisk the eggs, beat these up with the remaining ingredients, and when all is thoroughly mixed, put the pudding into a buttered basin, tie it down with a cloth, and boil for three hours.

Plum Pudding.—Boil and mash well one pound potatoes and one-half pound carrots; when cold add one pound each of flour, currants, and raisins, three-quarters pound raw sugar, eight ounces suet, a little salt, and a nutmeg grated; any other spices and candied peels may be added if approved. Fill your mould very full, tie up closely, and boil four hours; if boiled six hours, the pudding is richer and semi-transparent, and will keep two or three months.

Marmalade Pudding.—One-half pound bread-crumbs, six ounces beef suet, chopped very fine; three tablespoonfuls of marmalade, rind and juice of a lemon, one teaspoonful carbonate soda, three tablespoonfuls sugar, three eggs, well whipped, a little grated nutmeg, all to be well mixed, put into a mould, and boiled three and a-half hours. Serve with wine sauce.

CAKES.

A Good Christmas Cake.—One pound butter, one pound sugar, nine eggs, one pound of flour, three pounds clean currants, two pounds stoned raisins, one-half teacup of wine or brandy, from one-half to three-quarters pound citron, one grated nutmeg, some mace and cinnamon. Rub the butter and sugar together; when light, add first the yolks, then the whites of the eggs—the yolks and whites of the eggs to be beaten separately—then put in nearly all your flour, keeping out just enough to dust your raisins and cement them; cut your citron in such slices as you like, and put in as you put the cake in the pan; after mixing your fruit in the cake, butter a four-quart pan carefully, line it with clean straw paper, a little butter on the paper; put your cake in and bake in not too quick an oven, for it burns easily. After it is baked, take it out of the pan—paper and all—and let it cool. The next day, to keep it fresh and moist, put it back in the pan, or in a tin cake, box and keep it tightly covered.

Plum Cake.—(1) Scotch: Beat one-half pound of butter to a cream, add one-half pound sugar, beating well; then six eggs previously beaten. Have three-quarters pound of peel, one-quarter pound almonds, and three-quarters pounds flour already mixed; stir them gently into the butter, etc., and put the mixture into a tin well lined with buttered paper rising well over the top. Bake in a slow oven for three hours. Do not shake nor touch it when in the oven, or the fruit will fall to the bottom.

Plain Seed Cake.—Two pounds flour, one and one-half pound treacle, nearly one ounce ground ginger, one-quarter pound butter, one-quarter ounce carraway seeds ground, a little candied lemon peel cut fine, mix all well with the flour, warm the butter and mix well with the rest; dissolve in boiling water a large teaspoonful of carbonate of soda and stir well into the treacle, add to the other ingredients, work all thoroughly together, and bake in a buttered tin two hours in a rather slow oven.

MISCELLANEOUS TABLE RECIPES.

Cucumber Pickle.—If full-grown, the small long sort are the best for pickling. Let them be fresh gathered; pull off the blossoms, but do not rub them; pour over them a strong brine of salt and water boiling hot, cover them close, and let them stand all night. The next day stir them gently to take off the sand, drain them on a sieve, and dry them on a cloth; make a pickle with the best white wine vinegar, ginger, pepper (long and round), and a little garlic. When the pickle boils, throw in the cucumbers, cover them, and make them boil as quickly as possible for three or four minutes; put them into a jar with the vinegar, and cover them closely; when cold, put in a sprig of dill, the seed downward. They will be exceedingly crisp and green, done in this manner; but if they do not appear to be of a fine color, boil up the pickle the next day, and pour it boiling on the cucumbers.

Breakfast Dishes.—Scotch Woodcock.—Break two or three eggs into a saucepan; mix well, with a little salt and cayenne, and a good gravy spoon of milk or cream; cook it gently over the fire, and, as it warms, put in a lump of butter as big as a small egg; stir well from the bottom, as the mixture clots. Have ready two slices of toast, slightly buttered on both sides; put between them about three anchovies, washed, scraped, and chopped; pour on the top the mixture from the saucepan, and serve very hot.

FASHIONS FOR JANUARY.

FASHIONS FOR JANUARY.

FIG. I.—RECEPTION-DRESS OF MASTIC-COLORED CAMEL'S HAIR; the skirt has a knife-plaited flounce of the camel's hair; the princess over-dress is made with paniers and trimmed with Breton lace; the sleeves reach to the elbow, and the corsage is cut square in the neck; a plastron front of light blue brocade reaches from the neck to the feet, a blue bow is on the right side of the neck; the head-dress is composed of white lace and blue ribbon.

FIG. III.—EVENING-DRESS OF LEMON-COLORED TULLE, OVER

A SILK OF THE SAME COLOR; the skirt has no train, but touches the floor, not being made as short as the walking skirts; the bottom is trimmed with plaited ruffles of the tulle. There is a crosswise plaited apron of the tulle, and the skirt is trimmed with rich silk fringe. The basque is made of rich brocaded silk, with revers turned up; the neck opens in V-shape, and is trimmed with rich white lace; the sleeves reach below the elbow, where they are trimmed with white lace and bows of yellow ribbon.

FIG. IV.—EVENING-DRESS OF BLACK VELVET; the long train is trimmed with plaitings of blue silk and the revers are faced with blue silk, and the sleeves and edge of the revers are finished with a narrow knife-plaiting of the same; collar of blue. The under-dress is of white brocaded silk, the bottom being trimmed with two ruffles of the blue; blue feathers in the hair.

FIG. V.—EVENING-DRESS OF WHITE AND YELLOW STRIPED GAUZE, over a yellow silk under-skirt; the square train is of the gauze, and the front is trimmed with white ball fringe, and looped up at the side with loose sprays of crimson roses. The short round corsage is of white satin, and the tulle berthé is edged with a wreath of crimson roses; wide satin belt.

FIG. VII.—HOUSE-DRESS OF BLACK SILK; the bottom of the skirt is kilt-plaited; above this is a scarf-like skirt, the long ends of which are caught together, and fall at the back; the close-fitting double-breasted jacket is trimmed with pearl buttons, and opens over a gay brocaded vest.

FIG. VIII.—HOUSE-DRESS OF LIGHT BLUE CASHMERE; the skirt is trimmed with a deep knife-plaited ruffle; the upper skirt turns back and forms paniers on the hip, and the ends are draped at the back; the princess waist buttons down to where the paniers commence; the fichu about the neck is of very thin white muslin, and like the cuffs, is trimmed with Mechlin lace.

FIG. IX.—VISITING-DRESS OF DARK GREEN CAMEL'S HAIR; the bottom of the skirt is trimmed with a wide knife-plaited flounce; the over-dress is draped crosswise in front, and lengthwise in the back, and is edged with a deep, rich fringe; the tight-fitting cutaway jacket is trimmed with a woven gimp that corresponds with the fringe. White felt bonnet with green trimmings.

FIG. X.—DOLMAN CLOAK OF BROWN BEAVER CLOTH, trimmed with deep brown fur.

FIG. XI.—GRAY CLOTH CIRCULAR faced down the inside of the front with black brocade, which material also lines the hood.

FIGS. XII AND XIII.—FRONT AND BACK OF DARK GREEN WATER-PROOF CLOAK; the deep cape reaches only to the arms where it forms sleeves; it is double-breasted and the cape is trimmed with straps of narrow braid fastened on with buttons and edged with little woolen tassels.

GENERAL REMARKS.—The two head-dresses are among the newest that have appeared, but the first requires dexterous fingers to arrange the puffs so that they shall look light and fluffy. The little girl's hat is of white felt trimmed with white satin ribbon and having a row of Breton lace quilled inside. The boy's cap is of gray Astrachan fur, trimmed with gray cord.

The first hat for a lady is of white felt trimmed with white lace and soft white plumes; and the face is edged on the inside with black velvet; white lace or satin strings may be added to this hat if desired; it is very suitable for a visiting or reception hat.

The bonnet is one of the close shapes, with a cap front as well as soft cap crown; it is of black velvet and trimmed with black satin ribbon, crimson and tea-colored roses and black ivy berries. The second hat is of black felt, faced with black satin, and the brim is trimmed with five rows of old gold braid; a knot of black satin and a long black plume trim the outside.

No new fashions appear in mid-winter, usually; only modifications of those that were adopted earlier in the season, and of those we have spoken at large before. For the benefit of new subscribers, however, we will give a short synopsis of what we have before stated. Short dresses for the street are almost universal—when longer ones are worn, it is when they do duty as house-dresses also; the short dresses are no longer at the back than in front, are made to cling closely in the front, and the skirt is always narrow, the drapery giving it all the fulness that is necessary. Paniers are worn, but are by no means universal, many of the short dresses being made to fall quite plain from the hips down. Close-fitting, half tight-fitting and loose jackets are worn with short dresses, just as the fancy or the figure of the wearer may make it most desirable. For the house, trains are very general, though some ladies, especially young ones, like the short dress for home wear too; it is certainly very convenient, but not so graceful as the train; the latter, however, is not nearly so long as formerly. House-dresses are made in every style, some with the full paniers, others falling in severe straight lines—they must cling close in front; the waists also are of infinite variety, but if for more dressy occasions, are usually open in the neck in front, and have the sleeves reaching half way from the elbow to the waist. The polonaise, or princess, style is still a favorite one, though many prefer the skirt and basque separate. For evening, young ladies wear plain colored velvet or silk, or brocaded silk bodices, with white muslin, cashmere or silk skirts, or with skirts of other colors, provided that the body harmonizes with the skirt—these are usually made with a basque, and may be quite high or only half high on the shoulders. The fashion of combining gay brocades and cashmere patterns with plain material gives great variety to the dress, as these gay materials may be used in so many different ways, in fact, in any way to suit the fancy of the wearer; but great care should be taken in employing them, as they are so apt to give the costume a spotted look; collars, cuffs, revers, facings, rufflings, pipings, paniers are all made of the brocaded or figured material, and it is applied in a hundred different ways. Plush, velvet, striped or figured satin are also employed in the same way. All colors seem equally popular, so that all complexions can be suited.

Mantles, basques, jackets, in fact wraps of all sorts, are of the greatest variety; some are very long and loose, others are short and close-fitting, and others again half tight-fitting; all figures can be suited.

Bonnets and hats are in a greater variety of shapes than ever before; the large Directorie bonnet and the small cottage bonnet are equally worn; and young ladies appear in all shapes in hats, from the picturesque large flapped beaver, in the Rubens style, to the very severe, stiff Derby hat, with its upright wing, or without any wing at all.

The Hair is also dressed according to the fancy or the style of the wearer; but one thing is universal—there is much less false hair worn than was formerly the case, and consequently the coiffure has a much more natural appearance.

CHILDREN'S FASHIONS.

FIG. I.—GIRL'S DRESS OF GRAY CASHMERE. The skirt has two knife-plaited ruffles. The jacket is close-fitting, plain in front, but at the sides and back, where it is cut much shorter than at the front, double loops of the material lengthen the jacket to meet the front part; large loops of ribbon trim the back. The handkerchief-collar and cuffs are edged with a knife-plaiting of silk of the color of the coat. Pointed gray beaver hat, trimmed with gray silk and gray feather.

FIG. II.—BOY'S COSTUME OF DARK GRAY CLOTH. The trousers are short and come below the stockings of gay Scotch plaid colors; the jacket is double-breasted and worn with a belt. Scotch cap.

FIG. III.—GIRL'S DRESS OF DARK BROWN CAMEL'S HAIR. The skirt is kilt-plaited; the brown cloth jacket is close-fitting, has a rolling collar, trimmed like the pockets and cuffs with silk braid, and large, pearl buttons fasten the jacket and ornament the pockets and cuffs.

EARLY DECATUR

Westward Ho

Among the activities most attractive to small boys of 60 to 80 years ago was to join a circus, work on the railroad or go west in a covered wagon. The latter privilege fell to Amos Vanderhoof when he was six years old, and to his sister, Mrs. Carrie Hall when whe was 12. Mrs. Hall has written a description of this trip for her grand niece and nephew, Sally and Tommy Woods, and from it these notes are taken:

It was in the summer of 1880, 74 years ago. Enterprising financiers were building railroads into the west and northwest, and in the rivalry to obtain new settlers to open up the country, they painted in alluring terms the opportunities to be gained by taking up claims or buying land in the new and unbroken territories they traversed.

William Vanderhoof was one of many in this part of Michigan to be attracted by the advertising. He had contracted with his brother who had gone on ahead, to buy a claim of him in Dakota Territory, near the settlement of Madison, now in South Dakota. In the latter part of August of that year, 1880, he left his family in a covered wagon to travel the entire distance of over 700 miles to their new home. It took them six weeks to make the trip, but it was done without serious difficulties.

They drove a new Studebaker wagon on the box of which was fastened a row of hoops. Over these was stretched heavy canvas which protected them from rain and the heat of the sun. The wagon was filled with articles most needed for the trip, and in addition the mother and children found room to sleep in it. John Woods accompanied them in another wagon where the men slept.

They left their Decatur home located a mile west of the village on what is now M-40, on a warm sunny morning and their first stop was at the Code school. Here they said good-bye to the teacher, Miss Mary Caldwell, and to the young school mates, and there were smiles and tears on all their faces. They next stopped at the Christie and Bradley farms, at Mike Ryans and the O'Rourkes.

Then neighbors and friends were left behind and they drove on to the Jones home in Silver Creek where their first night was spent. The next day they drove to Niles and spent the night at the home of a relative, George Hoppin. That was the last night they slept in a house until they reached Gilman, Iowa, the home of another relative.

They drove through rain and mud the first ten days, and camping by the roadside was far from pleasant. A two burner kerosene stove and oven enabled Mrs. Vannderhoof to provide reasonably good meals, but it was hard work and she became very tired.

After supper and the horses were carefully groomed the family sat around a campfire and enjoyed an hour or two of rest and comfort until bed time. Then the father read a chapter from the Bible and gave a prayer and all found their places under the canvas tops. Jack, the big black and white dog, would curl up under the wagon where the mother and children slept.

The two wagons were placed close together, and only once did the occupants feel any danger from prowlers; Jack's angry growls kept them away. The horses were tied to the backs of the wagons making a compact settlement.

The farmers along the way sold them grain and hay and milk and vegetables. One of the important events of the trip to the children was crossing the Mississippi River.

The father's membership in the Odd Fellows Lodge was a great help to them. The pin he wore on his coat lapel brought them many friendly greetings and much questioning about their trip and plans.

At Gilman, Iowa, they were given a warm welcome by relatives, and enjoyed for the third time since they started, the luxury of sleeping in a bed. They started out the next day refreshed with good meals and rest, and in another week or ten days reached LaVerne, Minn. Their son David worked in a store there and helped to make their stay pleasant.

Now the travelers were nearing their destination. After LaVerne came Dell Rapids, Dakota Territory, then Madison and then Herman, on a pretty lake of the same name. On driving into Herman they saw ties being laid for the railroad and thought their goods shipped from Decatur would be arriving soon, but they were destined to wait many months for them.

A group of Odd Fellows and others assembled at Herman and directed them to their claim. The people marvelled at the fine condition of their horses, but they did not know what fine care the animals had received, nor that the average daily travel did not exceed 20 miles. The dog Jack never would ride in the wagon but walked the entire distance.

Some of the towns along the route where the travelers stopped over night were Niles, Mich.; Laporte, Valparaiso, Ind.; Joliet, Morris, Ottawa, Princeton, Sheffield, Rock Island, Illinois; Davenport, Hickory Grove, Tipton, Lisbon, Mt. Vernon, Cedar Rapids, Gilman, Marshalltown, Fort Dodge, Cherokee, Rock Rapids, Iowa; and the towns above mentioned in Minnesota and Dakota.

Next week will follow a brief account of the family's first winter in Dakota Territory, written by Mrs. Carrie Vanderhoff Hall.

A HARD WINTER

BY: Carrie Vanderhoof Hall

That first winter on our claim in Dakota Territory, 1880-81, was the hardest we ever experienced, not excepting the terrible blizzard of 1886. How we lived through it is still a mystery to Amos and me. Only the careful planning of our parents and an unfaltering trust in God enabled us to do it.

The claim shanty in which we were to live that winter was small, 12 × 16 feet or less. We had bunks for beds and they were made up on the floor. Hay covered with quilts or blankets served for mattresses. Our table was a wood shipping box with legs nailed on to it. Our stove also stood on legs, it had four lids, and an oven with a door on each side. Our only fuel was a tall tough grass which the men cut and hauled from the marshes. To burn in the stove it was twisted into a hard skein-like shape with the ends tucked under to hold it together, like a skein of yarn.

It made a good hot fire, but burned out so quickly that it took one person to feed the hay into the stove while mother did the baking. It was a new way of living and we were quite surprised to learn what was ahead of us.

My father had bargained before leaving Decatur to buy out his brother, Uncle Herman, so when the deal was finished, sometime in October, we were left in possession of 160 acres of land, on which was the poorly built shanty to live in.

Father bought potatoes and other produce of the Neighborly settlers, and Grandfather Hoppin who had moved out to Madison a year or two before, came out to help us. He lined the shanty with building paper, laid a floor above to make a low attic, and covered the roof and sides with tar paper to stop the cracks and keep out the snow.

The outside of the shanty was covered with prairie sod cut in strips and piled against the thin siding like brick. The hot winds of the previous summers had dried the sod so it did not cling closely, as it was supposed to do and the wind whistled down between it and the siding.

That made the house very cold when the cold weather came, and too late did we learn that we were to go through the hardest winter of the eleven years we stayed in Dakota Territory. The storm and cold started early that winter and we were not prepared for it.

You may have read Laura Ingalls Wilder's book, "The Long Winter." It is in the Decatur library. She lived in DeSmet a town near us. We had all the hard times that she and her family had, and harder in some ways, as we were out on the prairie alone, and she was in a store building nearer to people.

My father was lost in one of the blizzards and nearly parished, while on his way home from Madison with a sack of groceries on his back.

The blizzard came on suddenly and so terribly that he could hardly see his hand before his face. He was completely lost, and so nearly exhausted that he was almost ready to give up when he saw ahead of him what appeared to be a stovepipe chimney. He had seen this before when it turned out to be only tall grass. But he struggled on, and this time he was rewarded. It was a shanty stove pipe and not more than a mile from our home.

The people, a Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, took him in and gave him hot coffee and food, and he got warm and rested. Toward night the wind calmed down and father thought he could get home. Mr. Johnson said he would go with him to the end of a plowed field where the snow had blown off, and if the storm came up again they could follow the plowed field back to his house.

The storm did come up again in all its furry, so the men returned, and Mrs. Johnson made father comfortable for the night. In the morning the storm had cleared somewhat and he found his way home. We were overjoyed to see him and so thankful that he was alive. I do not think my mother closed her eyes that night, but just prayed and waited. Jack the dog, was also awake and alert, listening and waiting for his master.

Such a winter! How mother ever fed us I do not know. We had to grind wheat and corn in a coffee mill to prepare for our simple meals. But she never cried nor complained, she was a wonderful mother. We were never warm. With the twisted hay as our only fuel, and the frigid wind blowing through the cracks in the shanty, we were sometimes compelled to go to bed to keep from freezing.

It was April before a train came in with supplies, and there were still drifts of snow in places.

When spring came, the grass was again green, pretty flowers covered the prairie and we were delighted and happy. The spring brought many birds not seen in Michigan. There was not a robin nor a wren not a cat bird, but we liked the birds that came.

My mother started a garden, as she always had in Michigan. The sod was so hard and full of roots that she dug holes in the black soil with a butcher knife. The seeds were tucked into the holes, and in time the rain came, the seeds grew and we had nice food from her garden all summer.

That spring Mrs. Mallory and her daughters, Jennie and Della, sent us asparagus and pieplant seeds, and in time these plants furnished us choice food.

The bows from the covered wagon were set up on one side of the yard, and I planted wild cucumber and Alleghany Vine seeds to grow over them to make an arbor. They grew luxuriantly and gave us the only shade we had for some time.

I had a nice flower garden which I planted and cared for all by myself. (I was 13 that winter.) I raised beautiful pansies from seeds the Mallory sisters sent me, as many other flowers. Things did grow.

A reward supernal was won by thee
To be met on the Shores of Eternity.
A word that cheers a soul in distress
Comes back with a prayer you deed to bless,
"For what you do to the least of Mine
You do it unto Me."

When alms with kind pressure your hand did dole,
Bringing needed comfort to body or soul,
A treasure in Heaven you laid up that day,
Which naught can destroy, naught take away.
And My Heart rejoiced for the gracious deed,
'Twas your suffering Lord you then did feed,
The kindly touch took the weight from My Cross,
And you the richer were made by your loss:
"For whatever you do to the least of Mine
You do it unto Me."

If done in My Name there is naught so small,
That heedless or lost to the earth can fall,
A word of comfort, a smile of cheer,
A pitying glance, a tender tear,
A cooling draught, an act of love.
I have its reward in My Home above,
Whatever you do to the least Mine unto Me."

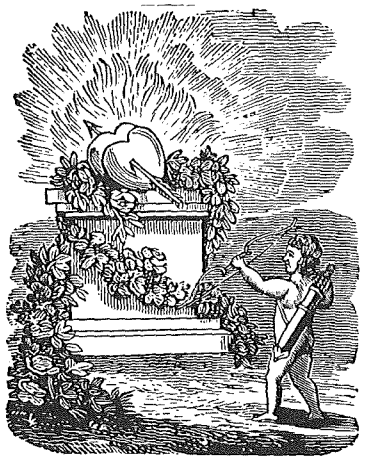
James H. Hammond Born 1847 — New York

(democratic nominee for State Senator 8th Dist-Mich)

In February 1864, when Civil War was at its height and when he was but sixteen years old, he enlisted in Union Army, making the fourth son his widowed mother had given to her country's call. He was assigned to the Army of the Potomac and all through the campaign of 1864 was with General Grant against General Lee, from the Battle of the Wilderness until the capture of the Weldon Railroad, when he was shot through the body with a minnie ball and reported as mortally wounded. At the expiration of eight months, spent in Lincoln Hospital in Washington D.C., he was able to return to his regiment, which he found at Appomattox, guarding the arms surrounded by Lee's Army. After receiving an honorable discharge at close of the war, he returned and became a minister.



HERO SOLDIERS

Harken the sounds of martial music
And the beat of muffled drums,
As down the streets of the new world
The blue clad warriors come.
Warriors of two generations,
How proudly they march today,
To the graves where our loved ones are buried —
They of the blue and the gray.
Our hearts beat heavy within us,
And the tear-drops softly fall,
As we hear wafted away in the distance,
The gun-shot and the bugle call.

Carl Squier, page in the House of Representatives, came home Saturday and will go back next Monday. The legislature is adjourned this week while the members are out visiting the several institutions.

The case of the People vs. John Bailey, up for trial in the circuit court last week, went over the term by order of the court.

Miss Eva Kinney will go to New York City the first of February to study the spring styles in millinery. She is employed in Ann Arbor.

Wednesday, January 23, at noon the curtain dropped for the last time, and Ben R. Desenberg passed into the great home above. He was born in Hanover, Germany, December 4, 1853, came to America when 11. In 1888 he and Fred Stern bought the dry-goods business of Charles Schuster. In 1901 he sold his interest to Mr Stern and went into business with his brother Sig in Buchanan. He was known here as a fine citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stern, P. M. Young and Max Rose attended the funeral in Kalamazoo.

The Fairies Call

May flowers are the key to Spring time
That opens wide the door;
Revealing sweet fairies
By the millions or more.

And as they flit to freedom,
To woodlands, field and streams,
Awakening Mother Nature,
From her long Winter dreams.

Awake, awake you sleepy heads
For Winter now is past;
Awake you little dreamers,
For Spring is here at last.

And soon their call is answered
By blossoms, bird and bee;
And the gleeful little tree toad,
From atop a budding tree.

Now all of nature's happy,
And all the world seems gay;
For skies again are sunny,
So long were dark and gray.

—Joanna H. Abshagen.

A PIONEER MOTHER'S INGENUITY

Some years ago, at the beginning of winter, the mother of a family found herself with meager provisions for warmth. She was in a new country and was a long distance from markets. Although the farm on which she lived yielded plenteously, the crops brought little cash, and scarcely paid for the family's provisions. Two things that she desperately needed were beds and bedding.

After a little thought she discovered that it was fairly easy to fasten some pieces of timber together to make bed frames. Old-fashioned cords were interlaced on the frames to make a foundation. It so happened that one of the children suddenly had an attack of croup and needed a warm bran bag. This gave her an idea! She partially filled some gunny sacks with bran, and sewed the edges of the sacks together to form a mattress. This innovation was then placed on top of the straw. The children scrambled "aboard" and a thick comfortable was spread over them. All of them agreed that a nicer bed would be impossible to find.

COUNTING OUR BLESSINGS

As we count our blessings
On this Thanksgiving Day,
Let us name them one by one
Then humbly let us pray.

For twinkling stars
That shine at night,
For morning sun
That gives us light.

For flowers that bloom,
For birds that sing,
Their joyous notes
Through woodlands ring.

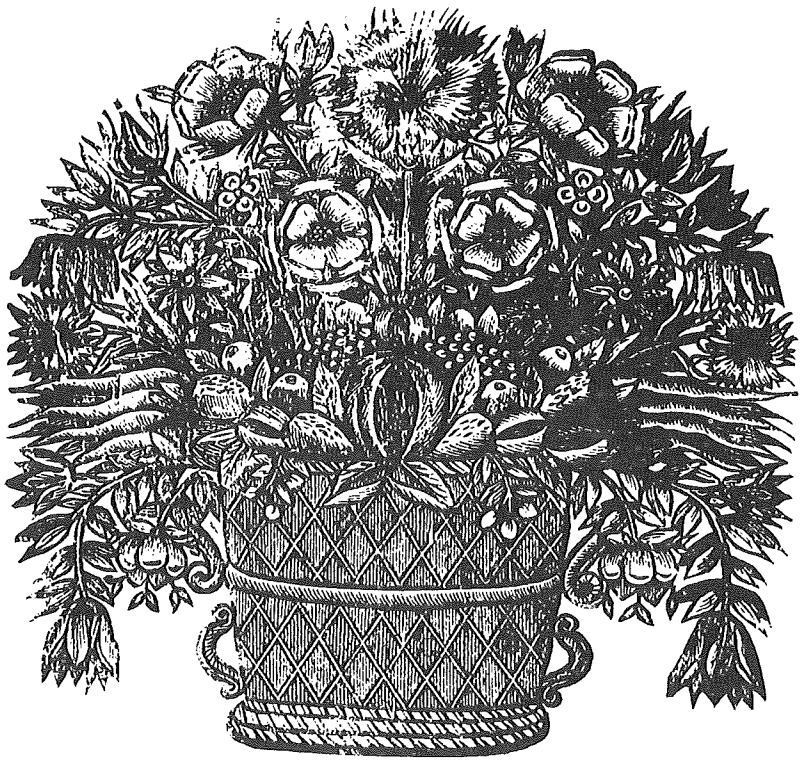
For orchard filled with ripening fruit,
For fields of golden grain,
For these let us be thankful
And cease now to complain.

A land where we may worship,
In our own free way,
The Giver of all things
So humbly let us pray.

For loved ones all about us,
For friendships far and near,
These, Oh Heavenly Father,
We hold so very dear.

Now as we count our blessings
On this Thanksgiving Day,
Lord fill our hearts with grateful thanks,
As humbly now we pray.

—Joanna Abshagen.



REMINISCENCES

(Written in 1886)

"I 'spose you've give up spinnin' " said Aunt Esther to her companion after Ethon had gone.

"Oh, yes, years ago. In the city, you know, one does not even hear of such a thing or scarcely thinks of it. I expect if I should attempt it now I should break the roll short off, instead of drawing out the thread just as I did when mother first tried to teach me how. You do not spin flax any more, do you?"

"No not for a good while. I've got several hanks of home made thread on hand yet though."

"Have you still your little wheel?"

"Yes," answered Aunt Esther, and then with one of her comfortable laughs, "I was a'most clear put out last fall. One day I happened to look out to see two girls from the Point coming in the gate. I knew them by sight, seeing them to meetings, but they never had been here and I wondered what could be fetching them here, One of them's a daughter of John Porter and his mother used to be Homer Mallory. You remember her?"

"Oh, yes," assented Miss Mahala.

"Her name's Helen," continued Aunt Esther, but of course they call her Nelly. Her mother's been dead some time and she has mostly her own way about everything. The other was a Perry girl. They haven't lived here so long. I don't know what her natural name is, but they call her Vivy. I never had taken much fancy to the ways of either of them. Well, they came along in and were real polite, and talked about the weather and things for a spell, and finally the Porter girl spoke up and said, 'Mrs. Franklin, I called to see if I could borrow your wheel.' I was surprised enough to think the girls got some sense after all. I haven't ever given her credit. But I says out loud, which one do you want?"

"I don't know as it makes any difference," said she.

"I thought to myself, Land sakes! but I didn't say anything, only asked her if they were going to spin wool or flax?"

"Neither one," she says, her face turning red and I was so beat I didn't say anything more and she hitched about, kind of uneasy half a minute and said she, 'I'm going to give an old fashioned tie party and thought if I could have a spinning wheel to stand in the parlor it would add to the interest.'

Then the other girl thought she'd try to help her along some and she said, "With a handsome bow of ribbons it would be a beautiful decoration ."

"Yes," chimed in the Porter girl, kind of taking courage again, "It would be a means of education, too."

I 'spose 'twas foolish in me but I was so kind of upset I didn't know whether to laugh or be provoked, but finally I didn't do neither one out loud and I told them there wasn't anything ornamental about either of my old wheels, and they had never been used to wearing ribbons, and I thought bows would be unduly unpopular to them. I told them, too, that spinning when I was young was work, to help make our own clothes or somebody else's and hadn't anything to do with education.

"It had though," said Cousin Mahala. "Don't you remember when you and I used to lay our books on the bench of the wheel and repeat the abreviations or the multiplication tables, or maybe the rules of syntax, as we drew out the thread?"

"Yes, I remember that."

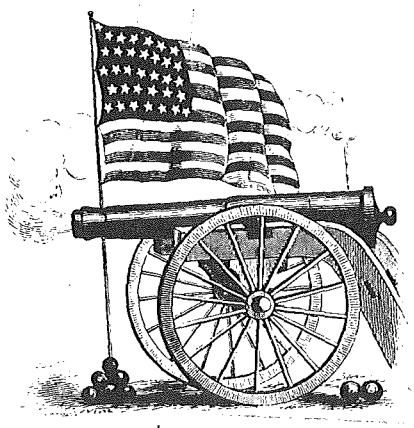
"Well, did they take the wheel?"

"No. I told them I didn't think I'd better let it go, and they said maybe they could get one somewhere else and went away. I don't generally mean to get out of patience with folks, especially when I think they don't know any better, but I did feel dreadfully queer about that. I went up stairs after they hed gone and took my little wheel out of the closet where I kept it and wiped the dust off it and thought about the time when mother used to spin on it, and the cloth that I had spun the fillings and warp for, before I was married and since, and that everyone of my children had worn some of, and I felt as though I had been in danger of something happening to me. Now that's the fact, the truth. I never thought before how much I sat by that old wheel."

"Tying it up with gay ribbons," said Mahala, "and putting it in a company of gay young people would have seemed to you just as it would have been—highly inappropriate."

"Yes," said Aunt Esther. "It would have been doubly unnatural."

But unused as she was to the expressions of anything like sentiment she would on no account have confessed to her cousin that her feelings had been so wrought upon that she had actually shed tears, at the threatened desecration of her treasure."



WHEN THE BOYS IN BLUE ARE GONE

(This was the original title, also the last line of each stanza, but out of consideration for our southern friends, it is often rendered "When the Blue and Gray are gone.")

When the comrades have departed,
When the veterans are no more,
When the bugle call has sounded
On that everlasting shore;
When life's weary research is ended,
When the campfires slumber long,
Who will tell the world the story
When the Boys in Blue are gone?

Who will tell about the marching
"From Atlanta to the Sea,"
Who will halt, and wait, and listen,
When they hear the reveille,
Who will join to swell the chorus
Of some old Grand Army song,
Who will tell the world the story
When the Boys in Blue are gone?

Who will tell of Appomattox,
And the glory that they won;
When defeat was on their banner,
Who will tell about Bull Run;
What in prison-pen they suffered,
How they watched and waited long,
Who will tell the world the story
When the Boys in Blue are gone

Who will tell about enlisting
Of three hundred thousand more,
How they rallied 'round the banner,
How they sent it to the fore;
How they crushed that horde of traitors,
How they fought against the wrong;
Who will tell the world the story,
When the Boys in Blue are gone?

Who will tell of Abraham Lincoln,
When he held the wheel of State;
Who will rise to act his greatness,
As the chief among the great;
Who will tell of Grant and Sherman,
And that patriotic throng;
Who will tell the world the story,
When the Boys in Blue are gone?

Will our children's children tell it,
Will they tell about the foe
That their grandsires met in battle,
Fought so many years ago;
Will they cherish dear "Old Glory,"
Will they learn to love it long;
Who will tell the world the story,
When the Boys in Blue are gone?

We must tell the story, sisters,
Just as long as life is spared;
We must never be unmindful
What the soldier did and dared;
We must hold aloft that banner
For its splendid laurels won;
We must tell the story, sisters,
When the Boys in Blue are gone.

Sons and daughters of this Nation,
You must tell of triumphs won
When on earth our work is ended,
And the veteran claims his own;
You must cherish dear "Old Glory,"
And its teachings pass along;
You must tell the world the story,
When the Boys in Blue are gone.

By that flag, "Our Country's Emblem,"
You must pledge allegiance new
To its glorious, splendid mission,
May your hearts beat ever true;
That the Nation'll be protected
Gainst injustice and all wrong;
You must tell the world the story,
When the Boys in Blue are gone

You must keep each star unblemished
And its stripes without a stain,
You must take the veterans' places,
And repeat their Roll of Fame;
You must keep our country's honor,
And the flag above the wrong,
We will trust you with the story
When the Boys in Blue are gone.

Darling Nellie Gray

There's a low green valley on the old Kentucky shore,
There I've whiled many happy hours away,
A-sitting and singing by the little cottage door,
Where lived my darling Nellie Gray.

Chorus
O, my pool Nellie Gray, they have taken you away,
And I'll never see my darling any more;
I'm sitting by the river and I'm weeping all the day
For you're gone from the old Kentucky shore.

When the moon had climb'd the mountain and the stars were shining, too,
Then I'd take my darling Nellie Gray,
And we'd float down the river in my little red canoe,
While my banjo sweetly I would play.

Chorus

One night I went to see her, but she'd gone, the neighbors say:
The white man bound her with chains;
They have taken her to Georgia to wear her life away,
As she toils in the cotton and the cane.

Chorus

My canoe is under water and my banjo is unstrung—
I'm tired of living any more;
My eyes shall look downward and my song shall be unsung,
While I stay on the old Kentucky shore.

Chorus

My eyes are getting blinded, and I cannot see my way—
Hark! There's somebody knocking at the door,
O! I hear the angels calling, and see my Nellie Gray—
Farewell to the old Kentucky shore.

Chorus

O, my darling Nellie Gray, up to heaven there they say
That they'll never take you from me any more;
I'm coming, coming, coming, as the angels clear the way,
Farewell to the old Kentucky shore.

"The best team that Decatur ever had!!"

So it was quoted!!

Everyone went to the baseball game! The town rolled up its streets and everybody headed for Barton's Park which was located back of the Frank Hazzard property.

The band met the baseball visitors at the train and the team followed them to the ball grounds. Talk about public-spirited citizens! Everyone turned out — all societies and organizations, dozens of women with parasols, and troops of children. Even the doctors, dentists, and school professors went to the big event and everyone had a "ball." Reserved seats were at a premium. Decatur played Kalamazoo, Hammond, Indiana and Lawton. They were called the (Tri-League Assoc.).

Fighting between the teams was a common practice at the games and it seemed to be enjoyed by the crowd about as much as the game itself. At one game between the Hammond Packing Co. and Decatur, a fight ensued which was a free-for-all. Frank Thomas, pitcher, fought so furiously that he was pulled off — but not before he had kicked the Hammond pitcher in the chin. This ended the game and the Hammond boys never came back. Decatur also played the Kalamazoo Blues, with Clarence McGibney as Decatur's umpire, popularly known as the "Silver Tongued Coach."

Lawton and Decatur were always "feuding" and every one was primed for a "jolly scrap" when they came to town. They had a good ball team but Decatur won most of the games. One game in Lawton broke into a vigorous fight. Neither team would give up; Arba Moulton, our late editor, took part in the scrap. He and others "hitched" a ride on a freight train to attend the game . As they were swinging onto the cars to return home — the Lawton fellows stoned them.

At another game Lawton wanted to bet. Decatur accepted and won by 67 points and pocketed the bet money. This made the Lawton crowd furious and one excited man pulled out a handful of bills and bet any man $100 that if Decatur went to Lawton the following week — Lawton would beat. Ed Rawson, a great Decatur ball fan, pulled out a $100 bill and said, "I'll take you up on that!" The Lawton bluffer faded into the crowd.

It is interesting to note that the boys who made up the baseball nine were not school boys. All of them were nineteen, twenty or older.

Decatur also played several games with the "Colored Page Fence Giants." At the interval during one of the games, someone brought a load of watermelons and everyone had the good, old-fashioned fun of easting his fill on the field.

Professor Pierce was superintendent of the schools at the time — and one of his rules was that all students were to be in their seats when the gong sounded. If a student was tardy he couldn't enter. It so happened that Arba Moulton was tardy on that particular day and didn't dare to appear before the Professor. A happy thought came to him and he decided there and then to go to the Barton Park ball game. He didn't want to be seen so he went behind the wood piles, past the cemetery, and down by Lake of the Woods to get to the park.

There was a big crowd — as usual. As the game progressed, more people came and Arba finally realized the Professor Pierce was among the spectators. The "Prof." had dismissed school at 3:00 o'clock so he could attend the game. He soon realized that Arba had played hookey so the next morning he had him suspended. Arba was subjected to the indignity of procuring all the signatures of the School Board members in order to be reinstated in school. His father, who was a member of the Board, wouldn't sign until all of the others had signed.

The best ball team that Decatur ever had was the team of 1886-1887 and 1888!!

(Information supplied by Arba Moulton)

We posed a guess a few weeks ago about who was the Dowagiac player who shot off firecrackers in center field and entertained the crowd with his antics. It was a Fourth-of-July game here about the year 1886; Frank Stapleton remembered the occurence but could not identify the player. Will Moulton supplied the information. The player was simply known as "NEFF!"

About 1888

Wheat has been moving lively under the influence of a slightly advanced market. Monday, fifty-five wagon loads were put into the railroad elevator by the Decatur buyers and one thousand five hundred (1,500) bushels were loaded and shipped out by the Michigan Central that day.

NESBITT FARM IN HAMILTON TOWNSHIP

ROBERT NESBITT

On March 18, 1810, Mr. Robert Nesbitt was born in Belfast, Ireland. He came to America in 1826. After living in Plattsburgh, New York, for six months, he moved to Ann Arbor, Michigan where he learned the mill wright's trade. In 1829 he moved to Kalamazoo County and assisted in building the first saw mill there. He later was sawyer of the mill and sent the city of Kalamazoo its first load of lumber. In 1835 he settled and made his home in Hamilton Township, Van Buren County. After building his home, he constructed a saw mill. He then began cutting the timber on his land, which was converted into lumber and shipped to distant places. His lumber was the first to be shipped to California via Cape Horn. A little later, the Michigan Central Railroad was being built and he had a lively business making planks to support the tracks. As his was the only mill for miles in that part of the country, his men worked night and day to meet the demand for planks.

In 1836 he married Maria Comley, who died in 1857. He later married Mrs. L.L. Griffin which was in 1858.

Mr. Nesbitt was a firm believer in Spiritualism and frequent meetings with fellow believers were held in his home. Spiritualism was popular at that time. Mr. Nesbitt had very fine qualities, which made him a leader in his community.

In 1856 Mr. Nesbitt erected a grist mill on the home site and this, also, was very profitable. His industry was so flourishing that he wore out five saw mills. All told, during his life-time, he wore out nineteen mills. The foundation of one of the old mills is still standing.

The present Brush Creek runs through the site which he had chosen for the mill end, so he had a fairly good source of water power. The creek extends from the present old Fassett homestead (built by the Nesbitts), through a valley and into the township of Lawrence. The spring fed, clear stream abounds in trout, and watercress grows in abundance. Lady slippers may be found growing along its banks in the springtime.

Mr. Elwood Scott, of Hamilton, built a picturesque log cabin on one side of the creek. It is quiet and peaceful there and the cabin fits well into nostalgic memories of saw mills and logging days.

The Poets' Corner

GOD IS NEAR

Sometimes we come upon a place,
Where godliness, and angel grace
Within our bosoms have no trace;
But, God is there:
He wipes away our every tear;
He stands beside the lonely bier;
Yes, every time, our God is near:
He has a care.
When hope, and life, and power is gone
The weary soul is journeyed on;
And every thing may all seem wrong:
God's with us yet:—
He'll see our ways are all made right,
Will bring a glow, dispell the night,—
Will make the future look more bright,—
He'll not forget!
We may be down, and weak and sad,
When everything is drear and bad;
The angels say, "Look up, be glad
The dawn is here."
He'll not forsake a single child,—
His love is sweet, his chiding mild,
If we have erred or been beguiled,
He's always near.
His loving consolation cures,
His sympathy always endures,
The weakest child, His strength, assures;
Oh! never fear.
He holds the nations in His hand,
And, after all, at His command,—
The world, in perfect peace, will stand,
God—is—sincere!

SAVIOUR OF MINE

By Dale Duckworth
323 Linden ave., P. O. Box 1184,
Auburn, Calif.

The Prophets of old in centuries gone,
Spoke often of Him whose deeds would live on;
Of how we might dwell in Heaven on high,
Forever with Him as ages roll by—
The Master made well the sick and the lame;
All those who believed and called on His name;
The many who came to Him by the sea,
Were healed by His word in old Galilee—
Oh Saviour of mine! I pray hear my plea;
More like Thee, my Lord, I ever would be;
Some day you will call and I'll hear you say:
Your work is all done; come home now to stay—
The Angels all tell a story of love;
Of how you came down from Heaven above;
Of how you left there your Father Divine,
To go to the cross, Oh Saviour of mine—

MRS. CAROLYN WILCOX SHERBURN

Carolyn Wilcox was born in Extis Township, Ontario County, New York in 1830. At the age of three years she came with her parents to Jackson County, Michigan and in 1835 she came to Van Buren County and spent the remainder of her life here.

She was married in 1847 to Sherman Sherburn who departed this life in 1889. She lived to the ripe, old age of eighty-four.

In her childhood Mrs. Sherburn lived on what is now the Daniel Spicer farm a mile south of Lawton, but there was no Lawton there then. Her playmates were Indian children and Indian chiefs came there and stayed weeks at a time hunting and trapping and she learned to talk their language.

In those days wild bear and wolves roamed through the forest and wolves scratched at the door to get in. At one time the children were playing in the woods close by when the mother went to the spring for water. A wild bear looked up at her from across the stream. She hurried to the house, got the children in and bolted the door. The father killed the bear when he came home.

The only place to get corn ground was at St. Joe and much of the corn was ground in mortars and made into bread and baked in front of the fireplace. There were only two houses between the Wilcox home and the Curry home in Decatur and frequently evening visits would be made to these neighbors, going with an ox team and returning home at daylight. There were no railroads or highways, just woods everywhere.

Mrs. Sherburn was married in 1847 in the old house in the valley now owned by Mrs. Peters. The house is still standing, a log house now sided over with lumber. She went in a home-made cutter called a jumper.

After her marriage she was a great doctor and nurse, especially for children. She attended ninety-seven births and in most cases she was both doctor and nurse. In the early days she spun her own yarn on a spinning wheel, colored it to her taste and knit mittens and socks to sell. She also made clothes woven out of the yarn she spun.

DEATH OF WILLIAM LEE

William Lee was born in Canada in 1818. His educational advantages were meager as he lived four miles from a school house.

At eighteen he married Maria Fox. They lived in a log cabin on five acres of cleared land. To this union were born seven children, one of whom (Daniel) was killed by a falling tree.

Between his home and Paw Paw there was only one house. Mr. Lee has been known to shoulder a bushel of corn and carry it to Paw Paw to be ground for family use. He bought eighty acres of land and kept adding until he had acquired 640 acres which he divided with his children.

CARLTON W. WILLISON

Carlton W. Willison was born in Ohio in 1842. He came from one of the oldest families of Maryland. (Mother — Melinda Castile). His great grandfather, Willison, was crier of the first court ever held in Cumberland, Maryland. He served the Union as a soldier in the ranks during the entire period of the Civil War, taking part in the battles of Fort Donnelson, Shiloh, siege of Corinth, Vicksburg, Memphis, Holly Springs and Jackson — also participated in capture of Fort Morgan in 1866.

Mr. Willison worked in sawmills in Volinia and then in Decatur. He married Mary E. Warner in 1870 and they had two daughters — Mabel and Mollie. The latter married Arba Moulton.

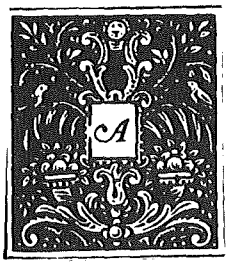
Winged Words

MYSTERIES OF THE CROSS

The crowds that stood along Golgotha's way
Saw only what the eyes of man could see . . .
But He who bore their cross of shame that day
Knew every step meant victory.

They only saw a broken, bleeding man
Scorned and scourged, rejected by His own . . .
While through the mists His mind alone could span,
He saw His future kingdom and His throne.

Beneath the upright cross on which He died
They grieved, to hear the taunts His suffering drew . . .
Yet from His heart of pity, devoid of pride,
He prayed, "Forgive . . . they know not what they do."



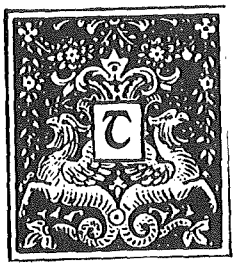
Their minds and hearts had never understood
The words of life He spoke, and lived, for them . . .
"Love them that hate?" . . . "For evil repay good?" . . .
"The stone the builders rejected" . . . could that be Him?

They had not believed that God loves sinful men . .
They had not known love conquers hate and grief . .
They could not see His "dying to live again" . . .
His paradise promised a dying, repentant thief.

Nor how God could . . . with power He showed them then
To rend the temple's veil, blot out the sun . . .
Leave His work here to weak and willful men . . .
This work their Lord had only just begun.

As death and darkness brought the lonely night,
They felt it ended all their hopes and schemes;
How could they know that Easter morning's light
Would bring them life anew beyond all dreams?

How could the minds and hearts of men then know
The mystery of this cross He bore for us . . .
That caused it from a sign of shame to grow
Into a sign of love and hope and trust?



But, by this cross He proved God's love to them,
And from it gave His spirit and His powers . . .
That through it all they learned of love from Him,
Which might, through their lives, come down the years to ours.

THE VILLAGE OF DECATUR

Written for the Republican by O W. Rowland.

The original plat of the village of Decatur was surveyed in the spring of 1850. Samuel Sherwood and Joseph D. Beers of New York had become owners of a large tract of government land in which was included the present village. These gentlemen donated the sight of the depot buildings, which were erected in 1848, the same year in which the railroad was completed as far as the present city of Niles.

When the Michigan Central Company began to extend its line westward from Kalamazoo Messrs. Sherwood and Beers conceived the plan of laying out and platting a village which plan they carried out, naming the town Decatur, after the township in which it was situated. Since the date of the original plat of 1850 there have been numerous additions thereto, the last one being the Hastings addition, which was made and recorded ten years ago. These several additions had rendered the descriptions of village property somewhat uncertain and complicated and in 1905 the Common Council caused a resurvey and a new plat to be made covering the original plat and the greater portion of its various additions. This is commonly designated as the supervisors' plat.

As at present constituted the village embraces portions of sections seventeen, eighteen, nineteen and twenty, and according to the census of 1910, contained a population of 1286, being exceeded by no village in the county except Paw Paw.

There had been some indications of a future town before it was actually platted. Hiram Lee purchased the first village lot in 1848. A highway was completed across the swamp south of the village in 1849. This opened up communication with a considerable tract of country that had theretofore been practically inaccessible, thus giving to the prospective village a decided impetus. During the same year C. S. Lucker opened a boarding house and stores were established by A. H. Dixon, Goss & Dixon and Theodore Phelps. Prior to the opening of these places, people did their trading either at Paw Paw or Kalamazoo.

In 1851 there were three general stores in the village, kept by A. H. Dixon, Theodore Phelps and E. Ingi Henry Carroll had a drug store the boarding house started by Mr. Lucker had been converted into a hotel which later was called the Decatur House and was operated by L. R. Barker.

Forests on All Sides in '51

At that time Decatur was literally "in the woods," being enveloped by the forest on all sides, in which various kinds of wild game was to be found in great abundance. A steam saw mill was erected by Messrs. Sherwood and Beers in 1850, near the town. A distillery subsequently took its place, but it was short lived.

During the first five years after its beginning the village increased in growth moderately and at the expiration of that period there were about seventy-five buildings within its boundaries.

The first wedding solemnized in the new town was that of U. T. Olds and Miss Mary Elliott, who were married on the 18th day of May, 1850, by George Sherwood, a justice of the

Mr. Olds, who settled in the village in 1849 was its first carpenter and joiner. The first village physician was Dr. Geo. Bartholomew, who erected a small building in 1848 and occupied it as an office and drug store. He afterward removed to Keeler where he died September 20, 1887. Dr. John T. Keables located in Decatur in 1851, where he continued the practice of his profession until his death about forty years thereafter, November 1, 1891. A postoffice was established a couple of years after the platting of the village, George Sherwood being the first postmaster.

The village was first incorporated on the 11th day of October, 1859, by action of the board of supervisors. It was reincorporated by the state legislature in 1861 and again in 1883. This last act of incorporation has since been twice amended, the last amendment being in 1905 (Local acts of 1905, p. 297). The first village officials were E. Parker Hill, president; Charles Shier, recorder; Hiram Cole, father of H. A. Cole, Paw Paw's present postmaster; Myron Hinkley, J. H. Wallace, Charles N. Poor, Carlton Wheeler and John Tarbell, trustees.

The first school house in the village was built in 1848 and the first school was taught therein in the winter of 1848-9 by Miss Sarah Cook, whose pupils were twenty in number. The M. E. church was organized in 1860. Their house of worship was built in 1861. The Universalist church was organized in 1868 and their first church building was erected in 1881. It was afterward destroyed by fire and rebuilt in 1895.

The Christian church was organized in 1885. Many of the leading citizens of the place have been members of this church. Its house of worship was built in 1887. The Presbyterian church was organized in 1852 by Rev. Marcus Harrison. It consisted of three members, Lydia Harrison, Mrs. Eli Rich Rich and Joseph McClintock. Their church house was dedicated in 1856, the dedicatory service being conducted by Rev. A. C. Tuttle of Paw Paw. This building was recently burned and been replaced by a modern structure.

The Catholic church, known as the Church of the Holy Family, began about 1885, when Rev. Father Koopman of Marshall visited the place and arranged to meet his parishoners once in three months. Services were held in private houses or public halls for twenty years or more, when the society purchased the building formerly occupied by the Universalists.

Of secret orders the town has its full quota, Masons, Eastern Star, Grand Army of the Republic, Relief Corps, Odd Fellows, Rebekahs, Maccabees, Lady Maccabees, Gleaners and others.

A prosperous ladies' literary club, known as the Every Tuesday Club, is one of the institutions of the town.

The village has the usual quota of mercantile places, stores, shops, banks, factories, garages, etc. It owns and operates a municipal system of electric lights and water works. It also has a commodious town hall.

The village maintains one of the best high schools in the county, although at the present time it labors under some disadvantage by reason of its principal school building having been destroyed by fire but, nothing daunted, the tax-payers of the district promptly voted the necessary means for the erection of a new building, which will probably be ready for occupancy some time during the coming summer. It is to cost the sum of $93,000 and when completed the town can boast of having the finest school building in the county, complete, modern and up-to-date in every respect, a building that will be a credit to the place and an honor to its patriotic, liberal-minded citizens.

Michigan was admitted to the sisterhood of states, being in number 26th, by act of Congress in 1837, and in the same year, the township of Decatur was organized embracing within its limits the present townships of Decatur and Porter, the latter having been set off and organized into a separate township in 1845.

The first township meeting was held at the school house near Little Prairie Ronde. At this election George S. Freeze was elected supervisor, John D. Compton township clerk and Joseph Van Hise, John D. Compton, George S. Freeze and Tinker R. Smith justices of the peace. The official records of the county do not disclose the names of the other officers, if any, who were chosen at this election.

At the first general state election, held on the fourth and fifth days of November, 1839, (the statute at that time provided that general elections should continue two days) forty ballots were cast, twenty-four of these being for William Woodbridge, Whig, and sixteen for Elon Farnsworth, Democrat. Woodbridge was elected governor and was the only Whig that ever occupied the chief executive office of the state. The election board of the township must have had a couple of hard (?) days work receiving, recording and canvassing those forty votes.

To show the difference between then and now, there were 533 gubernatorial votes cast in the township at the general election held in November, 1916.

319 being for Sleeper, Republican, 200 for Smith, Democrat, and fourteen divided among the Prohibition, socialist and labor parties. This being a presidential year called out a comparatively larger number of voters. At the general election held in November, 1918, that being what is commonly called an off year, there were but 346 votes cast for governor, 245 being for Sleeper, Republican, 98 for Bailey, Democrat, and three scattering. This does not include a decrease in the voting population, but simply a lack of interest in what was a foregone conclusion. According to the census figures of 1910, the latest we have, Decatur ranked fifth among the townships of the county in point of population.

CELERY.

By the action of the Decatur celery association, the business men who aid the enterprise are the ones to be preferred in the distribution of trade. A committee is to be appointed whose especial business is to be that of distributing pro rata the trade with those who contribute to the loan fund. This is manifestly just and proper and should the enterprise prove a success and should there be a large increase of population added to our village another year by reason of this movement and should there be another year forty or fifty thousand dollars worth of celery raised and consequently nearly this amount distributed here mainly with those who have given the enterprise a helping hand, certainly such will not have occasion to regret their action in this laudable undertaking.

The truth is that we have probably five thousand acres of extremely fertile land all well adapted to the growing of celery and tributary to this place. There is no place in Michigan so favorably situated to become the center of this great industry as is Decatur. We need the market; to get this we must have a large amount grown and when the growing of celery has become prominent by the aid of experienced growers, others learning their methods will very naturally fall into line and thereby all will be greatly benefited.

What is needed is to have a loan fund sufficient to make a slight outlay at the beginning to encourage the working of our fertile lands by experienced celery growers. It is not intended that this fund shall be an actual gift, but a loan to be paid back and to be secured by the crops put in. Somewhat similar to the building loan associations that have been so beneficial in many portions of our country. Nor is it intended that this fund shall be used alone to encourage workers from Kalamazoo or elsewhere more than workers already here. Let those who are now here that are willing to engage in this industry receive the same encouragement upon the same terms.

It is no doubt a very favorable time for Decatur to engage in this enterprise, as it is thought by some that the celery lands heretofore celebrated near Kalamazoo, have become somewhat exhausted and it is conceded by all that ours are equally as good and by far the most extensive.

TEACHER'S INSTRUCTION

May 20, 1890

At the school house, Decatur, Sat. May 20 a teacher's instruction will be held under the direction of County Com E.H. Hinckley. Com. Ashley Clapp of Kalamazoo and Prof. E.A. Wilson of the state board of education, will be present and assist in the exercises. The program will begin promptly at 9:30 o'clock. Everybody is invited and school officers are urged to attend. The following is the PROGRAM

1. Opening exercises
2. West Point system — F.A. Bacon
3. Class exercise, chart work of pupils that entered school Sept. 1st.
4. Recitation — Anna Birsell
5. How to teach Geography — Mrs. E.E. Pickett
6. The Effect of grading the rural schools — C.H. Broughton
7. Good order — J.A. O'Leary

Besides the work mentioned above the program will be interspersed with music.

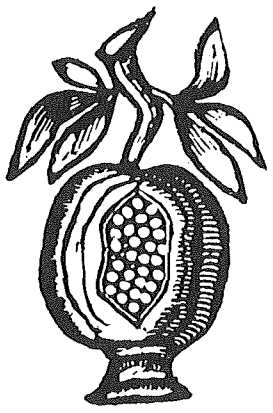
The Kickapoo Indians.

Have you noticed the noble red men walking about the streets the past few days attired in the garments which we always think of at the mention of the name Indian, the buckskin clothing feathered head dress and leather moccasins? These are members of the Kickapoo medicine company, which is now in Decatur, advertising the famous "Sagwa" and other Indian remedies.

The company consists of the physician under whose direction this company travels, and several clever performers, in addition to the Indians, and they give a free entertainment each evening at the town hall. This entertainment is amusing and such as could offend nobody, and free to all. The doctor is a genial gentleman and his short talks are both interesting and instructive. Each evening the hall is crowded.

These Indian remedies are prepared under the direction of the Kickapoo tribe, and are composed of roots and herbs. The long life and good health of the Indians is urged as a guaranty of the efficacy of their remedies.

The company will remain in this place until the end of next week and everybody is invited to attend their entertainments or to call and consult the doctor at the hall during the day. The object of the company is to advertise the goods, which are sold by all Decatur druggists.



THE DECATUR MEASURE FACTORY

An Enterprise Which Demonstrates That Manufacturing Can Be Successful Here.

Nearly two years ago, Marvin Hinkley and Lewis D. Roberts built and put in operation what is known as the Decatur Measure Factory, and which is the foremost manufacturing establishment in our village. Last May Theo. Trowbridge was admitted as a partner, and the firm became known as Hinkley, Roberts & Co. The venture proved to be a successful one from the outset, the market opening readily for their products, and a fine trade commencing which has since been steadily on the increase. All this was done without the aid of traveling representatives and speaks volumes as to the superiority of their manufactures. The factory at present gives employment to 16 persons, and the annual output reaches 12,000 dozen of measures All of the lumber used is purchased in this vicinity, the preliminary sawing of which gives considerable work to local saw mills. In the item of iron alone 24 tons of iron bands are used which, if extended in a straight line, would reach 254 miles. Nails are also purchased by the ton. While the measures have a wide sale in Michigan, New York city receives the largest shipments where they are in a steadily increased demand. St. Louis also receives a share of the product, and measures are shipped to Ohio, Missouri, Kentucky and many other southern states where, with the addition of covers, they are largely used for tobbacco packages. As only carefully selected stock is used in the factory the culls and seconds are utilized in the making of celery boxes of which some 6,000 have already been made.

The factory is constantly behind in its orders, and the present intentions are to enlarge the works as fast as practicable. Such an institution is of great benefit to our village, and while we, of Decatur, have been seeking to secure the location of some outside manufacturing establishment at this place, Messrs. Hinkley, Roberts & Co. have been quietly sawing wood and benefiting themselves and their townsmen by supplying that want to the best of their ability.

The Measure Factory.

A visit to the measure factory discloses a scene of busy activity. The REPUBLICAN recently called at that institution and was shown over the premises by Mr. Trowbridge, one of the proprietors. Hundreds of measures are turned out each day, all of the very best quality; in fact there are but three or four factories in the United States that make the high grade work that is done in this institution. The products of the factory have been shipped to all sections of the country, east, west and south, and orders come in faster than it is possible to fill them. Quite a number of workmen are given steady employment at remunerative wages and the various machines that they operate and manipulate while converting the rough lumber into finished measures seem almost to be endowed with human intelligence, so rapidly and accurately is the work done. It is well worth while for anyone to spend a brief hour in looking over the institution.

Death of Dr. Keables.

Dr. J. T. Keables, a resident of Decatur for more than forty years, died at his residence in this place on Sunday, Nov. 1st, after a two weeks illness. The autopsy revealed the cause of death to be ossification of the valves of the heart at the aortic orifice. For some time the Dr. had admitted the presence of heart difficulty but until within a few months of his death, it had not been believed that a fatal termination of the trouble was imminent. All that skill and attention could do was done to retard the progress of the disease and diminish his sufferings, but this was one of the ills that medicine could not reach, or the utmost care alleviate. John Turner Keables was one of a family of eight children of whom four brothers and one sister still survive. He was born in Norwich, Conn., in Dec. 1825 and was of English descent. Ten years later the family moved to Hanover, Mich. Here this son grew up, worked with his father on the farm, studied and finally taught school until 1847. At that time his oldest brother was practicing medicine in Flowerfield Mich., and there he went, continued his school teaching and began the study of medicine with his brother. During this year he was married to Susan Woodruff of Park, St. Joseph county. The following year he went to Ills. for a short time, but returning to Michigan practiced medicine in Dowagiac until 1850 when he moved to Decatur. In 1861 he graduated from Rush Medical College of Chicago, and shortly after entered the union service as surgeon, being hospital surgeon at Cairo, Ills., and Island No. 10 and ultimately commissioned surgeon of the 3d Michigan Vol. Cavalry but did not join his regiment. Since the war he has been U. S. pension examining surgeon, of late years a special examiner. The healing science was a favorite one in the Dr's. family, two of his brothers and three nephews being physicians. His was the natural gift of smoothing the pillows for weary heads and bringing courage to sick and hopeless hearts and when in active practice his skill and kindness won him the confidence and affection of a large circle of friends and patients He was a man of good physique and fine appearance, with excellent ability, of a quick mind, a ready intellectual appreciation and a keen sense of humor, all qualities which make a genial companion and gain friends for their owner. He possessed untiring energy and an indomitable will and it was these characteristics which made him what he was in fact, a self made man. As increasing years and, who can tell, perhaps the depressing effect of an insidious disease, brought a dread of the cares and anxieties incident to his profession, he gradually retired from active practice and busied himself with farming and various out of door occupations. In this new field he displayed the same vigor and enthusiasm which had enabled him to succeed in other lines of work and it was not until within two weeks previous to his death that his hands let fall the burdens of his self imposed tasks.

He disliked display of all kinds and it was his especial and oft repeated request that there should be no elaborate ceremonies at the last, and so, on Tuesday afternoon, after a brief but impression burial service, the body was laid to rest in Lakeside Cemetery.

The deceased leaves a wife, son and daughter to mourn his memory.

That "Noble Outcast."

Michigan's favorite actor, Mr. Frank Tucker, in conjunction with a most excellent company, appeared at the opera house last Saturday evening presenting on that occasion a beautiful story of domestic life entitled "The Noble Outcast." To comment on Mr. Tucker's reputation as an actor and manager is unnecessary as he is known throughout the state as a player of exceptionable ability, a man of rare executive attainments and a gentleman whose popularity in private life is seldom equalled by any member of the theatrical profession. With such a combination is it any wonder he has played to the capacity of the houses everywhere and established himself as the foremost dramatic favorite in the state. He has been very fortunate in surrounding himself this season with a company of ladies and gentlemen whose appearance on and off the stage indicate professional training which shows them to be more the metropolitan artist than the provincial player. Mr. Tucker ought to be proud of his support for they ably second his clever work and it goes without saying they dress the characters in a style and manner not always seen in traveling companies; in fact there is an air of prosperity about the whole concern refreshing to behold. Remarks on the performance are unnecessary as the entire populace was there and their verdict is ours that Tucker's interpretation of "Jerry the outcast" was the effort of his career and would alone stamp him as an artist if he never again spoke a line.

Woman's Way; Man's Way.

Not long since the REPUBLICAN was riding in a car where the passengers chanced to be nearly all ladies—delegates returning from a convention of some kind. Ever on the lookout for an item, the scribe's attention was attracted to the various different ways in which the fair travelers had provided for the safety of their tickets. As the gentlemanly conductor entered the car to collect the fares, one lady, with infinite difficulty, extracted the precious pasteboard from one of her tight fitting gloves; another, after diligent search, found her lone pocket where, carefully wrapped in the folds of a scented, lace trimmed mouchoir, her ticket lay safely hidden; one carefully unlocked her Russia leather grip and extracted her permit to ride from some one of its hidden recesses; and still another daintily unbuttened the second button of her waist and carefully removed from beneath its silken folds the evidence that her fare had been duly paid. And so on through the entire car, each had a different hiding place for her ticket, but, unlike a man, each knew exactly where to look for it.

The different characteristics of the two sexes, by the way, are strongly marked in this incident. A woman has but one pocket and that, concealed in the multitudinous folds of her voluminous skirt, is difficult to find and not easy of access so she is compelled to make other disposition of the valuables she carries with her, but she never forgets their locality.

On the contrary, a man is not content unless his garments are besprinkled with pockets—not less than twenty will suffice for a full suit—and he has something in each of them but he never knows what it is until he has examined. Unlike a woman, he has to make a thorough search through these various pockets before he can find what he wants and, strange to say, always finds it in the last pocket in which he looks, but may have to go through them all a half dozen times before he succeeds. This masculine devotion to pockets is inborn; it manifests itself as soon as the boy can walk and talk and leaves the man only when life is ended.

RAILROAD RUMORS.

A Line from Grand Rapids to Decatur via Allegan Said to be Contemplated.

The following from the Grand Rapids Leader is of local interest in this vicinity because the rumors contained in it affect the Central road and especially because a railroad president says a line is contemplated by the Central from Allegan to Decatur as a connecting link in a new Grand Rapids-Chicago line. The changes would vastly benefit Decatur and THE REPUBLICAN presents the rumors for what they may be worth.

"It is said that the Michigan Central will make a deal by which they exchange their road from Jackson to this city for the Lake Shore road from this city to Kalamazoo. This will connect them with their main line and give them a direct road to Chicago, enabling them to enter into strong competition with the C. and W. M., especially for freight traffic.

Such a scheme as this would hardly be arranged in this city, and the local officials would naturally know little or nothing about it until the change was made. They are somewhat inclined, however, to take little stock in it. One of the Michigan Central local officials this morning said that he had heard of the scheme about a year ago, but did not know it had been revived. The Lake Shore and the Central railroads are practically in the same family, both being controlled by Vanderbilt, and it is hard to tell what scheme they might not attempt, but it is hardly believed that the Central would abandon the Jackson-Grand Rapids branch of 86 miles for the 68 miles from here to Kalamazoo.

President Hughart of the G. R. & I. had not heard of the project, and said he believed there is nothing in it. The Michigan Central has a good contract with the G. R. & I. to Kalamazoo which appears to be entirely satisfactory all around, and is apt to be permanent. The Central runs two trains daily to Chicago via the G. R. & I. to Kalamazoo, and Mr. Hughart did not believe they contemplated a change.

By way of the G. R. & I. Kalamazoo connection with the main line, the central route is 191 miles to Chicago; the proposed Lake Shore Route is 201 miles and the C. & W. M. by the New Buffalo route is 183 miles or eighteen miles shorter than the Lake Shore project. There is some talk, however, that the Central, if the change is made, will build a spur from Allegan to Decatur, cutting off the Kalamazoo track entirely and thereby shortening the direct line to Chicago by about twenty miles.

In case there is anything in the project, it means a big fight between the Michigan Central and C. & W. M. for Chicago traffic."

Prof. Bacon has introduced a new and instructive feature in the civil government class, that of giving questions in regard to state affairs which are not to be found in the text books.

It is rumored that the Michigan Central will increase the speed of the limited to fifty-five miles per hour, and our people are wondering how they will keep their hats on when the train shoots by.

Some people are very solicitous lest this village and this county shall go to everlasting ruin on account of the local option law. Any business that cannot survive without the aid of open rum-shops is not worth saving.

George Kern's injury received by being kicked by a horse at the Dowagiac fair, did not turn out as seriously as at first expected. He has as yet received no trace of the gold watch which was knocked from his pocket at the time.

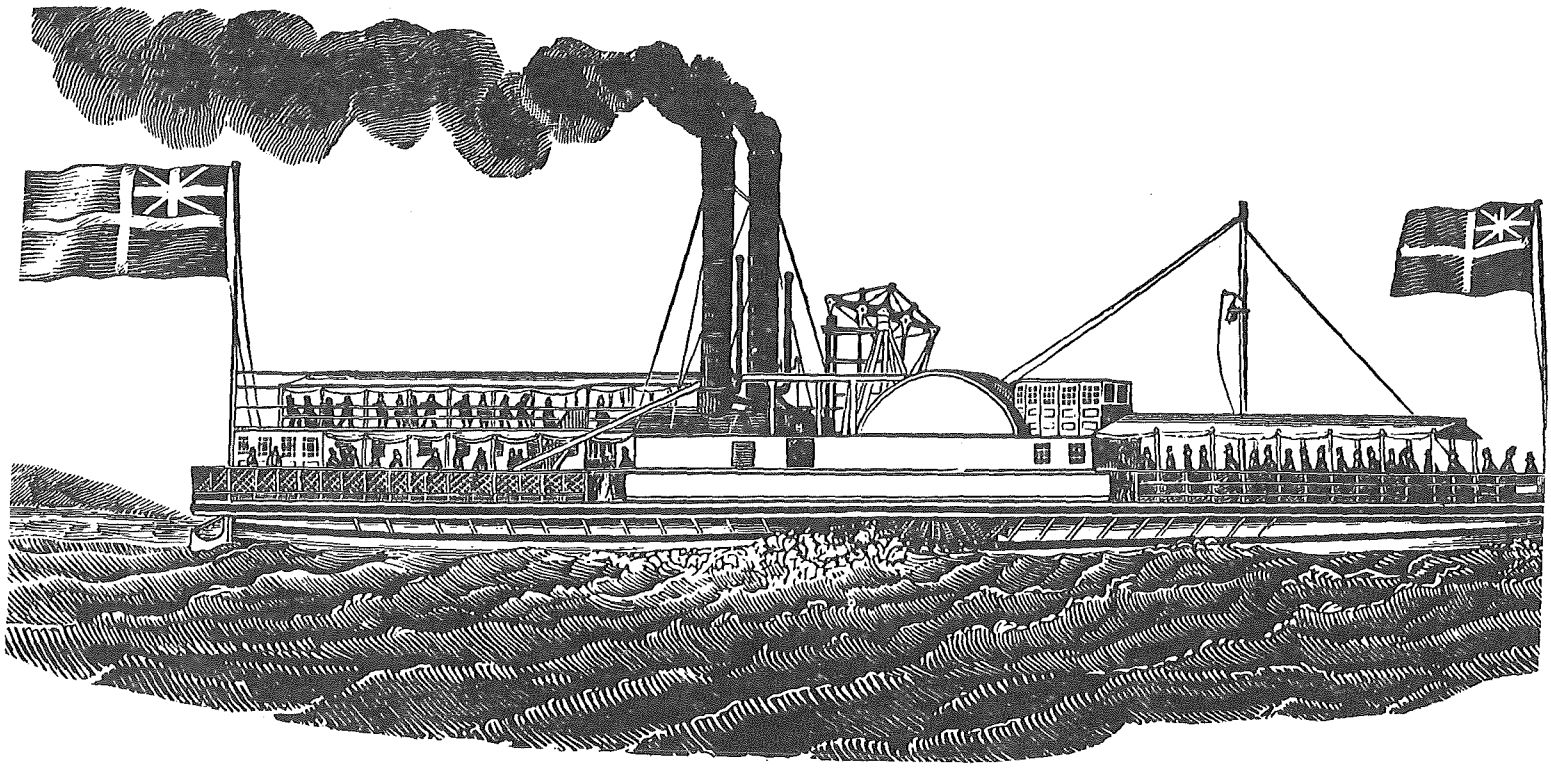
During George Congdon's absence for a few weeks, Frank Butler officiated as prescription clerk at Congdon's pharmacy, and "Sandy" demonstrated that there were no wheels in his head by retaining $125 for a few days as a trust fund against a possible fine.

The M. C. R. R. will sell excursion tickets to the Chicago exposition, beginning Tuesday, Sept. 22, and continuing until Oct. 20, $3.25 for round trip, including a ticket into the exposition. Tickets will only be sold on Tuesdays and are only good until the following Monday.

A badly frightened six-year-old boy accompanied by a large valise was left at this station, Saturday, by the conductor on the day express east. The lad's mother left the train at Dowagiac, and her friends cordial greetings caused her to forget that her little son was still on the train.

A meeting will be held at the Town Hall Monday evening Oct. 19, at which it is proposed to organize a branch of the Farmers' Alliance for this township. O. S. McGowan, county organizer, will be the speaker on the occasion, and music will be furnished by the well known Harris sisters.

The REPUBLICAN has formed the acquaintance of Prof. Bacon, the new superintendent of our school and has found him to be a very pleasant gentleman indeed. It is entirely safe to predict that, under his administration, the school will continue to prosper and increase in favor and reputation. Every pupil should make an effort to be present at the opening of the school on Monday morning. The columns of the REPUBLICAN will, from time to time, contain notices of the condition of the school. They are always open for such purposes.



Years Ago In Decatur

The following, clipped from the Decatur paper and preserved by Mrs. L. D. Roberts, tells of the way leap year was celebrated here thirty-five years ago. Some of the names will be familiar to the younger generation:

THE GIRLS DID IT

All agreed last evening that the leap year ball was a grand success and the young ladies who took an active interest in the arrangements have shown so much ability and business tact that it will be a cold winter indeed if all of them get left in the matrimonial schemes they are supposed to be working for all they are worth this year. Being a great social event it is proper that we should describe some of the gentlemen and their costumes.

Sig Desenberg, an old Decaturite, was resplendent in a ten button cutaway, facing cuffs of Gobelin blue satin. His only ornament was worn on the upper lip a la Zulu.

Dave Jones of Kalamazoo was attired in a natty suit of Kalamazoo Blue, low vest and ruffled dickey.

Marion Chadwick was arrayed in a four button cutaway embellished with a corsage boquet of bachelor buttons.

Harry Smith, the young debutant, wore a dashing suit of the dude style, Langtry bangs and weak curls.

Henry Moon wore a dress suit, city cut, lavender kids and black velvet dog-collar.

Ray Morris, another debutant, showed a coquettish vest, low cut, filled in with Vechers lace, hand boquet of Prairie flowers.

Matt Murphy, the swell druggist of Lawton, showed his portly figure in a London cut swallow-tail.

Aaron Cohn, the popular manager of the double store clothing department, was a conspicuous figure. She most striking feature of this toilet was a curly blonde wig, the envy of all the ladies.

John Hughes occupied a first base on the head set. He wore a nobby suit, stained dark, which Mrs. Grundy says was imported for the occasion.

Ed. Rawson, in a captivating suit of brown, fancy "polka dot" vest, hair worn in a Russian bang, brooch and earrings of black diamonds.

Carl Warner was conspicuous in his Prince Albert and well brushed pomp, having a decided and ministerial air.

Frank Thomas, decidedly the "Belle of the ball," was a vision of beauty, attracting much attention by his rare and beautiful jewelry, a genuine dimple, flowers heliotrope.

Carl Herzfield, in full dress, minus a train, an immaculate dicky, a too utterly too too pompadour, jewelry a beam of delight enclosing a shine stone.

Frank Stapleton, the young Benedict, in a suit of invisible green, piccadilly collar and white satin tie. No jewelry but a spray of orange flowers neatly pinned to his left ear.

Homer Hungerford, undoubtedly the nicest catch in town (catching on trains), wore a becoming Prince Albert, his duck locks arranged a la pompadour and surmounted by a Mikado comb of coiled wire.

Jack O'Leary was perfectly bewitching in a well-fitting suit of navy blue, vest a button lower for leap year, an enviable five dollar complexion and "sozodont pearls."

Fred Newson, that artless darling whose debut in Hartford society during the heated term last season caused such a decided feminine flutter, wore a close fitting suit of black.

Claud Haydon was very modest in his suit of black corded with pumpkin yellow, Medici collar.

Chas. Friedman, of Kalamazoo, another former resident here, was in full dress suit. His curls were held in place by a wreath of morning glorys. Chawming Chawley's costume was altogether captivating and he polka'd around in his customary nimble way, his feet occasionally showing a slight disposition to retire.

John Brownbridge was a sweet surprise in a fashionable suit of dark gray, elbow sleeves and pale blue silk mits. Flowers, pink eye daisies.

Many of the handsome gentlemen were strangers to our society reporter and could not be noticed personally, but the "lads and lassies all," as they whirled by in the opening waltz, showed happy faces above the tangle of shade and color. How like a fairy land! '88 is yours, girls: try it again.

E. A. BLACKMAN DEAD.

He Passed Away at His Home in Hillsdale Sunday Morning.

Edgar A. Blackman died in Hillsdale Sunday morning at 4 o'clock, of valvular disease of the heart, aged 47 years. The funeral services were held at Paw Paw under Masonic auspices, Tuesday, and the remains were buried in Prospect Hill cemetery The disease which removed from earth a useful man, was of rapid growth. Although troubled for six years, he had persisted in attending to business until five weeks ago.

He was born in Paw Paw, June 24, 1845, and lived there until his 17th year, and learned the printing business in the office of the True Northerner. At the age of 17 he was made foreman of the Jackson Patriot. He enlisted when 18 in Company C., One Hundred and Fortieth Indiana Infantry, and served as a private until the close of the war. In 1867 Mr. Blackman, associated with F. R. Bellows, issued the first number of the Van Buren County REPUBLICAN in this place, and for eight years was its editor. While here, 24 years ago, he was married to Miss Louisa M. Cole, who survives him. Three children also mourn his death. In 1876 he returned to Paw Paw and consolidated the Free Press and Courier. Since then he had been business manager of the Flint Daily News and Port Huron Tribune. Six years ago he purchased the Hillsdale Democrat, and by his energetic management made it a success. Last October he

GONE

When I was a farmer boy upon the edge of Arden,
Long before the Better Way of Doing Things was born,
The weasels stole my chickens and the rabbits ate my garden.
The foxes got my goslings and the wood-chuck took my corn.

Always I was fighting them, tracking them and trapping,
Always I must leave the plow,
stalking them and shooting;
Weeds grew high as I would try to catch a weasel napping,
As I'd drop a hoe to stop a muskrat at his looting.

Now I've logged the wood, and drained the marshes with my ditches,
Now there are no rabbits, and the foxes' day is done;
My meadow swells with fatness and my garden teems with riches—
But I am done with farming, for it isn't any fun.

VAN BUREN county has never been honored by having one of her citizens elected to congress. The present political situation is favorable for her to press her claims in that direction. The REPUBLICAN can see no good reason why Hon. JONATHAN J. WOODMAN, ex-master of the national grange, would not be a strong candidate for that honor if his name should be brought before the republican congressional convention. Nobody questions his ability nor his republicanism. He has had a large experience in public life, is thoroughly conversant with national affairs and is one of Michigan's successful farmers, not in name only, but in fact. It is doubtful if there is a man in the fourth congressional district for whom a greater number of votes would be cast then for Mr. WOODMAN.

RICHES

You get a new ten-dollar bill
And smooth its folds with pride.
It looks so beautifully big,
So crisply long and wide!
Its yellow back like sunshine seems,
(It gives the note some class!)
You even find beauty in the face Of Michael Hillegas!

But brief is your enjoyment, for
You have to buy a hat.
You get in change a five, two ones,
And ragged bills at that.
Still there is beauty in a five,
So long as it is whole.
You feel the pictured Indian
Is not without a soul.

But other needs must soon be met;
You buy all sorts of things.
The eagle on the dollar bills,
Like riches, spreads its wings.
They fly away, these lesser notes,
In spite of your laments;
And soon you'll find your lovely ten
Looks just like thirty cents!

A BIG BLAZE.

AN EXPENSIVE SCORCHING

Browning's Drug Store and Three Other Buildings Burned—$8,000 Worth of Property Destroyed—Town Threatened With Destruction.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock last week Thursday afternoon, an alarm of fire called the greater portion of the population of this village to the business center of the town, to see the most destructive fire that has visited this place in years. Browning's drug store was in flames on the inside so that entrance was impossible, as soon as the alarm was given, and so sudden and fierce was the fire that a holocaust was narrowly escaped.

The story of the origin of the fire as told by Mr. Browning and his clerks is as follows: A barrel of gasoline had just been drawn by a syphon from a barrel on the outside to a metal tank in the cellar, where the gasoline was always kept. A small quantity had been spilled upon the floor (perhaps a half gallon) and Mr. Browning had sent his junior clerk, Bert Culverhouse, a young boy, into the cellar with a sponge to wipe it up. The boy took no light into the cellar and Mr. Browning from the head of the stairs saw him cleaning up the gasoline and walked away. In a moment, the boy cried fire loudly, the flames rushed up the stairway, and the store was instantly filled with dense, black smoke. Mr. Browning rushed from the store, saving nothing but his books and cash register and being quite severely burned about the head in doing that much, while another clerk, Mr. Bromley, hastened to give the alarm. The boy Culverhouse was still in the cellar, cut off by fire from escape up the stairway, and it seemed he must burn with the building. But his quick wits saved him. He groped his way to a front cellar window, where he attracted attention and was assisted out, but in an exhausted condition and badly burned.

The family of Mecker Shookman lived in the rooms over Browning's and Mrs. Shookman had a dressmaking shop there, employing several hands. The heat and smoke drove them all out, and nothing but a sewing machine and couch were saved.

The fire engine and hook and ladder truck were out in very quick time and the fire company, with the assistance of hundreds of willing citizens, men, women and children, did effective work.

The fire quickly spread to Frank White's barber shop, adjoining Browning's on the south. Most of the shop furniture was carried out. Over the shop Wm. Barnes and family lived, and a portion of their goods were also saved.

Here it looked as though the sturdy fighters had the fire under control. But a gravel stone was drawn up the suction pipe into a valve of the fire engine, and no water was thrown by the engine for several minutes. This gave new impetus to the flames, and nothing but heroic work with buckets saved the business portion of the town from destruction.

N. S. Rathbun's grocery was the next building on the south and was completely destroyed. Mr. Rathbun's stock was entirely saved. In the rooms over this building lived Nell Mabury and family, who lost a portion of their goods, including some $50 in money.

Here the fire ran up against the brick wall of L. Brigham's building, occupied by Geo. Baker, and the southern boundary of the conflagation was reached. The roof and wall of the building were somewhat damaged, and a portion of Mr. Baker's stock was removed. C. W. Tase lived over this store, and his goods were considerably damaged by removal.

On the north of Browning's stood the building occupied by D. W. Brodhead and owned by a non-resident named Roberts. The building was destroyed, but Brodhead's loss is very light.

The Chadwick store building, an excellent structure with solid brick walls, came next and stopped the progress of the fire in this direction, being somewhat damaged, however. M. E. Chadwick and mother lived over the store, and their goods were damaged by removal.

In the rear of the burning buildings Geo. Jackson's blacksmith shop caught fire and was only saved by hard work. Sheds and store houses in the alley were also threatened, and their burning would have spread the fire to other valuable buildings.

The wind was very light, but sparks were carried to a considerable distance and fires were started on the roofs of Aus. Charles' house, the M. E. church and other places, but were speedily extinguished. The Duncombe House, across the road from the fire, was also threatened, and the front of the First State Bank building was blistered and the windows broken by heat. A number of firms on the street moved out some of their goods.

The first origin of the fire is a mystery, as no light or fire of any kind was in the store or cellar where the blaze started.

During the progress of the fire D. B. Johnson was struck by a falling ladder and received a severe scalp wound.

Mr. Barnes and family are now living in the rooms over Ellis' store. Mr. Rathbun has his grocery stock in the Arnold building, doing business, and Frank White occupies the Duncombe House barber shop.

If satisfactory arrangements can be made, and it is probable they will be, Mr. Browning will resume business at once.

The Browning store belonged to Mrs. T. Browning, and it is probable it will be rebuilt. Chas. Duncombe owns the lot on which Mr. Rathbun's store stood and is negotiating for Mr. White's lot, with a view to erecting a handsome new block. It is also rumored that a party is figuring for the Roberts lot, and it looks as though most of the burnt district, at least, may be rebuilt.

The principal losses and insurance are as follows: Mrs. Browning, building, $2,000, insured for $1,500, T. Browning & Son, stock, $3,500, insured for $1,000; Frank White, building, $600, insured for $300; contents, $100, insured; N. S. Rathbun, building, $600 insured for $300; Roberts, building, $600, insured for $500. None of the families burned out had any insurance.

RICHARD S. HUYCK

OBITUARY

Richard S. Huyck was born in the historical Mohawk Valley, in the state of New York, Feb. 21, 1811 and died at his home on Little Prairie Ronde, Dec. 14, 1893, being almost eighty two years old. He had lived during the greater part of the most eventful century of the world's history. During his lifetime he had witnessed more important changes than did Methuselah during the 969 years of his pilgrimage. He was the eldest of a family of five boys and five girls.

In 1832, when twenty-one years old, he came to Michigan, locating at Kalamazoo, where he assisted in building the second frame house erected in that now flourishing and beautiful city. In March, 1836, he was united in marriage to Sarah Fellows and removed to Little Prairie Ronde where he engaged in selling goods to the inhabitants of that newly settled vicinity. He was the first Postmaster on Little Prairie Ronde, Township Clerk for many years, and did the first surveying in Marcellus Township. He returned to New York and removed his aged grandparents, with whom he had spent his earlier years, to his new home in the then wilds of Michigan, caring for them in addition to his own family and improving his new farm, upon which he continued to live during the rest of his earthly life.

Seven children were born to him and his faithful wife on the old homestead; two died in infancy, while the other five were reared and educated by their loving and devoted father and mother. In business he was true and honorable, a loyal and useful citizen who ever took an intense interest in the welfare of his country; a true and trusted neighbor and friend, a fond and devoted father and an affectionate and faithful husband.

The funeral took place at the family home December 17. Notwithstanding the severe storm, many of his old neighbors and friends assembled to indicate their regard for the dead, and sympathy for the mourning family. Elder J.H. Hammond of Decatur conducted the funeral — using for text Job, 14th Chapter — last part of 14th verse and first part of 15th verse.

ARCHIBALD McWILLIAMS

OBITUARY

Passed away from this life August 11, Arche McWilliams, aged eighty-two years. Deceased was born in Antrim County, Ireland, Jan. 11, 1811. He emigrated to America with his family in the spring of 1863 and settled in Decatur Township, which has been his home since that time. His occupation was farming. Previous to coming here he united with the Presbyterian church. He leaves a wife and ten children — five sons and five daughters. This is the first vacant chair in forty-eight years. They laid away a young daughter before coming to this country. Mr. McWilliams was a well-known and respected man and a good citizen. Funeral was at the home. He was buried in Lakeside.

READING THE FINGER NAILS.

Character as It Is Expressed In the Tips of a Woman's Fingers.

Examine her finger nails. If these wear the hue of bereavement—but why suggest anything so odious and impossible? If they are tinged with ink, beware of the learned lady, or perhaps she is a successful novelist, with a fortune at her finger ends. Yet she may be a Sappho, a poet, and we have a distinct impression that a muse may be a perilous person to marry, as in the case of Miss Blanche Amory. And poetry is not a paying profession, and Mrs. Hemans was "too poetical" for Sir Walter Scott. However, these are merely mortal inferences. It needs no "palmist" to tell the young man all this, nor does "the palmist" dally over such inferences.

If her finger nails are wider than they are long, beware!
She hath her nails not long, but broad. Beware!

as the sweet singer of America might have said. "A hot temper and obstinate disposition are indicated." This kitten, as in Mr. James Boswell's poem, will grow a cat and cross like other wives.

If the nails are square tipped, rounded next the hand, you may "expect a quick and peppery temper," but not sulks, which is the worst of tempers in matrimony. Remember that when a lady gives you her hand she gives you all that the hand implies—very probably she gives you pepper. It would be very interesting to know what kind of nails Mrs. Carlyle had, and what sort adorned the fingers of Mary Stuart, who notoriously "blew up" her husband, though indeed he richly deserved it. Unluckily portraits are of little service, as the hands too often are fanciful and conventional, especially after Vandyke.

"Almond shaped nails, especially if not too pink, indicate a cheerful, sweet temper" and are also of high æsthetic value. "If the nails are bitten," but we refuse to believe that the nails of the fair are ever bitten. Everybody would shun a maiden who bit her thumb at him.

"If you want a careful, economical wife, look at her thumb." But who wants an economical wife, one that will imitate Mary Stuart when she buys an Elzevir or an engraving? The collector, at least, and the convivial soul of open hand will avoid a lady who lives by rule of thumb. An extravagant thumb bends back very far when the hand is opened, as all hands should be. "Do not choose a girl who has a soft, fat hand," with fingers held close together. These things indicate selfishness—but it may be selfishness a deux and convenient.—London News.

COUNTY BATTALION.

Successful Reunion at Lawton, Monday and Tuesday.

The combined 4th of July celebration, unveiling of the soldiers' monument and annual reunion of the Van Buren Battalion, G. A. R. was a grand success and called out a large crowd of old soldiers and citizens. A fine campfire was held Monday evening at which Judge B. F. Heckert and Norm. Cooper of the Coffee Cooler, were the principal speakers.

The public exercises of the second day took place in the afternoon. Music was furnished by the Decatur and Glendale cornet bands and was fine. After an invocation by Rev. G. P. Linderman, chaplain of the battalion, Hon. C. D. Lawton made an address of welcome, which was responded to by Capt. O. W. Rowland. The next speaker was Gen. R. A. Alger, who was received with loud applause. His remarks were not lengthy but were very interesting, especially what he said on the pension question. The boys all like the general. At the conclusion of his remarks a contribution was taken to aid in defraying the expense of the noble monument erected by the citizens of Lawton and vicinity. Everyone who gave a dollar or upwards received one of Shæfer's beautiful photographs of the monument. Gen. Alger headed the list by giving $25 for a picture and several others gave five and ten dollars each. Quite a handsome sum was realized. This was followed with an appropriate and interesting address by Hon. H. F. Thomas, congressman from this district. Other addresses were expected but the rain interfered with the programme. Capt. J. C. Burrows was not present, greatly to the disappointment of many of his old comrades.

The newly elected officers of the battalion are as follows:

Colonel, C. W. Willison of Decatur; Lieut. Col., H. P. Waters of Lawton; Major, O. W. Rowland of Paw Paw; Surg., Gilbert Mitchell of Geneva; Chap., G. P. Linderman of Paw Paw.

The next annual meeting will, no doubt, be held at Decatur.

A SINGULAR FATE.

A Young Woman Dies During a Sleigh-Ride at Jackson.

An Autopsy Held and the Physicians Declare That Excessive Tight-Lacing Had Caused Paralysis of the Heart.

A VICTIM TO FASHION.

JACKSON, Dec. 11.—Frankie Simons, an inmate of Sadie Hodge's house, died in a cutter while riding with her employer. The drive was continued until the Hodge woman spoke to Miss Simons and she did not answer. She reined her horse at Dr. White's drug store and called for assistance, and the girl, whose head had fallen back over the cutter seat, was taken into the store, but inside of two minutes she ceased to breathe. Dr. White, assisted by Coroner Davis, held an autopsy. Both pronounce the girl's death due to paralysis of the heart, and also declare the condition, remarkable from the fact that the heart was perfectly healthy. They declare further that conditions reveal what has hitherto been a mooted question that a person with a healthy organism can die from the heart's paralysis from pressure of a distended stomach, superinduced by tight lacing. The effects of the corsets were apparent, for the heart, lungs, liver and stomach were crowded together in an abnormally small space. The dead girl had been an inmate of the Hodge house six weeks, coming here from Adrian.

Henry Shores, a horse thief, is in jail at Cassopolis. In November he applied to Benjamin Hathaway of Little Prairie Ronde, for work on his farm and was given employment. He proved to be an excellent farm hand, but quit work at the end of a month. That was a week ago last Saturday night, and Sunday morning he was missing, and also Mr. Hathaway's horse, road-cart, three blankets, a valise, clothing, money and other articles. They traced him quite a distance, and then lost the trail. Under Sheriff Crosby learned that the fellow, who had given the name of Henry Williams, was Henry Shores, of Elkhart, Ind., followed him there, and at his home found the valise and its contents, but Shores was not there. On Wednesday Crosby found him at Simonton's Lake buying cattle.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

PAW PAW SCORCHED.

Maple City Home Cremated—Three Dwellings Burned—Three Horses Roasted.

Last Saturday evening at about ten o'clock, the people of Paw Paw were startled by the dreaded cry of fire and the ringing of fire bells. Although many people were yet on the streets, no signs of fire were discovered until Dr. A. W. Hendrick's barn, situated just in rear of "Maple City Home," was enveloped in flames. The Dr., who had just retired, without stopping to dress, rushed to the burning building, in which he had four head of horses, and succeeded in getting one of them out; the other three were beyond the reach of assistance. The wind was blowing strongly from the southwest, and the fire was almost immediately communicated to the adjacent barn of Henry Wilson, from which Mr. W. succeeded in removing nothing except his carriage, a valuable horse which was in the barn sharing the fate of the Hendricks horses. Of course the fire department was promptly on hand, but in the presence of a destructive fire a little wait appears long, and it seemed an age before the steamer was ready to throw water on the flames, which were quickly communicated to Mr. Wilson's residence and to Maple City Home, Dr. Hendrick's residence and inebriate hospital. There was a magnificent display of fireworks, the air being filled with burning debris from the barns so that it literally rained fire even to the northeast boundaries of the town, and incipient fires were kindled in many localities; the Lee house, the Clifton house and adjacent buildings were on fire several times and it was only by the utmost vigilance and watchfulness that the town was saved from destruction. By the time the engine was ready to work, it was readily seen that every effort must be put forth to keep the flames from crossing the street, and so the water was turned upon the buildings nearest the fire, and it was an absolute impossibility to quench the flames until they had partialy expended their fury. By hard work, a further spread of the conflagration was prevented, the buildings destroyed being the ones above mentioned together with Will Mosier's residence on the corner of the block, occupied by himself and Ira Brott. The Dr.'s goods on the lower floor, including a valuable piano, were mostly saved, but little or nothing was removed from the upper rooms, which were all well furnished. His loss will approximate $5,000; insured for $3,500; $2,000 on house, $800 on furniture and $700 on barn and contents, covering also his live stock. Mr. Wilson had no insurance; his goods were partially saved. The house he occupied was the property of a Mr. Cook, a non resident, and was worth $1,500; insured for $800. The Mosier house was about $800; insured for $500. All, or nearly all the furniture belonging to the two occupants of the Mosier house was removed in fairly good shape and placed in the house recently vacated by H. E. Shaefer and family, where the burned out owners are now located. Dr. Hendrick and family are occupying a part of A. T. Stevenson's residence, while Mr. Wilson and wife have returned to the farm and are stopping with their son Walt.

The total loss will approximate $10,000 with insurance, and while the "burnt district" presents a dismal appearance, our citizens congratulate themselves that it was no worse and that the town itself was not destroyed.

A GHASTLY FIND.

Fishermen Discover a Box of Bones Near Traverse City.

It Is Believed They Are the Remains of the Ely Family, Who Mysteriously Disappeared in 1871—Were They Murdered?

A MYSTERY.

TRAVERSE CITY, June 30.—The north woods are full of mysteries that will never be explained. The finding of a box of human bones in a cedar swamp near Traverse City by two fishermen points to the solution of one of the mysterious disappearances that have become common of late years. In 1871 a farmer named Ely, living on the shore of Long lake, disappeared with his entire family, between two days, leaving everything untouched in his house. A hired man came forward with a deed of the house and farm that had never been recorded and claimed everything as his own, though he could not explain how he came to have it. Nothing was done at the time, and in 1876 Mr. Ely's father came to hunt him up, but could never find a trace of his son or his family. Nothing could be proved against the new owner, but he did not seem to enjoy life and the old farm and house soon fell into disrepute, and the house has stood silent and deserted for years with empty windows and echoing rooms. Some time ago a chest of woman's clothes was found in the thick woods near the house, and identified as belonging to Mrs. Ely, but no one has taken any steps to prove anything of late years, and the box of human bones is the first decisive thing that has ever been unearthed. The man who was supposed to know more than any living person about the mystery died a year or so ago, and it will probably never be solved.

Obituary.

FRANCIS W. FIFIELD.

Died, at his home in the southern part of Decatur township, Saturday afternoon, Dec. 2, 1893. He was taken with a fainting spell just as he was about to get into his cutter and died in a very few minutes. The remains were taken Monday morning, to his former home in Oakland county for burial.

Mr. Fifield was born in Ogden county, N. Y., April 10, 1821. At the age of 17 he moved to Waterford, Oakland county, Michigan, where he farmed summers and taught winters. In 1843 he was married to Miss Joan Morris. Mr. Fifield was elected to the legislature of 1862 from Oakland county. In 1864 he engaged in the mercantile business in Waterford, and remained there until his removal to Decatur in 1881. In his former home he was school inspector 20 years, justice of the peace 12 ysars, township clerk 3 years, supervisor 7 years, and W. M. of the Mosonic lodge for more than a quarter of a century. Of his seven children, three survive. Mrs. Annette Lanning, who resides here, Mrs. Harriet J. Bradt of Flint, and Eugene Fifield of Bay City.

SCHOOL MEETING.

Largest Attendance in the History of the District.

The annual school meeting of district No. 4, Decatur and Hamilton, was held at the high school room, Monday evening, and was very largely attended. A large number of women were present and availed themselves of their privilege of franchise.

The following items are taken from the financial report of the district for the past year:

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand	$ 5 28
Borrowed Money	750 00
Tuition	376 82
Primary Money	574 60
Library Money	25 25
One Mill Tax	454 70
Voted Tax	3,145 00
Total	$5,331 65

DISBURSEMENTS.

Notes at Bank	$ 864 76
Janitor's Wages	300 00
Teachers "	3,138 00
Repairs	8 50
General Expenses	181 04
Seats	168 96
Wood	174 90
Insurance	68 00
Library	25 00
Supplies	33 20
Officers' Salaries	60 00
Total	$5,022 36
Cash on hand	$309 29

The estimated receipts aside from voted tax for the ensuing year are as follows:

Balance on hand	$ 309 29
One Mill Tax	405 00
Library Money	25 00
Primary Money	575 00
Tuition	300 00
Total	$1,607 29

It was recommended and carried that a tax of $3,070.00 be voted.

The election of trustees to take the place of Messrs. Hooper and Stewart, whose terms of office expired, was then taken up, and here the interest of the meeting centered, as it was understood the election was to be a contest of strength between those who favor and those who oppose the retention of Prof. F. A. Bacon for another year. Mr. Hooper positively refused to be a candidate. Considerable feeling had unfortunately been developed, and this accounts for the unusually large attendance. On the first ballot, for Mr. Hooper's position, Theo. Trowbridge had 50 votes, J. H. Haynes, candidate of the Bacon faction, had 32, A. H. Huyck 20, L. Brigham 17, and the balance of the 134 votes scattering. A second ballot gave Trowbridge 76, Haynes 53, 10 scattering. For the second trustee, 145 votes were cast, of which A. H. Huyck received 78, L. G. Stewart 65. The election of Messrs. Trowbridge and Huyck was a decided victory for the anti-Bacon faction and doubtless settled the matter of whether he will remain another year. The feeling that has been aroused over this matter is lamentable, and it is to be hoped all differences of opinion will now be laid aside and that the entire district will stand by the board and the superintendent whom they may deem it advisable to hire, whoever he may be.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Program of the Meeting to Occur at Decatur, May 20.

Family Names and Migration.

Southern family names are scattered across the country below Mason and Dixon's line from east to west in what geologists would perhaps call a drift. As the west began to be settled by people from the colonial seacoast fringe, emigration tended to go in straight lines, so that the names of the Virginia seacoast appear in Kentucky, those of North Carolina in Tennessee, those of South Carolina along with Oglethorpe's cockneys in Georgia. Later the drift swept westward into Arkansas, Mississippi and Texas. In the progress names have been curiously transformed. Flemish names have lost the "van" or "de." Huguenot names, whether Flemish or pure French, have been awkwardly Anglicized, and even English names have suffered violent change.—New York Sun.

LIFE IS ESSENTIAL.

I questioned my soul as I stood by the dead,
My soul, in its anguish, made answer and said:
"No power can destroy and no fiat create,
For death is transition and life is a state.

Each atom of form and each atom of force
Exists as a part of their infinite source,
And whether in motion, or whether at rest,
Must live by a law that is never transgressed."

This, then, is the marvelous secret of death—
To live without life, and to breathe without breath.

—Lucius E. Foote.

The Choctaw Nation.

If a weary and disgruntled individual wanted to retire and hide himself from the world, he could not go to a better place than to the reservation of gentle Choctaw Indians in the southeast corner of Indian Territory. There are still 10,000,000 acres of unoccupied land, and the Choctaws welcome the white man, particularly if he will hustle and help develop their country—a work, by the way, which they are too lazy to do for themselves. They are fonder of hunting and fishing than of hoeing corn.

The white hermit would not be crowded. There are only 15,000 Choctaws, counting adopted whites, half negroes, greasers and all. Ten years ago the population numbered 14,800. The Indian is vanishing off the face of the earth. Choctaw streams abound with fish of many choice varieties. The woods are full of game of several kinds, which it is the hunter's delight to shoot. Wild turkeys are still to be found there, and in the mountains are bear, deer, panthers and wolves.

The soil is of extraordinary fertility, growing the products of the temperate zone, with an inclination to those of the tropics. The only industry in which the Choctaws engage to any great extent is the rearing of cattle and ponies. When milk is wanted for the Indian family, a cow with a young calf is driven up to headquarters, where the calf and the squaw milk her at one and the same time. This is the jolly Choctaw way of carrying on the dairy business.

CRIMINAL RECKLESSNESS.

The accident on the Michigan Central at Jackson last week, full particulars of which will be found in our news columns, was horrible. The fact that the Central has not had a fatal accident befall a passenger in the preceding 14 years, is no palliation of the carelessness and recklessness, almost criminal in itself and entirely so in its consequences. True, in the present crowded condition of the road and considering the great number of trains running daily, it is perhaps remarkable that other accidents have not occurred. But the fact of the greater danger should in itself be an incentive to greater care.

On the fatal ride, the run was made by the rear section of the train from Grass Lake to Jackson at the rate of 50 miles per hour, and the fact is undisputed that the train sped into the Jackson yard at half that speed or faster, in violation of law laid down for the running of trains in such yards. Here lies the negligence and blame. Had not Engineer Whalen run his train into the yards at a greater speed than he had a right to do, and much faster than a regard to safety would dictate, the accident could not have occurred, in spite of the failure of the air brakes to work.

But the blame should not rest entirely upon the shoulders of the engineer. In the effort to make the fastest possible time, the managers of the road have sanctioned just such reckless running as caused the awful loss of life, and upon them, too, must responsibility be placed.

The Central's boast that no one had lost life on its trains during the World's Fair traffic, is followed at the eleventh hour by a catastrophe, the reading of the descriptions of which cause a universal horror.

If railroads were willing to learn lessons from anything or anybody (which they are not), there could be found an important one in this accident, and that is that the best plea for patronage that can be made by a carrier is absolute safety rather than the fastest time. Speed is perhaps necessary to the successful conducting of a great railroad system, but there can be no excuse advanced for making such frantic efforts to attain it as will menace the safety of the public.

M. O. ROWLAND.

DO YOU LIKE IT?

We have no desire to vainly boast of the progress the REPUBLICAN has made and is making towards the ideal country newspaper, but we feel sure that our patrons appreciate what we are doing, and that increased patronage will amply repay for every improvement made. However, we cannot truthfully deny that the change is a gratifying one to the publisher. But the pleasure of the publisher will be of no avail if the change does not meet the approval of our readers. We have every confidence that it will do so, and fully expect a unanimous affirmative answer to the question, "do you like it?" The end is not yet reached. "Progression" is still our watchword, and we expect to continue to improve the REPUBLICAN until it becomes indispensable to every home in southern Van Buren county. To this end, we ask the hearty co-operation and assistance of all our friends and patrons, and have no doubt it will be cheerfully given.

M. O. ROWLAND.

THE $80,000,000 of idle money in the vaults of the New York banks would, if put into circulation, go far towards restoring prosperity.

THE democrat party and press is just now very, very sore, and snarls and snaps at anybody who dares to touch it. Pet measures cannot be enacted, and, as usual, democratic campaign pledges are failing of redemption.

WHEN will American industries resume their normal condition and the idle workmen all find remunerative employment? When will factory wheels begin to turn and furnace fires be rekindled? Why, on March 5, 1897, the day after the inauguration of the next republican president.

THE laboring man who, in these times, wilfully adds himself to the great army of the unemployed by striking or otherwise, is guilty of little less than a crime. The jaw workings of the agitator and walking delegate, always pernicious, are now a real menace to the public welfare and should not be listened to by patriotic American workingmen.

LOCAL option has been defeated in Branch county, after having been in force two years, and was carried in Hillsdale county by a majority greatly reduced from that given at the former election. These changes in public sentiment are no argument against the local option law itself, but do show that the people in these counties very properly thought that the law unenforced was worse than no law at all.

Train Ditched.

Accident on the Narrow Gague—A Narrow Escape for Passengers.

Last Saturday evening a special train was conveying a lot of summer resorters to the Peninsular at Lake Cora. The engine was running backward and, as they reached the foot of the grade just east of the station, they struck a lot of cattle. The engine and tender were thrown from the track, the engine tipping over on its side and lying partially across the track so as to obstruct all traffic. The engineer and fireman were thrown from the engine and considerably bruised, but not dangerously injured. Three of the cattle were killed, two of them belonging to John Ihling and one to his hired man. Fortunately, the coach did not leave the track and the passengers escaped with only a shaking up and a bad scare. On Sunday a force of men laid a new track around the wreck so that trains could pass pending a removal of the ruins. Photographer Buckhout was called to the scene and took a picture of the smash-up in order to perpetuate the memory of the most serious accident that ever happened in the history of the road.

It will be remembered that on the 5th day of June, 1893, while Mrs. Mary Fagan, Mrs. Agnes Murphy and Mrs. Mary Ellison were driving on Main street in the village of Lawton, their horse became frightened by one of the thills of their carriage coming loose and dropping down, and that while crossing the track of the M. C. R. R. the carriage was overturned. Mrs. Fagan was instantly killed, Mrs. Murphy so badly injured that she died three weeks afterward and Mrs. Ellison seriously hurt. It is claimed that the unsafe condition of the crossing was the cause of the accident and that the railroad company is liable to respond in damages. Four suits are now pending against the company, the last one having been commenced last Monday. The several suits pending are as follows: Thomas Murphy as administrator of the estate of his wife, Agnes Murphy, claiming damages of $20,000; Thomas R. Smith as administrator of the estate of Mary Fagan, claiming damages of $10,000; Mary Ellison, claiming damages of $10,000, and a second case brought by Thomas Murphy, administrator, under another statute enacted in 1885, claiming damages of $25,000. Spafford Tryon of Dowagiac, and Mills, Osborn & Cavanaugh are attorneys for the plaintiff in the Fagan case, while L. A. Tabor appears for plaintiff in the Ellison and Murphy cases.

THEY SAW THE GHOST

Nearly every city, town or village in our country that is old enough to have a history has its haunted house and its story of ghostly visitants and eerie, uncanny sounds and sights connected with some particular locality.

To this rule Florence, Ala., many of whose older residences and families date back to the days of Andrew Jackson, forms no exception. Around several of the ivy clad mansions of the old town hang mysteries which make them objects of interest to the educated whites and of terror to the ignorant and superstitious negroes.

Humanity in every age has been eager to listen to the marvelous and to swallow the incredible upon very slight guarantee. However, it is upon no such slender testimony that our story rests.

Early in the history of the town among the first attracted to the locality by the picturesque beauty of its location above the swift flowing Tennessee was a North Carolinian named Richard Hunter.

Wealth in those days was counted in the south by the acreage of plantations and by the number of slaves, male and female. Of the former Richard Hunter possessed enough for a barony and of the latter a small regiment.

Around the great square brick house, with its massive pillars and wide spreading porches, could be seen bright and happy black faces by the score. The cotton fields resounded to the hoeing songs of well conditioned and swarthy fieldhands, while in the "quarters" not far off pickaninnies and dogs abounded.

Richard Hunter had but one child, the sole heiress of his acres and his wealth, and she had just budded under the warm glances of a southern sun into womanhood, fresh and blooming as a wild rose.

Alice Hunter was in that period of life where the present is so bright that its glow reaches out and dominates the future. Wealth, doting parents, gratification of every wish were hers; but above all she had won the love of the man of her choice and was happiest in the knowledge that Philip Marston's dearest hope and highest aspiration centered in herself.

Phil Marston, as he was known to every one, or "Marse Phil," as the negroes called him, was young, handsome, free handed, free hearted, gallant and all that went to make him an ideal lover.

In spite of strong rivalry he had won his ladylove, and the day was set for their marriage. Alice was only 17, and so the wedding day was postponed until the following year.

Suddenly in 1836 the Cherokee war broke out. Philip Marston raised a company of riflemen from among the hearty yeomanry of the section and joined the command of his friend and neighbor, General Coffee.

Throughout the sharp and decisive campaign that followed Marston bore a conspicuous part for gallantry until the final battle on the banks of the Coosa.

Hemmed in upon a peninsula, bounded, all but a narrow neck of land, by swollen waters of the rivers, the chiefs and bravest warriors of the Cherokees made their last and desperate stand. Leading his riflemen to a charge, Philip Marston fell, mortally wounded.

Bad news travels quickly. It was on a night of furious wind and rain that a hunting shirted rifleman brought the tidings of Philip Marston's death to the Hunter mansion.

Suddenly the great bronze knocker on the door pealed out its summons, and Alice, thinking that none but a lover would brave the tempest and darkness, flew to greet him.

In silence and with bowed head the hardy pioneer pointed to the riderless steed which he led and extended to her a scrap of paper on which her dying lover had traced a few words of farewell.

Pale, calm, tearless, the ghost of herself, she watched the rude but loving mourners bear him to a chamber in the house and lay him as if asleep upon a couch.

Day by day she faded like a lily that is denied moisture, and within a few short weeks her spirit fled to join his in another world.

Since then the Hunter house has had many owners and many occupants, but every year upon the anniversary of that stormy night in 1837 the stroke of a horse's hoofs are heard without, the old knocker clangs, footsteps sound upon the stairs, and the occupants of the south room—the same in which Philip Marston's body lay—receive a ghostly visitant.

Ten years ago the house was owned and occupied by a family named Thunsden, among the members of which was a nephew named William Black, a young and rising member of the bar.

Early in the summer of 1312 the Thunsdens went on their annual pilgrimage to one of the Virginia watering places, leaving young Black the sole inmate, as, according to southern custom, the servants lived in a separate building.

Several days had gone by without incident until the night of June 25. Black had started to go to bed, but was suddenly seized with an unaccountable loneliness and distrust of his solitary condition, and upon reflection recollected that this was the anniversary.

Taking his hat and cane, he went in search of a fellow barrister of his own age and with whom he was intimate, one John T. Jones, who held forth upon the courthouse square and kept bachelor's hall over his office.

It was about 11:30 o'clock, and as beautifully calm and clear a moonlight night as heart could wish when they entered the house, and after locking the hall door went to Black's room, the south chamber.

Young men make short work of toilets, so they were quickly in bed, and neither being sleepy Black started to tell Jones the story of the haunted room.

He had just finished when the old cracked bell in the courthouse tower struck midnight, and as the last reverberations died away a horse's hoof strokes could be distinctly heard upon the gravel walk without.

Suddenly and without warning the windows commenced to rattle in their casements, and a noise resounded from the roof as if torrents of rain were descending upon its weather beaten shingles.

Then came the clang of the old knocker upon the hall door. The noises ceased as quickly as they had begun, and all was silence.

Then "tap"—"tap"—"tap"—"tap"—came the unmistakable sound of footsteps upon the stairs, slowly and wearily mounting. They ceased for a second or two upon the landing outside, the door swung noiselessly open, and a figure, clearly seen in the moonlight, entered and crossed the room.

Both men lying on the bed saw it plainly and afterward described it as that of a young and beautiful girl, tall and slender, with golden curls framed round a face of marble pallor, wide open blue eyes and clothed from head to foot in fleecy white, with a single white rosebud nestling above the ear.

Advancing slowly to one of the windows the figure stood a moment with clasped hands, looking wistfully out into the night and with the full glow of the moonlight upon its upturned features. Then it turned, approached the side of the bed where Jones lay, stooped and placed a hand cold as earth itself upon his forehead.

Up to that moment he and Black had been too frightened to move or speak, but when that icy hand was laid upon him the spell was broken. Human nature could endure no longer, and with a yell both of them tumbled out of the other side of the bed from where the figure stood and bounded down the stairs.

They did not go back to the Hunter house that night. In fact, it was some days before they could summon nerve enough to go in daylight and get their clothes.

Since then the night of June 25 in each year finds that room untenanted.—T. R. Gordon in Atlanta Constitution.

MERRY CARNIVAL.

BUSINESS AND GAIETY.

Combined in the Making of a Happy Evening—A Success in Every Way—Ladies' Library Entertainment.

THE BUSINESS MEN'S Carnival at the opera house Monday evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Library Association, brought out a crowded house, and the ladies took in over $35 at the door. The entertainment was one of the finest ever given by Decatur talent. The orchestra added much to the pleasure of the evening and the grand march was especially fine. The following enterprising business houses were represented by the young ladies named and the costumes described, which were ingenious and varied:

Knights of Pythias—Minnie Young, dressed in knight's uniform and bearing emblematic colors and letters of the order as a banner. She made an appropriate recitation referring to Pythian fraternity.

G. A. R.—Pearl Van Hise, in appropriate costume, bearing the U. S. flag. Her song "America" was especially fitting.

Frank Potts—Anna Struble, her head protected by a lamp shade and her dress stylishly trimmed with festoons of crackers and cranberries, bearing a banner "The Star Grocery." She represented Frank well, advertised him well and even well imitated his familiar and cheery "good bye; come again," as he ushers customers out of the door.

N. E. Hooper—Bessie Van Hise, bearing a large and varied assortment of molars extracted by the best dentist in the county and some of the implements of torture used by him. She carried a golden "Hoop" with "E. R." in the center. She gave an example of dental science upon a creature whose mouth was fearful to behold—far more fearful to be held in.

H. D. Crane—Edna Carney, who did not have much to say, but looked well enough to make up for her silence. Her banner was a huge white painted "crane."

The REPUBLICAN—Lucy Howland, with a long flowing robe of white cloth, on which was printed the last issue of the REPUBLICAN. A large printer's stick was her banner.

Fred Stern—Miss Gilmore, artistically arranged in the finest to be found in an excellent dry goods stock, bearing a banner advertising the noted one price store.

The Fair—Mae Blades, bearing a golden harp and covered with Fair Store bargains, noticeable among which was a sack of 40 cent flour. She sang an ingenious advertising song.

First State Bank—Mrs. Frank Stapleton, her dress glistening with gold coin fresh from the mint.

L. Van Steenburgh—Gladys Lincoln, ornamented with watches, beads, ribbons and many other things to be found in a miscellaneous stock, a hat of tin and a copper tea kettle for a banner.

Prof. C. F. Pritchard—Hattie Roberts, hooded with a tambourine and her dress bedecked with miniature musical instruments. Her exhibition of playing on yerious instruments was wonderful (?).

Parker & Ellis—Lucy Cady, her dress ornamented with grain, her banner a celebrated Snow Flake flour sack.

G. B. Browning—Lou Broadhead, in a dress of white tissue paper, her banner of blue with gilt letters, pestle and mortar.

L. B. Bagley—Mary Mahoney, with the typical white market apron and cap, a string of sausages slung over her shoulder, a banner on which was painted a marvelously fat beef.

Mary Shaad—Ella Cronin, dressed in evening dress of beauty, bearing a motto on a star and crescent, and truthfully telling the people what a good place Mary's is to trade.

L. G. Stewart—Grace Hakes, dressed in Japanese costume and carrying an immense Japanese umbrella. Stewart's teas were of course in everyone's mind when she appeared.

Knights & Co.—Mamie Sherrod, wearing a grocer's apron and a motto mounted on one of the best brooms to be found anywhere in Decatur.

L. L. Hammilton—Cora Hamilton, carrying a miniature mattress and a gilt lettered banner advertising the progressive furniture dealer and undertaker.

Decatur Public Schools—Maude Place, her hair filled with pencils and pens, rulers on her dress and an alphabetical ruffle around the skirt, a large slate for a banner. She spoke well deserved praise for the school and teachers.

S. N. Thomas & Son—Mrs. D. Carney, with countless knives, shears and scissors glittering on her costume, and carrying a banner advertising this sterling firm.

J. J. Huff—Gay Nesbitt, her dress covered with Huff's finest cabinet photos and bearing a banner with the good advice to "Go to Huff's." The scene in which Miss Gay took a flash-light picture of the rest of the participants was immense.

M. S. Carney—Lottie Van Camp represented this enterprising druggist, with hundreds of jingling and shining little bottles on her dress, a poison label on her back and a gilded motto and pestle for her banner.

Frank Stapleton—Rose Carney, carrying a banner on a pretty tri-colored barber's pole.

Ladies' Library—Anna Shaad, with a liberal portion of the library hanging to her costume. She closed the exercises with a neat speech, giving a sketch of the association and thanking all who had contributed to the success of the carnival.

W. H. Clark—Mrs. Carl Warner, with a small sized chair on her back, typifying the large stock of chairs at his store.

Crifield & Dewey—Veda Dewey, attired in gentleman's evening dress and calling attention to an excellent stock of clothing and furnishing goods.

D. J. Treat—Mabel Culverhouse, wearing jewelry, precious stones and plated ware, carrying a huge watch dial as a banner.

S. Ellis—Mollie Cohn, her dress covered with shoes and a banner calling attention to the fact that Ellis' is the place to buy all shoes except horse shoes.

Hinkley, Roberts & Co.—Aggie Hinkley, with grain measures for waist, sleeves and hat, the head of a measure for a banner.

Frank White—Murle Klinger, dressed in barber's towels, her banner hung on an immense pair of shears and razor. Her poetry on the Deacon's place was good.

John Shaad—Annie Johnson, with lots of shoes, a shoe sole for a banner, on one side of which was painted, "I greet you from the bottom of my sole." She appeared afterwards sitting in a big shoe. Beside her was a cannon loaded with bargains, from both John and Mary Shaad's.

Hotel Barron—Mattie Osborn, with a waiter's apron and a banner. She read a bill of fare that made the audience hungry.

J. Cohn—Rose Cohn, attired in gentleman's evening dress from the tip of her patent leather shoes to the glossy silk tile on her head. The way she sold an overcoat would cause even her successful father to take a back seat and was a feature of the evening.

M. S. Thomas—Olive Lyle, in milkmaid's dress, carrying a milking stool and pail and telling the excellencies of Thomas' pure Jersey milk.

Postoffice—Nellie Van Camp, her dress completely covered with envelopes, stamps, postals and newspaper wrappers. She told some of the many woes of the postmistress in a comical style.

PEPPERMINT PLANTS.

Fifteen Thousand Tons Cultivated Yearly in the Wolverine State.

More than one-half of all the oil of peppermint, spearmint and tansy used in the world is said by the New York Post to be produced and distilled in Michigan. The center of the industry is St. Joseph county. Peppermint plants weighing fifteen thousand tons when dried are cultivated every year in the state. From these the essential oils are distilled. Early in spring the roots are planted in furrows from two to three feet apart. In a day a good workman will plant an acre with them. A few weeks later the rows meet and cover the entire ground. In September the plants mature. They are then covered with fragrant purple blossoms and the time has arrived for mowing. After lying in the sun to dry they are raked into heaps and taken to the distilleries, of which there are about one hundred and fifty in the state. It is estimated that three hundred and fifty pounds of dried peppermint plants produce one pound of oil. The yield per acre is fifteen pounds of oil. Distilled peppermint brings from one dollar and twenty-five cents to five dollars per pound in the home market. The industry was originally established in Mitcham, Eng., about one hundred and fifty years ago. Early in the present century a beginning was made in this country in Wayne county, N. Y., and in St. Joseph, Mich. To-day nine-tenths of the entire product of the world is made in the United States. The rich alluvial soil so abundant in Michigan, together with its desirable climate, has enabled the state to take precedence over any other state or country in this industry.

Teachers' Institute.

The REPUBLICAN has received the following announcement from the department of public instruction:

The State Teachers' Institute for Van Buren county, series of 1893, will be held at Paw Paw, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday, August 28, and closing at 4 p. m., Friday, September 1. Commissioner J. A. O'Leary, Hartford, local committee.

There is no doubt as to the value of a good live institute. Experience proves that as a rule the most successful, alert, progressive teachers are those who avail themselves of the work given at such meetings.

The persons in charge of the instruction at these institutes are those who have had practical experience in school work, and know how to impart to others a portion of what they have gained in this experience. Effort has been put forth to give the county the best institute ever held.

The work will combine professional and academic instruction. The institute will be divided into sections, and the instructors will conduct classes for the purpose of reviewing some studies; and also to illustrate certain methods of instruction. The workers have been urged to arrange for calisthenic exercises, singing, marching and the like, so as to make the work move off cheerily and without fatigue.

The time for study at the institute will be necessarily limited, and in order to permit the most profitable of class exercises the following topics are suggested, so that those who propose attending may make some preparation:

Arithmetic—(1) Fractions, (2) percentage, (3) mensuration, (4) evolution.

Grammar—(1) Relative clauses, (2) infinitives, (3) participles, (4) objective complements.

Geography—(1) Michigan, (2) model outline of North America, (3) climate, cause of, (4) commercial geography of the United States.

History—(1) War of 1812, (2) slavery, (3) Civil War, (4) inventions.

Physiology—(1) The eye, (2) circulation, (3) ventilation, (4) digestion.

Civil Government—(1) Legislative officers of nation, state, county, city, village, (2) compare duties of governor and president, (3) how amendments are made to state and national constitutions, (4) taxes.

Pedagogy—The first chapters of Putnam's Primer, or its equivalent.

Reading—Whittier's Snow Bound.

The preceding topics are given to aid in a proper preparation for the work. Bring any text books.

School Items.

We had considerable company of late, and the doors are still open.

The second rhetorical division, the Beta, will render a program toward the end of the month.

In view of the heavy snow storms that passed high above this region last week, an enterprising snow-plow poised itself on the flag staff at a presumably early hour Wednesday morning, to be in readiness to scrape the sky should another storm venture this way.

The following program was presented at the high school room Tuesday afternoon by the Alphas:

"America" ..... Section
Essay ..... Jessie Beals
Recitation ..... Lettie Gosling
Impersonation ..... Gertie McAdams
Biography ..... Kate O'Leary
Debate—"Resolved that the Geary law is an unjust law and should be repealed." Affirmative, Anna Pardonette and Corydon McKee; negative, Frank Huyck and Mabel Culverhouse.

The judges, Horace Lincoln, Beulah Weeks and Gertie Howland, rendered a decision in favor of the negative side of the discussion.

Michigan Crop Report.

Following is a summary of the monthly crop report issued by the secretary of state, July 1:

The area in wheat in Michigan this year is 1,578,252 acres. 20,895,374 bushels is the probable total yield in the state. This is an average af 13.24 bushels. The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed by farmers in June is 751,001. The total number of bushels reported marketed in the eleven months, August-June, is 13,760,490. This is 2,304,814 bushels less than in the same months last year.

The unfavorable weather in May delayed corn planting and caused a reduction of acreage. The area planted in the southern counties is estimated at 95 per cent, in the central, 87 per cent, and in the northern, 99 per cent of a full average. In condition the crop is from five to fourteen per cent below an average, but in the southern counties it is 22 per cent, and in the central, 15 per cent better condition than one year ago. Oats are doing well.

Compared with an average there is a loss of from two to three per cent in the area planted to potatoes in the southern and central counties, and a gain of three per cent in the northern counties. In condition the crop in the southern counties is 83 per cent, or 12 per cent higher than on July 1, last year. In the central counties the condition is 87, and in the northern 92.

Apples in the southern counties now promise about one-third, in the central two-fifths, and in the northern two-thirds of an average crop.

The DECATUR REPUBLICAN came out last week in a six-column quarto form and greatly improved in appearance. It ranks with the best weeklies in southern Michigan.—Dowagiac Standard.

The VAN BUREN COUNTY REPUBLICAN made its bow last week in a new form—six column quarto. The quality was always the best and now the appearance is much improved—Dowagiac Republican.

The DECATUR REPUBLICAN came out last week in an enlarged and very much improved form. The subscription price has been advanced from one dollar to $1.50. This last is the most important improvement of all.—Courier.

The DECATUR REPUBLICAN is materially improved by discarding its blanket form of make-up and going back to a quarto—using auxiliary sheets as of old. This "all printed at home" business sounds very pretty to talk about, but it isn't the way to make good country newspapers.—Northerner.

The DECATUR REPUBLICAN has been obliged to put its subscription price up to $1.50 per year again, deciding that it does nat pay to publish a county paper for less. The REPUBLICNN is a good paper and well printed. It deserves the support of the natives.—Marcellus News.

Bread-Making at the Fair.

New points and improvements are constantly being discovered even in the most familiar processes. Many of these were gained by housekeepers who at the Woman's building at Jackson park listened to Mrs. Rorer's lecture on the art of bread-making with yeast. She gave the relative values of high and low yeast, and high yeast in its growth in bread was illustrated by the growth of the plant in soil. She said: "The idea of letting the sponge stand over night has gone out of date. Bread-making is easy if the cook will understand a few essential principles." Mrs. Rorer advocated the theory that six o'clock dinners were best for health, and said the idea of heavy meals at noon was against the action of nature. During the next lecture she made Dutch corn pudding with apricots, hominy croquettes and meat sauce.

The Most Popular Building.

It matters little whether the crowd at the fair is large or small, Woman's building always gets its share, which generally fills it to overflowing. The lectures which take place daily in this building show the educational features of the World's Columbian exposition, and a strong contrast to some of the features which are to be seen in the park for which an admission charge is made.

Science Works Wonders.

A MATTER OF MORALS.

Nothing is dearer to the heart of the average parents than the morality, character and reputation of their children. Immorality, while not the rule, is far from uncommon, and the tendency in that direction among the young is in some respects a growing one. That being true, it behooves us to inquire into the causes and means of remedy at hand. While the churches, schools and influences of home are in no respect to be undervalued as instruments of good to the young, there is another and a mighty influence for good or evil that receives altogether too little consideration at the hands of otherwise careful parents, and that is the class of literature in the home.

It is not with the "yellow covered" stuff that we wish to deal, as that has been fully and thoroughly canvassed in the press and from the pulpit. The newspapers and periodicals should be carefully selected. Cleanness in journalism should be demanded, and the paper that persists in rank sensationalism or the gratification of morbid curiosity in its news columns, should be rigidly excluded from the home. Your reading tables should at all times be something more than a pastime, an instructor and elevating in tone.

Not alone the news columns of the papers should be scanned. In these days, the advertising manager's anxiety for a good financial showing admits advertisements, seductively worded, to the columns of otherwise reputable newspapers that are unfit for the eyes of our boys and girls, and which contain suggestions that can be productive of nothing but evil to them. Guard against such publications. Support none but pure periodicals; provide good literature in magazines or standard books, and one of the mightiest forces of evil will be eliminated from our American homes.

BOYS IN BLUE.

Annual Encampment of the Grand Army at Indianapolis.

Thousands of Old Veterans Are Tenting at Camp Wilder—Gen. Harrison Extends a Welcome—Commander Weissert Makes Response.

CAMP FIRES GLOWING.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 5.—The veterans of the union armies have been pouring into Indianapolis for the past twenty-four hours with scarcely a break in the procession. It is estimated that 25,000 uniformed men of the Grand Army of the Republic are now in camp.

The official ceremonies began yesterday with the dedication of Camp Wilder in Military park. During the war it was known as Camp Sullivan, and here a large number of troops organized into regiments and were sent to the front. The camp will be under command of W. A. Ketchum. It was named after the famous leader of Wilder's brigade.

GEN. HARRISON SPEAKS.

In the afternoon, Commander in Chief Weissert and ex-President Harrison being the principal speakers, fully 5,000 veterans were in camp. When Gen. Harrison was introduced he spoke in part as follows:

No Indiana soldier need be ashamed to open to the world, in friendly competition, with the records of the sister states, the story of Indiana's part in the great rebellion. But the beauty of it all was that these regiments from Indiana, and these from Illinois and these from Ohio were all one. They were not Indiana's soldiers, Ohio's or Illinois' soldiers, but soldiers of the United States. The cause was one, the glory is one, and, visiting comrades from other states, we are not here to exalt ourselves, but to take your hands as comrades and share with you the glory of the greatest result that was ever achieved by war in human history. If there is any man anywhere who does not honor the union veteran he does not live in Indianapolis. If there is any man anywhere who suspects him or would detract in the smallest degree from the merits of his service he is not here to-day. You will not meet him on our streets. If there is anyone who can ever find it in his heart to speak of the wounded or disabled veterans of the war or of the veteran who has now fallen by the way, after a brave struggle for near thirty years in the pursuits of civil life, he does not live here. My comrades, these tents about us are pitched many days' march nearer home than those in which you dwelt here in 1861. They will stand but for a day and vanish. You go to your own homes, to the shelter of those roof trees, and to the companionship of those families from which you separated yourself in time of war and to which you returned with an increased love and consecration. You will go back to pick up the duties of your citizenship with a higher sense of those duties, of the glory and sweetness of this flag, than you had before you came here to mingle with these comrades, to listen to these stirring songs, and to stir each other by the remembrances of those bloody days.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

Marvin J. Burnett Returns from the West and Shoots Himself.

Friday of last week, Oliver Lyle found a man in his woods, near Patrick Enright's place, with three bullet holes in his head and a revolver near by, with which he had evidently attempted to destroy his own life. He was brought to the Duncombe house in this place, where medical aid was summoned and the wounds were found not to be fatal. He it now in condition to be removed.

For several days, an air of mystery surrounded the man's identity, and nothing was known as to the real motive for his act. He had come here on a train, registered at the Duncombe as John Johnson, gone out and purchased some cartridges and gone to the place where he was found, evidently with the intention of killing himself. In his pocket was a memorandum book in which was written the following:

"To the Public—Do not try to identify my body for others may suffer if you do. I have children who have a life before them, to enjoy or suffer. Do not I pray you let them know of my death. I am heart broken and cannot face poverty longer. Bury me with as little ceremony as possible. Yours truly." (No name signed.)

The fact that the man had but $1.95 in cash in his pocket lent color to the poverty part of his statement.

The identity of the man was not positively known here until the arrival Tuesday of ex-Sheriff John Dix of Kalamazoo, who recognized the man as Marvin J. Burnett. Mr. Dix came here at the solicitation of the man's wife and daughter, who live in Schoolcraft.

Years ago Burnett lived in Porter township, this county. He is a mechanic and worked all over this part of the country, having been one of the builders of the Dyckman house at Paw Paw. Some years since, he left his family and went to Dakota, engaging in farming. A short time ago his farm was sold on a mortgage. He started to return east and from Kansas City telegraphed to his daughter at Schoolcraft for financial assistance, as he was "dead broke." She sent him $20, and heard nothing more of him until the description of the would-be suicide reached her eye, when it was rightly surmised who he was.

There is no doubt of the man's insanity. His father was insane before him and died in the Kalamazoo asylum. His relatives are unable to care for him, and the probate judge of this county has been asked to send him to the asylum at public expense. There is some question as to the liability of this for the expense of his care, but there is none whatever as to the necessity and prudence of putting him in the asylum for safe keeping and proper treatment.

A Premium on Funerals.

A New York daily paper has found the most ghastly plan on record for enlarging its subscription list. It has arranged with a certain undertaking company to give a discount for burying all its subscribers. For instance, if you take the paper and die some morning, which people who take the paper would be apt to do, and are caught dead with a copy of the paper on your person, then your wife can go to the undertaker with the burial coupon cut out of The Daily Tooter, and he will accept it and bury you at 15 to 20 per cent less than if you took the rival paper next door.

The funerals are divided into different classes in regard to expense. A first class putting away implies a doorband, outside case for you and the personal attendance of the undertaker at the grave. That is a compliment for only upper ten citizens. The difference between these and poor white trash consists mainly in the number of coaches. If you are only worth a $35 funeral, you cannot have but one coach, whereas if you belong to the aristocracy that pay $90 you may have three. The desire of everybody even to the poorest is to have a big funeral. It looks as though many people cared for you whether anybody did or not.

If one may ask it without offense, where is this coupon business to stop? We have coupons for the prettiest teacher, for the most popular policeman and even for trips to places where you can take your annual bath. But when it comes to coupons for burying you, does it not somehow look queer?

An Old Republican Correspondent in the North.

THOMPSONVILLE, BENZIE CO., MICH.
September 18, 1893.

THE DECATUR REPUBLICAN:—Having through the kindness of Mode Nash, formerly of Decatur, met you, will say although we could not talk back to you, you told us of people in our old home, and of events happening that were interesting to us. Having had an affection for you, whether reciprocated or not we do not aver, we now talk a little.

We have resided in this place for two years and have passed through the experience of frontier life similar to our forefathers. When we came here we builded in the forest, being obliged to fell the trees to find room to place the foundation for our humble cot. Now, after two years, we find ourselves just over the boundary line from an incorporated village of about 1,000 souls, with the material of which cities are builded. We have two of the best railroads in the state, the C. & W. M. and the T. A. A. & N. M., forming a junction and giving us good shipping facilities both east and west; only 27 miles from Traverse City and 12 miles from Grand Rapids; have two saw mills, one shingle and one planing mill, good water power, the Big Betsey; good farming land adapted to growing any and all crops but wheat. Fruit is the finest to be seen; all the small fruits are in abundance; peaches good upon the hilly portion of the country; apples are perfect, and plums are really immense. Potatoes are always a crop. We have one church, several stores, three hotels, two restaurants, shoe shop, blacksmithy, wagon and repair shops. A school of two rooms with nearly 200 pupils. Able teachers and well equipped for teaching the branches taught. We have two hell holes where liquor is sold, but one of them is controlled by a man who is above the average in that calling, having run an orderly shop so far.

Our timber is maple, beach, hemlock, ash, birch, cedar, elm, cherry and occasionally a small patch of pine. Cedar is being turned into paving blocks for the city streets. All kinds of lumber is manufactured, but a great quantity is wasted yearly because of a lack of manufactories. Piece work could by made a paying industry here in using that which is left to rot upon the ground.

One of Decatur's old residents, Mode Nash, is proprietor of the R. R. eating room and runs a No. 1 boarding house, where the hungry can find plenty to eat and the best in quality.

Land can be purchased after the timber is cut off for from three to fifteen dollars per acre, according to location.

As to newspapers, we have one here, but a good live paper would thrive and be a boon to the place; the people are intellectual and read good papers. We would be pleased if you would give this effusion space in your paper, and would gladly welcome any of the people of that section should they desire to begin new or wish to build a home with but small outlay; will gladly answer all inquires regarding the climate, soil and advantages. H. Jacobs and wife of Prospect Lake, visited us the first of the present month and were pleased with the place. We have not entirely given up the work of correspondent since coming here. Will send one of our best local papers. Hoping you will continue to send out a paper as good as the issue of two weeks ago and that your subscription list will not grow less, we subscribe. Yours Fraternally,

E. S. NORTHRUP.

Americans Abroad.

Thousands of our fellow countrymen and women will doubtless take a run across the water for a brief vacation this coming summer. It is safe to say a majority of them will go for the first time and that they will be of that class which combines the best qualities of mankind—the intelligent people who have earned the money they are going to spend in Europe. They may be seen by the hundred and thousand crisscrossing Europe, notebooks in hand, and, heaven bless them! talking through their noses, sometimes, alas! very loud.

A word to these, our fellow countrymen and women, may not be out of place, lest the ignorant and untraveled populations of Europe get exceedingly erroneous ideas of this Union. Don't talk loudly and boastfully everywhere about how superior things in your own country are to everything in Europe. It will not go down pleasantly with the foreigners, and, besides, it is not the fact. A hundred things there are better, finer and handsomer than any object in the same line in this country. Keep your mouth shut and your eyes and ears open. Watch quietly the usages of the foreign ladies and gentlemen and fall into their customs when you are in their country. Note that foreigners do not expectorate and do not chew tobacco.

Look at the exquisite pictures, the marvelous sculpture. Listen to the music, contemplate the finely finished landscapes, the lovely parks, and let the beauty and poetry of it all sink into your utilitarian American soul. You will be reminded by the behavior of some of your own fellow countrymen that rudeness is not independence, and a coarse, aggressive manner is not the best way of showing yourself a citizen of the greatest nation the sun shines on. For that very reason you can afford to be quiet, polite and gentle in manner. Go abroad to learn, and you will be richly rewarded. Do not lecture the foreigners on temperance and prohibition. Doubtless they need it, but it is not your place to do it.

Once in awhile you will meet some of your own fellow countrymen with sprangly, bushy beards, outlandish garments and the same rusty, long legged boots they wore when they drove the cows to the swamp pasture—on the whole, looking like a grizzly bear. This kind of Americans will be so well satisfied with themselves that you will feel a blush creeping slowly up into your countenance at sight of them. You dodge them wherever you can, and small blame to you. You will wish often that some Americans only had sense enough to perceive how a well dressed, well bred foreigner can many a time give needed points to Americans in matters small and large.

About Newspapers.

Benjamin Franklin's mother advised her long-headed son not to start a newspaper, "because there are two newspapers already in the country." According to the latest edition of Rowell's Directory there are now 19,573 newspapers published in the United States and Canada, of which 13,983 are weekly publications, 2,886 monthly, 1,759 daily, 243 semi-monthly, 194 quarterly, 87 bi-weekly, 57 bi-monthly and 39 tri-weekly.

Montgomery Advertiser: There is some fun editing a paper in Germany if you can make it all right with the goverment and not have your edition suppressed after it has been prepared for publication. The editors of morning papers in Germany leave their offices at 9 o'clock, and the papers are on the press at 11 o'clock. By 12 o'clock even the printers have gone home, and when General Von Moltke died at 11 o'clock at night, there was only one Berlin newspaper that had a line about it in its issue next morning.

THE FAIR ENDS.

At the Sound of Cannon at Sunset All the Flags Are Lowered—A Total Paid Attendance of 21,477,212—Receipts Over $14,000,000.

THE LAST DAY.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—The World's Columbian exposition came to an end Monday night. Six months ago it opened with splendid pageantry, and a thousand bright new banners were unfurled while a hundred thousand spectators cheered. Monday these weather-stained banners were pulled down almost in silence. Those that represent foreign countries will not be raised again. None but the American flag float over the buildings to-day.

The Flags Dropped.

The day had been one of the most quiet since the opening. A few more than 208,000 persons paid for entrance, and these were not demonstrative. At Festival hall the Harrison memorial services were held. Few of the large crowd in the park knew when the time had come for the end. At 4:30 o'clock men could be seen crawling up to the flagpoles around the Court of Honor. Fifteen minutes later there was a little puff of smoke from the United States steamer Michigan which lay at anchor off the grounds. Twenty more peals followed. All day the flags had been at half-mast, but when the twenty-first gun was fired they were pulled simultaneously to the flagstaff's peak, and after fluttering there for a moment, as if in farewell, they went down for the last time, and the official announcement had been made that the World's Columbian exposition as an international affair was at an end. Taps were sounded by Bugler Wiley and Innes' band played "The Star Spangled Banner." This was a spontaneous demonstation and for the first time the people cheered.

Only an Official Closing.

But the gates of the world's fair are not closed. They were officially closed Monday night at 11:30 o'clock, but they will be open again this morning, and there will be the usual band music during the day and the illumination and playing of the fountains to-night. This afternoon the executive committee of the board of directors will meet at Jackson park to determine how much longer and under what conditions the fair may be continued open. Their action will depend largely upon the state of the weather when the meeting is called and the crowd in attendance about the grounds. If both are favorable the exposition will doubtless be prolonged for a short period. Many of the directors favor such a course.

The Attendance.

Since the first of the world's fair entrances to open began business at 6:30 a. m., May 1, 21,477,213 men, women and children have passed through the turnstiles after dropping paid admission tickets into the tin boxes. Children to the number of 1,253,938 purchased tickets to enter the grounds.

The attendance by months does not vary except by moving forward and upward in an accelerated degree. May's attendance was 1,050,037; June, 2,075,113; July, 2,760,268; August, 3,515,493; September, 4,059,871; October, 6,816,435. The total attendance including passes, was 27,529,400.

HOMEWARD BOUND.

Old Liberty Bell Leaves Jackson Park for the Quaker City.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Old Liberty bell, draped in somber colors, was rolled from its place in the Pennsylvania building Tuesday afternoon, placed on a wagon drawn by two big black horses, and started on its homeward journey to Philadelphia. There were no ceremonies. The frame was wrapped in emblems of mourning for the mayor of Chicago. The bell was taken to Administration plaza and stopped for a few minutes by the side of the new Liberty bell. A few speeches were made. It was taken to the Union depot, placed aboard a special car in the Fort Wayne night train, and at 9 o'clock left for the east. The itineracy of the trip shows that stops of a few hours each will be made at Dayton, Xenia, Cincinnati, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Altoona, Harrisburg, Reading and Allentown, the bell arriving at Philadelphia at 10 a. m. November 4.

GRANDMA KEELER.

The Good Old Lady Written Up for the Detroit Journal.

A Decatur correspondent of the Detroit Journal sends the following to the Journal. The story of the remarkable life of Mrs. Keeler is printed, accompanied by a picture of her as follows:

"There is probably no woman now living that can tell more interesting stories of the early history of the state of Michigan, and particularly that of Jackson county, that Mrs. Sarah Keeler of Decatur. She was truly a pioneer, being the first white woman in Jackson county, and a settler in Kalamazoo and Van Buren counties when they were scarcely more than forests. She recites many interesting stories of her early life among the Indians of Michigan.

"She was born in Hamilton, Ont., in 1806, on the site where Dundurn castle now stands, and in 1822 was married to Josephas Case, a brother of Hon. D. L. Case, now of Lansing. They moved to Dixborough, near Ann Arbor, soon after and were accompanied by D. L. Case. At that time Detroit was a trading post, and gave but small evidence of the city it was destined to be in the future. In 1830 they moved to Jacksonburg, now known as Jackson. The land on which the Case family settled was a wilderness, and Mrs. Case, for this was the name of our subject then, was the first white woman to reside there, her nearest white neighbor being thirty miles away."

"There was an Indial trail running from Detroit to Chicago at that time, and an old Indian prophet told Mrs. Case that some day it would be a great thoroughfare and would connect two great cities. His prediction came true, for the line of the Michigan Central is built near this trail. The Case family got into the good graces of the Indians, and there was nothing too good for them, especially for Mrs. Case, who was called by them the white squaw. She soon learned to speak their language, amd the best piece of venison or the best fish that they caught was always saved for her.

"The land on which they settled was owned by William Thompson and was soon platted into village lots. Mr. Case bought the first lot sold and erected the first frame house in what is now the city of Jackson, and his wife gave birth to the first white child born in the county. Her husband was a blacksmith by trade. His first shop in the wilderness was by the roadside. Afterwards he built a shop on the ground now occupied by the Michigan Central as a depot. At this time there was no grist mill in the little settlement, the nearest one being at Flowerfield, some fifty miles away.

"In 1837 the Case family moved to Alamo, Kalamazoo county, and in 1843 to Kalamazoo. The celery city was then only a hamlet. Mrs. Case was a resident of that city when the Michigan Central ran its first train into the village. Her husband died in 1850 and in 1854 she moved with her family to this village. This place was then a wilderness. In 1856 she was married to Judge Wilcott H. Keeler, after whom the village of Keeler was named. Judge Keeler was the first settler in the village and the first judge of Van Buren county. He died in 1862.

"The subject of this sketch, who is now 87 years old, has been the mother of eleven children; and she survives all but three of them, a maiden daughter who lives with her; Chas. S. Case of California; and Mrs. L. F. D. Tucker of Battle Creek. She has lived in the same house here for 28 years, and is for many miles around known by both old and young, as "Grandma Keeler." Notwithstanding her age she is hale and hearty, and very seldom fails to attend the Methodist church. She yet has in her possession an old wooden clock, which her husband purchased 65 years ago of Homer Hurd, after whom the village of Homer, Calhoun county, is named. The clock has been in constant use ever since, and keeps excellent time."

All of which is substantially correct, except as to the old lady's health, she now being in a feeble condition.

NUTS TO CRACK.

We are sorry to say that a few of the newspaper editors of Van Buren county are possessed of souls so small and minds so narrow that they think success in the profession is only to be attained through the tearing down of some lively competitor, and a number of them are engaged in a vain endeavor to prevent the REPUBLICAN from reaping the legitimate fruitage of its enterprise. One journal, liliputian in importance and influence, three-fourths patent and half of the other fourth advertisements, has persistently, and without cause other than jealousy, kept up a fusilade against the REPUBLICAN ever since the present proprietor purchased it. Now that paper happens to be in the hands of a couple of youthful printers, absolutely devoid of practical newspaper experience, and we have not heretofore deigned to notice their calumnies. They have resided in Van Buren county less than three years, while the editor of the REPUBLICAN has spent less than three years of his life outside of this county. Yet they insultingly said, last spring, that the editor of the REPUBLICAN had returned to Van Buren county to remain until he went elsewhere in his erratic career! Last week the same paper took occasion to insinuate that the REPUBLICAN was not up in typography at all.

Now we have no desire to waste powder on vultures, who see no prosperity unless they have the carrion of dead competitors to feed upon, and merely wish to say in this connection that the present form of this paper was not assumed to please the Lawton Leader or Paw Paw Northerner, but in response to the lively demand of the people of the southern part of Van Buren county for a better paper than they have ever had. The fact that the change in form is commended as a happy surprise by the best practical employing printer in the county, Mr. H. A. Cole of the Courier, is far more significant than the growling of the two papers that have been all along envious of our success. As we receive the work of the two largest patrons of job printers in the county, neither of whom reside in Decatur, such talk as that referred to dissolves into mere air. We are in Van Buren county, our birthplace and home, to stay; nothing could tempt us to leave so long as such competition is trying to drive us out. We shall continue our progress, regardless of whether it pleases our competitors or not, and expect to prosper on a wholesome diet of live county news and crisp editorial; not by attempting to overthrow any of the other county papers, many of which are capably edited. This week we publish one of the largest regular editions in the county. Our subscription list has increased more than 50 per cent since May 1 last. We have more cash in advance subscribers than any Van Buren county newspaper. This is the only paper published in the southern half of the county at $1 per year, and the only only one in the county printed all at home. While some of the other papers have increased in price and decreased in quality, the REPUBLICAN has decreased the price and increased the quality.

Crack these nuts, and then be honest and give us credit for the improvements we make, as most of the county papers have cordially done, or else say nothing whatever. Don't misrepresent. The boomerang of untruth is a dangerous weapon.

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Being a complete description of the World's Columbian Exposition from its inception, by Thos. W. Palmer, Pres., Geo. R. Davis, Director General, D. H. Burnham, Director of Works, Thos. B. Bryan, Commissioner at Large, Maj. Ben. C. Truman, Dep't Chief of Floriculture and many others prominent in authority.

A volume for the people that tells all that is worth knowing about the great Columbian Exposition, that stupendous array of results of over 19 centuries of Christian civilization, which will descend to history as the triumph of American achievement, marking the 400th anniversary of the discovery of the New World. This best and latest memorial record of the World's Fair project is written by the ablest authorities in every department and carries with it the prestige and authority of names that have been identified with this great national undertaking from its inception. The chapters describing its dedication, its completion, its architecture and its wonders of various kinds are from the facile pens of those familiar with each phase of the interesting narative; men and women whose names alone are a splendid guarantee of the entire authenticity of every statement made, and whose official connection with the Fair is such that no possible question can be offered as to the real value of this magnificent work.

The Triumphs of Mechanical Skill, the Wonders of Electricity, the World of Travel, the Marvels of Inventions, the Wealth of the Mines, the advance in Agriculture, the Beauties of Horticulture, the Triumph of United Womanhood.

It is a Liberal Education in Itself.

The Midway Plaisance, that wonderful street of nations where are gathered inhabitants from almost every country and clime, from the fine female warriors of Dahomey to the wild little Esquimaux of Alaska, are all described in a most charming style and yet in language so terse that "he who runs may read." Do not be deceived into buying any so-called books made up wholly of newspaper clippings, rehash of "Ancient History," taking in the "Chicago Fire," and in fact a little of everything except the Columbian Exposition. Size of complete book, 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, printed on super-calendared paper, about 600 broad, handsome pages, and nearly as many highly artistic pictures and other special features, perfectly bound and at prices within the reach of all:

Fine Silk Cloth, full gold side and back, ---------- $2 75
Half Moroco, mottled edges, full gold side nnd back, ---------- 3 50
Elegant Full Moroco, gold edges and back, silk headbands ------ 4 25

The Crucifixion at Chicago.

No event in the history of man is so far reaching in its results and influence as the Crucifixion of the Savior, and no spot of earth is so rich in historic interest and tender association as Jerusalem and her environments. Probably more people have a desire to visit the Holy Land, and Jerusalem in particular, than any other place in the world. What a matchless subject for a grand Panoramic production wherein shall be shown, not alone the scene of Crucifixion, with the surging multitude of scoffers, the small and almost panic stricken party of friends of the Savior, but also the ancient city, gorgeous for the festival season, the great temple, palaces, walls, the whole city fairly alive with people from the country round about. This great scene, 50 by 100 feet high, is now being produced, and will be ready for public view by May 1st, on Wabash ave. and Hubbard Court, Chicago, where it will remain as one of the leading down-town attractions during the World's Fair. The work is in the hands of Messrs. Reed and Gross, who produced the World's Famous Cyclorama of the Chicago Fire, now on exhibition in that city.

Commencement.

The Exercises of the Class of '94 a Brilliant Affair.

As early as half-past six Thursday evening the people began gathering at the opera house to be in time to secure desirable seats to enjoy the commencement exercises of the class of '94, and in an hour's time after the doors were open every available inch of room in the hall was occupied.

The stage was very beautifully decorated and draped with lace curtains and at 8:15 the class took their places on the stage, accompanied by the teachers of the several rooms in the school.

An overture by the orchestra very finely executed, opened the exercises and this was followed by an invocation by Rev. G. W. Gosling.

The salutation by Mr. Wm. High was rendered in a manner that was a credit to him as well as his instructors. Mr. High spoke in a clear, loud voice and could be heard distinctly over the house and his words of welcome were well chosen.

Miss Lucy Howland followed with an oration, "Once Created Never Destroyed." She stepped to the front of the stage with a step that showed the confidence she felt to cope with her subject. Her voice rang out clear and crisp and the manner in which she spoke was very fine.

Mrs. A. E. Lawrence then rendered a solo, "Italian Serenade," with that perfect ease and grace that is so becoming of her.

"Liberating Power of Education" was the subject chosen by Miss Grace Porter. The handled her subject very well indeed and, like those before her spoke in a voice that could be heard in any part of the large hall, and the way in which she delivered her essay was another evidence of careful training.

"The North Pole of Success," an oration delivered by Mr. Alfred T. Gosling was evidence that his years spent in the school room had been crowned with success. The thoughts brought forth were a credit to him as well as the teachers who have helped and cheered him on when days of darkness and despair came. The oration was worthy of the young man. The orchestra rendered a descriptive fantasie, "Life in a rural village," which was arranged by A. E. Rudolph and which was very fine.

Symposium—"Our Indebtedness:"—To Greece for Culture, was the subject chosen by Miss Maud Place. She was dressed in a dress of the Grecian style In her essay she gave a history of that country from the ancient time to the present and showed the many ways it had benefitted this country. Like those before her she could be heard plainly and distinctly and her delivery was simply perfect.

To Rome for Government, by Miss Buelah Weeks was a fine oration on Rome and its government. She was dressed as a Roman and presented a very pleasant appearance. Her voice was clear and sweet and every word could be heard seemingly without any special effort on her part.

To America for Enterprise, was the subject so ably handled by Miss Marie Mahoney. She gave Greece her due credit for culture, and Rome for government, but America as being ahead of all for enterprise, etc. She was dressed in pure white, emblematic of the purety of our country. She spoke with a tone of voice that could be heard without difficulty and which was pleasing to the ear.

The "Gondolier" waltzes were very ably rendered by the orchestra.

Oration, "Possibilities of Our Country," by Fred H. Dewey, was very fine indeed and showed much study and thought in being able to grapple with a subject that has such a volume of meaning in it. His delivery was very good and he spoke very fluently, thus displaying that the efforts that had been put forth by him were not in vain.

Mrs. A. E. Lawrence again pleased the audience in another solo by her sweet voice.

"A Modern Utopia," by Miss Carrie Dobson was a well written essay and the manner in which she handled her subject showed only too well the careful preparation and study put forth, to be crowned at last with success. With perfect self control she delivered her essay in a very creditable manner.

The valedictory by Miss Maud Place was very fine. Her well chosen words and the way in which she delivered them were a credit to her.

A musical episode, "A Hunt in the Black Forest" another descriptive piece by the orchestra was a grand piece of music.

Prof. W. V. Sage then presented each with their diploma with a few very touching remarks that brought tears to the eyes of several in that crowded house. The orchestra rendered a march, American Cadets, followed by the benediction by Rev. G. W. Gosling, and the exercises were over.

The members of the class recieved many fine and valuable presents from their many friends.

TURNING THE TABLES.

The Negro Met the Lawyer on His Own Ground.

A Kentucky lawyer was standing on the steps of the Covington post office the other day, when an old colored man came up, and, touching his hat, asked:

"Kin you tell me, is dis de place where dey sells postage stamps?"

"Yes, sir; this is the place," replied the lawyer, seeing a chance for a little quiet fun; "but what do you want with postage stamps, uncle?"

"To mail a letter, sah, of course."

"Well, then, you needn't bother about stamps; you don't have to put any on this week."

"I don't?"

"No, sir."

"Why—for not?"

"Well, you see, the conglomeration of the hypothenuse has differentiated the parallelogram so much that the consanguinity don't emulate the ordinary effervescence, and so the government has decided to send letters free."

The old man took off his hat dubiously, shook his head, and then, with a long breath, remarked:

"Well, boss, all dat may be true, an' I don't say it an't, but just s'posen dat de eckcentricity of the aggregation transubstantuates de ignominiousness of de puppindickeler and sublimites de puspicuity of de consequences—don't you qualificate dat de government would confiscate dat dare letter? I guess I'd jest better put some stamps on anyhow, fer luck!"

And the old man passed solemnly down the street.—Chicago Times.

JESSIE MORRIS WELCH

OBITUARY

Mrs. Jessie Morris Welch was born October 4, 1859 and died January 1, 1894. She was the only daughter of Elias and Charlotte Morris. She was born on Little Prairie Ronde, and had spent most of her life in sight of the place of her birth, among the friends of her childhood. She was carefully educated by kind parents, having attended school at Monroe and Albion. She was married to Arthur Welch, May 15, 1880, and from her parental home she went to make a home for herself and husband in the Dolphin Morris homestead, where she continued to live near her loving parents and brothers, surrounded by her own family, until death, untimely, took her from the presence of her loved ones to the presence of her God, whom she said she had been preparing to meet, having said two weeks before her death that for some time she had been thinking a great deal about death and the future world, and had been trying to be ready, and that she could say she was not afraid to die. She requested her friends to be told that she had only gone on before them and she wished them all to meet her there, where there will be no more sickness, pain and death, no sad farewells, and where all tears shall be wiped away from sorrowing eyes.

She leaves to mourn her departure a husband, one son and two little daughters, a father, mother and two brothers.

Mr. and Mrs. Austin Laurence, Mrs. Minnie Hathaway Vought and Mr. Morris Vining, in accordance with her request, rendered appropriate and consoling music, and Elder J.H. Hammond delivered the sermon from Rev. 14:13.

DECATUR, : : MICHIGAN.

A GARDEN OF LONG, LONG AGO.

I can see long back in fancy, in kaleidoscopic view,
'Mid the circling disc of time rings that my mind is gazing through--
A fairyland of beauty which my early childhood knew,
Where the purest, sweetest flowers and the softest mosses grew.

The paths were stiffly outlined by a bordering of box,
The flower beds flashed brightly with marigold and phlox,
While the grapevines grew precisely, in a fashion orthodox,
To evade the crafty cunning of each spoiling two-legg'd fox.

I can see the drooping pear tree, stooping low to touch the ground,
And deposit ripened sweetness where it soonest could be found;
While the honey bees grew heavy, as they circled round and round,
And clapped their wings in soft applause, with hazy, happy sound.

The currants flashed to crimson 'neath the brightness of the sun,
Until, all red and rosy, they shook their heads for fun,
And tumbled off demurely in the green grass, one by one,
To wait until the children adown the pathway run.

And then—the very best of all—the merry little brook
That dashed along and splashed along with circling curve and crook,
Yet held its little mirrors where the lilies bent to look,
And gave us tiny concerts from a natural music book.

As I tell myself the story, my heart is all aglow
With reverberating pleasures, that from the mem'ry grow,
So I write down glimpses of it, that others, too, may know,
The sweetness and completeness of the distant long ago.

DECATUR'S WORST FIRE

In place of the "Twenty Years Ago" column this week we print an account of the worst fire recorded in Decatur's history, known by older residents of the village as "The Duncombe House Fire." The story is taken from a copy of the Decatur Independent March 28, 1895, brought to the office by Mac Wooster of Hamilton, who discovered the paper among some of his possessions:

Fire broke out Saturday morning about 5:30 o'clock in the "Blind Tiger," or in the oil room of the Duncombe house. Mr. Scott, the night watch, called Mr. Rix at five o'clock and everything seemed to be all right. Mr. Scott went home and went to bed as usual, Mr. Rix got up soon after, dressed and went down stairs, going through the door from the hall into the dining room and out into the kitchen, where he opened the door that leads into the office and there to his amazement he found the room to be filled with smoke. He was not long in considering how it got there, but ran up stairs and called his wife, who quickly dressed, and ran down the hall and called the guests, who grabbed their clothes and started to get down stairs, most of whom dressed upon the street. All had been called with the exception of Fred Mosier, who occupied the northeast room in the third story. Mrs. Rix went up and screamed' "Fire!" "Fire!" and Fred answered, but seemed not to take in the situation. He got up and looked out the south window, and seeing nothing, he thought Mrs. Rix must have been scared over nothing, so he began dressing himself as usual and to pack up his trunk if anything should be wrong but he stopped and looked out of the east window and there he could see the flames. Opening the bedroom door that leads into the hall the smoke began to roll in. Grabbing his best suit of clothes and his K. P. suit he began to make his way down stairs, which were enveloped in a cloud of smoke, at last reaching the bottom nearly exhausted from the effects of the smoke. Fred says that Mrs. Rix was the saver of his life as his room was the first to fall in and he never could have escaped later without jumping.

The origin of the fire is unknown. I. R. Pearl, the gentleman who is putting in the water-works, was the first one upon the scene of the fire. He says, "Mr. Rix and myself went down into the wash-room and from there we could look through the window that was in the oil room and see the flame which was very small. Mr. Rix went and got a pail of water and then we opened the door to put the fire out, but the suction of the wind was so great that it started the flames agoing and soon they were beyond control."

Mr. Rix says he is not certain whether it caught in the oil room or in the "Blind Tiger," as there was fire in both places. A great many seem to think that it was set but it probably never will be known. After trying to put out the fire, Mr. Rix and Mr. Pearl aroused the inmates of the house and proceeded to remove the furniture, etc., saving but a small per cent.

The wind was blowing from the south and at one time it looked as if the whole of the north end of the town would have to go up in flames. The flames rushed on in the devastation on East Sherwood street, burning two livery barns, Shulter's hotel, Rasmusson's carriage works, Arnold's building, in which was Hakes' blacksmith shop and Ackley's wagon and repair shop, also his barn situated just back of the building, passing on, burning C. E. Miller's fine residence and barn. It was thought that the fire had run its course when the cry of fire again was heard and it was discovered that the Universalist church, a fine brick structure, had caught on the roof and was soon a mass of flames. Mr. Rogers' and Mr. Carney's residences, situated on either side of the church were saved by hard efforts. If one or the other had caught, no telling where the fire would have ended.

The fire burned on Main street running north of the First State bank. Arnold's brick building, which S. G. Toof had just moved into, and under which Mr. Todd of Kalamazoo had just stored away 600 bushels of potatoes, which are said to be spoiled and unfit for eatng. On it went, burning the Shaad building, in which was situated Arnold & Carney's meat market and on the opposite side of the street the heat broke all of the large plate glass windows in the stores of Brigham, Browning and Stewart.

John Shaad store building, loss $2,500, with insurance of $1500. The Arnold brick building, loss, $3,000, with insurance of $1,500. The First State Bank, loss $4,000, with insurance of $2,000. Duncombe House, loss $3,000, without insurance. Duncombe livery barn, loss $250, no insurance. Henry Shulters, Shulters hotel, loss on building $1,000, with insurance of $500, loss on goods $300, no insurance. Loss on barn $100, no insurance. Rasmusson's carriage works, loss $800 with insurance of $550; loss on tools not known. Ed. Arnold's shop building and barn, loss $650, no insurance.

C. E. Miller's residence, loss $1,400, with insurance of $500; loss on goods $150; loss on barn $100, no insurance. The Universalist church, loss $2,000, with $1,000 insurance. H. Lurkins loss on barn $100, with insurance of $100 on barn, wood and out-buildings; Arnold & Carney's loss $150, no insurance. Scott Smith, loss on household goods $75, no insurance.

In all there were seventeen buildings burned. The Dowagiac fire company were summoned, loaded their engine and came down on the morning freight. They arrived a little after seven o'clock a. m., but their engine failed to work. It was no fault of the firemen from the fact that the engine had not been used in about three years.

If the water works had been in working order the loss might have been very small, but as they were, they were as helpless as an infant. It should be the pride and the hope of the citizens of Decatur that they are going to have a system of water works by which a great fire as this has been may be prevented. The present hand engine is inadequate for such a fire.

DECATUR FIRE DEPARTMENT (LONG AGO)

The odds were against the fire fighters in the 1850's and early 1900's. In the early days the town had cisterns installed below Main Street for water storage; but they were seldom used because they leaked.

When there was a fire the men came running from every direction, formed a "Bucket Brigade," and passed pails of water along the line to the fire. At the time there was an old-fashioned pump on Main St. in front of Carney's Drug Store, (about where the Bakery now stands), so they may have taken it from that source.

When they reached the fire the water was thrown onto the building (as far as they could reach). If the fire had much of a start their efforts were in vain.

After a few years the town bought a fire wagon. It had a pump on either side similar to the Railroad hand cars of that era. A half dozen or more men were on either side and pumped the water through a large hose to the scene of the fire. The fire wagon was drawn by hand (eight or ten men). Horses were not used on fire wagons until a later date.

There were several disastrous fires in those early days, probably due to lack of fire equipment.

One of the most disastrous fires started in the Brownbridge Drug Store. It was the third building north from the Down's House which stood on the corner where the Brigham building now stands (across from the park). The Down's House was an old, old hotel in its day.

Bert Culverhouse was the clerk in the drug store and he was in the basement doing something with a can of gasoline. Not living in the "push button" age, he struck a match! It almost cost him his life; rescuers managed to pull him out of the manhole in front of the building but he was badly burned. The fire destroyed two buildings — the drug store and Rathbun's Grocery Store. There was another bad fire in the early times which started where the former Mosier's Dry Goods store now stands. It took half the block (going south).

In later years (early 1900's), another fire occurred in Warner's Grocery Store, which stood in the middle of the block. There were other fires too, the most historic being the Presbyterian Church and the old Decatur High School building. There were many sentimental laments from generations of school children who loved the old school house. So ends an era!

DEATH OF MARIE MELVILLE HALL (1893-1895)

Howard Hall, who was called here on account of the sickenss of his little girl, who died last week, returned to Wilkes-barre, Pennsylvania, where he will join the opera company, "Howard Hall's Ideals," which he left. Mr. Hall is a well known actor in this part of the country, and he is gaining a great notoriety in the eastern states.

A large snow plough from north Hamilton was in town Monday with seven span of horses hitched to it, all of whom had a man upon his back with the exception of the leading team. The people in that part of Hamilton were unable to get to town. It would have been a good idea, if other sections of country around about Decatur would have done the same thing.

From Decatur Independent – 1895

NEIGHBORS BREAK ROAD FOR FUNERAL

At the time of the funeral of Marie Melville Hall, the snow drifts were high and none of the people on Territorial Road had been able to use the snow-blocked highway for days. Even horses and sleigh were useless in trying to surmount those mountainous snow-drifts.

Bert Kidman remembers how his father, George, fashioned a snow plough from two sets of planks bolted together with strap iron. A shelf was built on the top, and for weight — he used stones. Seven span of horses (14) were used to pull the plough. Log chains were used — running from the plough to each of the teams with an evener between each team. They were called "ranks." Each horse had a rider with the exception of the lead team. A team and sleigh followed the plough, with extra men and scoop shovels to dig out the horses when they floundered.

The teams belonged to Sherb Richmond (lead team), Bert Kidman (sleigh), Sanford Phillips, John Phillips, George Young, Charley Barber, Lon Phleps, Tom Conway.

The shovelers were: Decker Shoudy and Sam Yeckly.

The week before the child died, the same group of men ploughed out the road to procure a doctor for the Halls. When they reached Decatur, Willard Van Antwerp collected money from the townspeople to rub down, blanket, and feed the horses at the livery barn. The performance of those stalwart men at the time of an emergency was an example of the staunch friendship, generosity and love of neighbor, which was typical of that era.

WILL BROWN AT SKAGWAY

Mr. Wm. Brown, who left for the gold fields of Alaska the latter part of January writes to his sister, Miss Mollie Brown in part as follows: Feb. 16, 1898

We are here without mishap. Found cheap lodging and cheap meat and don't know yet whether or not to start over the trail.

Have stored supplies where two sleep with a young Englishman who is honest. His wife is American and they are good Christian people, though a large part of the community, I mean the saloon and dance house element are worse than savages. The Pass-White Pass, is no pass at all. It is only a great road over which it is possible to drive a pair of horses and bob-sleighs, but more practicable to drive a single horse and narrow sled, as far as Lake Bennett. From there the river goes direct to Dawson which is an easy journey by boat in summer. It is not possible now, however, beyond Lake Bennett, as the broken ice is piled up 10 or 15 ft. high on the river. Everyone now is trying to get his outfit over the pass as far as Lake Bennett because it is an easy task while the road is frozen, but almost impossible after the thaw, when the road is like a quagmire. The Chilikott pass is then preferable, though much steeper and higher and more difficult.

There is talk of building a narrow gage R.R. from Skagway to Lake Bennett or even farther, next summer in which case this town would be the base both for summer and winter. A man can pull a sled and 300 lb. over the White Pass as far as Lake Bennett, where it is necessary to stack and cover up his goods, build a boat and wait until Spring, either in a tent or, as it is only 37 miles and easy to get back even in summer when you have no load or pack, return to Skagway. I am not yet decided whether to stop here and start a business or to be one of the vast army that is going in search of gold. I think there is a very good chance here in any kind of business.

It is not any colder here than in Michigan when you have a good cold snap but it is a trifle more rigorous owing to the severe wind. I understand that in the interior it is dryer and the cold is not felt even so much as here if one keeps working or moving. It is pretty tough business, though it is only necessary to take care of one's self. I go about Skagway without any covering for my ears except at the sea where the wind has a sweep.

The government at this place is a disgrace to America and makes all reputable people blush to compare it with the good order and freedom from lawlessness that exists on the Canadian side. Hundreds are daily robbed by the most barefaced skin games in gambling houses and it is incredible that such things have gone on so long. Judge Astrander arrived today from Juneau and with the aid of a new marshall hired by the citizens, we hope for an improvement. The new marshall is a Minneapolis detective and is not to be bought as the U.S. Marshall is. The judge will hold court in the Occidental tomorrow. Before, there has been no law in the town and a councilman told me he had a hundred complaints a day from those who have been robbed by men to whom the odious name of gambler is applied.

MY MOTHER

Tonight I hear my mother's voice
As oft I heard it long ago,
When in her arms she held me fast
And gently rocked me to and fro;
And sang a soothing lullaby
That soon would put me fast asleep—
Sleep came e'er quickly in her arms
Though oft since then I've counted sheep.
Through mist of years I see her face
Again light up with loving care,
While teaching me the A B C's
Or list'ning to my evening pray'r;
For mother meant that I should be
A manly man just like my dad—
Were I a boy again tonight
I'd strive quite hard to make her glad.
Again I feel her loving kiss
Against my cheeks, my lips, my head,
As she would say good-night to me
And gently tuck me into bed;
And though long since she left this world
To dwell eternally above,
I shall e'er cherish and revere
The memory of her deep love.
— Alonzo Newton Benn, 5000 East End ave., Chicago 15.

No Friends Like Old Friends

There are no friends like old friends,
And none so good and true;
We greet them when we meet them
As roses greet the dew;
No other friends are dearer,
Though born of kindred mold;
And while we prize the new ones,
We treasure more the old.

There are no friends like old friends,
Where'er we dwell or roam;
In lands beyond the ocean,
Or near the bounds of home;
And when they smile to gladden,
Or sometimes frown to guide,
We fondly wish those old friends
Were always by our side.

There are no friends like old friends,
To help us on with the load
That all must bear who journey
O'er life's uneven road;
And when unconquered sorrows
The weary hours invest,
The kindly words of old friends
Are always found the best.

There are no friends like old friends,
To calm our frequent fears,
When shadows fall and deepen
Through life's declining years;
And when our faltering footsteps
Approach the Great Divide,
We'll long to meet the old friends
Who wait on the other side.

HERO SOLDIERS

Harken the sounds of martial music
And the beat of muffled drums,
As down the streets of the new world
The blue clad warriors come.

Warriors of two generations,
How proudly they march today,
To the graves where our loved ones are buried —
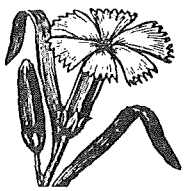
They of the Blue and the Gray.

Our hearts beat heavy within us,
And the tear-drops softly fall,
As we hear wafted away in the distance,
The gun-shot and bugle call.

Anon.

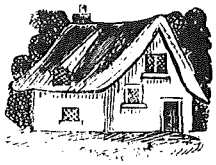


LAUGH

Build for yourself a strong box,
Fashion each part with care,
it it with hasp and padlock,
Put all your troubles there.
Hide therein all your failures,
And each bitter cup you quaff,
Lock all your heartaches within it,
Then — Sit on the lid and laugh.

FRANK TUCKER

PLAYING TO WELL-FILLED HOUSES IN MICHIGAN TOWNS



THE FRANK TUCKER THEATRE COMPANY PLAYED AT MOUNT PLEASANT during the week ending August 12. Concerning Mr. Tucker and his company, the MOUNT PLEASANT DEMOCRAT says:

"Frank Tucker and his company have given performances at the opera house each evening this week and will continue all week, ending the engagement tomorrow evening. Notwithstanding that for the past five years Mr. Tucker has seen a heap of trouble, he has lost none of his old-time vim as an actor.

About five years ago he broke his leg just above the ankle joint, and for three years he was in the hospital fighting against an amputation; bound with an indomitable will to save his leg, but after the long struggle, suffering and expense the inevitable came and today he is hobbling with crutch and cane; but by his next visit here the crutch and cane will be discarded as he is having a cork leg made which will enable him to get around equal to anyone. This accident has cost Mr. Tucker thousands of dollars but he has stuck to his text and pulled through, aided by his estimable, faithful little wife, who while he lay ill took the brunt of the management of the company and went out and made money to meet the demands. They have an excellent company among which is Frank Russell of this city, who has developed into an actor of no small ability. Frank is a natural impersonator, a close student and by careful attention has a bright future before him in this line. He has been the recipiaent since the engagement of many flattering encores. The repertoire of the company is good and the house should be filled for the balance of the engagement."

FOURTH OF JULY — 1899

Very Quiet In Decatur

The arrival of the 4th was well announced. At midnight every church bell was ringing and the explosion of dynamite firecrackers assisted in disturbing the slumbers of the peaceful population. A little later the early morning train gathered up the celebrators and distributed them, some to South Haven, some to Kalamazoo and some to Benton Harbor. During the day Main Street was nearly deserted, save the crowd of small boys who had been saving their pennies for the past month to buy firecrackers and were now getting the worth of their money. The center of this crowd was a tall, slim boy, towering two feet above the heads of the others. He wore a broad brim, black, slouch hat, overalls and blouse and rubber boots. He had come in from the country to celebrate and the fire crackers went fast while his money lasted. When he went anywhere the boys knew that something was going to happen and they crowded after him up and down the street and in and out of the stores. Once this tall boy exploded a dynamite firecracker in his hand. The boys marvelled at this and he became at once a hero among them. They thought that even Dewey himself would not dare to do that. When the tall boy's money was gone he suddenly disappeared and the crowd scattered.

In the evening the streets were lined with people who came out to see the fireworks. Square dancing was the favorite amusement at that time and the following are some of the popular variations: Money Musk, Virginia Reel, Opera Reel, Fireman's Dance, The Tempest, Sicilian Circle, Double Scotch Reel, The Crooked "S" and the Grand March.

A CARD — 1899

Having retired from business and about to permanently leave Decatur, I desire to extend to the many friends and patrons my heartfelt thanks for the confidence so often reposed and their very liberal patronage bestowed during the fifteen years I have been in business in Decatur. I would assure them one and all that no one could more fully appreciate all this than myself and that I leave Decatur with the earnest hopes and best wishes for its prosperity and the welfare of its citizens.

A NEW FIRM

BAGLEY & CADY — SUCCESSORS TO FRANK POTTS

Frank Potts, founder and proprietor of the Star Grocery has sold to Messrs. I.B. Bagley and M.P. Cady who will continue the business under the firm name of Bagley & Cady. The transfer took place Monday. Mr. Potts established the grocery eleven years ago in the building now occupied by the merchants, Durkee & Associates and they displayed great energy and ability and built up a large and popular trade. A few years ago he conceived the idea of erecting a building, one that would be large enough to display to advantage his large stock and also be an ornament to his home village.

The elegant block on the east side of Main street is the fulfillment of his plan, and in the years to come where-ever the builder may be it will remain a fitting evidence that he was a good man for the town. Frank's plans for the future are not definite. He needs a rest and will take this fall and winter for collecting accounts and settling other business matters. He expects ultimately to establish himself in business in a larger place.

His successors in business are not strangers in Decatur and vicinity but are well known as men of energy and good business ability. Mr. Bagley has been in the grocery business in the past and understands the wants of the people in that line. Mr. Cady is known as a practical man capable of winning the confidence of the trade. The efficient corps of clerks will be retained.

THE CRADLE SONGS OF MANY NATIONS

Will be given at Beckwith Memorial Theatre, under the direction of Miss Gertrude Charles Friday evening. Miss Charles has trained about three hundred lads and lassies of Dowagiac for this unique entertainment. Mrs. Katherine Wallace Davis will assist with solos. Entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Dowagiac Hive I.O.T.M. Miss Charles expects to leave for Italy next month, where she will continue her studies in music.

Levi Lyle

Born in 1846 in a shanty in woods of Paw Paw township, thrity feet from where now stands the home of his nephew, Jay Lyle. He is oldest son of John Lyle and Maihilda Sherrod, early settlers of this county. His grandfather, John Lyle Sr. was a native of Cornwald, England and was born on Christmas day 1793. He emigrated with his family to America in 1823 and in the spring of 1835 came to Michigan, locating his home in the wilderness, a mile and a half north of Paw Paw. John Lyle Jr., Levi's father was born in Devonshire, England in 1818. He took up a farm in the wilderness in 1845 and blazed a trail to Paw Paw, his trading place. This farm which he cleared, became one of the best in the county and was his home until his death in 1899. Levi went to school in the old log schoolhouse in the neighborhood and then took two years under Professor Bellows in Decatur High School. It was while going to school here in 1867 that the Decatur Republican was started. He became one of the first subscribers.

FIRST ELECTRIC LIGHTS IN DECATUR

The streets of Decatur were illuminated by electricity for the first time on a Saturday evening in 1899. The business street was lined with people anticipating the event and when the big white lights blazed out upon the streets with a brightness almost equal to that of the sun, exclamations of approval poured forth from everyone and the soul of each good and loyal citizen swelled with pride for his pretty home village.

The system gave universal satisfaction and Mr. Pioil, the contractor, strived to make it first class in every respect. He deserves the commendation of our citizens.

The village board, which will go down in our local history as the "Electric Light" board, has done its part of the work thoroughly and well; through their careful deliberations and intelligent decisions, we have obtained as fine a lighting system as can be found anywhere.

The board contemplates erecting, in the near future, five more street lights which will make the village well "lit up" in every section.

IT HAPPENED IN THE LATE 80's

On complaint of Amos Morris, of Van Buren County, Mr. M.J. Matteson, a money lender of Decatur, has just been arrested and is charged with forging three mortgages amounting in all to $10,200.00. They purport to have been recently executed in the village of Decatur and are witnessed by Foster & Coleman, a prominent and respected law firm of that village. The examination has only increased the mystery.

Mr. Morris denies any knowledge of the transactions whatsoever, while Coleman, one of the witnesses, positively avers to the contrary. Mr. Morris' circumstances would not seem to demand that he should borrow any such amounts, being a wealthy farmer. Matteson has been held for trial.

HON. A. B. COPLEY.

A Good Man Whose Loss Will Long be Felt in the Community.

"Alexander Bennett Copley was born March 11, 1822, at Champion, Jefferson county, N. Y., removing with his parents to Dayton, Ohio, in 1828, and from there to the territory of Michigan in 1833, settling on what is now known as Little Prairie Ronde, where he lived till he made his home in Decatur in 1874. He was married March 26, 1850, to Helen Jane Hathaway, who was his beloved companion till her death Sept. 20, 1890, when he was left with two sons, who are still living. March 20, 1892, he was married to Mrs. Emma Pritchard, who was his loving consort till his death at Havana, Cuba, March 27, 1899.

He was a pioneer in settlement of country and either leader or hearty co-operator in all good works following. Prominent in organizing Farmers' Club, Good Templar Lodge, Sabbath School, etc., also in introducing new machinery, advancing agriculture, building roads, reclaiming muck lands, establishing bank and factories. Earnest supporter of educational, temperance or any work for betterment of mankind. A consistent Republican and a loyal American. Though not assuming to be an orator he was an ever well informed interesting and eloquent speaker. He served the people faithfully in both state and local offices. A worthy friend to the needy and trusted counselor of all. A firm believer in the faith of the New Jerusalem Church, yet never obtruding his views on others. A clean, progressive, sympathetic man, advanced in years bodily, but young in spirit, who has left this world much better for his having lived in it".

Thus was most briefly outlined the life of a man whose work here began when the red man and wild deer were frequently to be seen, and closed while reviewing the crowning achievement of our great nation. What vast changes he had witnessed and how happy must have been the consciousness of the part he had contributed in bringing them about in the upwards of sixty years of earnest, intelligent, uplifting effort! With inherited mechanical ability we learn of him as a boy assisting his father in building the pioneer saw mill, a part of the frame of which is still an interesting landmark on the banks of the stream where his first home was built. With this the timber was cut for the "glass house," a large frame house with numerous sash windows, the wonder of the time, which was for many years after his home and is still the most conspicious reminder of pioneer days on the beautiful prairie on which it was located and where is retained the old homestead, on which still another home was built in after years.

His school advantages were limited to less than one year in a rude log school house, the first of its kind in Van Buren county. What a contrast to the magnificent educational institutions he has so royally helped to build up for the benefit of those who were to follow him. But his life has been one of continuous study and advancement so that he was ever well abreast of the times on all questions of general interest. It is related that during some of his young manhood days he would begin studying at the breakfast table and remain in continous session till dinner was served, much to the displeasure of his fellow laborers. It was also by unaided effort that the mysteries of shorthand writing were solved—an example which the more favored youth of to-day may well ponder.

By the death of his father he was left before attaining his majority at the head of a large family, but these involved duties like all the later onse were willingly met and faithfully discharged. An interesting book might be written of his pioneer experiences which can barely be mentioned in a brief newspaper sketch. Many there are who can recall with pleasure his various recountings of the days before improved farm machinery and railroads, when the products were hauled to "St Joe" to market, each trip occupying several days and the whole seasons' crop perhaps netting little more than the farmer now receives who brings a load of grain to the home market in half a day and who daily enjoys luxuries which were far beyond the reach of his pioneer brother.

His efforts in establishing and maintaining various societies for the improvement of the community in which he lived must be passed without notice further than that his Sabbath school work in particular was such as the superintendents of modern schools might well emulate.

He was several times elected to serve the people in legislative and other capacities, in all of which he conscientiously labored to bring about what seemed best for his constituents. When the need arose for a bank in Decatur he was ready to assist in establishing it and it is told by a former official that frequently persons who were unable to secure accomodations at the bank's counter received help from his personal funds. Any movement giving fair promise of promoting the good of the community could confidently rely on his support by pen, tongue and purse.

While a man of deep religious convictions, he never sought to force his views on others, yet his implicit faith in the revelations and teachings of Emanuel Swedenborg could scarcely fail to command the respect of any inquirer. His regard for this great writer was notably attested a few years since when he caused a family monument to be erected, the handsome shaft for which was specially imported from his revered teacher's native land,—Sweden.

That a man who all through a long life had been so helpful to those around him and so loyal to his country should die among strangers and in a strange land is in a sense sad, yet it was in part at least as he had wished to go when his time came, quickly (and it is believed painlessly) and while in the full enjoyment of his faculties, or as he had said "in the harness."

May his pure, unassuming, helpful life ever be an inspiration to the many who cherish his memory.

E. A. L.

About two months ago Mr. and Mrs. Copley went to Jacksonville, Florida, to spend the winter, thence to Havana Cuba, where from the standpoint of an American citizen he could study the condition of the government and the manners and customs of the people of the island which Uncle Sam had freed from bondage. It was the day before their intended return to the United States that Mr. Copley was killed. They were driving on the boulevard when he suddenly fainted and fell from the carriage; he was carried to the hotel but never regained consciousness and died the same evening. The remains accompanied by Mrs. Copley and his son E. B. Copley arrived in Decatur Saturday afternoon. The funeral was held at the Presbyterian church Monday afternoon and was largely attended by residents of the village and county who came to pay the last respect to their dead friend. The funeral sermon was delivered by Rev. Daniels, a New Church minister of La Porte, Indiana. Interment was in Rosehill cemetery.

FAMILY OF ABNER HATHEWAY

From the reminiscences of Al Shaw

Abner Hatheway and his wife, Naomi, were natives of the State of New York.

In the spring of 1837, the year that Michigan was admitted to the Union, they left their eastern home and traveled by boat on the Erie Canal and the Great Lakes to Detroit, and by team to Little Prairie Ronde, Cass County.

They bought a farm from a man by name of Stephens, it being the present, beautiful home of Mrs. Kitty Hatheway and her daughter, Miss Helen.

They were the parents of seven children, Benjamin, Judson, Helen, Eliza, Lucia, Phoebe and Emma. Of this family the only survivor is Emma, Mrs. Vincent, who resides with her son in Rockford, Illinois. Abner was a good farmer and his sons both profited by the many lessons in agriculture which he gave them. He died in the prime of life in the early forties. His wife, Naomi, afterward lived for the most part with her son, Benjamin and died in 1890 at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Benjamin was born in 1822, and came with his parents to the prairie and on the death of his father succeeded to the home farm. He made of it a model farm and at one time in competition he was awarded a premium for having the second best farm in the state.

He failed to receive the first premium only because the competition was for a 165-acre farm and the Hatheway farm contained but 120.

Mr. Hatheway set out pine and maple trees among the native oak, raised beautiful hedges and gardens, nearly every kind of fruit that would grow in this country, and kept one of the finest nurseries in the state.

Benjamin Hatheway was a poet and a writer of fine ability. He became known throughout the country as FARMER POET and his published works "The Last of the Iroquois" and "Art Life" and "Other Poems" are known and admired by students of good literature. On his model farm he trimmed the native oak trees to thirty feet and under them planted hard maples in rows. This made not only a pretty scene but a luxurious maple sugar grove which still yields a substantial revenue.

Many years before when Benjamin Hatheway was a young man he set out a row of hard maples one hundred rods long extending from Judson's south line, south to the corner. These trees became a rich sugar grove. One night in sap-running time several of the mischievous boys of that neighborhood emptied all of the sap from fifty or more pails out onto the ground and filled them with water from Sanuel Morris' big horse tank.

John Noland was bossing the sugar camp for Mr. Hatheway, and when he came out from his home in Charleston he was accosted by that gentleman who had been to the grove before him. "Y. Y. John," said Mr. Hatheway, "Chitter along, the pails are all running over, you must hurry and get the sap to boiling, we are going to have a heavy run." John got busy and soon had it boiling. He boiled it all the forenoon and into the afternoon 'til Mr. Hatheway came back and sampled it and found that the water that had not gotten into steam was no sweeter or thicker than when it was poured into the kettle.

Mr. Hatheway always had several of the young men from the neighborhood working for him on the farm and in this nursery and garden. He could get plenty of help for they all liked to work for him.

He liked a good joke, humored the boys in their pranks and didn't complain when they were on him.

Mr. Hatheway also planted on his farm a chestnut grove. From one particularly fine chestnut which he planted in his youth by the side of the house he had made the coffin in which he was laid to rest. He had the tree cut and sawed into lumber while in his prime and engaged Arnie and Linneus Lawrence to make the coffin for him. Patrick Howland planed the boards that were used in constructing the coffin. They did their work well and when all that was earthly of this great man of the Prairie reposed therein and the sorrowing relatives and neighbors beheld his form for the last time the harmony and peace of that repose in the beautifully fashioned timbers from the chestnut he planted and loved, left an impression that will never fade away. Mr. Hatheway passed from this earth in 1896 at the age of seventy-four years.

As I Remember Decatur In 1869

BY--
DR. H. M. BRODRICK.

On the 7th day of July, 1869, I stepped off the afternoon M. C. R. R. train, was met by the agreeable clerk of the Downs House, Dick Eckler, who conducted me to that hostelry, and welcomed by "mine host," R. J. Downs. Being favorably impressed with the appearance of the town, I decided to cast my lot in with its citizens. Having secured a few rooms, I hung out my shingle and remained one of your citizens for twenty-one years.

As so many changes have taken place amongst the men who were in business at that time, but one, John Shaad, being left. I thought it best, on solicitation, to give my remembrance of them on my arrival.

Commencing at the corner of Phelps and Sherwood streets where the Duncombe Hotel was burned, I found a two story frame building occupied as a hardware store by John M. Moore, who, the next year, moved to Denver, Col., where he has since died. Next door north was a one story frame store building in which Rogers (John) & Moulton had their grocery. This with Mr. Moore's building was burned in the early fall of that year. Mr. Moulton has since died, and Mr. Rogers is a citizen of Dowagiac. The next place was the one story frame millinery store of the late Mrs. Barney which by heroic efforts without any means of fighting fire but buckets, was saved in that fire, and was ultimately moved onto the lot of Joseph H. Haynes on Delaware St.

Next north was the frame building of H. Arnold, used by the firm of Horace Arnold & Son as a grocery and dry goods store, and the upper story as a residence for both families. The next one was that of John Shaad used as his shoe store and residence. Then Drs. Keables and Ross had their offices in a small two story frame. Then a boarding house, two stories, conducted I think by Hank DeBolt, and then a two story with a meat market in it, a family living upstairs.

Now we come to a low, wide, red building seemingly the oldest in town occupied by S. N. Thomas for a hardware store, and then a white two story frame occupied by Anson Knights. Next to this was a similar building used as a bakery by S. M. Rawson, and in a small room adjoining it, was a shoe shop, used I think by Charley Hayes. Then a two story frame owned by Jerome Coleman, later if not at the time. This was occupied by L. D. Roberts and a partner, whose name I have forgotten. Then the corner store, a frame one, used for a grocery by Stevenson Bros. and the upper rooms by Mrs. H. H. Haskins for dressmaking. This is where Fred Stern now is in business; it was bought by Dr. Browning, raised, enlarged, and bricked in.

Across Delaware street Hill (E. P.) & Trowbridge (Wm. E.) had a grocery store, and the upper rooms were occupied by John E. Upton and Wm. H. Tucker for their law offices. Next to this was the postoffice in a small two story frame with Capt. Beebe as postmaster and Merrit M. Manley as clerk, who also had a small news stand in one corner; upstairs was used by a veterinary surgeon. This with the corner store was burned down that fall prior to the burning of the Moore corner, and during the fire the veterinary surgeon whose name I cannot think of, jumped out of the upper window and was so badly hurt and burned that he died the next day at the residence of Dr. Keables whither he had been removed. What there was between the postoffice and Peter Pardonette's building I forget, but think there was a two story frame. Pardonett's building was used by himself as a harness shop and residence and was I am told to the day of his death.

Next door to this was Thomas Conway's saloon and residence, vacancy intervened between that and the Duncombe Hotel which stood on the corner of Phelps and St. Mary streets. The landlord was Hank Galloway, with (P. G.) Clark as clerk, porter and general utility man.

Crossing west over Phelps street we come to a small dwelling house with no other building until the next house, the Poor residence, now that of James Potts and family; then the Poor block of brick stores, three of them as new. The first one was the furniture store of Nearpass & Clark (W. H.), in the third story of which was the photograph gallery of G. B Boughton. The next store I cannot recall the occupancy of, but remember the second story was the home of the Decatur Republican under the editorship of E. A. Blackman, and our old friend Dick Lyon, now editor of the South Bend Tribune, was one of the compositors. The last story was a hall unused. The third store of this block was that of a Mr. Eichelman, a merchant tailor. The second floor contained the law office of Newton Foster, and the third floor was a lodge room.

Next to this now came the hardware store of Keables (Lon) & Nicholson (Gene). The next was the grocery store of James Potts and then came the dry goods store of Fred G. Russell, with residence above, and the corner one was the dry goods store of Aaron S. Hathaway who is now tickling the soil at or near Plainwell.

Across Delaware street on the corner was the dry goods store of Abbott Bros., this building was afterwards moved across the street to make room for the present brick and was occupied by D. W. Leavens as a drug store-who a few years after moved into the room now used by M. S. Carney. Then came another grocery store, that of Dowd Bros. and next it was the restaurant and residence of Ed. Trowbridge, now in Dowagiac. An alley intervened between this and the next, that of the clothing store of Henry Rosenberg, the upper story of which was the office of the "scribe." Henry Duffin's shoe shop and residence was the next building, and the next one was the "old salamander of your last fire, Thos. Brownbridge's meat market. Another alley intervened and we have the Chadwick building, occupied as a grocery and dry goods store by the Chadwick Bros. (John, Ev. and Fred.) The second story was the residence of Ev. and family, and the third floor was the Masonic lodge room. In the basement of this building Johnny Bartlett had a saloon and billiard room. Next south of this building was the express office under the charge of Charles Cockett, and the next to this was the drug store of Dr. Thos. Browning. Then a wooden building again, used for a short time before his death by Fred Smith in his jewelry business. Next comes the saloon and billiard room of the Downs house, the room in which shortly before, Joe Pearson was shot. And then came the Downs House itself.

To the east of the Moore building we came to a small building used by Warren M. Blowers as an agricultural implements and insurance office. Next were a few groceries one kept by Rufus Nash, and still farther east a few more store buildings, from which business had flown to Phelps street.

The big Wooden mill of A. A. Abbott occupied the corner now used by Hinkley, Roberts & Co.'s measure factory. It burned down one night about nine years after. The stave mill was booming under the direction of Hinkley Bros. (Myron and Marvin). The tannery was quite an institution with Horatio J. Hendryx proprietor and James Ellis foreman. The planing mill which stood next the railroad in the rear of the Ed Copley building, was conducted by a Mr. Prentice. The livery barn was owned and conducted by Mace Seymour. The old grain warehouse was owned and used by the late Lyman T. Rawson The station agent of the M. C. R. R. was Carleton Wheeler. The saw mill was the property of James Haynes. A prominent grain buyer and insurance agent was Grove Tarbell. Two wagon and blacksmith shops were those of Theordore Harlan on the lot now occupied by M. E. Chadwick's residence on Delaware St.; the other that of Walter Russell on St. Mary St.

The prominent money loaner was Dehart Matteson. The pastors of the two churches were, of the Methodist, Rev. Mr. George; of the Presbyterian, Rev. Mr. Bartle. A private bank in some building on Phelps St. was run by the late Joseph Rogers. There were but four doctors, Dr. C. T. Baker, Dr. Keables, Dr. Wm. Ross and Dr. Rogers, all gone to their final account but Dr. Baker. The principal of the school was Prof. Bishop who remained but one year, moving to Wyandotte to go into business with Chas. Northrup.

Phelps street was narrower than it is now and after the fires of the two corners, the council decided to widen it 16½ feet before any brick buildings were erected and all but those of Arnold and Shaad were moved back, but finally, they, too, moved back and Mr. Shaad bricked up his building. The Duncombe House was removed in a few years down to the corner on which it burned.

In 1869 there was no West Michigan R. R., nor had the Paw Paw road been extended farther than Paw Paw, consequently the country through which they both now run had no wheat markets, and most of the wheat from Bangor, Hartford and South Haven was drawn to Decatur, consequently there was lots of business done there, but when these roads were built, the depression in business was keenly felt and many changes were made among the business men. But thanks to the big ditch and the reclaimed swamp, this depression is being removed and Decatur is improving, which is very gratifying to the old residents.

Ravens, But Not Little Hawks.

Dr. Hawks, an old-time eloquent and popular New York divine, once asked a vestryman of his church to increase his salary because of his increased family expenses. "Don't trouble yourself," said the vestryman, "the Lord has said he will care for the young ravens when they cry." "I know that," said the clergyman, "but nothing is said about the young Hawks."

STATE PROHIBITION IN MICHIGAN DOUBTED BY EARLY SETTLERS

Discussion of statement in Republican last week brings out interesting facts concerning Decatur's early history

GEORGE NESBITT RODE HORSEBACK OVER THE SITE OF THE VILLAGE IN 1846

The statement in last week's Republican that Michigan was under State prohibition from 1853 to 1875 was read with a smile of incredulity by the oldest inhabitants whose memory of early days, including the saloons in Decatur is even more clear than it is of the affairs of more recent date.

"I don't believe a word of it," said George Nesbitt. "To tell the truth and shun the devil there were no less than fourteen saloons in Decatur during war times and business men and farmers in those days thorught no more of stepping into a saloon and taking a drink of whiskey than they do now of buying a cigar. But the whiskey of fifty to sixty years ago was a far different grade of refreshment than we have now. It did not leave those raging headaches and tired feeling the next day. The boys would go on about their work as though nothing had happened.

I remember the first saloon that was opened in Decatur. It was run by a man by the name of Dobbs in the days before the war. The story was started one cold winter's day that Dobbs whiskey had frozen up over night. It was a joke but it stuck to Dobbs as long as he stayed in Decatur. Dobbs' saloon was located where Hinckley's Livery Barn stands. Jim Dean opened the second saloon in Decatur about on the site of Dr. Maxwell's office and Bob Willis opened the third where Hamilton's furniture store is located. During the 60's and 70's, when the Saloon Dealers' Association says Michigan was under State Prohibition, there were more saloons in Decatur than at any other period in its history."

Hamilton's First Settlers

In the visit with Mr. Nesbitt the writer gained a number of interesting facts concerning the early history of Decatur and Hamilton. His father, Robert Nesbitt, was one of the very first settlers of Hamilton Township. Zabina Sterns, grandfather of our well known citizen, Bine Sterns, and a man by the name of Knickerbocker were probably the only men who came here before him. Knickerbocker Lake was named for Knickerbocker and he was buried on the island in this lake about 1840. The island has since become a part of the mainland and it would not be inappropriate for the township or some interested person to mark the grave of this first settler.

Robert Nesbitt, that prince of pioneers, whose name will last in history as long as that of the township in which he settled, was born near Belfast, Ireland in 1810. At the age of fourteen he came to America bringing one thousand dollars in cash with the responsible mission of delivering it to his older brother in Detroit. He first worked three years in a bakery in Detroit and then went onto a farm thirty miles distant. He next settled in Kalamazoo County for a short time and in 1830 located in North Hamilton where the beautiful Nesbitt home stands a pleasant reminder of his boundless power and energy.

First Visit To Decatur

George Nesbitt was born on this farm July 18, 1841, which makes him now past seventy-four years of age, but we doubt if a stranger would place him at over sixty. He made his first trip to Decatur in 1846, when he was five years old. There was no village of Decatur then, only the unbroken township. The few settlers had not been able to clear sufficient land to furnish hay for their stock and supplied their needs from the pieces of marsh hay on the nearby lowlands. Robert Nesbitt and five-year old George drove to a patch of marsh hay where the Brownbridge barns now stand, but before cutting, the father decided to look at the hay on a clearing commonly known as "Ireland" and the two rode over there on the ponies. "Ireland" has since been known as the Rawson farm south of the village.

In the fall of 1848 the Michigan Central was built to Decatur and the following winter was so open that grading for the road was continued all through it. There was no depot here the first winter and goods shipped to Mr. Nesbitt from Detroit were delivered from the car.

George Nesbitt says the widow Dixon and her three sons, Ham, Ed, and George, kept the first store in a small shack which burned down in Decatur's first fire in about the year 1850. They then built the building which is now being remodeled by Brooks & Sons on the same site.

Col. Phelps first kept post office in a building back of Brigham's store on west Sherwood street. He later moved the office into his house which was located on the site of the Chadwick store. The Phelps house was moved onto the farm owned by Mrs. Harry McWilliams and was known for many years as the George Wesley Smith place. When George Wesley moved away the slot where letters were pushed through the door was still there. The Chadwick store now owned by L.G. Stewart was built in 1866.

Drafting Men For Service

Mr. Nesbitt tells an interesting story of drafting soldiers during the Civil War. The first draft was in the winter of '62 and '63. Able-bodied men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five were subject to draft. Hamilton Township was called upon to furnish two men and there were about two hundred from which to choose. The names of the two hundred were written on separate slips of paper and shaken together in a hat. The first two names out were compelled to go to war or furnish substitutes. The drawing was on Main street in Decatur one forenoon. Nearly everyone in Hamilton Township and Decatur and other nearby places were present. The street was packed with people and excitement ran high. Tom Parmater, stepfather of Milo Barton, was selected to draw the names out of the hat, and the first name out was that of George Nesbitt. Mr. Nesbitt was boosted onto the shoulders of a dozen or more young men and amid shouts and cheering headed a procession down Main street.

For the drawing of the second name the situation was equally as intent. About two hundred young men were there, all excited and wondering who would receive the other draft. John Steele, recklessly tempting the fates, shouted at the top of his voice, "Pull mine out next, pull mine out next." And sure enough the next name drawn was that of John Steele.

George Nesbitt hired a man from Paw Paw for $100 to go in his place. About three months later he sat down to dinner in the hotel at Paw Paw and the man sitting across from him was the man he had paid to take his place at the front. The substitute had passed the physical examination here but the army physician had sent him back. The fellow had learned that the army physician would not accept him and was making a business of selling himself as a substitute.

A drafted man who furnished a substitute was exempt for nine months. Later Mr. Nesbitt paid three hundred dollars under conscript which exempted him for three years and also put up two hundred dollars toward a fund to engage Canadians to enter the service.

The day of the drafting, Decatur's fourteen saloons actually went dry but it was not on account of the Prohibition Law. That night Robert Nesbitt, who was supervisor of Hamilton Township, went to Detroit and officially delivered the two men who responded to the draft. John Steele also furnished a substitute.

FAMOUS 4TH OF JULY

FIRST 4TH OF JULY EVER HELD IN DOWAGIAC & SOME HERE WHO SAW IT (1850)

Dowagiac's first 4th of July occurred in 1850 and there are still people living in this vicinity who took part in it.

At that time Kendrick Miller was teacher of a singing school at the Gage School and he organized a glee club composed of Dorcas Ryder, Ann E. Allen, Phebe Carr, Jan Van Houten, Henry B. Wells, Victor Morton, Amos Thompson and Mr. Miller.

The Glee Club sang here that day, standing under the old oaks in the north park, now covered with business blocks, and of the eight, only Dorcas Ryder Harwood, Ann Allen Alwood and Henry Wells are living.

Dorcas Ryder was then going with Simone Harwood and after the day was over they started for home and stopping at Justus Gage's were united in marriage, surprising their friends completely.

M.T. Garvey was then a Justice of the Peace here and deputy Post Master. He was chosen to make the address of welcome, and having composed something suitable for the occasion, went down to the river about four o'clock in the morning and standing on a log in the bushes, rehearsed it. Hearing a noise, he looked around and discovered William Waterman looking at him in open mouthed wonder, which so rattled Mr. Garvey that he asked him what in thunder he was doing there.

Mr. Waterman was looking after his cow, and passed on, but the interruption spoiled the rehearsal.

The speaker of the day was Congressman Philotus Hayden of Hamilton and one of the brightest men in Van Buren County. He had not had the benefit of an education and was badly handicapped, but was a natural born orator and had no equal in that direction anywhere. He was one of the best men of his time and serve dhis country faithfully, as Congressman.

Daniel Blish and Charles Brownell furnished the music for the occasion. It was the soul-stirring fife and drum and was very good.

Dowagiac's last 4th was in 1898 when a semi-centennial of the city's existence was observed and it now looks as if we would have to wait until 1948 until another is held.

PICKLE FACTORY
GOOD PROSPECTS FOR SECURING ANOTHER INDUSTRY
Committee Sent To Chicago To Negotiate With Reid, Murdoch & Company

The building of a canning factory has served as a stimulus to the business men of our village to make still further efforts towards advancing the business interests of the community.

Some correspondence regarding the building of the pickling factory resulted in a meeting at the First State Bank Tuesday afternoon at which L.fi. Hill gave the results of some of his efforts in that direction. One letter was from David Smith of Bloomingdale who wrote that farmers had received as high as $160.00 at an average of $75.00 an acre for cucumbers raised for the factory in that village, and that the company will double the capacity of the plant next year.

A letter from the factory at Plainwell shows a similar result and says that the farmers are anxious to contract again.

Mr. Hill next wrote to Reid, Murdoch & Co., wholesale grocers of Chicago, inviting them to build a plant in Decatur which they accepted. Their plans included the installation of three salting plants. They stipulated that they did not wish to start unless they could secure three hundred acres. This is equivalent to 150 farmers with two acres each. Messrs. W.fi. Clark and L.G. Stewart were elected a committee to go to Chicago and secure the factory, if possible.

Muckland as well as highland is said to be adapted to the raising of cucumbers and the necessary acreage can be easily secured.

SCHOOL ITEMS
(October 25, 1900)

Rev. G. L. Guchard conducted Chapel exercises Monday Morning.

The 8th grade pupils have completed Longfellow's Evangeline and are now reading Burough's "Sharp Eyes."

Among those who visited the Grammar School last Friday were: Mesdames Frank White, Carrie Baker, Geo. Roberts and Miss Verna Percival.

The program given by the pupils of the grammar Room last Friday was very much enjoyed.

Solos were rendered by Agnes Mahoney and Nellie Chapin. A prayer was read by Alex McWilliams and recitations were given by Hazel Millard and Ethel Knights.

Following is the program for the High School debate Friday P.M.

Essay — Mahala Griffin
Oration — John Creagan
Debate — Resolved that monthly tests should be abolished

Affirmative — Ruby McWilliams, Malcolm Denise, Jay Sutton and Sara Dodge Negative — Amy Beals, Lottie Welch, Ethel Roy and Anna Mahoney

P.D. BECKWITH'S FIRST STOVE SOLD AT AUCTION

(First stove the great maker, P.D. Beckwith, ever built)

There seems to be some mystery about the origin of the name that Mr. Beckwith gave to this great stove. One story is to the effect that they sold one to a farmer in Wayne, and when meeting him later asked him how he liked it. The farmer replied: "First rate! I believe it is just the thing to burn my round oak wood." Mr. Beckwith at once said, "You have given me a good idea. I will name it the Round Oak.

THE HISTORY OF PORTER TOWNSHIP

Written by John H. Cornish, one of the Township's pioneer residents and read by him before the annual meeting of the Van Buren County Pioneer Ass'n held in Lawton June 16.

We all know the township of Porter lies in the extreme south east corner of the County of Van Buren, with Kalamazoo County on the east and Cass County on the south. In fact at one time it was a part of Cass County and the Township of Penn.

The first settlement made in Porter was on Section 13 by Abner Mack, who built a cabin upon it in 1833. The second settler was Milton Van Duzer and the third James Young in 1835.

These were the only permanent settlers until the arrival in 1835 of Elijah Kinney, his wife and seven unmarried children from Milan, Ohio, with his nephew, Uri Kinney, who founded what is now known as the Kinney Settlement. Following them came Nelson and Sanford Corey, Stephen Kinney, Moses Monroe, Benjamin Reynolds and Daniel Alexander, the latter of whom bought two hundred acres in the southwestern portion of the township and for a time suppose he was the only settler in Porter until he came upon James Young, while on a trip of discovery. Others whose names are familiar are Roderick Bell, Nathan Cook, Miles Van Sickle, Jacob Stillwell, Elias Harmon, John Nesbitt, L.H. Weldin, Isaac Hall, Samuel Harper, Jeremiah Barker and William Hatheway. These pioneers of Porter found the most of the country heavily timbered. But the oak openings were more quickly settled because there was no underbrush in many places and it was easy to drive a team without clearing a road.

There are several attractive lakes in Porter, the largest of which is Bankson with an area of about six hundred acres; Cedar, with an area of about five hundred, also Gravel and Hussey, the latter of which takes its name from Erastus Hussey, the noted abolitionist, who entered all the land around the lake many years ago. The water is deep and clear and abounds in fish. These lakes are all popular resorts and are becoming more attractive each year.

Porter's Post Office

Although Porter has no Post Office, it was better favored in 1840. George Frees was appointed P. M. and kept the office at his house near Gravel Lake. What little mail he received was left him by a mail carrier who traversed the route from Schoolcraft to Dowagiac. In 1845 it was transferred to Isaac Hall and when the M.C.R.R. was completed it was removed to Lawton.

Porter has no water power. Consequently no milling industry. In 1866 Samuel Strong built a steam sawmill on Sec. 25 and afterwards Leonard M. Waldorn built and operated one on Sec. 23. At the present time there is none in the Township.

About the year '59 a small store was opened as Porter Center by a Mr. Lewis. It existed only a short time. I have occasion to remember its existence, however, as I was often sent there upon errands. At present we have a flourishing, general store owned by J.H. Clark.

The only tavern in the township was the Scisson House situated upon what is now known as the Peters place.

The first marriage that occurred in the township was in 1837 when William Nixon was married to Electa Smith, one of Porter's pioneers. The earliest birth that we have any record of is that of Francis Marion Scott born in 1837. The first death recorded is that of a child of Matthew Lewis in 1836, and it was buried on Luke Munger's farm.

Originally Part of Decatur

The township of Porter was originally a part of Decatur; but in 1845 it was set off by a council of committee men, held at the home of Nathan Cook to decide upon the selection of a name. Miss Cook suggested the name of Porter, being interested in the naval hero, Commodore Porter, of whom she was then reading. The suggestion was voted upon and adopted at once.

The first township meeting was held April 7, 1845 at what is now known as the No. 8 schoolhouse. The greatest number of votes cast for any one candidate was forty-five. The township board consisted of Horace H. Adams, Stephen Kinney, David Alexander and Samuel P. Harper. Clerks of the board were Nathan Cook and Warren S. Corey.

Harvey Barker, one of the pioneer preachers, settled in the township in 1839. His place became the headquarters for circuit riders of those early days. In 1837 Rev. Samuel L. Julian, a free-will Baptist, settled in Porter and organized a church in the Kinney settlement. The first M. E. Church was organized in 1844, when services were held in Roderick Bell's cooper shop on the banks of Gravel lake. The First Methodist Protestant Church was organized in 1865 by Rev. Samuel Reeves, known at that time as the West Porter Class. In 1867 this class erected a church which is still in use.

The first school was taught by Warren S. Correy in the Kinney Settlement, Sarah Cook taught the first school in the Bell District. Now we have a graded school system in nine districts.

Pleasant Memories

To show the condition of highways, as late as '46 when John Nesbitt came to his home in Porter, he was compelled to make his own road while his wife drove the ox team that carried their worldly goods. In the memory of their youngest son, Thomas Nesbitt, the road extended no further south than their home. This same road is being macadamized at the present time in Porter.

Well do I remember the first carriage. How we children ran to the gate, and even into the road and watched it until it was out of sight. Little did we think that in so short a time we would see the horseless carriage speeding along the same country road.

I can remember back when I was quite a small boy when stock of all kinds were turned into the woods, placing a bell upon one of the cows. They were allowed to go wherever they chose. Sometimes they went east and sometimes west, but I was the one who brought them up at milking time. I could distinguish the difference in the sound of the bells and many nights have I started through the woods when it was so dark that I just followed the sound of the bell, but they always brought me out into the clearing. Except one time when I was sent to keep them off from a small piece of wheat, after following them farther than I intended. I became confused and lost my way. I remember thinking I could live on wild grapes, for the woods were full of them, but what could I give my poor little dog. After a time i came out of the woods near the Weldin cemetery. Then I knew where I was and soon found my way home.

The old swimming hole is now a public highway, and the little log-cabin school where the mice ran riot and the snakes thrust their heads up through the cracks in the floor has long since gone to decay, but the memory of those days will never leave us. Nor the wonderful logging bees where great piles of valuable timber were burned that the land might be made tillable. The timber thus disposed of would represent untold wealth at the present time. But the land has been cleared by our sturdy forefathers and has developed her resources into smiling fields of grain, and vineyards and orchards laden with earth's choicest fruits.

Honor The Pioneers

We can justly feel proud of those pioneers, who have blazed the way for us. But men die and are forgotten. The great world goes on the same. Among the men that live or have lived or shall live; what is a single life, that we should think that all nature would stand still if we were gone? We must make room for others. But I am thankful kind providence has permitted us to live in a country where the spirit of peace prevails, where the farmers are progressive, the farm buildings up to date, showing the prosperity of them all, reminding us of what man can do in a comparatively short space of time.

The good old days, seen through a haze of tricky memory, look passing fair. But were we there, great drawbacks we should see. So we will brace ourselves and cheer our face and uncloud our brow, not look behind, and we will find the finest days are now.

REMINISCENT

EARLY DECATUR — REVIEWED FROM AN EARLY NEWSPAPER

Decatur is getting to be an old town. Michigan is no longer in the west. When old residents think back to the extent of their recollection, they will remember that they came here a long time ago. In March, 1829, the first settlement in Van Buren Co. was made on Little Prairie Ronde, now in this township of Dolphin Morris and Henry D. Swift. No other settlers came into the county until 1832, when Sam Morris, Le Grand Anderson, David Curry and George Tuttle settled in the same locality, and other settlers soon followed.

The first death in Decatur Twp. occurred in December, 1830. He was a son od Dolphin Morris, Elijah Goble and Eliza Tittle were the first to be married and Jon Curry was the first white child born in the township.

The Methodists were the first denomination to start in the county, having held their first quarterly meeting on the prairie in 1834.

Decatur village sprang into being in 1849, when the Mich. Central R.R. went thru on its present site, on land granted by government to Messr. Beers and Sherwood, and rapidly grew into prominence. The village was incorporated by the supervisors in 1859 and rechartered by the legislature in 1861, E.P. Hill having been the first president. The Union School building was erected in 1863-4, at a cost of $12,000.

No village of the pretensions of Decatur even in an early day, could get along without a newspaper, and in 1861 the Van Buren Co. Tribune was started, of which paper No. 22 of Vol. I is now before the writer, bearing date of Feb. 20, 1862, with the name of Chas. P. Sweet of the head as editor and Publisher. A reference to its columns will be interesting.

Under the head of "Business Directory" are found Hiram Cole and Chas. Shier Jr. attorneys — Orrin T. Welch & T.E. Hendrick, Justices of Peace — J. Tarbell, banker — T.E. Phelps postmaster and dealer in grain — C.T. Baker, J.T. Keables, G.W. Rogers, I.F.C. Mershon, physicians. R. Rich, brick and stone masons — Ira Nash, drygoods and groceries — W.E. Trowbridge, druggist — C. Baker, livery — F.N. Chadwick, proprietor of Duncombe House — G.A. Van Sickle, carpenter — J.A. Stafford, tinner — Richland Green, tailor — Frank Wright, architect — M. Woodruff, manufacturer of cabinet furniture and coffins — E.C. Pease, barber — T.P. Bashford, blacksmith — Jo Sallesbury, drayman — C. Lee, butcher — J. Wright, cooper.

Perhaps the most unique announcement is that Geo. R. McKoy does all kinds of blacksmithing and has superior grub and stump extractors for sale. Horse and Ox shoeing done in superior style.

Ah well! Decatur has changed in 30 years hasn't it? Many of the business men whose names appeared in advertisements in 1862 are dead, others are old men retired from business and others have removed of all those mentioned above, only T.C. Baker is still here and engaged in the same vocation as at that time.

Editor Sweet, in addition to looking after the tribune and doing job printing found time to attend to a lumber business. The greater part of the paper is taken up with war news. One big heading reads as follows: GREAT VICTORY! FORT DONELSON TAKEN! 15,000 REBELS CAPTURED. Verily times have changed in 30 years and reference to an old paper shows it. Will the columns of the issue of the Republican, read 30 years hence, reveal as great changes in the ranks of Decatur business men and institutions? We think likely! In no respect is the change more marked than the contrast between the Van Buren Co Tribune of 30 years ago and the Van Buren County Republican of today and remarkable progress will have to be made to keep up the record of local newspaper improvement the comparison reveals.

WHEN DID THE BIG GRIST MILL BURN

TWO SAY IN SPRING OF 1881—ANOTHER REMEMBERS DATE IS 1879 — CAMBERLAIN HOME BURNED ALSO SAYS WALTER BROWN

The Republican has received three answers to its query last week as to when the big three story flour mill burned, that stood on the site of the measure factory.

Two of Decatur's older residents, Theo. Trowbridge and Emory Place, have agreed that it burned in 1881, Walter Brown of Kalamazoo believes the fire occurred on a Sunday night in 1879. Which of these answers is right? The Republican would like to hear from more who can remember the fire.

Mr. Trowbridge was married the year before, and was living in the home now owned and occupied by Rheo Hirst, formerly known as the Anderson place on East Delaware street. The house then was owned by a man named Fish. Mr. Trowbridge was building the home now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Carney at the time. Josiah Hopkins, manager of the mill, lived next door to the Trowbridges in a small house that has since been replaced by a modern residence. Peter Slick was another one of the millers. Mr. Trowbridge does not remember the exact date, but does remember that the Hopkins' boy said a bunch of wooden headlinings, soaked in kerosene was found in one of the bolting machines in the mill, a few days before the fire, indicating that attempts were made to burn the mill and that the fire that destroyed the mill was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

Says It Was April, 1881

Mr. Place says that he and his family had just moved into the village from the Mort Haydon place in Hamilton. They were living with Mr. Place's sister, Mrs. Foster, in the house that this summer was remodeled by Ernest Edgerly on Wheeler street. The family had retired for the night, but the church bells began to ring about eleven o'clock, and he went to the fire with James Shockley, who lived on the same street.

Mr. Place started to work that spring for Lyman Rawson and believes the fire occurred in April, although he can't remember the exact date. He thinks the mill was built in 1867, and that Mr. North, a millwright, who afterwards made his home here for many years, came here to do the work of erecting it.

Mill Burned In '79, Says Brown

Walter Brown of Kalamazoo writes the Republican that the mill burned in 1879. His account of the fire is interesting:

When did the Decatur flour mill burn? The Decatur flour mill burned on Sunday night in 1879. It was owned by Chas. Duncombe, but was being run by Josiah Hopkins. The first attempt to burn it was by putting a bundle of head linings in the bolting chest on the second floor. It was discovered by Mr. Hopkins after he came back from supper. The mill was running late, in the evening, making flour for export. It also burned the residence of A. N. Chamberlain, which stood just north of the mill.

Tom Culverhouse says he was in Decatur when the mill burned and helped to save some of the flour, but he can't remember the year. Perhaps someone has a scrap book or old diary that will give a clew to the exact date.

CHIEF POKAGON

The Silver Creek church is unique in that it stands on land which was bought back from the Government by a Pottawattomie Indian Chief who had previously signed a treaty deeding all the remaining Pottawattomie lands in Michigan to the U.S. Government.

The chief was Leopold Pokagon and the treaty was signed at Chicago in 1833. By this treaty the Indians sold their lands for various payments and agreed to go west in three years; however, Pokagon was able to secure a stipulation that he and his band could stay, provided they bought land and paid taxes on it like white men.

In behalf of his band of about 250 people in 1836 Pokagon bought several hundred acres in Silver Creek Township, Cass County and the Indians moved to it in 1837. They paid for it with money received from treaties and an annuity paid by the government.

Pokagon was a devout Catholic and the next year he selected a beautiful spot on top of a hill close to a lake and built the first church in the township. It was a log cabin about 20 × 30. That location has been used for religious purposes ever since.

Pokagon had considerable trouble in getting the church completed. The Indians could cut the trees but did not possess the experience and skill to erect a large log cabin. His white neighbors, already in the township in considerable numbers, would not help him as there was much prejudice against his denomination. Also, Pokagon and his band had fought on the side of the British in the war of 1812.

As a final resort, Pokagon went to John Barney, a newcomer in the township and a Presbyterian, who told the chief to get his logs together and he would help raise the building.

Among the white settlers, in those days, it was considered a necessity to have a jug of whiskey on hand anytime a building was to be raised. Pokagon knew this and when Barney and his three hired men arrived, all was in readiness including the jug of whiskey.

After a while, Barney noticed that the Indians were not drinking and asked Pokagon about it. Pokagon replied that whiskey was very bad for Indians and he had forbidden his braves to touch it.

According to the story, Barney replied that if the Indians couldn't drink, his men couldn't drink either, so he tipped the jug over and let the contents run on the ground.

The story has come down from several sources and is believed to be true. Perhaps Barney had seen trouble develop from too much whiskey at cabin raisings and decided that pouring the whiskey onto the ground was the best way to avoid any such difficulties with the Indians.

The Song of the River

By William Randolph Hearst

The snow melts on the mountain
And the water runs down to the spring,
And the spring in a turbulent fountain,
With a song of youth to sing,
Runs down to the riotous river,
And the river flows to the sea,
And the water again
Goes back in rain
To the hills where it used to be.

And I wonder if life's deep mystery
Isn't much like the rain and the snow
Returning through all eternity
To the places it used to know.

For life was born on the lofty heights
And flows in a laughing stream
To the river below,
Whose onward flow
Ends in a peaceful dream.

And so at last,
When our life has passed
And the river has run its course,
It again goes back,
O'er the selfsame track,
To the mountain which was its source.

So why prize life
Or why fear death,
Or dread what is to be?
The river ran its alloted span
Till it reached the silent sea.
Then the water harked back to the mountain top
To begin its course once more.

So we shall run the course begun
Till we reach the silent shore,
Then revisit earth in a pure rebirth
From the heart of the virgin snow.
So don't ask why we live or die,
Or whither or when we go,
Or wonder about the mysteries
That only God may know.

STAY IN YOUR OWN BACK YARD

Honeysuckle blooming in the corner by the gate,
Mammy in the little cottage door,
Curley headed pickaninny coming home so late,
Crying cause his little heart is sore.
All the children playing 'round
Have skins so white and fair
None of them with him will ever play.
So mammy on her lap takes her little weeping chap
And says in her kind old way,

Chorus—
Now honey you stay in your own back yard,
Don't mind what them white childs do
What show you suppose they's gwine to give
A black little coon like you?
So stay on this side of the high board fence,
And honey don't cry so hard.
Go out and play just as much as you please,
But stay in your own back yard.
All the other children as they pass old mammy's place,
Romping home from school at night or noon
Peering through the fence could see that eager little face,
Such a wistful, lonesome little coon.
But one day that little face
Was gone forever more,
God had called the little lonesome elf,
And mammy as before in her little cabin door
Sits and croons to her old black self.
Chorus—

THE FRUIT BELT TRAIN
(History)
By Genevieve Cross

The Fruit Belt Train was originally known as the Toledo and South Haven Railroad, and was opened in 1877. At this time this railroad ran from South Haven, Mich. and passed through the towns of Hartford, Lawrence, PawPaw and Lawton, Michigan and on to Toledo, Ohio.

Later, in 1903, the South Haven and Eastern Railroad was taken over by the Pere Marquette RR and a spur was laid from Paw Paw to Kalamazoo, Mi.

Therefore, the Fruit Belt Train, as this author remembers it, ran from Kalamazoo to South Haven. It is interesting to note that the original road bed paralelled what is now the Michigan Central and can be seen today as one leaves Kalamazoo for Chicago. Now, most of the track is gone - only the road bed remains of what was once a fascinating sight -- THE FRUIT BELT TRAIN!

We will offer for one week only with every purchase of 25c or more your choice of either a good 5c cigar or a box of candy.

Our opponents say we are selling flour and many other things below cost. We pay for more advertising than anyone else in Decatur. The wonder is how do we do all this. We know if you don't. Anyway get bargains while you can.

A VAGABOND'S DREAM

What care I for ceilings high
Or drapes or pictured walls?
What care I for Duncan Phyfes
When nature's playhouse calls?

What care I for Chinese rugs
Or a couch with silken spread
Or mirrors with carved out wreaths,
When the sun shines overhead

The blue sky is my ceiling high,
A hedge of wild rose my drape,
An ivied stump my table,
My walls — the wide landscape,

The soft green grass my worsted rug.
For a couch the fragrant hay.
The quiet brook my mirror clear.
Thank God for a carefree-day.

THOMAS BRIGHAM, THE EMIGRANT:

1 THOMAS BRIGHAM, born probably in England in 1603; died in Cambridge, Mass., 8 Dec., 1653; married, probably in 1637, Mercy Hurd, born probably in England; died in Marlboro, Mass., 23 Dec., 1693.

Governor Winthrop has left a graphic narrative of sixty-four days on shipboard coming hither from old England in 1630. The Rev. Richard Mather also kept a journal of his passage, in 1635, which occupied twelve weeks and two days from taking ship at Bristol to the landing at Boston. These stories present a vivid picture of the perils and privations attending the long voyage Thomas Brigham encountered a little earlier in the latter season, from the somewhat more remote port of London. He must have first set foot on the New England shore early in June, for in one of the few passenger lists of that time which have escaped loss or destruction we read:

"VIII April 1635. Theis under written are to be transported to New England imbarqued in the Suzan and Ellen, Edward Payne Mr (Master). The p'ties have brought certificates from y^{e} Ministers and Justices of the peace y^{t} they are no subsidy men; and are conformable to y^{e} orders and discipline of the Church of England.

"Thomas Brigham 32"

Aboard the same ship were Symon Crosby and his wife and infant, future neighbors in Cambridge; Ralph Hudson and Percival Green, who were to be fellow-townsmen there, and also two boys, Benjamin and Daniel, with their father, the learned and reverend Peter Bulkley, who the same year was to found the town of Concord and long was its pastor and benefactor.

The record quoted, which is the earliest we have of Thomas Brigham, shows that he was born in 1603.

THOMAS[2], son of Thomas[1] and Mercy (Hurd) Brigham; born probably in Cambridge, Mass., about 1640; died in Marlboro, Mass., 25 Nov., 1716; married (1), 27 Dec., 1665, Mary, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Moore) Rice, (daughter of John and Elizabeth Moore of Sudbury), and granddaughter of Edmund Rice, the emigrant, and his wife, Tamazine; married (2), 30 July, 1695, Susanna, daughter of William Shattuck of Watertown and widow (1) of Joseph Morse and (2) of John Fay, whose first wife was Mary, the sister of Thomas. It will be noted that every descendant of Thomas[2] is also a descendant of Edmund Rice, who is an ancestor of many colonial families in eastern Massachusetts. He had a large number of children, some of whom were of mature age at the time of the emigration.

Thomas went to Sudbury and Marlboro with his mother when she married Edmund Rice. On attaining his majority he bought of his stepfather, for £30, a town right in Marlboro of "24 acres, with the frame of a dwelling house thereon, with all the privileges of the town commons and further additions of allotments to be made thereto." August 28, 1665, having completed payment for the same, he received a deed from the Executors of Edmund Rice.* This land, situated near Williams Pond in the southwest part of the town, was the beginning of his large farm, which included many acres stretching away toward Chauncey Pond in Westboro. Thomas Brigham also was one of the purchasers of the old plantation "Ockoocangansett," which had been reserved for the Indians out of the ancient boundaries of Marlboro, and which many contended they forfeited by their perfidy during Philip's War. Certain leading men of Marlboro, including the Brighams of the day, obtained, without the consent of the General Court, title to this plantation of 5800 acres and formed a company. The amount paid never can be known, because of the subsequent disappearance of the deed, but the sum doubtless was nominal.

Miss Martha L. Ames, a descendant of Thomas[2], residing on the old Joseph Brigham place in Marlboro, owns a very early Brigham deed, dated "May 10, 1706," being a conveyance of 13¾ acres of meadow land, as explained by a map, going to Thomas[2] Brigham, out of "Cow common" land, and certified to by his brother "Dr. John," who had been chosen "surveyor and clerk" by the proprietors. On the old Thomas Brigham homestead, on the south side of present Forest Street, beyond the confluence of Glen Street, something like a score of rods from the highway and at the foot of Crane Hill, is a slightly raised rectangular plot, about 30 × 75 feet, from whose center springs a mature apple tree. Here rest the last of the Marlboro Indians, whose earlier generations listened to the great Indian Apostle Eliot. Their last chief expired in his wigwam, near Williams Pond, and was buried at this place on the Brigham farm, where thirty other individual graves could be made out by the last generation of Marlboro citizens. This spot has always been sacredly preserved by the owners of the Brigham farm.

*The parchment deed of this purchase is owned by Charles F. Brigham, of Allston, Mass., who relates that when a boy he boasted at school that he had a deed on parchment at home, and being dared to produce it, he tore a small piece off one corner of it and carried it to school to vindicate his statement. The interview afterward with his father was not pleasant. This deed runs from Benjamin Rice to Thomas Brigham, and upon it Mercy Rice made her "Mark" in place of a signature.

SECOND GENERATION

John Brigham began business for himself by erecting a sawmill, with rude flutter wheel, the first turned on Assabet River, it may be, near the site of one existing in Morse's day owned by Hayes and Bush in Northboro on Howard's Brook; he having received, in 1672, a grant of land on Licor Meadow Plain. Hudson says "It is difficult to tell when or where the first mill was erected. It is probable, however, that the first was a sawmill and was erected in that part of the town now included in Northboro, by John Brigham. It was near the center of the present town of Northboro, on a stream which constitutes one of the principal tributaries of the Assabet River. This mill was erected before Philip's War." Whitney's History of Worcester (1793) points out that "a little north of the meeting-house runs a small but lasting stream from the hills in the westerly part of the town, on which is a sawmill which performs considerable work in spring and fall." Rev. Joseph Allen says he was the first white settler of Northboro.

He surveyed the Marlboro Indian Plantation of about 6000 acres in 1672; was granted the extensive "Coram farm" for his services as surveyor; surveyed and mapped out Sudbury Township in 1708.

John Brigham appears to have been the leader in the attempt of some of the principal citizens of Marlboro to possess themselves of the Indian Plantation, Ockoocangansett, which, they alleged, had been forfeited by the Indians through their participation in King Philip's War. The General Court, in 1684, refused the prayer of the petitioners for permission to purchase the Plantation of the Indians; whereupon, says Hudson, it appears that the principal inhabitants of Marlboro, headed by John Brigham, resolved to possess the Indian lands. To cut the knot which they could not untie, on the 15th of July, 1684, they obtained, without the consent of the General Court, a deed of the Plantation from the Indians. This deed the General Court promptly declared null and void; notwithstanding which, the purchasers proceeded at once to take possession of the Plantation and to lay out and divide the lands.

"The 29th of October, 1686: At a meeting of the proprietors of Ockoocangansett Plantation, it was ordered that every proprietor should have laid out to him in some of the best of the land lying as conveniently as may be to the town of Marlboro.

FOURTH GENERATION

22 LIEUT. NATHAN[4], son of Nathan[3] and Elizabeth (Howe) Brigham, born in Marlboro, Mass., 28 Nov., 1693; died in Southboro, Mass., 15 Sept, 1784, æ. 91; married (1) 24 Dec., 1717, Dina, daughter of Edmund and Ruth (Parker) Rice of Westboro, Mass.; married (2) about 1729, Elizabeth (Ward) Snow.

Morse gathered the following facts: Prior to the second division of the original township of Marlboro, in 1727, Nathan held several minor town offices, but in the new town of Southboro, to which he was set off, he appears at once among her principal citizens, serving the first year as a selectman and soon after as treasurer. He was repeatedly placed on committees for hiring schoolmasters and chosen for the 29th time as a selectman at the age of 77 years, at which he remonstrated and was, with public thanks, excused. He lived near the houses of Samuel and Dana Brigham in the north part of Southboro, and is presumed to have inherited the lands southeast of Crane meadow, drawn in his grandfather Thomas' right. He did inherit the Bible, law-book, cane and sword of his father Nathan. He retained his vigor to a great age and when in his 90th year used to mount his horse without assistance.

FIFTH GENERATION

73 CAPT. EDMUND[5], son of Lieut. Nathan[4] and Elizabeth (Ward) Brigham, born in Southboro, Mass., 12 Aug., 1733; died in Westboro, Mass., 29 June, 1806; married (1), 2 Nov., 1757, Sarah, probably daughter of Samuel Lyscom, born 27 Dec., 1734; died 27 May, 1769; married (2), Elizabeth Bevel, of Marlboro, born 1740; died in Westboro, 11 May, 1825; she was brought up by Mrs. Ruth Ward, who became the second wife of Joseph Brigham of Marlboro, and lived in the old house, still standing, and occupied by Miss Martha L. Ames; it was in this house that Elizabeth Bevel was married.

Capt. Edmund was also deacon; he settled near Chauncey Pond in the northeast part of Westboro, and was an important citizen. He was warden in 1774; member of a committee of vigilance and correspondence, '77 and '78; selectman, '79, '87, '88, '91, 93. Was also Captain of the Company of Minute Men who marched on the Lexington Alarm. He took 18 men to the Northern Army, (who each had a bounty of £9), and at the surrender of Burgoyne he had command of a company of volunteers. Was kicked by a horse, which incapacitated him for further service in the army. British prisoners, destined for Boston, under charge of officers, accompanied him on his journey home, and were encamped on his grounds for a night, as they passed through Westboro. During the halt, a Hessian prisoner drew a map of Capt. Brigham's fine farm as the one he intended to draw for his service in conquering the country. This map was discovered, about 1800, by a citizen from the vicinity of Westboro, hanging upon the wall of an inn in Germany.

SEVENTH GENERATION

433 DEXTER[7], son of Samuel[6] and Lydia (Ball) Brigham; born in Waterford, Me., 24 Sept., 1808; died in Westboro, Mass., in 1884; married, 16 Sept., 1834, Martha W., daughter of Capt. Pierpont —— and Anna (Warren) Brigham, (186); born in Westboro, 3 April, 1813; died in Westboro, 6 April, 1889.

He resided on Pierpont Brigham's homestead in the north-east part of Westboro, probably the place where Capt. Edmund Brigham resided. The male line is extinct.

Children, born in Westboro:

i Marion Sophia[8], b. 26 March, 1835; d. 18 Feb., 1841.

ii Adaliza, b. 20 Oct., 1839; d. 7 Jan., 1877; m. 15 March, 1866, Andrew Otis. Ch. (Otis):

vi Ella Sophia, b. 14 June, 1848; d. 27 Jan., 1870.

vii Lora, b. 26 March, 1851; d. 30 Aug., 1851.

434 CURTIS[7], son of Dea. Lyscom[6] and Martha (Fay) Brigham; born in Westboro, Mass., 21 May, 1793; died in Gun Plains, Mich., 24 Feb., 1872; married in Boston, 14 Aug., 1817, Lydia, daughter of John Woodbury; born in Salem, Mass., 5 April, 1789; died in Gun Plains, Mich., 28 Nov., 1876.

He was a shoemaker and farmer. In 1812 he walked 90 miles to Boston for work; then engaged on a coast vessel and was captured in the War of 1812. He kept a shoeshop in Boston. In 1833, he started for the West; drove to Brattleboro, Vt., thence took stage to Troy, N.Y., canal to Buffalo; by lake to Detroit; then walked 125 miles to Gun (or Gull) Prairie, Mich.; then he returned for his family and drove back the next year. He cleared a farm and saw hard times. He began the first regular Sunday meetings in Allegan County, Mich. in 1835, and was licensed to preach. For 10 years he led meetings, Sunday-school and attended funerals, besides doing his farm-work. At the age of 75 he wrote an interesting life-sketch for his family from which this is taken.

RECALLING MORRIS MURDER

(The story of the Morris murder as published in the Paw Paw Free Press and Courier of October 2, 1879, was completed with testimony before a coroner's jury and the jury's verdict. The paper is faded and worn in creases and difficult to read, but Operator Howe has done a good job of deciphering and has here preserved the manuscript which otherwise would have been lost to the world.)

THE TESTIMONY

Below we give in full the proceedings on the inquest:

The Coroner's Jury

A jury was impaneled by Justice Haynes, of Decatur, consisting of Dr. J. T. Keables, Dr. G. L. Rose, Dr. H. M. Brodrick, W. H. Clark, and L. D. Roberts, and testimony was taken as follows:

The Testimony

Jennie M. Bull, (a girl who had worked several years for the family) testified—"I went away to Geo. Relts', at Charleston, yesterday about quarter past eleven; came home about 4 o'clock; found the house locked; I went home to father's, then came back about half past six. They (Mr. and Mrs. Morris) told me they went away about noon to John Gould's in Porter; they had a horse named "Raish" and single buggy. The clock struck 8 as I blew out my light before retiring. They were both at the barn feeding colt when I went up stairs. There was no one around here when I came home. I heard them talking after they came back from the barn; don't know when they retired. I walked to Charleston alone. I heard no noise in the house during the night, but a jar. (She explained that she did not know what it was or suspect anything wrong,and went to sleep again.) I slept over the dining room, just over the door where Henry was found on the stoop. My stair door was shut but not fastened—was ajar. The inside lock on the porch door was fastened by a catch for fastening the bolt of the lock. While we were eating our lunch, Mrs. Morris said, "Jenny, did any one bring you home?" I said no. She said, "there are buggy tracks that turned up the lane from the east"; but nothing more was said about the buggy.

When I awoke this morning my arms were numb. I awoke and saw the sun up, and wondered why I was not called because they always called me earlier. I got up this morning at about half past six o'clock. I came down stairs and saw Henry lying on the porch as I went by the door. The door was open, but the screen door was shut. All the rest of the doors of the house were locked.

I went out at the woodshed door, and went to Mr. Gillitt's, in the tenant house. The hired man was not there. Mrs. Morris while at lunch told me she thought he would not be here to-morrow on account of the sickness of his wife. His name is John Klinger. I did not see him when he came. I was at Gillitt's. It was about an hour before I came back.

I ran to my father's from Gillitt's, and came back again with my mother after a little while, for I was afraid to come back alone, and found John Klinger, Mr. Rosewarne, Charley Rosewarne, and my father at the barn and Elias Morris and wife in the house. They came out as soon as I got back. There have not been any strangers here for several days or weeks.

No one working for Henry but Johnny Klinger, he has been here six or seven weeks. Before him Riley Huntley worked for him nearly four years. Johnny came to work Monday and Riley left Tuesday afternoon. Levi Reits worked one month with Klinger. When Reits left here he went to his father's. He lives on the Goble place, now owned by Austin Charles.

Riley quit work because Henry did not like his drinking, but parted good friends as far as I know.

Mrs. Morris always kept her jewelry in the right hand drawer of the bureau and always locked the drawer when she went away. When I have made the bed I have often found the revolver under his pillow, but sometimes saw it on the washstand, to the right of the door as you enter, after the bed has been made. He generally slept on the front side of the bed next the door. I have been here with them 4 or 5 years; and was intimate with them, so much so that Mrs. Morris would tell me to be sure and lock that drawer if I went away. I guess they hid the money about the bureau but do not know.

He sold I think $122 worth of hogs at Decatur on Wednesday." (She did not know whether he got the money.)

John Klinger testified:—"I am 21 years old, and live in Volinia, 1⅓ miles from here. Knew Henry Morris and wife; have known them two years and a half. I have been at work for Mr. Morris two months. I boarded here when I worked for him. I was here every night last week. Drew wheat to Decatur last Saturday for Mr. Morris. He was at Decatur with me.

He went over in a buggy; got home about six o'clock; he got home about 10 minutes before I did. Don't know whether Mr. Morris got any money Saturday for his wheat. I stayed here Saturday night; left here Sunday noon. Mr. and Mrs. Morris were at the barn when I left here. I went home yesterday when I left here, and did not return until about six o'clock this morning. Met some parties at Nicholsville, but did not have any particular conversation with any one.

When I came home I rode to the barn and fed the horses; came out and found Mr. Morris' pants at the barn as I came out. I lifted them up and dropped them; came to the house, found Hank, took hold of him to lift him up, thinking he was sick and couldn't get back to the house. I saw the door open and discovered him bloody, so I left him. Did not notice any tracks on the lane, but thought it strange the gate was open. No bridle or halter is missing from the barn.

Mr. Morris said (yesterday) he was going to John Gould's for a while and make a call, and would probably be back at 4 o'clock. Levi Reits was working here about four weeks ago. I get $13 a month wages on this farm. There is a horse missing; there were five horses in the barn last night. The one that is gone was the best one he had."

The Verdict

The jury in their verdict, say: "That the bodies of the said Charles H. Morris and Esther Morris were found lying dead in the house of the said Charles H. Morris in the township of Decatur, in the county aforesaid, and that said bodies, when so found as aforesaid, appear to have been shot—Esther Morris having received one shot entering the thoracic cavity below the lower angle of the scapula, on the right side, which shot came out on the left side between the third and fourth ribs, on a line with the nipple; another shot entered the left breast above and to the left of the nipple, either of which would have caused her death. Chas. H. Morris received two shots, one of which entered between the fourth and fifth ribs within an inch of the nipple on the right side of the chest, and came out beneath the shoulder blade of the left side; another penetrated the neck on the right side, its course being downward and to the left, lodging under the skin one inch to the left of the spine, on a line with the exit of the other, either of which was sufficient to cause his death. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths as aforesaid, do say that the said Charles H. Morris and Esther Morris came to their death by the said wounds, appearing upon their bodies as aforesaid, and not otherwise, but who inflicted said wounds is to the jurors unknown."

LEGEND OF THE DOGWOOD

[illegible] time [illegible] dogwood tree Grew stately and [illegible] the rest,
In the [illegible]age of the forest
In [illegible]ing [illegible] they spoke,
For [illegible] the [illegible]
Their [illegible] hearts with love,
For [illegible] of the Crucifixion
Was [illegible]ing very near.
Alas, [illegible] was the fate of the dogwood,
Twixt sorrow and shame was torn,
When it was called upon to hold
The Master's crucified form.
Then Jesus in deep compassion
Promised never again would it be
For a [illegible] reminder of His Cross
He chose the dogwood tree.
Each springtime thruout the ages
As the dogwood petals unfold
Impressed on each is a nail print
For all mankind to behold.
In the center of each blossom
There appears a crown of thorn,
A reminder of His sorrow and shame
And the suffering that was borne.
The branches now twisted and slender
That once were so rugged and strong,
The petals in the form of a cross,
Two short, the other two long.

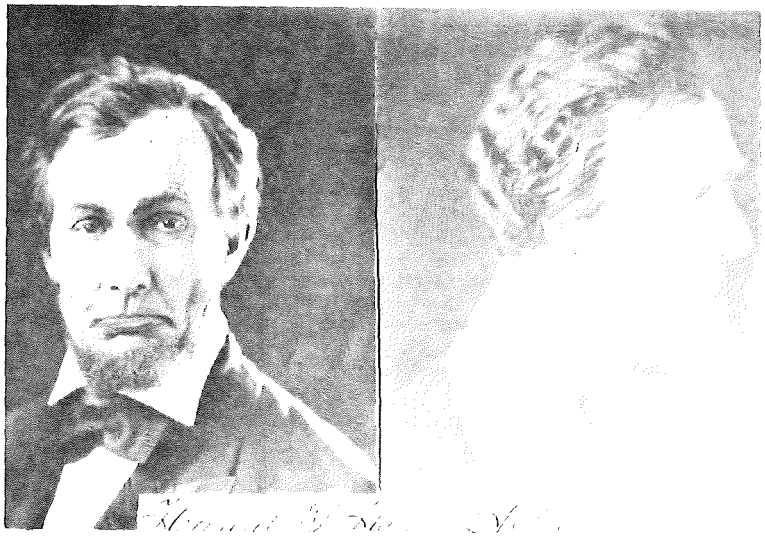
Howard Hall - Actor



Howard Hall As Lincoln

HOWARD HALL'S SUCCESS

Is Rated Most Versatile Actor in Melodrama

Howard Hall, the popular actor whose country home is in Hamilton township, is meeting with remarkable success this season in his play "The Wall street detective."

"It is not necessary to visit a Broadway playhouse and pay $2 for a seat to enjoy good acting. That is, it is not necessary as long as Howard Hall is appearing in The Wall Street Detective at popular price houses. At the Fourteenth Street Theatre last week Howard Hall gave a performance playing three different characters, that would hold its own in comparison to most work one sees along Broadway in the course of a dramatic season. The play was performed for the first time and must necessarily undergo many changes before it can be expected to stand as high in the estimation of an audience as the acting of the chief character who plays in it. Mr. Hall in playing the three different parts demonstrates his right to be known as the most versatile actor in melodrama. If nothing else was needed to prove his right to this distinction, the reception which was tendered him by the large audience which assembled to witness the first performance of his play should be proof conclusive to the unknowing. Mr. Hall looked as though he didn't like the presentation of flowers, but that is the penalty for a popular actor and his friends rightly thought that no exception should be made in his case. The play contains some climaxes which do not have the desired effect. They need not be detailed here, as they were as evident to the author of the play as to the spectator, and with a few more rehearsals and performances the defects will be removed and it will undoubtedly occupy a high place in the list of attractions which the popular price houses will see the coming season. The Wall Street Detective can be said already to have taken a place which, for its appeal to lovers of clean melodrama, will rank it with the best.

Mr. Hall is playing in the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York City.

ACTOR HAS FIGHT WITH UGLY LION

HOWARD HALL ATTACKED ON STAGE AT BIJOU.

"Brutus" of "The Waif's Paradise" Attempted to Put Star of Play into the Actor Man's Paradise—Mangled Hall's Hand, but Hall is Thankful to Escape With His Life

When Howard Hall, leading man in "The Waifs' Paradise" at the Bijou theatre, appeared on the stage December 12, it was with one hand in blood-stained bandages. Every person in the audience noticed the bandage, but few knew that it told of a terrible fight for life that occurred behind the scenes while the early arrivals at the theatre were being seated by the ushers.

Just before dressing for his first appearance on the stage Mr. Hall went into the cage of lions to test their temper. He found Princess as gentle and docile as usual, but Brutus was ugly. Mr. Hall watched him carefully, and after a minute or two the animal calmed down and appeared to be all right. Thinking that all was well, Mr. Hall started toward the door of the cage when suddenly with a roar the beast was after him.

Mr. Hall turned quickly and fired his pistol in the beast's face. The powder had its effect, but before he retreated to the opposite corner of his cage, the lion struck viciously at Mr. Hall, the claws catching his hand, and badly lacerating the middle finger of his right hand.

"I suppose it was a narrow escape," said Mr. Hall, "But as it is, it is only a trifle. The claws came very near to my body, and if they had caught me—well, there wouldn't have been any performance of 'The Waifs' Paradise.'

"Brutus has an ugly disposition. He is not really ferocious, but is treacherous. The day I bought him last fall at Coney Island, when he was being transferred into my cage, he caught Captain Wilson, his old attendant, and nearly killed him. I have always watched him carefully since then, and tonight is the first time that he ever injured me."—Minneapolis Journal.

What Do We Know Of the Real Indian?

BY CHAS. PALMITER

Scattered over the country are the works of two distinct races, one race extinct, the other practically so: one the Mound Builders, the other the Indians. While the works of the first are popularly called Indian mounds, it has been decided by those who claim to know that the Indians had nothing to do with their construction, and that the occasional skeletons, that are evidently Indian, found in them were buried there ages after the completion of the mounds. The mounds and earthworks of the Mound Builders are not found east of the Alleghany Mountains, while the stone implements of the Indians are found from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Since the coming of the white man, bringing iron and gunpowder, the characteristics of the Indian has so changed that the people who scattered the arrow heads can well be said to be extinct. The physical may remain the same but the real Indian has gone. When an Indian obtained a gun he had no use for the flint arrow heads and he neither made nor taught their making, so that in a few generations the making of stone weapons become a lost art. To understand how an art may be so easily lost, we have only to remember that spinning wheels are a great deal more scarce than stone weapons. It does not take a very old person to remember the time when nearly every house contained the implements used to manufacture cloth. The women spun and wove, and who knows that the squaws did not make the arrow heads?

It does not do much good to search the fields for arrow heads as they are nearly always a surprise, but there are camps to look for. The camps are plentifully scattered over our country, and it does not take much cunning to find them. They are found, mostly, in the neighborhood of water and on sandy soil. Nearly my whole experience in looking up camps has been in the township of Hamilton, and over only a small portion of that. I have looked in the neighborhood of running water in but one place. I saw a place that I thought that if the soil happened to be right there might be a camp. On going to the place I found sand, flint chips and a few arrowheads. I mention this to show that it is not very difficult to locate camps. The camps that are not near to water seem to me to have been temporary ones, as I have found nothing in them but the flint chips and an occasional fragment of an arrowhead that is not finished, indicating, to me, that it was broken while being worked at and the pieces thrown away.

Usually flint chips are what first attracts the attention on a camp. When the chips are found, begin to look for anything that may be found, for you are quite liable to find something besides arrowheads. I have found many stone implements on camps the use of which is beyond me. One kind I have called scrapers. I have many of them of different forms though they may have been used for the same purposes, and one of them appears to be made to use with a handle. Another tool that I have found I can conceive of no use for unless they are used for a similar purpose that sailors use a piece of leather in the palm of the hand to push a sail needle through the cloth, the Indians using the stone in the palm of the hand to push a bone awl through leather. There is another kind of a stone implement, but what they were used for I have not even tried to guess, except that they were used to pound with. They usually weigh a pound or a pound and a half, and are of an oval shape and about an inch in thickness. The middle of the flat sides has a depression as if made by continuously striking something sharp and hard, and the edges are battered as though they had been struck against another stone. These implements are not flint, nor are they made but are natural stones selected on account of their shape and size. Another implement is called a skinning stone, I have been told. The only one that I have found is about three inches long and the bit or cutting part is about an inch and a half wide and is finished like the bit of a stone tomahawk. It is as symmetrical and as well finished as can be done by civilized stone workers with steel tools.

There seems to be two kinds of arrowheads, one for hunting and one for war arrows. The hunting arrowhead, the kind with the notches in, is much the more common and needs no description. The war arrows are of a different shape. They are a triangle the length being more or less greater than the width. They are smaller and thinner and all the edges are equally sharp. There are no notches to fasten them to the shaft for they were to be left in the wound if the shaft was withdrawn. Doubtless this kind was poisoned. Each of these kinds may be subdivided, according to their forms.

The difference in form I have supposed originated in the different work by different tribes, yet some suppose that the difference came from a difference in individual workmen. It is easy to divide them into kinds, but there are not enough different forms to justify me in believing the difference is individual and not tribal. I find a kind of arrowhead that is not finished with the usual notches but there is a shank to fasten it to the shaft. This kind of a head is of a much stronger make than the other kinds. Then I have found a few, but enough to show that they are a class by themselves, that are more like a spike, becoming somewhat wider and thinner toward the back end which is half moon in shape and thinned to an edge.

The making of arrowheads is generally looked upon as a great mystery. It is said that the Indians will not tell how it is done. Now I think that the Indian of today does not know how himself. He has lost the art, that is all. I will venture to say, with my small knowledge and experience that the 20th century white, man if he was put to it could make them, and without iron tools, either. I have seen my own work pass for the real thing. In examining the chips around a camp, many will be found with one side thick and square. We can safely say that they were removed by a blow, which shows one way that flint may be worked. It is supposed that fire and water may have been used also. If flint is heated, and a sharp stick with a drop of water on it be touched to the hot flint, a flake will come off. A wet buckskin string, or even the finger with a drop of water will have the same effect. I know a man who has tried the heat and water plan and found that it would work. A plan that I have tried is to take a piece of flint in each hand, and simply press them together.

It is also a mystery to many where the Indians got the flint, thinking it is not to be found around here. Some kinds I have not been able to find, but I have seen places where it can be gotten, and where it has been dug and broken into a shape to carry away to be finished in camp.

DENTIST.

DR. HOOPER, DENTIST

The professional card of N. E. Hooper, dentist, again appears in the Republican. Dr. Hooper has practiced dentistry in Decatur continuously for 34 years and by far the greater part of that time he has been the only dentist in Decatur.

He has been so thorough and painstaking in his work that his practice has grown beyond the limits of this village and vicinity and some of the best citizens of surrounding towns come here for their dental work.

Dr. Hooper and Dr. Sprague were in partnership two years and now Dr Sprague has returned to Dowagiac and Dr. Hooper is alone again. Miss Leota Denise is assisting him and the Doctor is meeting his appointments with his usual promptness.

A QUIET FOURTH

A Few Picnics, a Few Dinner Parties, a Few Accidents

The fourth was void of excitement No attempt was made to attract visitors by a celebration. Some of our towns people entertained company and as many took advantage of the holiday to visit others.

There were a number of pleasant dinner parties in town and a number of picnic parties to the surrounding lakes. In the evening Main street was alive with fireworks.

But two accidents were recorded. In the morning Miss Lila Rose with a party of friends at Finch lake attempted to shoot a cannon fire cracker. The fuse burned too rapidly and just as she threw it it exploded.

Her hand was badly burned and she was driven hurriedly to town to have it dressed.

Orris Roberts thought he was firing a roman candle but it proved to be some kind of a set piece that shot fire out of holes along the side of it His hand was painfully burned.

BY J. J. STURR

The author of the following unique poem, now a printer of Brooklyn, New York, is a brother of attorney J. L. Sturr of this village, and spent his boyhood days on his father, Jacob Sturr's, farm in Volinia township. His pathetic portrayal of his present self indicates that his sojourn in Cass county must have been in primitive times, since which the land has been denuded of its forest and become bald like unto the author, and like him, too, is growing old, but none the less useful,

Underneath the turquoise sky
Where the limpid streams are streaming,
I watch the truant moments fly
And dream the dreams that I am dreaming.
No cherished fame or lust of gold
Appeals to me howe'er appealing.
It may be that I am growing old.
I sometimes feel I feel that feeling.
No silvery tuft or hoary lock
Adorns my knob with chaste adorning,
I furtive stroke my polished block
And mourn the morn of youth's glad morning.
My forehead now hangs down behind,
The few blond hairs are growing fewer,
I've tried experts of every kind
Who know the newest hair renewer.
It would not phase my billiard ball,
Not strong enough appeared the strongest,
So now I have no hair at all
Where long I longed to have the longest.
Since life is short and hope is gone,
I often think while I am thinking,
I'll go and fill my demijohn
And drink the drink the drunkard's drinking.
Or shall I choose the better part,
(If I may dare to be so daring)
And find some warm confiding heart,
Then pare my pear and go on pairing.

MISS CHARLES' SUCCESS

Critical Audience of Aquila, Italy, Applauds her Work and Mayor of the City Sends Congratulatory Message.

Herewith is published a letter to Mrs. A. Charles of this village from a member of the opera company in which her daughter Miss Gertrude is singing in Aquila, Italy:

Aquila, Italia,
July 31, 1904.

MRS. A. CHARLES,
Dear Madam:—

I wish to acquaint you with your daughter's success upon the operatic stage in this city last evening. She made her appearance in Verdi's opera of "Il Trovatore;" singing the strong role of "Azucena" (the gipsy). The theatre was filled with our best people and every one was very curious to hear her in that heavy part. When the curtain went up for the second act with Azucena on the stage for the first time, there was a perfect silence all over the house; but when she had sung her solo, they applauded and encored her until she was obliged to repeat it.

At the close of the act, the first society people of the place went upon the stage to congratulate her, and the Mayor of the city wrote her a complimentary message. All this is the more remarkable because the people of this place are very difficult to please in matters of music

I have, myself, never doubted that she would succeed because she had a fine voice to begin with, but she has had to study very hard to accomplish what she has done, for you must know that to sing in Italian and in Italy is very difficult indeed for a foreigner. No one of us, however, would have believed that she could do so well in her first performance, and we are all delighted that the first step has been so successfully taken, and that she has promise of doing so much in the career of the theatre.

Everyone is talking of her to-day, of her beautiful voice and the good work she has done, and saying that she has a very bright future before her. I am sure that you must be proud of your daughter's brilliant debut, and you will be interested to know that it took place in the same theatre where the famous Prima Donna Lillian Nordica made her first success.

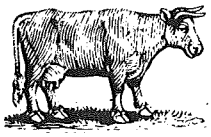
To-day Miss Charles is very tired because there has been a great deal of extra work during the past few days. She has asked me to write you how everything has gone, which I do with the greatest pleasure.

Trusting to have sometime the honor of making your acquaintance personally, I am, with my best regards

Very sincerely yours,

ENRICO OPPI.

Miss Charles has won fame in the operatic world after years of unremitting work. Perseverance and pluck tell the story of her success. Her parents and friends and her home community may well be proud of her.



BUTCHERING AT HOME

The slaughtering of live stock on the farm is going out of fashion altogether — too fast! There is no good reason why every farmer should not butcher his own meat as well as market more or less of his live stock direct to the consumer. The illustration shows a very simple and suggestive way of butchering a beef or other animal.

Where a suitable building and windlass is not convenient, the work may be done under a large tree. Strongly fasten a stout pulley, a rope up among the branches, and fasten the end to a spike driven into the tree.

"Peeka, The Pottawatamie"

BY

HARRY GARRETT

Shavehead was tramping noiselessly through the soft, light snow along the shore of Diamond Lake. He was on track of a wild turkey, and his well trained eye told him that the bird was not far away. Suddenly there was a flapping of wings, and, looking up, he saw it gracefully sail into a tree. A little way from the tree lay a large log, if he could get behind this, he would have a good shot. Unstrapping his snowshoes, dodging carefully from tree to tree, he at last reached the log, and was about to fire, when the turkey, with a loud gobble, spread its wings and flew far out into the forest. With a grunt of disgust Shavehead was about to arise when something else caught his eye.

Out in the lake, a few rods from the shore lay a little island of about eighty acres. This island was covered with forest. On the edge of the woods, close to the shore of the island, directly opposite of where Shavehead lay, was the hut of Old Jim, the Diamond Lake hermit. There he lived all alone, five miles from the nearest white family. It was reported among the Indians that he had money hid somewhere, still they had never seen it. They knew that every month he would go to St. Joe with a pack of furs for which he would receive a good sum of money. From this they reasoned he must have it concealed somewhere about the island.

As Shavehead was about to come out from behind the log, buckle on his snowshoes and tramp on, he saw Old Jim come out of his hut and look carefully about him. There was something mysterious in his actions, so Shavehead lay still. Satisfied no one was around Old Jim took up an ax and went up to a large sycamore tree a little way out in the forest. Then he struck the tree a few blows close down by its roots, and, after prying a little, about two square feet of the side of the tree fell out. Reaching in he drew out two iron kettles, sat them on the ground, and then put back the square good as before. But as he set one of the kettles down, something slid off the top and lay glittering on the ground. A ray of the setting sun fell upon it and it shone with a golden lustre. Gold, said Shavehead to himself, and his Indian eye gleamed animously. After Old Jim had entered his hut, Shavehead arose from the log, fastened on his snowshoes, and tramped far out into the forest. There he built a fire and lay down beside it to await the morning, when he would return to his Indian village.

Devils Lake is about one mile long and a quarter of a mile wide. Near its western end lay three small islands. Opposite these islands on the shore of the lake, was a Pottawatamie village. This was the largest and most important of their villages in the southern part of Michigan, for it was the home of the great Pottawatamie chief, Pokagon. Pokagon was getting old, though yet he could tramp many a mile without fatigue. He was loved by all his tribe. Though brave and strong, he ruled his people by love, not fear. He allowed the missionaries from the east to build their little church a few miles to the south of Devil's Lake, then he and his beautiful daughter Peeka were among the first converts. Since that time the mighty chief and his daughter could be seen every Sunday morning at the church. Peeka was a typical Pottawatamie. At the age of nineteen she could run as swift, shoot as straight, or paddle a canoe as good as any one in the village. Her voice was soft and musical. She was kind to everyone. Around her lips a smile was always hovering.

One night Peeka sat alone in her wigwam, humming a little song the missionaries had taught her. The flap parted and Wanee strode in. Wanee, though the youngest, was the greatest warrior of the tribe. He stood next to Pokagon in importance. He was loving and kind. No one could bring in more game than he; no one could paddle a canoe any swifter; no one could endure more hardships. For this he was looked up to and respected. Wanee's especial friend was Shavehead. They could nearly always be seen together, although Shavehead was the opposite in character. He was only a little behind Wanee in those qualities that make an Indian great. He was rash and impetuous. He was respected through fear. He hesitated at nothing which would be the means of obtaining his ends. Wanee could see these things less plainly than others of the tribe, for he and Shavehead had been friends since their childhood.

"How," said Wanee, as he entered Peeka's wigwam.

"How," returned Peeka.

Then Wanee crossed over and sat down on the bearskin beside her. The fire at the doorway blazed up and threw a red glow over the interior. The bronze features of Peeka trembled. Her eyes shone like stars. She sat beside the warrior she loved. For a few moments they sat in the dull red glow in silence. She felt the clasp of his great brown hand about hers. She thought of the awful power at its command. It could strangle a young wolf with the greatest ease. Now its touch was soft and gentle. Thus for a few moments these children of nature conversed in that silent language, then Peeka spoke:

"Wanee, 'when does Shavehead return?"

"In the morning," answered Wanee.

"You and Shavehead are the best of friends," went on Peeka, "but you must watch him, for I'm afraid he will harm you some time."

"Nonsense, Peeka, what makes you think that."

"He knows that you are the greatest warrior in the tribe," replied Peeka. He knows he is next. He is becoming jealous. He would stop at nothing to obtain that first place. But he is becoming jealous of you in another way. He loves me!"

Wanee started. Could it be that Shavehead did love Peeka? He never had thought it. Still he trusted his friend, he felt no harm. "But does he know that you do no not love him," he at length replied.

"No I never have told him, fearing to arouse his anger. But I must do something soon, it can't go on much longer."

The fire was dying low. They heard the footsteps of Pokagon, so Wanee arose to go. At the door he met the chief.

"How," said Pokagon.

"How," returned Wanee, passed on, and soon was slumbering in his wigwam.

Shortly after sunrise next morning Shavehead came into camp. He went about more overbearing than ever.

Near one of the islands is a place the Indians call Devil's Hole. There is a mystery about this place. A few years before a squaw was crossing over to this island on the ice, and when nearly there, she was seen to go down, and has never been seen since. The next winter a deer was crossing the ice and disappeared in the same place. The Indians began to look upon it in superstitious awe.

The afternoon of Shavehead's return he and Wanee were out fishing. Just before dark they saw a little girl making straight towards Devil's Hole. They called, and waved their hands, but all in vain, she neither saw nor heard them. On she sped until all at once she gave a cry, and sank before their eyes.

For a week after this incident the camp was quiet. Then one day Pokagon and Wanee went on a hunting trip. Shavehead remained in camp. After they had gone he went to the wigwam of Peeka. She was alone. He strode noisily in and grunted a greeting.

What a contrast, thought Peeka, to Wanee, who came in soft and still, whose voice was low and kind, and whose touch was light and caressing. After a brief silence Shavehead spoke.

"Peeka, I love you, I think I have told you that before. To-day I ask you to be my wife."

This took Peeka unawares. But her mind worked fast. She did not want to tell him that she did not love him. She did not want to tell him that she was promised to Wanee, for she feared for Wanee's life.

"Shavehead," she finally answered, "when you can come into my wigwam and pour into my lap more gold than any warrior in the village, then, perhaps, I'll be your wife."

"Will you? then your mine," he answered and left her.

"Never," she said after he had gone, and her black eyes snapped.

One night about a week later, when all the village was wrapped in slumber, Shavehead arose, buckled on his snowshoes, threw his gun over his shoulder, and departed toward the southeast. After about three hours' journey he found himself again on the shore of Diamond Lake. Before him was the hut of Old Jim. Near it was the coveted gold. He crossed over to the island and pounded on the door of the hut.

"Who's there?" shouted Old Jim.

Shavehead gave a shove and the door fell in. A bright moon was shining, and he saw Old Jim sitting up in bed on the opposite side of the room. He threw his gun to his shoulder, a deafening crash rang out upon the still night air, and when the smoke cleared away, Old Jim lay upon the floor with a bullet in his head. Shavehead then went to the sycamore tree, took out the gold, and was soon striding towards home, and, by the time the rest were astir in the Indian village, he was in his wigwam with his gold safely buried.

The winter wore slowly on. Spring was near at hand. Shavehead and Wanee decided to have one more hunt that winter. The next week they would start, and would not return for many moons.

At last the night before their departure arrived. Peeka had been with Wanee all day, and had cautioned him again and again to beware of Shavehead. She was sitting all alone in her wigwam, when suddenly the flap was lifted and Shavehead strode in. Going directly over to where she sat, he emptied a hand full of gold in her lap.

"Now my reward," he said.

For a moment Peeka could not speak. She never thought for a moment that he could obtain the gold. She decided to tell him all.

"Shavehead, I can never marry you, I do not love you."

"No, but you love Wanee," Shavehead thundered.

"Yes," replied Peeka. "Here, take your gold," and she threw it on the bearskin at his feet.

Shavehead gathered it up and departed.

Wanee and Shavehead had been hunting nearly two weeks. They were on the banks of the St. Joe. It was growing dark and time to camp, but they could find no suitable place. Finally they decided to cross. Wanee took the paddle and Shavehead sat in the stern. When they had reached the centre of the river, Shavehead reached down at his feet and picked up his tomahawk. He drew back his arm, and then with all his mighty strength, it flew from his hand. His aim had been true. Striking Wanee in the head, it went crashing through the skull, and buried itself deep in the brain. With never a cry he threw up his hands and fell into the dark waters. In a moment all was quiet. The peaceful waters of the St. Joe rolled over the body of Wanee.

Shavehead hunted a few days alone, then returned to Devils Lake. There he told how Wanee, after killing a deer, and loading it into a boat, had tried to cross the river, but when about half way across, was capsized and drowned.

All believed this except one broken hearted maiden, and that was Peeka. Not for one moment did she doubt but that Shavehead was the cause of Wanee's death.

A week rolled by and again Shavehead stood in the wigwam alone with Peeka. But before he could say a word, Peeka arose and stood before him. She drew herself to her full height; her proud head was thrown back; her eyes flashed in anger. Her long brown arm was pointed directly at Shavehead, who stood cowering before this haughty Princess of the Woods. At length she spoke.

"I know why you came here. I know what you want. But you may as well go out into yonder forest and talk to the senseless oak. Never shall I become the wife of Shavehead. You it was who murdered the hermit of Diamond Lake that you might throw his gold at my feet; you it was who closed in death the eyes of my lost Wanee. Go, and never address Peeka again."

For once Shavehead was defeated. Before him stood Peeka motionless as a statue. He fell under the power of her eyes, and obeyed them. Without uttering a word he wheeled and went out.

The next Sunday Pokagon and Peeka went to the little church as usual. No smile played round her lips now. Her face was sad and thoughtful. She sang the simple songs as never before. They lingered a long time after the sermon before they returned to the village.

That night just at sunset, someone saw a figure out on the lake, going straight toward Devil's Hole. The alarm was spread, but too late, she was on its very brink. It was Peeka. She kept saying over and over a little prayer she had been taught. She knew she was very near, she shut her eyes. All at once she felt herself going down. She felt the cold water about her. It seemed an age, but at last it closed over her and she knew no more.

There was one who stood on the shore who could not bear to see the sight. Shavehead had turned his back.

A WEEK OF SORROW

Large Crowds Attend Funerals of Three Boys Drowned in Lake of the Woods.

BRIFF SKETCHES OF THEIR SHORT LIVES

During the past week but little has been thought of in this village save the sad fate that befell the three school boys who were drowned in Lake of the Woods last week Wednesday.

The boys were good students and well thought of in the community.

The funerals were attended by crowds of people that packed the large churches and many were turned away.

Miss Gertude Charles sang at each funeral.

RALPH ADAMS.

Ralph Adams, the older son of Mr. and Mrs. George Adams, was born in Charlotte, March 31, 1889, came to Decatur with his parents in 1901, and since that time has been a student in the Decatur school, entering the high school this year. He was a good student and a favorite alike with his schoolmates and teachers. He was one of the school's best representatives in athletics and was the regular second baseman in the high school nine. He was a member of the school fraternity, Kappa Delta Psi.

From 9 to 11 o'clock Sunday morning a continual procession of his school friends passed through the [illegible] gazed for the last time on [illegible], bright face which they will never forget.

The funeral was held in the Presbyterian church Sunday afternoon, Rev. A. M. Smith officiating, assisted by Rev. A. L. Toner. His schoolmates, the Odd Fellows and Daughters of Rebecca attended the funeral and marched to the grave in Lakeside cemetery. The pall bearers were Arden Treat, Leslie Sweetland, Lyle Rawson, Elmer Wolfe, Archie Wolfe and Lester Beardsley.

Those from away who attended the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Will R. Quantrell and George Quantrell of Charlotte, A. B. Quantrell of Grand Ledge, Mrs. J. E. Scott of Detroit and Mrs. A. C. Darling of Charlotte. The last named is Mr. Adams' mother and she will remain here this winter.

CARD OF THANKS

Words will not express the gratitude of our hearts to our many kind and loving friends and especially the I. O. O. F. and D. of R. who so courteously and kindly helped us to bear our bereavement. Thankfully Yours,

MR. AND MRS. GEO. E. ADAMS.

FRANK BAYLES.

Benjamin F. Bayles, Jr., was born in Horseheads, New York, August 20, 1889, and moved to Decatur with his parents 5 years ago. He graduated from the grammar room last June and was a good pupil. He was one of the best athletes in the school and was the regular catcher for the high school ball club.

His funeral was held in the Methodist church Saturday afternoon and the church was not near large enough to hold the crowd that went to it. Rev. A. L. Toner officiated. The pall bearers were Lyle Rawson, Arden Treat, Tommie Brownbridge, Martin Knoll, Lester Beardsley and Leslie Sweetland. Interment was in Lakeside cemetery.

Those from away who attended the funeral were May Bayles and Mrs. Nellie Flickenstein of Kalamazoo and Miss Annie Cassady of Macomb, Ill.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to the many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us in our sad bereavement, the loss of our loved one. Also the choir and for the beautiful flowers. The kindness of all will never be forgotten.

MR. AND MRS. B. F. BAYLES AND FAMILY.

BURDETTE BLETT.

The youngest of the three boys drowned in Lake of the Woods last week was born in Pennfield township, Calhoun county, March 5, 1893. He was one of four children of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Blett and came to Decatur with his parents seven years ago last August. He spent his entire school life in this village and so far as his father remembers, was never absent from school but one day. He was in the sixth grade, Mrs. Genung teacher, at the time of his death.

The funeral was held in the Methodist church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. Hay officiating.

The Odd Fellows, Daughters of Rebecca, Modern Maccabees, W. R. C. and his schoolmates attended the funeral and followed the remains to Lakeside cemetery where interment took place. 575 people viewed the body at the church.

The pall bearers were Paul Squier, Irving King, Carl Vining, Stacy Peterson, Charlie Brownbridge and Floyd Mullinex.

Among the relatives from a distance who attended the funeral were Mrs. Susan Brown, her daughter Mrs. Cora Brown and her adopted child of Texas, Kalamazoo county, Ferris Blett and family and Timothy Cotherman of Marcellus, Levi Cotherman and family of Kalamazoo, and Mrs. Sarah Gearhart and daughter of Marcellus.

CARD OF THANKS.

We appreciate beyond our power to tell the kindness that has been shown us in our bereavement. We especially thank the societies and the school.

ALLEN BLETT AND FAMILY.

THE FLOWERS.

School was called last Thursday morning and dismissed until Monday. Teachers and pupils alike were shocked by the terrible accident.

The teachers and pupils raised $32 for flowers and Bernard Creagan went to Kalamazoo and bought them Friday. He selected a beautiful pillow and three large sprays for each of the boys. The Kappa Delta Psi of which Ralph was a member, and the Kappa Delta Gamma, a similar society of high school girls, furnished a beautiful wreath of white and red carnations for their fellow member.

The Odd Fellows lodge furnished floral pillows for the graves of Ralph Adams and Burdette Blett and the Modern Maccabees a wreath for Burdette Blett, their fathers being members of these orders.

These special pieces and many other beautiful flowers covered and surrounded each white casket.

Benjamin F. Bayles who was recently committed to the Jackson state prison for 5 years for shooting Sylvester C[illegible] attended the funeral of his son Frank in charge of Guard Stearn. At the earnest request of the members of his family the citizens secured the consent of Warden Vincent to let Bayles come and a collection was taken up to defray the expenses. Bayles and the guard arrived on the 2:39 train and were driven to the bereft home. They remained over night going to Kalamazoo on the early morning train and on to Jackson over the electric road.

ORDINATION SERVICE

With Auspicious Services, Rev. Franklin G. Varney Became the Ordained Pastor of the Universalist Church.

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH

The ordination of Rev. Franklin G. Varney into the Christian ministry at the Universalist church last Thursday evening, March 2nd, marked the beginning of another epoch of usefulness for the little brick church. Mr. Varney graduated from Lombard college, Galesburg, Ill., last June, taking the two degrees of B. D., and A. D., and shortly after which he took up the work as pastor of the local church. During his short residence in Decatur, he has proven himself a faithful and conscientious servant of God and has manifested an innate desire to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as it is revealed unto him. He is broad and liberal in his thinking, always willing that others should interpret life and its duties in accordance with the light that is given unto them; yet always conservative in the practice of all pertaining to man's higher nature and anxious for the moral and spiritual welfare of the community. And, consequently, he has won the respect and confidence of the members of his church so that they are unanimous in asking for his ordination and he is highly esteemed by all who have made his acquaintance.

The Republican predicts a bright future for Mr. Varney and believes that all who are interested in the upbuilding of Christ's kindom, wish him God speed in his chosen work.

His ordination service was largely attended and all present were benefited by being uplifted in thought and purpose of life. As a mininister of another church said; "It was a feast of good things." Mr. Varney's brother, Rev. C. E. Varney, pastor of the First Universalist church of Clinton, Ill., delivered the address of the evening, and it was pronounced by all who heard it, irrespective of church affiliation, one of the best that they have had the pleasure of hearing. If he should again visit Decatur as a preacher or lecturer, he would receive a most cordial welcome for he won the admiration of his audience by his fearless yet gentlemanly presentation of his message. His text was: "I came that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." He began with the first and simplest form of life in the far off beginning, and symmetrically evolved his theme by treating life in its many and varied forms of development, until it reaches its highest form with which we are acquainted, that of the spiritual life in man. He concluded by emphasizing the fact that it was the duty of the Christian mininister to aid in every possible way, the development of man's spiritual life. He also offered the ordination prayer and in a few well chosen words, presented the pastor with a Bible, the gift of Rev. Mecca Varney, wife of the speaker.

Rev. W. L. Gibbs of Concord gave the charge to the people and to the pastor, and also, as chairman of the Fellowship and Ordination committee of the state convention and in behalf of the General Convention of Universalist churches, extended the Right Hand of Fellowship. It is always a pleasure to listen to words spoken by Mr. Gibbs.

Rev. Geo. B. Rogers contributed the invocation and scripture reading and otherwise aided in making the occasion the impressive yet joyous one that it was. It was through his favorable acquaintance with the principal speaker of the evening during their college days that the younger brother was called to begin his ministry here. Mr. Rogers, as many of our readers will recall, also began his ministerial work here by preaching during the summer vacation of 1896, returning after graduating from the Lombard College in 1897 to become the regular pastor, being ordained in October of that year and continuing in active work until threatened nervous troubles caused him to resign in 1900. Since that time he has frequently supplied the pulpit and throughout all, both by precept and example, has done much for the uplifting of humanity and the sustaining of the Christian church at large on the broad and high plane which it oc cupies.

The two special pieces of music by the chorus choir, under the direction of W. E. Munger, and the solo by Mrs. Geo. B. Rogers lent much of beauty and inspiration to the service and thus closed an eventful evening for the Universalist church, and may it prosper in all its activities.

A large number of Knights of Pythias attended the service.

JOHN SQUIER

After a long illness from which there was no hope of recovery John Squier answered the final summons early Monday morning, January 9. Mr. Squier died at the home of his brother David where he went last summer and where he has been tenderly cared for during all of his long illness. The funeral was held at the Universalist church Wednesday afternoon and the remains were laid at rest in Crane Cemetery by the side of his wife and five children.

The deceased was the eldest son of Daniel C. and Elizabeth Squier. He was born in Butler County, Ohio, December 8th, 1828, and came to Michigan, then a territory, with his parents in 1831. The family located in LaGrange township, Cass County, where the village of Cassopolis now stands. During the winter Daniel Squier helped to lay out the village of Cassopolis. In March, 1832, they took up their farm in Volinia township which was then a trackless wilderness inhabited by wild beasts and Indians. Their nearest neighbors were Indians located about twenty rods from their cabin. At this time all of Van Buren County belonged to Volinia township for judicial and legislative purposes. In youth John Squier learned the carpenter's trade and worked on buildings in Cassopolis, LaGrange, Dowagiac, Decatur and the surrounding country. February 24th, 1853, he was married to Sarah Morlan who preceeded him to the other side August 23rd, 1903. To them were born five children, Alonzo, Estella, Ellsworth, Otis and Fred, all of whom have passed away. After his marriage Mr Squier purchased 80 acres of land one-half mile south of Charleston where they lived until 1894. On account of poor health he sold the farm and moved to Decatur. He was a member of the Masonic lodge of Decatur, its members attending the funeral in a body and performing the Masonic burial service at the grave.

John Squier was a man whom everyone respected and honored. He was one of the oldest pioneers of Cass County and did his share toward moulding it into the prosperous county it is today. He was one of those men whose word is as good as his bond and who never took advantage of a man in a deal. He will be remembered long in the communities in which he lived, and without an unkind thought.

THE OUTLOOK FOR DECATUR

BY A. W. HAYDON

"There is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at its flood leads on to fortune."

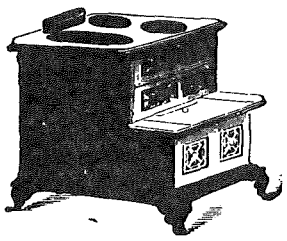
True as to individuals, alike true as to villages, states and nations. The whole past is strewn with the wrecks of lost opportunities, and tinged with the bitterness of mistakes and regrets Can we learn wisdom by the failures and successes of the past? Perhaps a little. O "if our foresight was only as good as our hindsight." Such little circumstances make such vast differences in the outcome of things. The old territorial road ran from Detroit to St. Joseph. The Michigan Central survey followed through Kalamazoo, Paw Paw and Keeler Center and many expected St. Joe to become the second city in importance in the state. If this dream had come true Lawton, Decatur and Dowagiac, it is likely, might never have been on the map, while Paw Paw might have been a city and Prospect Lake and Keeler might have been large and prosperous villages. It is said that P. D. Beckwith was at the end of his rope when he had invented the roller drill and powerless to go on without financial aid and that he could find but one man who would give him the assistance needed. It was flood tide for Dowagiac and that inventor and his friend seized it and initiated an impulse which has flowed on, and on, and made it what it is, one of the brightest, most active, up-to-date cities in the state, and its drills and stoves are known the world over.

Now as to Decatur. With the coming of the Michigan Central the flood tide began and it soon became the market town for an immense territory. North and South and West, till other railroads cut it off on all sides. Then it was feared that the ebb was about to commence. But with the improvement of the swamp lands and the growth of the celery, mint, and produce trade, and later the rapidly expanding fruit interests, comes the assurance that the tide of prosperity is still rising.

Shall we keep it coming by securing the electric road or shall we lose the chance, and while away our idle moments building other paper roads as we have in the past. "He who will not when he may, he shall not when he would." This road would make Decatur a junction and a competing point. It would bring our beautiful country in close touch with Chicago and lend city people to buy homes here and all property would increase in value, all lines of trade would expand and the town would grow and be alive. If the road should run along the west and south sides of the Lake of the Woods, a resort might spring up which would be of immense advantage. Chicago is coming to Michigan to live about its lakes in summer. But if we allow the lake to be drained we can't have it a resort, now or ever.

Other things being equal Decatur would have got the Normal School on account of the beautiful lake view from its proposed site. But the Normal is not the only "pebble on the beach" and other, and perhaps better things may offer, and the lake may determine their location here. Better get a move on and keep the lake with all its possibilities. It will cost nothing to keep it but a whole lot to drain it.

At first thought few would realize what it would mean to lower the lake four feet. Water one inch deep over the surface of an acre weighs over 113 tons. To look at the map the lake would seem to cover an area at least one mile long and one half mile wide or 320 acres, which would give a total weight of water to the depth of four feet of 1,728,000 tons equal to nearly thirteen million barrels. What would be the effect of removing such an immence volume of water from the lake? Opinions would doubtless differ widely, but in all fairness it ought not to be done without full consideration and the approval of a majority of those who might be affected thereby.



MILLIONAIRE'S POOR STOMACH.

The worn-out stomach of the overfed millionaire is often paraded in the public prints as a horrible example of the evils attendant on the possession of great wealth. But millionaires are not the only ones who are afflicted with bad stomachs. The proportion is far greater among the toilers. Dyspepsia and indigestion are rampant among these people, and they suffer far worse tortures than the millionaire unless they avail themselves of a standard medicine like Green's August Flower, which has been a favorite household remedy for all stomach troubles for over thirty-five years. August Flower rouses the torpid liver, thus creating appetite and insuring perfect digestion. It tones and vitalizes the entire system and makes life worth living, no matter what your station. Trial bottles, 25c; regular size, 75c. At all druggists. M.S.Carney.

TUSK BROUGHT FORTUNE.

Story of the Beginning of Prosperity of Alaskan Millionaire.

Harry Hill, the millionaire lumberman of Alaska, found his first streak of good luck in the tusk of a mastodon. Seven years ago he went to Alaska as a prospector. He failed to make a strike and was about to return to the States. When traveling north of Nome he saw great forests there and knew that a fortune greater than any gold mine existed in them. Hill soon acquired the right to cut unlimited timber, but he lacked the means to do it. He had no money to pay the enormous cost of a saw mill in that territory and he saw no chance of getting it until one day the mastodon's tusks appeared on the scene.

In the heart of a dense forest through which the young man was wandering and making vain plans for the future, but at the same time keeping his eyes open for new species of timber, he leaned to rest for a moment against what he thought was an enormous boulder. As he did so there was a crash, he felt himself falling in a cloud of dust and when much surprised he picked himself up again, it was to find that the boulder was in reality the skull of an antediluvian monster. Investigating further, he discovered that it was the skull of a mastodon with its tusks buried in the ground, just as it had fallen thousands of years ago in some great battle with its kind. Securing tools he dug downward and unearthed one perfect tusk and the broken half of another.

To make a long story short, he sold the great tusk to the Canadian government for $8,000, and through this sale met people who financed him in his lumber project.

From the broken half he has had different small objects made for use as presents, and Edward VII. of England plays billiards with the only ivory balls ever made from the tusk of a mastodon.

During the past year nine weddings have been celebrated in the family of Henry Fritz of Fritzburg. One was his brother, four were nephews and four were nieces.

Jonathan Curry (died 1905)

Born on Curry Homestead in Decatur Township 1833. He was third white child born in Van Buren County. Lewis Clayton Morris was born in 1830 and Elias Morris born 1832. Married Elizabeth Good — came from Ohio in 1829. Received title to 160 acres from the Governor. His son, D.A. Curry made the farm his home.

HAMILTON FAIR AT HAMILTON GRANGE HALL - 1905

CHANT OF THE MUSHROOM HUNTER

I

We chant of fungus on the tree
Of mushrooms growing o'er the lea,
Of toadstools in grass and wood,
The oddest that's ever told,

CHANT —

Pleurotus — Ostreatus
Campestris, Boletus,
We'll have you for dinner at six o'clock sharp
"Beware, don't you eat us"
Say most Amanitas,
"Or by dawn of tomorrow you'll play on a harp."

II

We hunt the morels in the spring;
The parasol, the fairy ring,
We seek in later seasons when
The silvercola dots the glen,

CHANT —

The green lepiots,
The fat pholiota,
We pick and admire, but care not to eat,
But Coprinus Comatus
Or any pleurotus
Have wonderful flavor and cannot be beat.

III

All good puffballs are white inside
As angle cake — and splendid fried!
But Jack-O-Lanterns that glow at night
Are pleasant only on to the sight.

CHANT —

Red head Hygrophorus
Stinkhorn, Polyporus,
Pine cone... coral... white, blue and red;
Oh, how can you tell 'em
Oh, some you can smell 'em;
And others you eat — if they're poison, —
YOU'RE DEAD!!!

DEATH OF THADDEUS HAMPTON

"In 1868 our subject came to Michigan, and in 1870 settled in Dowagiac, where he lived about seven years. Next he went to Glenwood to care for property there, and is now (1893) developing a large stock farm, a part of it wet lands, which he hopes by tile draining to make highly productive, more for the satisfaction of seeing the change than the prospect of profits.

"Mr. Hampton was married November 19, 1856, to Marry L Phippen, a native of Lynn, Mass., and a daughter of Rev. George Phippen, then of Canton, Conn. She was a lady of culture and refinement and an exemplary Christian of the Baptist persuasion. She died February 7, 1862, leaving to the father's care two little boys: Herbert M., now a merchant at Glenwood; and William H., who died July 19, 1890. He lived single until October 20, 1873, when he married Miss Gertrude R. Reshore, who was born in New Haven, Ohio, March 8, 1848, a daughter of Louis and Martha (Lisle) Reshore, the father a native of Paris, France, the mother of Sandusky, Ohio. She was educated mainly in the Dowagiac public school, and subsequently was engaged in teaching at Albion, Ind., and Dowagiac, Mich., until her marriage. Of this union were born four children, Robert Louis, Charles Francis, Thaddeus Lisle and Lucy Graee, who are all living. In religious belief Mrs. Hampton was a Baptist and widely known as an intelligent promotor of practical Christianity. Mr. Hampton's belief was, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." They are both advocates of temperance. Mr. Hampton never drank a glass of liquor at a bar, and he and his sons abstain from strong drink and tobacco in any form. Both husband and wife believe in the enforcement of industry and sobriety as a preventitive of crime and dependence, instead of punishment afterward, which does not prevent.

"In politics Mr. Hampton was a Whig and gave his first Presidential vote to W. H. Harrison. He is strongly in favor of protection to American industry. He was in at the beginning of the Republican party and was secretary of the large mass meeting held at Ottawa that inaugurated the party in Illinois. Though not desirous of holding office, he takes an active interest in all the measures he deems for the public good.

"On September 10, 1888, while walking on the railroad track in Glenwood, he was struck by a freight engine and was so terribly injured that for weeks recovery seemed impossible; but a strong constitution, skilled physicians, and especially the constant watchfulness of his devoted wife, finally prevailed, and now, at the age of seventy-six, he apparently has a lease of several years more of usefulness."

Since the above was written Mr. Hampton's wife and brothers and sisters have all preceeded him into the Great Beyond. He continued to gradually improve and develop his extensive farm property at Glenwood and the property became valuable beyond his early expectations. In 1902 he deeded the property, consisting of 1000 acres of land and numerous buildings, to his five children who incorporated under the name of the Hampton Stock Farm Company and are now conducting an extensive and profitable business.

IN OLD ENGLAND

T. Culverhouse Visits the Scenes of His Childhood.

Thomas Culverhouse has just returned from the scenes of his boyhood in Old England, and he tells about his journey in the following lines to the Republican:

I left Decatur May 15th, went to Buffalo, from there to Baltimore and from there to New York City.

Was in New York three days. I got a permit from the inspector and boarded the Celtic, the largest of the White Star line of ocean steamers, also the La Tourine of the French Transatlantique Co.

Sunday, May 21st., I boarded the British King steamer and arrived at Hamburg 16 days later.

I spent a week on the mainland visiting Berlin, Brestsh, Cologne, Paris and Calais, and arrived in London June 17. Was a little too late for the Derby races, but attended the Ascott Lady Horse Race, saw the king and queen in the grand stand and London's 10,000 in white silks and laces. The king and queen are very popular and go about the city nearly every day which makes a big trade in bunting and fine clothes.

London has been promoted and is now a county instead of a city. The county owns the electric car lines, the river boats, the gas and electric lighting plants, and the rates are very cheap. It costs 1 cent to ride on the cars and 2 cents on the boats. Everything is at the lowest notch to help the working class.

The London Council has 400,000 employees on the pay roll and $25,000,000 was appropriated for street work this summer.

I left London June 26th. for Tring Park, the country seat of Lord Rothchild. I have nephews, nieces and an aunt there. My nephews showed me over the lord's estate, through his kitchen and flour gardens kept by dozens of gardeners, through his immense private menagerie, through his auto and cow sheds and barns. He has got a great dairy of Jerseys, they are kept in stalls and the partitions are antique oak. Each cow's name is in a gilded frame at the head of the stall. The floor of the barn is glazed tile. The lord has large fields of hay and it brings $20 a ton now. During the Boer war it brought $35.

I went next to Watford, near London, to see my two brothers John and James. My nephews and nieces here had lots of fun with their Yankee uncle. The showed me their school and how to play cricket and introduced me to their friends. I stayed with them ten days and then went back to London.

On the 24th. of July I started for home. I knew it would be very warm on a steel ship to New York so I went to Glasgow and took the North Passage. On the 29th of July I left this city on the steamer Athenia of the Donnelson line. The passengers were mostly Scotch immigrants going to western Canada and we had a very pleasant voyage, singing and dancing every evening. One day we had a concert for the Sailors' Widows and Orphans Home and raised $15.

All day Friday, August 4th., we were in sight of large icebergs off the coast of Labrador. Saturday night we sailed across the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Sunday night arrived at Quebec.

The next morning after breakfast ourselves and our baggage were examined by the doctors and custom house officers and were allowed to land. I came on to Montreal, Toronto, Detroit and home.

It was a fine trip and not expensive and I would advise all my friends to take it. THOMAS CULVERHOUSE

DECATUR UNION SCHOOL BUILDING.

HISTORY — THE UNION SCHOOL

The school in Dist. 4, Decatur Village, was organized in 1862 as a graded school. In 1863 work on a new school building was begun and in September 1864, sessions were held in the edifice. It was of brick, of handsome and substantial appearance. Cost $12,000.

Employed seven teachers, had an average attendance of about 400 and required for its annual support $4,300. The first Superintendent was Prof. Bellows. He graduated his first class in 1867.

On February 11, 1919, during the night a fire of undetermined origin destroyed the first building. Loss $40,000, insurance coverage $12,000. Mr. Washburn was Superintendent. They went to the Trowbridge house on School St. and used it for the rest of the year. They started the new building right away and it was completed in September 1920. The cost $100,000. There were 371 students.

In 1912 the grade school building was built as the number of pupils increased. This two story building cost $12,000.

In 1951 another grade building was built. The cost for this building was $175,000.

In 1963 the third High School building was started and finished for full use by January 1964. The bond issue was $750,000.

SUCCESS OF FORMER DECATURITE

Ward Copley Elected President of a Half Million Dollar Corporation.

The Republican is pleased to publish a portion of a letter from Ward Copley received last week in which he gives a brief account of the Citizens' Transit Company of which he recently has been elected president:

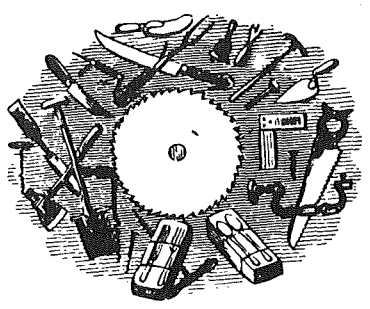
Detroit, Mich., Feb. 27, 1905.

DEAR SIR:—

Inclosed find one dollar for subscription to your paper, which I think has a high standard of excellence.

The first of January I was elected president of the Citizens' Transit Co., a half million dollar corporation, organized to operate electric automobiles in the city and on Belle Isle. It was a knowledge of electricity worked out by me in the class of physics in the Decatur high school and my practical application of such knowledge in the electrical business in Kansas City, which secured me the position. Our company has the state rights for the "Berg" patent, which is a motor for each wheel and each wheel on a pivotal steering device. It has been demonstrated that a storage battery car can be operated at one-half the expense of a gasoline car and I think the coming car for city use will be an electrical machine with hard rubber tires. Such a machine well run eighty miles at from twelve to fifteen miles an an hour and be practically indestructible and and free from repairs. It takes about as long to charge the battery as to run it off.

Yours truly,
WARD COPLEY.



HON. E.P. HILL

DECATUR'S VENERABLE CITIZEN ANSWERS THE FINAL SUMMONS

The death of E. Parker Hill removes from Decatur one of its oldest residents and foremost citizens. Though living for some years past in the peaceful retirement of age, he was for many years in the early history of Decatur, one of its most active leaders and devoted his ability and energy unsparingly to its interests.

Mr. Hill was born in Yates county, N.Y., May 11th, 1819. He received a common school education and learned the cooper's trade from his father at Waterville, N.Y. There he became acquainted with Miss Harriet E. Hatch whose native place was Springfield, Mass., and on October 18th, 1843, they were united in those happy bonds which death has severed after almost 62 years.

For several years he engaged in the stave and cooperage business in Greene, Eaton and Prattsburgh, N.Y. Being in poor health, in 1849 he journeyed overland to California, but returned in two years by way of Panama and took up the stave business again. In 1856 he removed to Davenport, Iowa, to take charge of a stave factory but not finding the climate a healthful one for his family they came to the then new town of Decatur in December, 1858, where he assumed the management of the stave factory. He afterward bought an interest in the business which he conducted for many years, during which time he employed a large amount of labor and paid out hundreds of thousands of dollars to the new settlers for timber and labor. After retiring from the stave business he became interested in other business. He at one time conducted a grocery business with the late William E. Trowbridge, later was interested in the grain and shipping business with the late Lyman T. Rawson, conducted a hardware business for several years, and for a time was interested in a stave factory at Hartford, Mich.

He always took an active part in all local affairs and was an influential man in the development of the village and county. He was one of the first to advocate the incorporation of the village and became its first president. He advocated strongly a long list of public improvements some of which were strongly opposed by some of the less liberal and far sighted citizens, notably the building of what was at the time the largest school building in the county. He was instrumental in organizing the First National Bank of Decatur, and was its first cashier and later became its president. No matter what the movement was for the advancement of his home town and community, the subscription usually contained his name at the head, and he gave unstintedly of his time and toil for the common good. His services were appreciated and although he never was an office seeker, he was elected from time to time to various offices: President of the village, member of the school board, township supervisor he held for years in succession, besides having been elected to the offices of Register of Deeds and member of the legislature.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill have one son and one daughter living. L.D. Hill of Decatur, and Mrs. Alice H. Gordon of Van Wert, Ohio. One son, De Los, died in the south leaving one son of the same name now living in Atlanta, Georgia.

Mr. Hill was reared religiously and early in life became an active member of the church of his father's. For almost half a century he has been identified with the Presbyterian church of Decatur, and has served in every capacity from janitor up. He was its Sabbath school superintendent for many years and at the time of his death was its senior ruling elder in point of service. He has represented the church in the higher courts of the denomination frequently and in 1889 was a Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in New York City.

His last sickness was of only two weeks' duration and he was conscious of but little pain, and at the close of a beautiful Sabbath day, August 20th, 1905, he passed quietly away, aged 86 years, 3 months and 9 days.

The funeral services were held on Wednesday morning at the Presbyterian church, conducted by his pastor, Rev. A.M. Smith.

In his death a kind neighbor, a liberal and public spirited citizen and a genial and faithful Christian has gone to his eternal reward.

OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR-HOUSE.*

BY WILL M. CARLETON.

OVER the hill to the poor-house I'm trudgin' my weary way—
I, a woman of seventy, and only a trifle gray—
I, who am smart an' chipper, for all the years I've told,
As many another woman, that's only half as old.

Over the hill to the poor-house—I can't make it quite clear!
Over the hill to the poor-house—it seems so horrid queer!
Many a step I've taken a-toilin' to and fro,
But this is a sort of journey I never thought to go.

What is the use of heapin' on me a pauper's shame?
Am I lazy or crazy? am I blind or lame?
True, I am not so supple, nor yet so awful stout,
But charity ain't no favor, if one can live without.

I am willin' and anxious an' ready any day,
To work for a decent livin', an' pay my honest way;
For I can earn my victuals, an' more too, I'll be bound,
If anybody only is willin' to have me round.

Once I was young and han'some—I was, upon my soul—
Once my cheeks was roses, my eyes as black as coal;
And I can't remember, in them days, of hearin' people say,
For any kind of reason, that I was in their way.

'Taint no use of boastin', or talkin' over free,
But many a house an' home was open then to me;
Many a han'some offer I had from likely men,
And nobody ever hinted that I was a burden then.

And when to John I was married, sure he was good and smart,
But he and all the neighbors would own I done my part;
For life was all before me, an' I was young an' strong,
And I worked the best that I could in tryin' to get along.

And so we worked together; and life was hard but gay,
With now and then a baby, for to cheer us on our way;
Till we had half a dozen, an' all growed clean an' neat,
An' went to school like others, an' had enough to eat.

So we worked for the childr'n, and raised 'em every one;
Worked for 'em summer and winter, just as we ought to've done;
Only perhaps we humored 'em, which some good folks condemn,
But every couple's childr'n's a heap the best to them.

Strange how much we think of our blessed little ones!—
I'd have died for my daughters, I'd have died for my sons;
And God he made that rule of love; but when we're old and gray,
I've noticed it sometimes somehow fails to work the other way.

Strange, another thing: when our boys an' girls was grown,
And when, exceptin' Charley, they'd left us there alone;
When John he nearer an' nearer come, an' dearer seemed to be,
The Lord of Hosts he come one day an' took him away from me.

Still I was bound to struggle, an' never to cringe or fall—
Still I worked for Charley, for Charley was now my all;
And Charley was pretty good to me, with scarce a word or frown,
Till at last he went a-courtin', and brought a wife from town.

She was somewhat dressy, an' hadn't a pleasant smile—
She was quite conceity, and carried a heap o' style;
But if ever I tried to be friends, I did with her, I know;
But she was hard and proud, an' I couldn't make it go.

She had an edication, an' that was good for her;
But when she twitted me on mine 'twas carryin' things too fur;
An' I told her once 'fore company (an' it almost made her sick),
That I never swallowed a grammar, or et a 'rithmetic.

So 'twas only a few days before the thing was done—
They was a family of themselves, and I another one;
And a very little cottage for one family will do,
But I have never seen a house that was big enough for two.

An' I never could speak to suit her, never could please her eye,
An' it made me independent, an' then I didn't try;
But I was terribly staggered, an' felt it like a blow,
When Charley turned ag'in me, an' told me I could go.

I went to live with Susan, but Susan's house was small,
And she was always a-hintin' how snug it was for us all;
And what with her husband's sisters, and what with childr'n three,
'Twas easy to discover that there wasn't room for me.

An' then I went to Thomas, the oldest son I've got,
For Thomas' buildings 'd cover the half of an acre lot;
But all the childr'n was on me—I couldn't stand their sauce—
And Thomas said I needn't think I was comin' there to boss.

An then I wrote to Rebecca,—my girl who lives out West,
And to Isaac, not far from her—some twenty miles at best;
And one of 'em said 'twas too warm there, for any one so old,
And t'other had an opinion the climate was too cold.

So they have shirked and slighted me, an' shifted me about—
So they have well-nigh soured me, an' wore my old heart out;
But still I've borne up pretty well, an' wasn't much put down,
Till Charley went to the poor-master, an' put me on the town.

Over the hill to the poor-house—my childr'n dear, good-bye!
Many a night I've watched you when only God was nigh;
And God 'll judge between us; but I will al'ays pray
That you shall never suffer the half I do to-day.

AN INDIAN INTERPRETER

OVER EIGHTY YEARS SPENT IN CASS & VAN BUREN CO. AND ALWAYS BUSY

At an early age, Mr. Isaac Wells, oldest pioneer in Cass County, lived in Bertrand Township, Berrien County. He and his parents were one of the first five families who settled on the old "Indian Reserve" which, at that time, was inhabited by a band of about 480 Pottawatomie Indians. His childhood days were spent in the comradeship of the few white children and numerous Indian boys who roamed the old "Reserve."

He was often employed as an interpreter for the Indians with whom he was on the friendliest of terms. Mr. Wells made numerous trips on the Kankakee River with Chief Topneh Bey on hunting and fishing expeditions.

In his early manhood, Mr. Wells learned the art of blacksmithing from his older brothers, and continued this trade during the 1840's and 1850's shoeing many horses, mules and oxen that made the trip to the Golden Gate country in the rush to that Eldorado.

He used to relate how he would stay up until late hours at night making nails from crude iron for use during the following day. Like most pioneers, he had a wonderful memory and told many interesting stories of the early days.

LEVI LYLE

One of the County's Best Citizens and Earliest Pioneers

March 29, 1846, that is 60 years ago next March, Levi Lyle was born in a rough hewn shanty in the woods of Paw Paw township, 30 feet from where now stands the home of his nephew Jay Lyle.

Levi is the oldest son of the late John Lyle, one of the early settlers of the county. His grandfather, John Lyle Sr., was a native of Cornwall, England, and was born on Christmas day, 1793. With his family he immigrated to America in 1832, and in the spring of 1835 came to Michigan, locating his home in the wilderness 1¼ miles north of Paw Paw. He died December 4th, 1867, leaving a wife, ten children and numerous grandchildren to mourn their loss.

John Lyle Jr., Levi's father, was born in Devonshire, England, January 5, 1818. He was the oldest of the ten children and came to Michigan with the family.

He took up his farm in the wilderness in 1845 and blazed a trail to Paw Paw, his trading place. This farm which he cleared became one of the best in the county and was his home until his death October 5, 1899.

Levi, the oldest of four children, grew to manhood on this farm. He went to school in the old log school house in the neighborhood and then took two years under Prof. Bellows in the Decatur High School.

It was while going to school here in 1867 that the Decatur Republican was started. Mr. Lyle became one of its first subscribers and has never missed a paper since.

When he became 21 Mr. Lyle went onto the farm he now owns and built his present home. He was married in 1869 to Matildha Sherrod and they are the parents of seven children,—Melvin, Mrs. Nellie Patton, Mrs. Gertrude Webb, Mrs. Walve Mosier, Miss Beatrice, Arley, and Miss Alta.

A more honest, conscientious and upright citizen than Levi Lyle cannot be named. He has lived all of his life in one neighborhood and it is not known that he has an enemy.

His sense of right is such that he could not take even what is usually considered a fair advantage of a fellow citizen, and in selling wood he has been known to tell his boys not to accept if it was offered a price greater than he considered it worth. And in such a case his value of it is never high.

Mr. Lyle's life has been quiet and uneventful, but it furnishes an example of true citizenship which will be an influence for good in his community for generations to come.

CHRISTMAS IN A LOG CABIN

A Pioneer Family's Celebration

BY R. H. LYON.

Memory's storehouse holds many bright, happy, joyous Christmas days, scattered through a long flight of years, from the pompous public celebration and brilliant society performance to the quiet home observance, but among them all there is one far back in childhood's time that ever stands out in bold relief.

Father, with the courage born of the true American patriot and pioneer, had transported his 10 children from the ancestral abode among the aristocratic hills of old Connecticut to a new home in the wilds of western Michigan. A spacious house of logs had been constructed in the forest during the summer and there the large family was comfortably domiciled, while a small clearing upon which a few vegetables and corn were raised, with the wild game the country furnished in abundance provided provender of a plain but substantial character.

Good health and perfect contentment were each one's portion in this free, unrestrained life in the wilderness and all went merrily until the holiday season approached. Then the thought of old associations brought sadness to the mother's heart and to the hearts of the elder children. Away from church privileges, from all kin and old friends, and accustomed to big family gatherings, the idea of spending Christmas in this lonely place resolved itself into quite a serious problem. To those brave enough to break off life-long ties leave native heath and seek a new home a thousand miles distant in the unknown west, such a situation did not remain long in controversy, however, so there was joy throughout the household when the parents announced their decision that we were to have an old-fashioned Christmas celebration among ourselves, all at home.

Then the preparations began with great enthusiasm. From a towering pine tree on an island in a nearby lake the elder boys gathered evergreen boughs for decorating the house reserving one branch large enough for the Christmas tree This was set up beside the big fire place and the whitewashed walls of the one spacious living room were freely adorned with sprigs of green variegated with brown oak leaves and the red berries of the bittersweet, till the face of the old clock on the mantel and that of the venerable bishop in its frame beside it fairly beamed with pleasure.

Meantime the girls were busy making molasses candy and fried cake images and little bags to put them in, while mother spent her time in molding candles with which to ornament the tree and illuminate the house, as well as cooking big fat doughnuts covered with real white sugar, and mince and pumpkin pies. Father had a secret mission to the village a few days before the great event and did not get home until after dark. He was seen to hide a good many mysterious bundles in the loft over the ox stalls, but they were not disturbed. No youngster of the family dare undertake such a risk.

Certainly in no place on earth at that very time was there more peace or good will, or hearts better attuned to "sing the Great Creator's praise" than in this humble wildwood home.

The sacred exercises over, then came the distribution of presents from the tree, the eldest son attired in a buffalo robe with a sheep bell hung about his neck and his head encased in a squirrel skin cap acting the part of Santa Claus. Each member of this happy household of a dozen souls, from sire to tiny babe, was generously remembered, and there were many glad surprises. Soon there was a gay procession of boys in home-made rabbit fur caps and gloves and red top boots, girls in new shoes, knit leggins, new aprons and rigolettes, father in a coon skin head covering, buckskin mittens and mother beaming through new spectacles, the baby toddling along in the rear flourishing a new rag doll, marched round and round the room, singing and shouting until the very logs of the domicile trembled from the jar of tramping feet, while the hunting dogs, aroused by the unusual racket, came out of their underground kennels in the back yard and set up a tremendous howl of distress.

The next day the festivities were continued in the old-fashioned way, the chief feature of which was a feast that would have honored any baronial hall or home of the aristocrat. The menu consisted of wild turkey, fat, tender and juicy; saddle of rich, fresh venison, roast rabbit and stuffed pheasants, all of our own capture, with every ingredient that goes to make up a full grown Christmas dinner, including big raised biscuits, Jonnie cake, Indian pudding and mince and pumpkin pies. It was indeed a glorious feast, such as one meets with but once in a life time and it is not necessary to add that each hungry, healthy child was filled to full satisfaction.

After dinner we held a formal meeting and then resolved to celebrate the next Christmas in the same elaborate but homespun way, little dreaming that this would be the last event of its kind in the family's experience. In one short year the happy circle was broken by the hand of death. The eldest boy had given his life to his country and far away he was sleeping in an unknown grave on a southern battlefield, while the little wilderness home in the north was filled with mourning at Christmas time. Still another glad holiday season came and there were absent ones from the hearthstone and no thought was given to making merry in the old time way.

Many years have come and gone since that one joyous event in the primitive western home. Long ago father and mother laid aside the toils and triumphs of life and are sleeping the sleep of the just, with their youngest born, in the little cemetry by the lake side. Through many states the living ones of the family are scattered, none abiding near the pioneer home. The old log house has long since disappeared and the forest has melted away into fruitful fields, while the landscape for many miles is dotted over with the showy dwellings and massive barns of the successful husbandman. Still back through the years memory loves to wander at yuletide to that happiest of days in childhood. Take this leaf from the book of remembrance and its brightest page is gone.

Decatur's Beloved Physician Dead.

Dr. Gilbert L. Rose died Saturday, January 5, at 3:15 o'clock in the afternoon.

His final illness was of brief duration. Monday he seemed in usual health, attended to his practice and did his usual hard day's work. Tuesday morning he was taken with a chill but in response to a summons drove out to the home of his nephew, Carl Rose, six miles in the country.

This was the Doctor's last drive. The little team which was known on every highway for twenty miles around had carried its last succor and good cheer to the sick or dying. The voice of the noble master is forever still.

He went home after this drive with a well developed case of the grip and Wednesday the disease took a more serious turn. Dr. J. E. Maxwell rendered all medical assistance possible. Dr. Palmer of Hartford came over in the afternoon and Dr Peterson of the University of Michigan called in the evening.

Thursday he continued to grow worse and there seemed to be but little chance for his recovery.

Friday Drs. Mahoney of Chicago, J. C. Maxwell and Hoyt of Paw Paw, Cornish and Hamilton of Lawton called and their sorrowing faces showed too plainly that all hope was lost. In the evening Dr. Dock of the University of Michigan came and remained all night. When he left on the early Saturday morning train he thought Dr. Rose could live but a couple of hours. At 7 o'clock he became very restless which lasted for about an hour, and then peace came and the end.

Gilbert Lester Rose was born in Laporte county, Indiana, July 21, 1853. His father was twice married; his mother, Louisa Hazelton Rose was the second wife. There were six children in the first family and four, of whom the Doctor was the youngest, in the second. Those who survive are Mrs. Margaret Winch of Bangor and Mrs. Sarah Black of Waverly, Iowa, half sisters, and Walter Rose of Volinia and Mrs. Mary Roper of Toledo, Ohio, own brother and sister.

He attended the public school at Laporte and later went to Vinton, Iowa, where he first began to read medicine. At the age of 17 he entered the medical department of the University of Michigan, attending one year, studied under Dr. Dillon two years, and then went one year to the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, graduating in February, 1874.

A few years previous to this time his parents moved from Laporte to Volinia, Cass county, and the young doctor went to Marcellus to begin the practice of his profession. The same year he came to Decatur, where he has practiced continuously for over 32 years. When he first came to Decatur he entered into partnership with Dr. Dillon and their office was over Geo. Roberts' hardware store. This partnership lasted two years. The Doctor then practiced alone until 1888 when he formed a partnership with Dr. George W. Mahoney which lasted four years.

In 1898 Drs. Rose and Hooper built the elegant office buildings on East Phelps street from which the former has since conducted his extensive practice.

August 1, 1876, Dr. Rose and Miss Mary E. Kelly were united in marriage at Cincinnati, Ohio. To them were born two children, Max Donald, May 9, 1885, and Dalton Keats, October 28, 1886.

The funeral of Dr. G. L. Rose was held in the town hall Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The remains were brought to the hall at noon and placed at the foot of the center aisle and directly in front of the stage.

The flowers that surrounded and covered the coffin formed a bank extending the width of the proscenium arch and from the main floor to several feet above the stage floor, probably the largest and most beautiful display ever seen in Decatur. Some of the choicest pieces were a pillow of cream roses on which was formed in purple immortelles the word "Father," a large Maltese cross, the emblem of the Medical profession, a harp, a heart, a number of wreaths and nearly fifty casket boquets.

From the time the remains were brought to the hall there was a continual line of people passing the casket until the hall became so crowded they could not make the circuit. Before 1 o'clock the seats began to fill and at 1:30 there was scarcely standing room. The entrance and the cloak room were crowded. Before two o'clock, the time set for the funeral, several hundred people, unable to get inside the building had either returned to their homes or were standing near the entrance.

The funeral service was opened by Geo. B. Rogers who read appropriate selections from the Scriptures and offered prayer.

Mrs. G. W. Cornish sang, "My God and Father While I Stray," by G. W. Marston, and Elder J. H. Hammond gave a short and eloquent address from the standpoint of a fellow citizen.

Dr. Reuben Peterson of the University of Michigan gave the principal address, speaking from his knowledge of the departed as a fellow practitioner. Dr. Peterson brought out the good qualities in Dr. Rose's life and his eloquent and inspiring words were as peace to the dead and a comfort to the living.

The address was followed by a short eulogy by Mr. Rogers which told the love of a community for the good man who is gone.

The service closed with "The Song of the Heart" by Mrs. Cornish, which like the opening song was most beautiful.

The pall bearers were Drs. J. E. Maxwell of Decatur, J. C. Maxwell, and W. F. Hoyt of Paw Paw, I. E. Hamilton and G. W. Cornish of Lawton, E. A. Palmer of Hartford, G. W. Mahoney of Chicago and W. P. Bope of Lawrence. Other physicians present were Drs. Ketcham, Easton, Myers and Parker of Dowagiac and McNair and King of Kalamazoo.

The relatives present from a distance were C. E. Kelly of Columbus, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Rose and Carl Rose and family of Volinia, Mrs. Harriet Baker and Clyde Baker of Buchanan.

Among the many friends who came from other places were Hon. and Mrs. C. D. Lawton of Lawton, Judge A. J. Mills of Kalamazoo, George T. Chamberlin and H. M. Olney of Hartford, Matthew Murphy and family and Mr. and Mrs. Nash of Lawton, Mrs. Cora Whalen of Benton Harbor, Mrs. Fred Baker of Dowagiac, Mr. and Mrs. Sig Desenberg of Buchanan and Mr. and Mrs. Stern of Lawton, and A. F. Pearce of Elkhart.

The only photograph of Dr. Rose in existence was taken in Kalamazoo over 20 years ago. The above cut was made from a kodak picture taken 2 or 3 years ago. The picture was very dim and while the cut is not clear, to produce it at all satisfactorily required unusually skillful electrotyping.

Card of Thanks

To our many friends who in our deep affliction have shown us so much kindness and sympathy we desire to express our sincere thanks.

MRS. G. L. ROSE
MAX and DALTON ROSE.

Dr. Rose.

"A good man has passed unto the tomb—and there awaits the requiem of winters' snows."

No greater achievement can crown a man's life than that his death be mourned by an entire community. With the passing of Dr. Rose we all feel that we have lost a friend. In constant association for over thirty years, he has so lived among his fellows that his friendship was an asset of which anyone could be proud, and was enjoyed alike by everyone, however humble.

There are people whose chief pleasure in life is making others happy and it is shown to us in many ways how Dr. Rose was one of these. Generosity was a pronounced characteristic and with his genial, pleasing personality, always effervescent with jolity and good fellowship, a ray of sunshine has pierced the gloom of many desolate and disconsolate homes. The sick and unfortunate have often benefited by his good humor as much as by his physic.

Disregarding his own health and comfort, he has on countless occasions risen from his bed and driven miles through the cold and stormy night to minister to a sick patient, with no thought of remuneration other than that of rendering a service to suffering humanity. It is not recalled that anyone ever appealed to him for aid and was refused.

A close student of human nature, he was able always to draw some good from the worst conditions of life. He praised where some condemned; he developed commendable traits of character in people which others passed unnoticed and in so doing found a warm place in the hearts of all with whom he came in contact. He was an enthusiastic reader of good literature and well informed on many subjects not pertaining to his profession. His fads and fancies were keen and wholesome and of a type peculiar to himself. He was a great admirer of art and an illustrative picture or painting held his closest attention and interest.

In characterizing the many noble qualities of the Doctor's life, his friendship and consideration for his fellow beings, his ideal home life, his charity and benevolence, we can think of no higher tribute to this great friend than the peaceful words of a once famous author: "And were everyone for whom he did some loving kindness to bring a blossom to his grave, he would sleep tonight 'neath a wilderness of flowers."

A DAY IN BOSTON

BY LE ROY DEWEY

The following is the portion of a letter written by Mr. Dewey to his parents and describing his visit to Boston as the guest of his former Albion College friends. Rev. and Mrs. Yost, Thanksgiving Day:

"Wednesday morning to my great disappointment when I awakened I found it raining and the outlook for the day was anything but promising, but at eight o'clock I boarded the train for Boston and at shortly before 12 I disembarked in the Athens of the United States where I found Mr. Yost waiting for me. We immediately went to a restaurant for dinner, after which we started on a hasty tour of sight seeing.

We first took the elevated railroad going along the harbor where in the early period of our history the tea was thrown overboard; then in the distance I saw the Charlestown navy yard with the gunboats idly resting, and still further on I could just see through the snow and haze the Bunker Hill monument. Had our time not been so limited I should have gone out there and looked around, but we had so much to see in such a short space of time that for the present I let the distant view suffice. To the left of us from the car I saw the tower of the Old North Church from which in that early morning hour there flashed the signal lantern which sent Paul Revere on his wild and courageous ride, and kindled the fire in hundreds of patriotic and sacrificing hearts. The original tower was blown down by a wind storm years ago, but an exact duplicate was immediately built in its stead and still stands.

We soon left the elevated and went to the other extreme, going down to the subway and boarding one of those cars thus giving me my first experience in a subway. It seemed rather queer to see those hundreds of people swarming around there under the streets of Boston, waiting for, boarding or disembarking from cars.

However we had started for Cambridge, and it was not long before we came to the surface of the ground though I scarcely knew when the transition came. One does not know when he leaves Boston and gets into Cambridge for the houses are thick all the way, though I think they are two distinct municipalities. It did not take us long to reach the interesting city of Cambridge where is situated one of the most famous universities in the world, old Harvard. And if fame and popularity comes to one who goes through Harvard then the success of my future is certainly assured, for I had the grand privilege of going through that famous university, even though my course was brief and hasty. It is a large campus surrounded by a huge metal fence enclosing many buildings, some large, some small, some new and some very old.

Not far from Harvard is Radcliffe college, the Cambridge intellectual resort for girls, and I have no doubt a social resort for the men of Harvard. The men of the east have no use for co-education, yet they don't seem to object to having a woman's institution near by for social purposes.

Not far from Harvard is the old Washington elm under which in July, 1775, Washington took command of the revolutionary army. The tree is showing its age and begins to look as though life would not much longer last. It is protected by a picket fence around it so that it will not be molested by memento seekers. Across from the tree is the church in which the Father of our country prayed and worshipped the greater Father of us all, and the sight of these things rather make the heart beat faster, and the blood run swifter through one's veins. At a distance farther on and on a different street we came to the old house well preserved, which at one time was the headquarters of General Washington and in which General Burgoyne was held on parole. Later this became the home of New England's famous poet, Henry W. Longfellow. It is a fine large house surrounded by a spacious yard and altogether an ideal place for a poet.

We had not time to spend longer in Cambridge so we went back to Boston, on the way seeing many beautiful buildings, among them being the Library building and the magnificent Art building. In the distance I saw the mammoth cathedral but recently built by the Christian Scientists and nearby saw Trinity church in which Phillips Brooks preached in the days of his great power.

We soon arrived at a station in Boston and immediately set out in the direction of the Boston Theological school taking in the sights as we went along. We passed the old Boston Commons in which in 1770 occurred the bloody massacre, and as I looked upon the place where no buildings are allowed to be erected, a thrill went through by being, for I realized that I was looking upon the ground that had received the blood of those brave men who were willing to sacrifice life for right. From here we went to the State Capital and went through parts of it, beholding its wonderful beauty, amazed at its grandeur of marble floor and pillars and walls. In the soldier's room where are collections of the powder stained and bullet torn flags of the civil war there is a request that all visitors remove their hats; and so with bared heads we viewed these relics of the war which preserved our nation.

From the Seminary we started out on another tour, seeing the old South Church which was standing during the revolutionary period; the old State House which was the scene of many exciting events during that stormy period, also Fanuel Hall, which in the early part of the 19th century was remodeled so that it does not look just exactly as it did in 1775, but very near it. It is now used for a market and when I went through it about all we could see was turkeys, in fact it looked very much as though the market was glutted with them.

After supper we saw the famous old Corner Book Store having borne that name since 1828. Then we went to Tremont Temple where the famous Gypsy Smith meetings were being held. People began to line up before five o'clock, but at six we arrived in time to get a pretty good seat, but by seven o'clock the large magnificent church was filled, the floor, two galleries and all, and people standing up.

SUPERVISOR DAVID A. SQUIER

Born Nov. 22, 1834, Died Nov. 19, 1907

David A. Squier, who passed from this life on the nineteenth day of November, as was recorded in the Republican last week, was born in Volinia township, Cass county, November 22, 1834. His seventy-third birthday was the day of his funeral

He comes of a New England family which was founded in America in the early colonial days. His grandfather, William Squier, was born in New Jersey in 1756, and farming was his life's occupation. He moved to Pennsylvawhere his son Daniel C., father of our deceased townsman, was born in 1800.

Daniel C. Squier emigrated to Volinia, Cass county, in 1831, and his father, who was with the family on a visit, died there in 1832. He was the first to be buried in Crane cemetery. Daniel C. Squier died in 1853 and his wife, who was Elizabeth Case, a native of Northumberland county, Penn., followed him in 1881.

David A. Squier was one of nine children, of whom but one, Mrs. Susanah Morlan, survives. He spent his boyhood days on the farm and was married November 1st, 1860, to Miss Mary A. Rich, a daughter of Samuel A. Rich, who settled in Volinia in 1832.

Mr. Squier purchased forty acres of land which is now a part of the Lewis Morlan farm, and resided there until 1868 when he moved to Decatur. For ten years he was in the grocery business in this village, being associated for two years with Isaac B. Higgins. Since then he has been actively engaged in farming and his farm on the northern village limits is one of the finest in the county.

He was one of the stockholders of the Hinkley Stave Company in the days when it was Decatur's best industry. He always found time to devote to public interests and in the years past has served as township treasurer, member of the school board, village assessor and village president. Fourteen years ago he was elected supervisor for the first time. The next year he did not run, but twelve years ago he was re-elected and served continuously until his death. He was a democrat in politics, but the people elected him year after year in a strong republican township. He was the oldest supervisor in point of service in the county and had twice been elected chairman of the Board.

DECATUR'S FIRST WEDDING

The following copy of a marriage certificate was received by the Republican office a short time ago from Florence S. Babbitt of Ypsilanti, Mich., and reads as below:

"I do hereby certify that on the second day of May, 1850, Miss Mary Elliott was married to Mr. Levi T. Olds by me. Decatur, Michigan, May 26th, 1850.

"Witnesses present—
Thadaeous Gardiner,
Sarah Ann Elliott,
Charles A. Stuart.

(Signed) George B. Sherwood,
Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Van Buren, State of Michigan."

Well, there's nothing very remarkable about that, you may say. Men and women will get married; they are doing it all the time, so why do you bring forward these old residents to expose their weakness? But there is one little difference about this marriag from the countless others that have taken place in our village.

It so happened that about two years ago I had occasion to dig up the early history of Decatur, and in doing so I discovered that this was the very first marriage that was solemnized in our village. There have been a great many others since, but this was the only genuine first wedding, and therefore is somewhat different from the others.

All of the older residents of forty-five or fifty years ago will remember Mr. Olds. He was a nice, gentle old man, who, so far as I know, never injured any one or had an enemy. In his younger days he had been a soldier during the Mexican war, and marched with Gen. Scott from Vera Cruz to Mexico City, and fought in many of the battles during that campaign.

Mr. Olds must have been one of the very early settlers of Decatur, but I could find nothing to show when he arrived here. The first notice of his name seems to have been his marriage. While he lived here he was a carpenter and builder. I think that he had only one child—Miss Frankie Olds—who married while living here, but I do not know what became of her.

Mr. Olds moved away from Decatur many years ago, but about twenty years since he visited here and I saw him. I believe that I afterward heard he had died. He was very old when I saw him last. He was a good man, but like most good men, he never accumulated very much wordly wealth.

W. H. Tuttle.

The three names given as witnesses to this marriage are all strange to me. I do not think that I ever knew any of them. Perhaps some of the other very old residents will remember them. Mr. George B. Sherwood was the first Justice of the Peace in our village and this wedding was one of his very first official acts. He was also our first postmaster. The postoffice was established in 1852. He must have left Decatur before my time.

The dates given in Mr. Sherwood's certificate differ somewhat from those that I found in an old Decatur history, but they are all included in the month of May, 1850.

26th ALUMNI REUNION

Class of '82 Have Charge

One of the most successful re-unions in the history of the Alumni Association was held at the Opera House on the evening of June 14. Graduates and their guests to the number of one hundred and eight sat down to the supper which had been prepared by the ladies of the Universalist society.

A lively business meeting was held at the Universalist church before the adjournment to the opera house and much discussion as to "ways and means" was indulged in. The dues were reduced to twenty-five cents, and the price of the supper was left for the officers and committee to determine. The following officers were elected to serve next year: President, Nellie Murphy; 1st Vice President, Ida Yeckley; 2d Vice President, Marjorie Thomas. Executive Committee — Mrs. Mabel Brigham, Mrs. Gertrude Crilfield and Miss Leona Youells.

The class of 1882, which consisted of Eugene Hinckley, Alfred Jennings, Lizzie Murphy, Mattie and Hattie Morehouse, Bessie Lyon and Mrs. Nellie Rich decided that after the lapse of twenty-five years they would hold a reunion. The resolve was carried out this year, but only the first four named of their number were present. Their beloved superintendent, Henry Upton, and their classmate, Bessie Lyon, have long since crossed to the other shore, and distance prevented the others from attending. Their teacher, Miss Abigail Pearce of the Ypsilanti Normal College was present to the delight of her pupils and friends.

After the supper had been served, the following program was carried out:

John Creagan's welcome to the class of 1907 was a most cordial and pleasant one, and Bertha Baker responded in a very pleasing manner. Eugene Hinckley of Kalamazoo, who was toastmaster at the first alumni meeting twenty-five years ago, acted in that capacity on this occasion, and his ever-ready wit was appreciated by his auditors.

EXPRESS AGENT TWENTY-ONE YEARS

J. H. Haynes Celebrates by Moving Into Building of His Own

One of Decatur's most beloved and respected citizens is Joseph Harvey Haynes, agent for the American Express Company.

Mr. Haynes has been a resident of Van Buren county seventy years. There are probably not a dozen men in the county who have been here as long. He has been a resident of Decatur forty-one years and express agent twenty-one years.

He was six months old when his parents left the old home in Genessee county, New York, to find a home in the west. They came all the way from Detroit by wagon and located in Lawrence township. There he grew to manhood and with the exception of a few years spent in the south, Lawrence was his home until he came to Decatur in 1866.

For twenty years he sold dry goods and groceries for E. E. and J. L. Chadwick, serving the public faithfully. He was as popular a salesman as ever stood behind a counter.

After twenty years of mercantile life he accepted the agency of the American Express Company which position he has filled to the best of his ability. The Express office has been moved for the third time since he has been in charge. It was first in Browning's drug store, then in the Shaad building that burned. In 1892 he moved into the Dwight building and last Saturday he formally opened for business in his pleasant and commodious new building.

Crowds of people filed into the pretty new office and bakery and every one received a hearty welcome and a dainty rose bud fresh from the green house. The store was decorated with beautiful flowers, many of which were presented by friends for which Joe, Ella and Bernice wish to thank the givers.

Joe has a host of warm friends in this little community who know that the best is none too good for him and rejoice that he is so pleasantly located.

THE DECATUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The Decatur schools will open September 3.

All students or prospective students who have conditions to remove are requested to present themselves at the school house on Friday morning August 30, for examination.

Those who hold eighth grade county diplomas will be admitted to the high school without examination, as in the past.

The Decatur schools, especially the high school in the past, have had a large foreign attendance. The large number of these who have succeeded in university and college courses, and the large number who have been successful in business life and as useful citizens attest the value of the training received.

The high school has excellent standing with the University and Normal college, also with the other colleges and normal schools. It is on the list of approved schools whose graduates enter the University and other colleges without examinations.

For the coming year another teacher has been added to the corps to relieve the crowded conditions of the grades. Several rooms have been refitted, making all the rooms very pleasant for both teachers and pupils.

The laboratories in the basement of the building have been completed enabling the high school to meet the most exacting requirements in the teaching of the laboratory sciences.

The aim of the school is to give thorough preparation for life and citizenship to those for whom the high school education must suffice, and a sound foundation for the advanced work of college to those who are permitted to secure a higher education.

"Say, fellers, let me tell yer
I'd be happy as a clam
If I only was the feller
That my mother thinks I am.
She thinks I am a wonder
And knows her little lad
Could never mix with nothing
That's ugly, mean or bad.
And lots of times I sit and think
How nice 'twould be, ge whiz!
If a feller was a feller
That his mother thinks he is."

STAPLETON'S NEW SHOP

Opened to the Public Wednesday

Frank C. Stapleton opened his new barber shop Wednesday and his many friends were delighted with its handsome appointments. It is a model shop, luxuriant and commodious, and few towns the size of Decatur can boast of its equal. In fact this village, whether in building barber shops, store buildings or residences, has shown many times that it never does any thing by halves.

Mr. Stapleton's new shop is located in a new brick block adjoining the Thomas building on the east side of Main street. The large plate glass front reveals a pleasing picture of the handsome interior. Everything in it is new. Three hydraulic chairs of Mission finish and leather padded face large beveled mirrors and a marble top wall case on which are placed a complete outfit of barber's tools, the refreshing toilet waters and cosmetics.

Handy to the chairs is a wall case for mugs and under the case is the porcelain basin with hot and cold water. Two large settees line the wall for the comfort of waiting patrons and a room in the rear, nicely furnished and partly separated from the main room, is set apart for visitors and patrons. The floor is covered with heavy linoleum. The shop is lighted by electricity and heated by a furnace. A bright new barber pole on the outside shows the way.

Frank Stapleton has been in the barber business in Decatur seventeen years and this handsome new shop is in a sense a reward for those years of industry.

Tommy Bass has been with him fifteen years, a faithful and competent assistant.

Chet Horton will work at the third chair on Saturdays.

MAHONEY WINS CONTEST

Colored Orator at Olivet is Best of Six Entered

Olivet, Mich., June 18. — Charles Henry Mahoney of Decatur, the colored orator, won first place in the Drury prize oratorical contest. Clarence S. Blake of Lennoxdale, Mass., won second. Six contestants were entered and Mahoney had a clear lead of six points in the final ranking. He intends to enter Fiske university for colored students at Nashville, Tenn., where he will take his degree and at the same time teach several courses in history. Mahoney is one of the most talented and most popular men who ever stood on the Olivet campus, and his friends unite in wishing him godspeed. At present he is the only colored student in Olivet.—Detroit Free Press.

DECATUR CELERY

An Important Industry that is Still in its Infancy

An enthusiastic meeting of the Decatur Celery Growers' Association was held in the Council rooms Monday evening.

The advisability of shipping by freight was the principal question brought up. All of the celery previously shipped had gone by express. It was shown that the freight rate would be cheaper providing the association would ship in sufficient quantities to fill a car. It was decided to order a car a day and a daily shipment of 300 dozen was pledged by those present. The first car was shipped Wednesday.

Returns from late shipments through the Association were very satisfactory, Secretary John Borst reporting a net price of $1 05 per box, four and one-half dozen to the box. Dispatches from the Chicago commission houses ask for heavy shipments especially until Thanksgiving Day and say the prices will be good.

Celery growing has come to the front as Decatur's chief industry and it is destined to do great things for our village. Decatur's muck land will raise the finest celery that can be grown and in a few years we will be the celery center of the world.

The Celery Growers' Association has already a membership of fifty-eight, all growers of celery, and there are a number who have not yet come into the organization. There are 500 acres out this year and the acreage will probably be doubled next year. The average value of the crop per acre is $150.

Besides the association J. H. Haynes, the pioneer celery buyer of the village, and Ward Knoll, are making large shipments every day.

BASE BALL

Decatur vs. Kalamazoo

A number of good ball games have been played in Decatur this season but probably the best of them all was the game with the Sam Folz city league team of Kalamazoo. Of course it adds something to the quality of a game to have the home club win and certainly it was a grand finish that brought Decatur out on top this time.

The visitors made three runs on errors in the first innings and took a lead that the home club could not catch until the eighth. There was great excitement when the boys made two scores in the eighth and tied the score.

The fans went wild and shouted themselves hoarse; everybody stood up and yelled and Peter Ickes got over on to the home plate and pretty nearly swung his arms off.

It seemed to be all over with Kalamazoo after that, they were quickly whitewashed in their half of the ninth and the home club made the winning run with only one man out.

Billie Killefer and Royal Decker of Paw Paw played with the visitors In the third innings Killefer was the first to bat. He asked for the home-run club and the mascot picked it out for him. He struck the first ball pitched and made probably the longest drive ever seen on the home ground, it went over the back fence and was lost in the grubs. The runner made the circuit of the bases before it could be fielded. Ed Morlan also made a home run on a hot liner to right field which got lost in the grass.

Lyle Rawson pitched for Decatur and struck out nine. The Kalamazoo pitcher struck out three.

The score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Decatur,	1	0	1	0	0	0	0	2	1	—5
Kalamaz'o	3	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	—4

CREAGAN LIVERY IN LAWTON BARN

ROY CURTIS, THE MISSING NEWS DEALER HAS NOT RETURNED

As reported last week, Roy Curtis hired a livery at Creagan's barn for a trip to Paw Paw, stating that he would return in the afternoon. Instead, he drove to Lawton where he put the horse up at Robinson's barn, leaving instructions that if he did not return for it in three days, to return it to Mr. Creagan in Decatur. It is said that he paid three days' board.

Last Thursday Sheriff Beattie located the outfit at the Lawton Livery barn. Mr. Creagan recovered it Friday morning.

Curtis told some of his friends that he was going to Kalamazoo to look for work to earn money to pay his debts. He had gotten behind in the news business and creditors were crowding him. He is only a boy nineteen years old and was scared into thinking that he was obliged to pay or he would get into trouble. He could not get the money and took the only other course he saw open.

Inasmuch as the livery has been returned, no criminal case will be brought against Curtis, and he will probably be required to work out his financial troubles in some other way.

NEWS ITEMS

November 21, 1907.

Supervisor David A. Squier died November 19, within a few days of his 73rd birthday.

Two separate fires were discovered on Main street last Saturday evening. The sheds back of McOmber's store caught fire from a tank of gasoline. While the firemen were putting it out another alarm was turned in and the Brigham building at Main and Sherwood streets was found to be smoking furiously in the second story. Harry Maxham lived there and the first floor was occupied by McKain and Bagley with a grain and seed store. The damage to the Brigham building was about $1,000 covered by insurance.

The Decatur Celery Growers' Association held an enthusiastic meeting in the Council Rooms Monday evening. The association has a membership of 58. There are about 500 acres out this year and the acreage will be doubled next year. The average value of the crop per acre is $50. J. H. Haynes, Decatur's pione[illegible]uyer, and Ward Knoll are also making large shipments of celery every day.

Charles S. Smith of Lawton was sentenced by Judge Des Voignes to 15 years in the Jackson prison with a recommendation of five years for killing Capt. George H. Prentice of the same town. It was the result of a dispute over a ball game. Smith used a ball club on the head of the Captain to get the better of the argument.

November 28, 1907.

Henry Mahoney has completed his second enlistment in the United States army and arrived home from Cuba last week.

F. W. Bertram is the new pharmacist in Carney's drug store.

Hugh Osborn and Miss Lucille Baker were married in Paw Paw last Friday afternoon. Hugh is a moulder in the Round Oak plant and they will move to Dowagiac. Mrs. Ella Eckenberger succeeds Mrs. Osborn as teacher of the third grade.

The Lia Carli Company appeared before a large audience in the town hall Friday evening. The receipts were $60 of which the Eastern Star received 40 per cent. Mrs. Gertrude Charles Metzger was given the stage name of Lia Carli while studying music in Italy.

January 31, 1907.

Carl Squier, page in the House of Representatives, came home Saturday and will go back next Monday. The legislature is adjourned this week while the members are out visiting the several institutions.

The case of the People vs. John Bailey, up for trial in the circuit court last week, went over the term by order of the court.

Miss Eva Kinney will go to New York City the first of February to study the spring styles in millinery. She is employed in Ann Arbor.

Wednesday, January 23, at noon the curtain dropped for the last time, and Ben R. Desenberg passed into the great home above. He was born in Hanover, Germany, December 4, 1853, came to America when 11. In 1888 he and Fred Stern bought the dry-goods business of Charles Schuster. In 1901 he sold his interest to Mr. Stern and went into business with his brother Sig in Buchanan. He was known here as a fine citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stern, P. M. Young and Max Rose attended the funeral in Kalamazoo.

THE FLAG

An old-time newspaper man, John D. Barry, of Washington, D. C., died a few weeks ago and left to perpetuate his memory these verses on the flag:

Here's to the Red of it;
There's not a thread of it
In all the spread of it
From foot to head
But heroes bled for it,
Faced steel and lead for it,
Slept with the dead for it,
Bathing it Red.

Here's to the White of it;
Who knows the might of it
But thrills at the sight of it
Through day and night.
Womanhood's care for it
Made manhood dare for it;
Purity's prayer for it
Kept it so White.

A BRIEF TRIBUTE

DELIVERED BY Eld. J.H. Hammond at the Funeral in the Town Hall, Jan. 8

I wish to recognize the special favor and high honor in the privilege of bearing a brief word of testimony and tribute of merited praise from the standpoint of a fellow citizen on this occasion.

We are gathered from near and far into this vast audience as members of one great family to mourn the seemingly untimely departing of a respected fellow citizen, a skillful and honored physician and a tried and trusted friend. That Dr. Rose was respected far and near by those who knew him is evidenced by this vast concourse of people who cannot gain access within the walls of this large edifice. That he was skillful in his profession is conceded by all within the circle of his extensive practice and proven by the frequent calls made upon him for consultation in critical cases by physicians in other fields. That he was our mutual friend no one in this vast audience would call in question.

While we all recognized that in him we had a skillful physician we intuitively felt we had also a trusted friend, for it could be said of him, as said in the great book of the great Physician, "He was a friend of the common people." Many could bear grateful testimony that many times has he visited homes night and day without any hope of remuneration, and dispensed medicine and supplied other necessaries of life at his own expense, and most gladly would they lay a flower upon his grave and call him blessed.

The passing of Dr. Rose is a great loss to his family; his profession; his town; the State, and the world. The ongoing years with their accompanying pains, fevers and sickness will cause us to more keenly realize that loss.

Gilbert L. Rose was a superior man in many ways. Like the ruler of ancient times, he was cast in a large mould, not only physically but intellectually he stood head and shoulders above the rank and file of mankind. One could not long converse with him without feeling that they had come in touch with a great mind which had a broad and comprehensive sweep and an intelligent and firm grasp of nearly any subject that might be broached.

He was a man of large sympathies which led to generosity, without which no man can be truly great. That person whose sympathies and interest all center in kith and kin has only an extended and enlarged selfishness, and will never be regarded great, or mourned as a benefactor to mankind. He was an enterprising, generous, public spirited man. Many of the public improvements that contribute to the convenience and adornment of our beautiful town were conceived in his massive mind or strongly championed by his large heart though he knew it meant a large expense to himself. He could not be small, selfish or penurious.

He was devoted to his profession. In this he was an example worthy of imitation. He was very seldom seen at social gatherings or places of entertainment. He denied himself of rest and recreation that he might relieve others of their sufferings and thus contribute to their joys. He seemed to think that his mission was to minister to others in distress and with the great apostle Paul he could say, "This one thing I do," and how faithfully and well he performed his mission many can gratefully and gladly testify.

His life's work is ended and he has gone to join the great majority upon the other side of the turbulent tide. His familiar form will no longer be seen upon our streets. His cheerful voice will no more be heard in our homes mingling with the sighs of the sick. But long, long, will it be before that genial smile and friendly voice will vanish from our grateful hearts.

IN MEMORY OF DR. ROSE

BY DR. G.W. MAHONEY

Dr. Rose is dead, but he still lives in the hearts of all who knew him as the most noble, the most generous, the most charitable, the most beloved of all men. As we pause in silence and in grief and vainly try to look forward into the days that are to come, it seems impossible that we shall never see him again. During the thirty-two years that he practiced medicine here he was the central figure of this community. There never was a public improvement of any kind that was not championed by and worked for by Dr. Rose. He gave freely of his time, busy though he was, and opened wide his purse for everything that was for the public good. He was a man of refined and cultured taste, a lover of art and the beauties of nature always appealed strongly to him. Among the many things that stand out boldly in the life of Dr. Rose is that there are many men today who owe their success in both commercial and professional life to the substantial assistance as well as the encouragement and advice of this noble benefactor. It was at his earnest solicitation that I took up the study of medicine. It was due to his generosity and unselfishness that I was enabled to begin the practice of my profession the day I returned from college. Of all the men I ever knew he was the most loyal friend. He made a friend's cause his own, and such friendship is among the rarest of God's blessings to mankind. The tribute I hold within my heart is more than I can express.

He loved truth and honor, justice and honesty, things that were noble and good. There was no place in his heart for malice or envy, but kindness, helpfulness, friendship, love and charity made up his tender nature. His cheery way and lightheartedness lifted daily care. We heard his name every day and every hour. It was a household word in nearly every home. We knew he worked hard; we knew he drove all day and far into the night and often arose again before the gray of morning appeared to respond to a call at the bedside of some sufferer. The night was never too dark or stormy, or the wind never so bleak or piercing as to keep him at home when he felt his patient needed him.

He was a great student of disease, a skillful diagnostician, a good surgeon. He was the ideal family physician, and he was much more. He cheered the strong on to better and nobler things. He assisted the weak in their struggles with the world; his counsel and advice were sought every day and freely given on things in the outside of his profession, and his judgment was always good. By his genial smile and happy ways he dropped a flower in the pathway every day of everyone with whom he came in contact. We who knew him best loved him most. His very presence in the sick room was like a sunbeam pushing aside the dark and lowering cloud. The touch of his soft and gentle hand always soothed the fevered brow and his words of cheer quieted the overworked heart of his suffering patient; and when the hand of death visited a home, his words of comfort always lessened the sting of the awful messenger, and the smothering grief was less terrible to bear. He was a friend when a friend was needed. He loved his home. He was a devoted husband and an ideal father. He loved his wife and children with a tenderness that knew no bounds, and he has left to his two manly sons the greatest heritage that a father can give, the heritage of an honored name.

He wanted to live to see his sons take their places in the world of affairs, and carry that name onward and upward.

There never was a physician or a man in all this section of the country that was counseled every day by more people, high and low, rich and poor, good and bad, than Dr. Rose, and we doubt if there ever will be. And to all he gave the greatest consideration. There never was a physician in all this section of the country who visited the bedside of the sick and suffering more often with no expectation of recompense or reward except the simple gratitude of the poor than Dr. Rose, and there never will be; and he was yet only in his prime, at the zenith of his usefulness. Oh, that he could have lived! But he has gone. That familiar figure and genial face will be seen no more, but the name of Dr. Rose and his magnificent generosity, and the remembrance of his charities will be always with us, and will go out in widening waves for the good of all, and the world is and will be better that he has lived.

The shades are drawn and the office is dark for the first time in over thirty years. The medicine case has been closed and clasped for the last time. The fever thermometer has been laid aside, and the hand has been stilled. The pines seem to sigh more deeply, and the wind to moan more dolefully than ever before. And as in speechless grief we saw all business life in Decatur stilled, and saw the throng of people gathered from all walks of life, from all sections, paying to this man with their silence and their sobs the greatest tribute that was ever paid to anyone in this section, we turn and say in resignation, as if he could hear us — Rest, rest, our beloved friend, rest. Rest from the awful heat of summer's sun and the driving rains you have faced so often. Rest from the piercing blasts and awful storms of winter. Rest from your long and tedious drives in the dark and cheerless nights while others slept. Rest! Rest! Rest!

TEN PRAIRIE PIONEERS

By Frank L. Kern

Friend Arba: Complying with your request for some more reminiscent sketches covering the stirring days of the great civil war, followed by the flush times that lasted up to the panic of '71 following the passage of the Sherman demonitization act just after the great Chicago fire, I would like to characterize, as best I can in a series of short articles, ten important and somewhat remarkable personages who constituted largely the aristocracy of wealth and culture in those old days on Little Prairie Ronde.

Five of these, namely Benjamin Hathaway, B. G. Buell, R. J. Huvek, L. B. Lawrence and Dr. N. D. Thomas, resided on the southern edge of the prairie and the other five, Elias Morris, Wm. V. Rosewarne, LeGrand Anderson, Dolphin Morris and the Hon. A. B Copley, lived on the northern side. Dr. Thomas and Elias Morris, only one from each set, still survive and both live in Decatur.

These ten men and their interesting families wielded a powerful influence for good in a large community. They were each and all intelligent, thrifty, well-bred, honest and law-abiding citizens, always standing for what was best for mankind and living for peace, happiness and prosperity. They picked no quarrels and made no fights. As a farm lad I worked for each of them more or less and can therefore speak from an intimate acquaintance.

The first five named above, all lived contiguous to a charming woodland of giant oaks, ash, beech and maple, where it seemed that "God had kissed the earth and made a beauty spot" as an ideal place for lovely rural homes. These people got in there among the first settlers in the '30's and '40's when this part of Michigan was considered the far West, wild and fuzzy, and secured farms offering the greatest diversity and advantage. Nearly every farm had a portion of the deep, black prairie loam, some heavy timber for fuel and lumber with its rich leafmold and also some "oak openings," offering a variety of soils in clay, sand and gravel. Hence these farms were admirably adapted for the successful raising of stock, grain, fruits and vegetables of all kinds.

Oh for a pen sufficiently golden-tipped to picture those old woods as they charmed us during the romantic and veally days of childhood, when in spring at the noon hour we rushed from the old Huycktown school close by, to romp and frolic here gathering lovely spring beauties, violets, anemones and trilliums. Poor dear little flowerets, how innocently they looked up at us and the rosy sky and bright sun as it peeped through the leaves to make them thirsty. But we are taught to believe that when the little flowers said their prayers to the fairies at night they expected the sylphs to sprinkle them with vapor from their invisible watering pots. Dear old forest, must I bid you good bye? Your sights, sounds and odors again fill my soul and my heart warms to the music of a romantic spell. I see it again with that happy band—my childhood chums. The same old sun, master of its surpassing beauty, fills the atmosphere with life and fragrance, bands those old trunks, drips in diamonds from myriad leaf-tips and makes gold-yellow the fresh green of the undergrowth, bejewels each fern and modest flower and rests a mellow sheen in the open glades and on lichen-covered logs.

And here is the old inscription tree under which we arranged our boquets and wreaths—

"Where we lived and we loved
By that knife-girdled beech
In the beautiful days long ago."

Here is where some lame fellow rested his cane while high up on that smooth bark he rudely inscribed the initials that his grandchildren may read today—"G. J. K. & M. R." Below we find somewhat more distinctly cut, "E. B. C. & E. M." On the other side are a number of indistinct inscriptions, but I adjust my old specs and make out "C. E. B., F. L. K." and some other letters, but this is getting personal now—and then too that is another story, —to be only whispered in the twilight.

Benjamin Hathaway

A farmer? Yes, but infinitely more. He was a classic poet-philosopher in whose soul there constantly rang that song without words to which he frequently gave utterance in verse so pure, sweet and deep that few possessed the "mens divinior" to fathom their beauty and meaning. So dearly did this great heart love the soil and trees, so devoted was he to farm, garden, nursery and forest and so unconscious was he of self that we might have dubbed him "L'homme du bois" as the Parisians did the famous artist Millet of Barbazon.

The Hathaway premium small farm of Michigan, consisting of but 110 acres, bordered by osage orange hedges, was at the southwest corner of what was called "the square" which included the greater part of the original prairie. This famous farm included prairie, heavy timber land and from the main road, a half mile to Bunker lake, it took in a beautiful forest which the poet and landscape artist had trimmed up, amplified and beautified until to this day its equal cannot likely be found in the state.

At this home of fields, gardens, orchards, vineyards, flowers and fancy shrubbery, all kept in perfect order, the poet delighted to improve every one of the multifold crops he raised, and propagated new varieties of stock, grain, fruits, vegetables, flowers, bees and even birds of the air. He would be a hot competitor of Luther Burbank if alive to-day. He kept from several to a dozen boys in his employ whom he almost literally whipped into line and compelled all who had any capacity, to take an interest in their work and do it thoroughly. That was a rare school for any boy who really cared to lay a foundation for success in life, for Mr. Hathaway was a constant inspiration and guide to the very highest and best in this world of work. Here is where my pen breaks away and I need not guide it, for of all the great and good men whom I have met in this broad land, I have never found the equal of the immortal Benjamin Hathaway. Was his hair a little bushy? Were his eyes a little too small? Were his ways peculiar and his dress sometimes ill-fitting and even uncouth? Yes, but he was one of the world's great geniuses. A man of heart, mind and soul never yet properly fathomed or gauged by those who knew him best. The soul of purity, honor and integrity, a philanthropist and a power for good. Read, yes study hard some of the beautiful thoughts contained in some of his published works. You will be richly rewarded. Especially in his "Art Life" and "Finished Creation" are to be found gems of masterful soul-reach expressed in choicest imagery as nearly divine as anything ever penned by poet, sage or seer. He well said "All hearts the Poet fires are his" and in the years to come the world may yet learn what he tried to do for it, for as posterity shall grow wise enough and good enough to comprehend the inspired lines of this master mind, hearts will surely be won to nobler thoughts and actions, minds will be led to higher aspirations and the writer will live on earth in a larger and better sense than when we knew him in his prime over forty years ago. His soul of honor and truth must stamp itself upon future ages growing wider, sweeter and better on through all eternity.

"He hath the noblest faith, no creed confessing,
Who writes his faith in deeds."

Did space permit, gladly would I pay just tribute to the faithful wife who so nobly helped to ease the burdens and pains of declining years, and who has since carried out his wishes in respect to the old farm home and his amiable and talented daughter.

Barber G. Buell

The Buells descended from a proud old patrician family having a sufficient touch of the plebean to incline them to farming and stock raising. The haughty and debonair Emmons Buel showed the blue blood in dress and every act. It was not necessary to inform him that he was an aristocrat of the noblest type. But his brother, the subject of this sketch and familiarly called "Barb", was an Abraham Lincoln type of man both in character and strong physical resemblance to our great immortal martyr. He was a high-toned, cultured gentleman of quiet dignity, clever, agreeable and of modest pretensions. He was the owner and executive head of the well known Buell plantation now owned and cultivated by L. L. Lawrence and was at the time referred to perhaps the most desirable farm in Cass county. On this great farm there was ever that bustle and push that gets large results. Great prairie grain fields and pastures with monster flocks and herds; big woods and extensive orchards; numerous buildings and a full complement of teams, tools, men and machinery. High bred stock and up-to-date varieties of grain, fruits and vegetables prevailed here, for Mr. Buell was president of the agricultural society and showed the neighbors how to improve varieties and protect all from harm or deterioration. He was technically and practically a thorough agriculturalist and stock man. While he never cultivated a mercenary spirit he made his farming pay. But unfortunately this property came to him weighted down with an impossible burden of debts whose annual interest ate up all the profits and this finally wore him out. This happened to thousands of good men during those awful panicky years that followed the inflated values consequent upon the issuing of "fiat rag money". Debts had been contracted when greenbacks, on a parity with gold, were worth only about thirty-four cents on the dollar and had to be paid with 100 cents of good money raised when farm produce was low and wages and expenses were still high. Shall we see again something like that?

You might visit the Hathaway farm adjoining on the west and feel like passing through an art exhibit crowded with masterpieces that finally clog and weary you, but on the Buell plantation there was a delightful sensation of the magnificence, thrift and grandeur of it all. Here we might see a forty-acre orchard where thousands of barrels of choice varieties of apples were gathered every fall, not to mention the thousands of bushels left to rot upon the ground or furnish a relish for hundreds of thoroughbred hogs. Here was a great peach orchard extending down to old Bunker lake, so handy that it was said one family on the opposite side of the little town, who never bought or raised a peach but who owned a boat that ran quietly after dark, always feasted on canned Early Crawfords at every meal!

"Barb" Buell was a good neighbor and friend and a kind and indulgent husband and father, devoted to his noble and queenly wife and unusually interesting family of three fine sons and two lovely daughters. Considerate for every living thing on his farm and the men in his employ, he was ever ready to help the worthy when in need and we, his old friends, know that this world was made wiser, richer and better because Barber G. Buell lived in it.

William V. Rosewarne

We addressed him familiarly and lovingly as "Billy." "When names contain a 'rose' or 'pen' that's a sign of Cornishman." When a young man Mr. Rosewarne came to "York State" from good old Cornwall, England. His father was a free land owner and "a fine old English gentleman."

In 1849 when the pull of Empire and craze for gold was taking many on that perilous journey to the far west, our Uncle Billy came on as far as Lawton which was then the end of the M. C. R. R and staged it across to Niles where he helped put the railroad across the "sweet-flowing St. Joe." The next year he married Miss Martha, daughter of Sam Morris, brother of John and Dolphin, and later bought his father-in-law's farm at the northeast corner of the prairie with holdings on both sides of the Cass-Van Buren line. This large farm was well watered and had a diversity of fertile soils and Mr. R. made additions and improvements until it was one of the ideal farms of the county and no one raised better crops than he did. Here they reared a unique family of three hearty sons and three fine daughters who are today doing well their share of the world's work. The two younger boys, Cass and Frank, now own the old farm.

Most Engishmen have such love and loyalty for the mother country with deep reverence for its stable laws and conservative ways, that they are not easily reconciled to our unsettled conditions and unstable and half-enforced laws. But Mr. Rosewarne became at once a loyal American with true Yankee vim and patriotism. Ella Huyck once facetiously remarked: "Some men sit and think, some sit and smoke and some just sit." But here we have a man with pluck and energy that amazed slow-going people and it always got him out in time to see the little bird surround the early angleworm I have often seen him drive his mower or reaper until after midnight! Genial, generous, loving, great-hearted Billy Rosewarne, the man who could forget his own interests and go far out of his way to help a poor neighbor; who had ever kind sympathy, praise and encouragement for the poor lad tugging at the bootstraps. He was truthful and honest and kept every promise. "No," said he one day, coming around the old house by the upper orchard, "it may not be a misdemeanor to fill your pockets from an orchard where there is a surplus, but it shows better manners if you first ask permission." This liberal ruling lifted a great weight from the mind of an anxious little Dutch boy who at that particular moment had otherwise all he could carry.

Yes, that old farm paid, but here again the great debt obligation and steady interest drain held back the measure of success which he fairly earned. It makes the heart ache when we reflect how faithfully and patiently and hopefully many of those old-timers toiled on year after year throughout their long lives making big money only to satisfy interest and tax demands, while so worthy of a magnificent fortune. It does not seem to accord with the divine principles of eternal justice, but we must reflect also that generosity and benevolence have small affinity for thrift and affluence.

Men always liked to work for Mr. Rosewarne because they were well treated, liberally paid and bountifully fed. Here was something to gladden the heart of the growing farm boy as he whistled up his old familiar tune, for at harvest and haying time in the middle of each half day we were served cold milk or hot coffee and delicious doughnuts. Oh for a peck of those good doughnuts today, backed by that appetite. It would renew our youth and make old Father Time hang up his rusty scythe and stop shaking his hour-glass. This harvest luncheon was indulged on the Huyck farm and one or two others but never became a general practice.

Uncle Billy never ornamented his face with pipe or cigar and never acquired the Milwaukee thirst, but he did allow his men to use whiskey while washing sheep in the early springtime when the water was cold.

His temperament would sometimes encounter a brain-storm giving a shower of unprintable expletives that offered no apologies to Uncle Joe Cannon, old fiery Zack Chandler or our fighting Bob Evans. Every great and good man must have some loop-hole through which to crawl when hard pressed.

Some of us get shocked at a little plain and forceful profanity, but we have faith to believe that good kind-hearted William Rosewarne has a much higher seat up yonder than those santimonious hypocrits who could never swear but who could deceive and cheat and disregard the needs of the suffering poor.

> "So many Gods, so many creeds,
> So many ways that wind and wind,
> While just the art of being kind
> Is all this old world needs."

Hon. Alexander B. Copley

This noted farmer, statesman, banker and philantropist was so widely known to a majority of your readers that I need not characterize him much beyond his great and beneficent work as founder and superintendent for many years of the famous Little Prairie Sunday school.

Mr. Copley observed that the young people were more or less exposed to the influence of farm help which was often low and degrading. Some one has observed that of all tough toughs, the toughest tough is the dirty, ignorant, low-lived country tough. Some of the boys were getting their ideals from "Dick Deadeye the Hero of Bloody Gulch," and "Squint eyed Bill, the famous Bully of the Woods." The terrible conflict raging in the southland at that time was telling on public morals, and so during those dark and thrilling days of heartache and dread, this noble man of peace and love, who knew how to offer a fervent prayer to God and make a telling appeal in words of soul-reaching eloquence, organized that non-sectarian sabbath school.

Besides the assistance of his wife and her sister, Emma Hathaway, who later became his second wife, Mr. Copley had the earnest and efficient help of his two talented sisters, Mrs. Buell and Mrs. Lawrence and many others equally helpful, among whom I must mention Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Elias Morris, Mrs. Thorpe and the Huyck family. I entered this school when an impulsive and impressionable lad whose feet all too easily slipped down the broad and easy road toward destruction, and here found the one great and potent influence outside of my devoted mother's love and teaching, that inspired me to fight upward toward a better life.

Our teachers encouraged us to commit the entire lesson thoroughly and then those eternal truths were ground into our souls to become a necessary part of our lives. Then the dear, sweet old songs and hymns with Ella Huyck, our musical evangelist, at the organ, charming our undeveloped souls into tune with the Infinite. Then came those fascinating reviews, illustrations and exhortations from our superintendent that compelled conviction, repentance and prayerful consecration to a higher, sweeter and purer life.

Dear classmates of those old days, let's stop here and bow our heads and hark back to that blessed time. Again we sing lustily that first song we learned, "Dare to do right, dare to be true," followed by "Sweet hour of prayer." And now, "Shall we gather at the river, where bright angel feet have trod?" Oh Father in heaven, we have all been down to that dark river to bid the last good bye to loved ones passing over to the "Ever shining shore." See that old schoolhouse packed with its nine big classes besides the score of little tots under the loving care of dear Mrs. Thomas out in the vestibule. See that devoted, godly man, that gentleman and scholar, whose life always squared with his teachings, giving out papers, cards, prizes and bibles furnished at his own expense; planning new exercises, union picnics and everything to charm and edify and make us wiser, better and happier.

Maybe our progress has been rapid since those old days when our electric light was a sputtering "slut"—a dish of lard from which burned dimly a braided cotton rag—we used candles for company; when our horseless carriage was an unruly yoke of steers hitched to a clumsy wagon; when we telephoned by sending a note, not written with a typewriter. But must I say that no Sunday school of today gets one-half the actual results that came from that dear old Little Prairie Sunday school when conducted by our beloved Bennett Copley and his capable and devoted band of teachers.

"Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on;
'Twas not given to you alone,
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it dry another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on."

Thus have I tried to picture some of my old-time friends, the worthy forbears of those schoolmates and associates of forty years ago who are today "sowing the earth with men." Gladly would I jab my pen into that "second generation," including those smartie chaps who beat me out of my winter-greens and tamarack gum, giving me nothing in return but apples, candy and pie! But if I did them one-half justice, I would not dare go back to the great reunion next August, unless the biggest of them were to die or move away. And those dear girls, including "that old sweetheart of mine," that peachy little tintype of the clinging-vine variety, whom no one could catch at pom-pom-pull-away. Ho, hum! she married that school-fellow who licked me once—just for nuthin'. I forgave him though last year when I stopped at his farm and found that little tintype at the churn surrounded by seven grandchildren and two dogs. Oh what an alarm clock to my happy dreams! She was now full cabinet size, weighing 287 pounds and she and Tige were talking in the same key. "Of all sad words."

BY FRANK L. KERN

The two preceding articles gave a little characterization of the first set of five of the old settlers of Little Prairie with whom I had much to do during my boyhood days in the 60's and who were then most prominently in the public eye in that locality. We now move over to the northern part of the Prairie and briefly sketch the other set.

The ten families referred to were nearly all more or less related by intermarriage. Of the large and interesting Morris families I shall write at this time only of the Dolphin Morris branch who with his four sons, Samuel, Amos, Elias and Henry, occupied a large place in the social and business life of the Prairie, all responsible and well-to-do farmers. Susan, the only daughter, became the wife of Redmond Anderson.

Dolphin Morris

Was an old man, when I was a young child and really belonged with LeGrand Anderson and a few others, to an older or first generation and among the true original settlers of Van Buren and Cass counties. Mr. Morris and wife were counted as the way-up family of the Prairie. They were quiet, pious and somewhat aristocratic people who owned a large acreage of rich, virgin prairie and valuable timber land about the old homestead where in the middle 70's the young and promising son Henry and his beautiful and charming wife were so shockingly and brutally murdered.

That was a wonderful old forest about the Morris and Anderson homes with its great wealth of large walnut, hickory, beech, maple, ash, oak, basswood, etc. Here we gathered nuts and Paw Paws, mushrooms and hawes, near the old burying ground now crowded with those once so dear to our lives and still a sweet, tender memory. Here we hunted squirrels, red, black, and gray fox, which in large numbers then overran the fences and trees. Here we made syrup, wax and sugar in the early springtime and later reveled knee deep in a wealth of flowers, little dreaming how quickly the years would slip by when we too must begin to feel that "life's long dream is o'er, farewell, farewell".

Dolphin Morris was a good manager and his large farm, orchard, garden and stock were always in fine condition while good old-fashioned hospitality was administered to all who came. Here charity was genuine, broad and deep and great pains were taken to look up the worthy who were in need, that without any ostentation, their wants might be supplied. Pardon me if my pen often slips off into this characteristic of those dear old friends. A certain widow with a lot of helpless, hungry children, found employment in these homes at house cleaning, washing, butchering, etc., and often did the Morris team bring to her cheerless shack of poverty, far more in fuel, food and clothing than the price of her labor. God in his just and tender mercy cannot fail to amply reward those generous souls of Little Prairie who thus kindly cared for that noble and faithful woman during those long years of her toil and anxiety.

Elias Morris

Owned a large and valuable farm extending from the main highway, one mile east across the Prairie through the oak woods to Saddlebag Lake, where the great re-union will take place next August

Just before the civil war broke out Elias married the kind-hearted, popular and cultured Charlotte Dunning, (and oh how kindly she has been remembered for fifty years by the poor little "Dutch" lad whose pockets she so often filled with doughnuts, cookies and apples), and a little later he built the finest residence on the Prairie and here they resided long years, rearing the two sons now so well known as Drs. Ray and Carl, and the charming daughter Jessie who left this earth a few years ago. Little Freddie died when a small child. Mr. Morris was ever prepossessing and of pleasing and courteous address, affable, keen, shrewd and quick-witted. He was a public spirited, well-read and progressive farmer, keeping only well-bred stock and always raising paying crops

Elias always stood well among all his associates who admired his broad-minded, genial and manly ways and truthful, upright character, for like his father, he was generous-hearted and always mindful of those less fortunate in life. Mr. and Mrs. Morris who now reside in Decatur, bear the distinction of being the only pair left on earth of all those complete families whom we knew in the prime of life and activity in the old days. They are close to the date of their golden wedding anniversary, and w[illegible] I remember the many kindnesses shown my family in the years that are gone, I thank God they have been permitted to live so long in peace and love together and to bless the world, and my earnest prayer is that many more years may be allowed them before passing on to the sure reward that awaits the faithful in the world to come.

Farmer folks are those who labor
From the rise to set of sun
Calling every man a neighbor,
Who has all his duty done:
Helping weary ones who sorrow,
In a tender, loving way,
Counting not upon the morrow—
Faithful to the present day."

Continuing the write-up of some of the leading citizens of Little Prairie during my boyhood days some forty years ago, I will here remark that in 1860 if a man drove a top buggy it was a sure sign of wealth and if he were known to possess an estate valued at fifteen to twenty thousand dollars, he was considered independently rich. Double that sum to-day would be just a start—a nest-egg. We heard of one or two millionaires in New York but could hardly comprehend the meaning.

I doubt if these old farms will ever be as valuable and productive, even under the improved, scientific methods, as when kept up and operated by those old pioneers.

Richard J. Huyck

When a little child, nearly fifty years ago, I stood in awe and reverence before this tall, dignified man, then in middle life, a leading citizen and influential public officer. He was at that time, town clerk, postmaster, merchant and farmer. His little general store at what was then called "Huycktown" disappeared long ago. In later years Mr. Huyck developed into a sort of patriarch of the community and was always most highly respected by everybody and loved and revered by those who knew him intimately.

When in the early 30's Mr. Huyck began life as a teacher, a young brunette in the back row caught his fancy and later they began life together, living in peace, happiness and prosperity for about sixty years, celebrating their golden wedding in 1886. The four talented daughters and son who became a soldier, traveler and banker, were at one time the very heart and soul-life of the brilliant social whirl that characterized the school and Sunday school of the Prairie.

Richard Huyck was not a policy man but ever stood for the highest principles of right living and an honest, fair deal. He called things by their right names and his judgment was highly prized on local and national matters. Dignified, serious, thoughtful and earnest, he nevertheless enjoyed a good joke and dearly loved music, especially the kind furnished by his accomplished daughters and their associates who made the old home a happy resort. During the nearly four years I was under his direction as a farm boy and later as a member of the family, I never heard Mr. Huyck utter an improper or unkind word or have a single family jar. He was a keen scholar, a good linguist and a fine penman and mathematician. He was skillful in the use of tools and even the painstaking Benjamin Hathaway was not more careful and systematic in every line of work, but Mr. Huyck excelled them all in the care of his teams and stock. He never sought to take any advantage in a trade, never pinched or pushed a creditor, was not in the least mercenary, still he was saving and thrifty and always prospered, providing bountifully for his family.

Like others of the Prairie pioneers, Mr. Huyck cared little for religious dogmas and doctrines but had a well-defined conception of man's dependence and duties. His moral code was clearly defined and rigidly adhered to and no man was ever offended or wronged by what he said or did. Surely I need not say more. Mrs. Huyck, now nearing four score and ten, lives in Decatur with her widowed daughters, Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Dolloff.

Levi B. Lawrence

Here we have a man who started life with good hereditaments and bare hands, but he had a cool, level head and that best of all fortunes that can befall any man, a high-bred, refined and capable wife who was a rare helpmeet and housekeeper,—a grand good woman. Mr. Lawrence early learned an important principle of finance which he once put to me in his simple way, "It is not so much what you take in as what you don't pay out,—pay as you go or don't go". He knew how to raise a fine quality of grain and so carefully prepare it for market that he invariably got a higher price than others. He would contend long and hard for even a fraction of a cent per bushel extra which he claimed his stuff was worth. Some criticized this trait, but we saw him always keep his word, meet every obligation and generously support his family for whom he provided the best home in the township. He paid for his farm, bought several adjoining farms and lived to become the richest man on the Prairie.

At the Lawrence home was ever the most generous hospitality and entertainment. The best of good victuals for every meal and for the evenings, the choicest apples, cider, nuts, popcorn, etc., while books, magazines, games and music were freely indulged. Did we have the best school in the county? Yes, when Mr. Lawrence was director. Were the Prairie roads the best in the state? Not until Mr Lawrence was made commissioner of highways.

In the old days the winters were severe and the lanes and highways filled with drifts from fence to fence driving travel into the fields. It was Mr. Lawrence who started the move that caused these unsightly and expensive fences to disappear. I cannot name all the benefactions of this wise man who seemed to have an intuition as to just how to do things right. Had we found his methods and followed them, it would have been better for all of us. His three sons, well known in Decatur and vicinity, show the thrifty, sturdy responsibility of the father and the fine traits of that queenly mother whose life shed such a blessed fragrance upon all with whom she came in contact.

Nathaniel D. Thomas

You may ask why write up a man known so well by everybody as Dr. N. D. Thomas, and with the Doctor still here to speak for himself? Pat inquired, "Fot's the wurrold to a mon whin his wife's a widdy?" Why must we wait until we are gone before we find out what people thought of us while in life? The Doctor has a sharp pen and can get back at me if I hit him too hard.

The Thomases came from one of the leading families of Kalamazoo county and settled near Huycktown in the 50's. They were distinguished in a marked degree by an ideal home life, correct language and proper conduct. While holding themselves absolutely above reproach, they were not in the least proud or exclusive. It was into the refining social atmosphere of this home that the children of the poor and ignorant were first invited on equal terms with the rich, but with the rule requiring good manners and behavior, rigidly enforced. This practice soon became general in the fine homes of the Prairie, resulting in a marked uplift to the lower stratum of society and doubtless led to some of the life combinations of later years.

Dr. Thomas was a skillful and highly successful physician of the allopathic type but not so orthodox that he could not learn and practice all the best things of the other schools of medicine. So great was the demand upon him that he was literally in the saddle or gig day and night, making long rides over almost impassable roads, through the forests, among Indians and wild beasts and in all weathers, until he was compelled to give up the work or break down under the load.

During the Civil war as men responded to the constant call for troops, they invariably came to the Doctor requesting him to look after their dependant loved ones. God knows how many bereaved families thus became a charge upon the care and bounty of this good man. Many a long ride was made in rain, mud, slush and intense cold to bring comfort, care and remedies to the afflicted, and without a thought of charging a fee. He is really a great financier who could care so well for his own family and still be the true philanthropist, "visiting the widows and fatherless in their affliction and keeping himself unspotted from the world". How do I know this? My own mother was a poor widow and while struggling to give her five children a start in life, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were a constant help, comfort and inspiration to her, often serving her with no hope of return.

Shall I tell of the buying of a large farm at the close of the war when prices were inflated, money cheap and all else dear? Of the great cost of clearing the grubs and stumps, fencing, breaking, building, equipping, educating those two boys and three girls in our best colleges and finally the burden of debt he had to carry? Need I rehearse the awful struggle which was borne by thousands when low prices, small crops, big expenses, with greenbacks at par and the interest drain taking all the margin of profits and more? This old world is full of heroes whose praises are unsung, who have fought nobly in the hard battle of life but whose recompense must await them in the world to come. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas lived pure and useful lives, scattering blessings all along the way. The world is wiser, better and happier at every point where they touched it.

The Doctor still owns the old farm and a goodly portion of the land he improved and where he lived, loved and labored so many years among his stock and growing crops, finding much satisfaction in the large measure of success which came to him. He now resides in Decatur with his daughter, Miss Jessie, who, forgetting self in her devotion to duty, taught school many years and consecrated her quiet, happy and beautiful life to the good of her parents.

LeGrand Anderson

"O happy day, that fixed my choice," loudly sang the pious old man as he rocked back in his big chair on the ample porch. He was a jolly, sturdy old fellow with a boasted line of ancestry reaching across Missouri and Kentucky and on up into the first families of Virginia. But he was a loyal Unionist and was on this particular autumn day intensely watching the great conflict then at its height between the forces of the north and the south. "Lackaday, sonny!" shouted the dear old fellow as a dirty barefoot lad appeared in the orchard path, poking the other half of a big apple into the opening just below the tattered hatbrim. Little "Dutchy," always the hero of his own stories, had a perennial appetite that astonished the neighbors and worried his mother. "When a chap like you, sir, can handle so big a chunk of johnnycake and get away with a peck of apples several times a day in the slack of his blouse shirt, he can handle chips, potatoes and ears of corn and should go to work." The argument was unanswerable and forthwith "Dutchy" got his first job at 18 cents per day and "found"—usually found in the old orchard. Not long ago he again wandered through the remnant of orchard now left and sampled apples from the old favorite tree, but somehow they had lost their old-time flavor. Maybe he could ask with the poet Hathaway:

> Is this change in them, or alas in me,
> Since forty years ago?

The Anderson plantation bordered Swift's lake, then a body of deep, clear water, now a boggy marsh fit for raising frogs, turtles and mudhens. There were two sons and two daughters—William, who for years before his death resided in Decatur, was known far and near as a philantropist, preacher and temperance advocate of great force and persistence; Redmond, a clever money-maker and capitalist, now residing in the southwestern country; Mrs. Murdock of Paw Paw, and June, an erratic character, famous over several townships.

There were lively times on the "old man" Anderson farm in those old days, especially so when the grandson LeGrand Copley came home from college for his summer vacation to make the woods ring with his jolly songs and eloquent speeches. L. G. A. is now a retired capitalist of Kansas City, but we found him the other day still an allfired good fellow and we are glad to see him on the bill for a speech at our reunion next summer at Saddlebag Lake.

LeGrand Anderson, who gave me the "L" for my name, liked to play Santa Claus to poor children all the year round and push off up stream the little life canoes with instructions in steering and paddling. He was a constant inspiration and help to everybody. His charity covered a multitude of sins. I have seen him hitch up his team on a cold winter evening to take to her humble abode across the lake the poor tired widow, whose day's work ran five a. m. till nine p. m. on butchering days, and besides her regular wages, he carried to her home such fuel, food and clothing as he knew her children needed. Why such fulsome praise of these old settlers, had they no faults? Oh maybe; but the great English bard said: "The good men do lives after them while the evil is interred with their bones."

TRUE INDIAN STORIES

Part of the history concerning the Indians of early Decatur and vicinity is based upon legend — the Battle of Lake of the Woods, perhaps, being the most romantic; however, several of our pioneers have given authentic proof of having lived and played with Indian children of early days.

Among them were two from Little Prairie Ronde, south of town. John Eckenberger was one who lived near Charleston where the country was dense wilderness. He had Indian children for playmates and from them he learned the Indian language, which he could speak as well as his own. He camped and hunted with the Indians in his youthful days. As a result he learned to be a trapper and hunter. He also learned about herbs, which proved to be of great value to him in later life.

John was a great friend of Chief Pokagon and always visited his tribe whenever possible. He reflected upon his association with the Indians with fond memories. At one time, the early settlers in this section became alarmed over a rumor that the Pottawatomies were forming a plan of attack on the whites.

John Eckenberger made a special trip under the pretense of making a friendly visit to Chief Pokagon. During the conversation, the old chief guessed his errand, and hastened to assure John that the whites had nothing to fear from his tribe.

INDIAN WILLIAMS

Daily News Jan. 31, 1908
(Has Picture)

Indian Williams, the father of Mrs. Thomas Winchester of this city is dead at his home near Hartford at the age of more than 100 years, and thus has passed away one of the oldest members of the Pokagon band of Pottawatomie Indians and the oldest reputed resident of Van Buren county.

Peter Cow-Tuck-Muck is the name by which he is known to his Indian friends, but he has for years been known as "Indian Williams."

The interesting story of his life is told in The Hartford Day Spring to which The Daily News is indebted for the accompanying picture.

Peter Catuckmuck, Sr., or "Indian" Williams as he was more familiarly known to almost every resident of this section and who was accorded the distinction of being the oldest member of the Pokagon band of Pottawatomie Indians if not the oldest resident of Van Buren county, died last Friday morning at the age of 100. He was also one of the band's most interesting characters. A Day Spring representative who visited him at his home the Sunday before his death, found the centenarian confined to his bed, emaciated and suffering severely from a dropsical affection, but a remarkable example of the wonderful vitality and longevity of his race. Speaking partly in the English and partly in the Pottawatomie language with his son as interpreter, he told the story of his life.

He was born at Detroit in the month of May, 1807, a century ago. He professed a childish recollection of Detroit, then a settlement of but a few hundred people and composed entirely of Indians and French, the only business activity being the French trading post. At the age of five years, with 140 of his tribe's people, he journeyed through the forests, over Indian trails, to the site of the present village of Athens in Calhoun County. He appeared to possess a vivid recollection of his trip, describing the method in which the effects of the band and the children, himself included, were transported upon pack ponies, the balance of the party making the journey on foot. Athens was then but a French trading post, where the Indian exchanged the furs for the meagre ware afforded by the French, and in this environment he grew to young manhood.

He recalled the "falling of the stars" in 1833 and described the hunting lodge in which he was then located on the banks of "Pine Creek," a stream in that vicinity. It was soon after this that he visited the present site of the city of Niles, the first white settlement he ever saw. Niles then boasted of nearly 300 inhabitants, and was the main trading post for the Indians of this section.

At about this time he was converted to the Catholic faith, and in lieu of the Indian name of Catuckmuck he became known by the surname of Williams. It was over 70 years ago that he was married in Silver Creek to Miss Kedasmeeleeve Saugne by the Rev. Father McCoy of Niles. She died at Rush lake 58 years ago, and he was later remarried, the second wife surviving.

After spending the few months at Watervliet he settled in the forest near Paw Paw, and after a residence there of 20 years, he came to Hartford 50 years ago. True to his early environment he retained his love of the wild and found his favorite occupation in trapping along the Paw Paw river thickets. A few years ago, with money received from the government in settlement of the Indian claims to Chicago lake front property, he purchased a forty acre farm on the river bank.

One of the most interesting reminisences was of the last Indian battle between the Pottawatomies, Ottawas and Chippewas and the western Indians which took place on the present site of Muskegon county over 70 years ago and in which the western tribes were driven out of this section. He also recalled earlier conflicts in which he participated.

Fire arms had not yet been acquired by the Indians, tomohawks and bows and arrows being the weapons used in all of them.

"Indian" Williams was intelligent, above the average of his race, and possessed a reputation for the strictest integrity. One of his peculiar characteristics was the setting of the exact day upon which he would meet an obligation, however small, and it is said that he never failed his promise. He was unable to read English, but could read a book printed in the Chippewa language, a translation of Catholic teachings, and up to the time of his death would pursue the study of the work without the aid of glasses. He was never addicted to the use of tobacco or intoxicants. He leaves four sons, Peter and Frank Williams of Hartford, and John and Michael Williams of Silver Creek and one daughter, Mrs. Thomas Winchester. His funeral was at the Catholic church in this village Monday morning, interment taking place at Rush lake.

TWO DEATHS FROM POISON

Edward Carney, jr., died at 2 o'clock Monday night and James Mahoney, jr., died Tuesday night at 11 o'clock. Both died from the effects of wood alcohol poisoning in bay rum.

Craving for stimulant they went into Frank White's barber shop with his barber, Seldon Allen, Sunday and each took a drink from the jug labeled bay rum. Ordinarily the effect from a drink of bay rum would not be serious but the label on this jug stating that the preparation contained 50 per cent of wood alcohol marked it as deadly poison. Mr. White bought it from the Collins Barber Supply house of Toledo, Ohio.

The funeral of Edward Carney will be held this afternoon at two o'clock at the home. The funeral of James Mahoney will be held at the Catholic church Friday morning at nine o'clock.

The news of these unfortunate deaths caused a sensation in our village Wednesday. The Prosecuting Attorney, Coroner and Deputy Sheriff came over from Paw Paw to investigate. They held Seldon Allen for a few hours but decided that there was no cause of action against him and that inquests were not necessary.

Allen also drank some of the bay rum and Wednesday night became so ill that it was necessary to call a physician.

DEATH OF ELIAS MORRIS

Second White Child Born in Van Buren County. A Distinguished Pioneer and Citizen

BORN MAY 11, 1832 DIED JULY 2, 1909

Elias Morris died at his home in this village on the 2nd day of July, at the age of seventy-seven years, one month and twenty-two days.

He was a son of Dolphin and Nancy Morris, the first white settlers of Decatur township, who began the erection of the first log cabin in the township on the 27th day of March, 1829 on what is now known as the old Morris homestead.

It was in this cabin that Elias Morris was born on the 11th day of May, 1832.

He was of Scotch descent, his ancestors having come to this country in colonial days. His great grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

He was the second child born in Van Buren county. The first one was a brother who lived only a few months. At the time of his death Mr. Morris was the oldest white person born in this county

He obtained the his education in the district schools in the vicinity of his home with the exception of three terms in the Wesleyan Seminary at Albion, Mich., now Albion College.

On March 12th, 1857, he was married to Charlotte Dunning, a daughter of Allen Dunning of Edwardsburg, Mich., who survives him, and who has always been to him a loving, conscientious and helpful wife. To this union three children were born; Raymond O. Morris of Kalamazoo and Dr. Carlton D. Morris of Pontiac, Mich., who still survive him, his only daughter, Jessie Welch, having passed away some fifteen years ago, She left three children, Imogene, Lottie and Dr. Charles Welch, who have been brought up and educated by their grandparents.

As a citizen Mr. Morris was exceedingly well thought of and was respected by all. He was broad minded and liberal and was ever willing to do anything in his power for the advancement of the community in which he lived.

Politically, he was a Republican of the "stalwart" kind, and until within the last few years had taken a very active part in the political affairs of his county. He was not a seeker after political preferment but was a man who contributed liberally of his time and means for the advancement of his party's interests. His influence was not only felt in this 4th congressional district but it became state wide.

About the time of his reaching manhood he bought some land on Little Prairie Ronde in Volinia township, Cass county, upon which he built his home and where he resided until some twelve years ago when he bought a home in this village, where he resided at the time of his death.

He gradually added to the land that he first bought until he was the owner of three hundred and sixty-five acres of as fine land as there is in this part of the state, situated in the townships of Decatur and Volinia, besides a beautiful home in this village. He was also a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of Paw Paw.

On Friday, July 2nd, at a little after twelve o'clock, noon, surrounded by all the members of his family he quietly passed to his final home. Thus closed a long and eventful life, well spent and replete with honor and success.

His funeral was held at his late home and was attended by a large concourse of his old friends and neighbors. The funeral sermon was by Rev. Munneke and interment was in Lakeside cemetery.

DON C. ROGERS

A Short Sketch of the Life of a Brave Soldier and a Good Man

Don Carlos Rogers was born in Cincinnatus, Cortland county, New York, December 24, 1833, and died in Chicago, Tuesday, May 5, 1908, at the residence of his son W. A. Rogers, 763 West 66th street. Although he was gradually growing weaker with the advancing years he had enjoyed fairly good health the past winter and his final illness was of but three days duration.

The remains, accompanied by his son and family, were shipped to Decatur where the funeral was held in the Universalist church Thursday afternoon. Rev. Franklin G. Varney conducted the services, taking for his subject "The Inward and the Outward Man." It was a beautiful sermon, greatly appreciated by the relatives and friends.

The choir was composed of A. E. Lawrence and Geo. Adams, Mrs. Geo. Adams and Mrs. Henry Wolcott, Mrs. Lawrence accompanying. Their selections were very appropriate, the last song, "Bury Me Near the Old Home," being true to the occasion. Mr. Rogers always loved Decatur and although for many years past he has been a resident of other places his thoughts were always turning toward this home of his younger days and here it is fitting and proper that he should find the final rest.

Burnside Post No. 27, G. A. R., attended the funeral in a body and marched to the grave in Lakeside cemetery. The G. A. R. burial service was conducted at the grave.

The old flag presented to his Company by the ladies of Decatur when it left for the war, was brought over from Paw Paw and carried by the veterans.

Del Cummings, John Sirrine, A. J. Roundy, and James Bullard of Paw Paw, and Edward Carney of Decatur, members of Mr. Rogers' Company, were honorary pall bearers.

Mr. Rogers first came to Decatur in 1854 and resided here continuously till he joined the army. He held several local offices, including that of deputy sheriff, and after returning from the army he held the office of register of deeds one term. He was married August 30, 1863, to Charlotte Hinkley to whom one son was born, William, now a resident of Chicago. Early in the seventies he went to Detroit. After a residence of some years in that city he went to Dakota and since then has made his home with his son, first in Minneapolis, then in Milwaukee, and since September last in Chicago. He was a member of E. B. Wolcott Post No. 1, G. A. R. of Milwaukee, Wis.

Chess playing was his favorite pastime and he held the championship of Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin, at the time of his residence in those states. He has met many of the noted masters of the game at home and from abroad and was considered their strongest opponent.

Besides his son and family Mr. Rogers is survived by two sisters, Mrs Edward Trowbridge of Dowagiac and Mrs. Thickstun of Cassopolis.

His War Record

Mr. Rogers' war record was one of which he could well feel proud. His enlistment is best told in his own story of his three years of faithful and valiant service. He wrote:

"Hearing that the United States flag on Fort Sumter was at half mast, I immediately opened my office for enlistments. I enlisted April 14, 1861, at Decatur, Mich. At that time I was a deputy sheriff of Van Buren county and had my office with Hiram Cole, attorney. Being Sunday, I had started for church when I met Carlton Wheeler and Orren T. Welch who were talking about General Scott being too old to take command of the army in the field. Just at this time Mr. Richardson stepped up and said that "Jeff Davis was as good a man as General Scott." I said "You should know better," and knocked him off the sidewalk, saying, "the war might as well commence in Decatur as in Charlestown." He got up and said that he "would go home and get his gun and shoot me." Henry Chamberlain was near by and told him it was "all right to go home and as soon as he got there to go to bed—not to come up town with a gun as he might lose both his life and gun." I went to my office and headed a sheet of foolscap paper for the war and signed my name to it, Chamberlain doing the same. Did not attend church—talked war and got a few boys to sign my paper.

May 1, 1861, the Lafayette Light Guards of Paw Paw was reorganized and we at Decatur joined the new organization. May 6, we went into camp at the fair grounds and had our first night's rest on straw. During May we drilled and prepared for war. June 3, our flag was at half-mast for the death of Stephen A. Douglas. June 6th I returned from Big Prairie Ronde with thirteen good boys for the Company. Went to Isaac Conners to stay over night. Just heard that our Company was to join Daniel E. Sickles' brigade on Staten Island, N. Y., and that the ladies of Decatur would present the Company with a silk flag before leaving for New York City.

The board of supervisors of Van Buren voted $1,200 to send the Company to New York and June 13th the Company left Paw Paw. About 5,000 people were at the Lawton depot to bid the company good-bye and wish them a safe return. There were many sad faces. Company wore red flannel overshirts, blue deming overalls and black oilcloth caps.

We met the Third Michigan Infantry at Detroit on their way to help save the Union. We took passage on boat for Buffalo. At Buffalo we marched to the residence of Ex-President Fillmore and received his congratulations. At Syracuse the citizens gave us an elegant dinner on the green at the City Hall Park. At New York City we were received by General Daniel E. Sickles and others and sent by boat to Staten Island. The brigade was mustered into the United States service and known as the "Sickles Excelsior Brigade."

In the battle of Williamsburg, Va., Mr Rogers was shot in the right thigh, and in the battle of Gettysburg, July, 1863, he was shot in the right foot.

He was mustered into the army with the rank of 3d sergeant, was promoted to 1st sergeant for meritorious conduct at the battle of Williamsburg; was promoted to 2d Lieutenant Co. F, January 2, 1863; was promoted to 1st Lieutenant May 20, 1863. Was discharged from the service by special order of the War department for physical disabilities from wounds received in action April 9, 1864.

Mr. Rogers completed his story of his war experiences as follows:

"I returned home and after a little time entered my brother's grocery store as a clerk, and at the same time watching the results of the war. The day after President Lincoln was shot by John Wilkes Booth, there was some little excitement in Decatur. A fellow sitting in my brother's store made some disloyal remark about the President and I took him by the coat collar and spanked his coat tails out of the store. This caused some of his friends to make some similar remarks. Then the army boys took the whole outfit to the office of the Justice of the Peace and had them take the oath of allegiance. Soon after this we found that we had missed one. He feigned sickness and was not coming. The boys immediately made an army stretcher and brought him in and had him take the oath. Thus it was that a boy with a light heart had to spank a traitor before going into the army and a traitor after coming out.

CARD OF THANKS

To Burnside Post No. 27 G. A. R. who so beautifully conducted the last rites of our father and brother and their comrade and to the friends who personally assisted we extend our sincere thanks.

W. A. Rogers and Family,
Mrs. Edward Trowbridge,
Mrs. Eva Davis,
Mrs. D. C. Thickstun.

DAVID Q. CURRY

David Curry was the son of David and Elizabeth Curry, who lived on a fine Prairie farm, that was taken from the Government on a land Grant in 1832. David Q. was born in 1839. During the years of 1860 and 1861 he attended Kalamazoo College and intended to take a course in law, but instead answered his Country's call for Troops. In 1862 he joined the famous 4'th Michigan Cavalry. He was one of 300 picked men, who were sent out to capture Jefferson Davis, and while in the skermish with the wisconsin soldiers, his horse was shot from under him. He served three years in the war, during which time he was in 96 battles and skirmishes. He came home from the war, in 1865 and went back onto the farm, and it has been his only home since.

THE HUCKLE-BERRY INDUSTRY

Largest High Bush Marsh in Michigan is Located in Hamilton Township

The huckleberry industry in this county is worthy of note. There are not only numerous small marshes that have produced big crops this season but the largest high bush marsh in the state is in this county, within seven miles of Decatur. It is located on the William H. Johnson farm, managed by G. J. Case, next to the Keeler line in Hamilton township.

The marsh contains 57 acres and this year Mr. Case will ship from 600 to 700 cases of huckleberries from it. He says he could ship 1000 cases from it if he could get them picked.

The berries are shipped direct to Chicago over the Graham & Morton boat line and are selling for $2 per crate. Mr. Case hauls them to Hills' corner two and one half miles away where they are loaded onto a Graham & Morton "schooner" and hauled to the Benton Harbor dock twenty-two miles distant. The "schooner" is a big covered wagon that makes the trip regularly and hauls from 250 to 300 cases of berries to the load.

The steamboat company takes the berries at Hills' corner and unloads them at the dock in Chicago for nine cents per case.

DECATUR HOOP AND LUMBER CO.

Pays Out in Wages Over $200 Per Week

The Decatur Hoop and Lumber Company has become one of the most important industries in our village.

The company is now employing 21 men and pays out in wages over $200 per week.

Their average production is 100,000 hoops per week and one week they made 134,000. They have fifteen carloads of hoops now on hand but the market is beginning to improve and they will soon be sold.

S. G. Hirst is the successor of the late E. L. Rettig as manager of the company. He has moved his family here from Alverton, Ohio, and will push the business this summer.

NO NIGHT OPERATOR

Michigan Central Denies Request of Decatur Petitioners.

Michigan Central Division Superintendent M. T. Wright and Train Master D. J. Hackett of Jackson paid a visit to Decatur Monday in answer to the petition of the business men to restore the night telegraph service.

Mr. Wright did not hold out much encouragement that the prayer of the petitioners would be granted, but consoled them by saying that the Decatur night man had been transferred to Lawton to make the required three shifts for that station.

The Company has so arranged its business that it has no further need of a night telegrapher at this station and Decatur people will have to apply to the Western Union Company if they want the service restored.

We may be thankful that we are favored with the day service, Mattawan, Glenwood and Pokagon haven't any telegraph operator at all any more. Buchanan and Three Oaks are in the same class with Decatur.

Allen Baker has been promoted to the position of Station Agent at Mattawan and Leslie Sweetland succeeds him as the night man at this station.

Fritzburg

Cute Knolls' handsome black colt is convalescing from the mumps.

Supervisor Conway has tapped his maple sugar bush of about fifty trees.

Fundy Shoudy came over from Benton Harbor on official business last week.

Corwin has finally conceded 'Onest John Wassman to be a resident of Fritzburg.

Dr. Friday has gone into the campaign for the nomination for Health Officer on the democratic ticket.

Bunk Richmond is looking for a saw mill to buy, not a cross-cut saw and horse, but a big one to saw up lumber.

Arkansaw Knolls offers the use of his new barn for public meetings to discuss the Primary Election question.

Decker Shoudy's famous bay mare is on the program for a whistling solo at the next meeting of the village council.

Lieut. Spike Conway has notified the village council that he and his Black Diamond horse will plant nine hundred acres of beans this spring.

Lieut. Bret H. Cockett of the Foster Corners suburb is slated for the nomination for Supervisor of Hamilton township on the republican ticket.

John Wassman received a car load of corn from Jackson last week and had it hauled out to his mill Friday and Saturday. He put an ad. in the Republican and sold it all in a few days.

A report is circulating in Fritzburg to the effect that the village clerk challenged one of the Rhodus horse-trading witnesses to meet him in mortal combat, the weapons being their fists and all rules set aside. The clerk put up his $200 watch against ten dollars on the result and then made a peaceful settlement with his opponent outside of the ring. Tickets to the mill were selling rapidly and the citizens are disatisfied and threaten to elect a new clerk.

FOUND HIGHEST POINT IN PORTER

Graham and Mahoney Drove Well There 135 Feet Deep

John L. Graham and George Mahoney drove a tubular well for Robert Woods of Porter last week.

The well is located on the top of a hill at the highest point in his grape vineyard. It is also the highest point in Porter towtship and 40 feet higher than Prospect Hill in Paw Paw.

It was a difficult job and took the drivers eleven days. They went down 97 feet and broke the pipe, losing 32 feet of it. Then they drove 135 feet before they struck water.

Mr. Woods has a forty acre grape vineyard and excellent prospects for a big crop. He will use the well for spraying and pump with a gasoline engine.

East Valley

H. H. Benjamin has painted his barn.

Eighth grade diplomas were given to Ora Jackson and Eleanor McVey of the East Valley school last week.

Fred Forbes, director of the East Valley school, completed the school census last week. He found 58 of the school age, between five and twenty years. This is the smallest number in the district in ten years.

Willie Hughes was leaning against the fence sobbing bitterly when a sympathetic neighbor came along the other day. The cause of his grief was the serious illness of his pet colt, a fine little roadster that Willie has been driving this year. The horse has a bad case of distemper.

A FEW REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD USE DECATUR FLOUR

Its as Good as Any Other Flour On the Market and We Consider It Much Better Than Many

Because—firstly, it is scientifically and hygenically milled on the latest and best milling machinery with 20 years of grain handling and milling experience.

Secondly, it is made from the very Choicest Michigan Wheat, every bushel of which is carefully inspected before using. Many large mills are compelled to use wheat from elevators where it is mixed, many kinds together, some good and some very bad.

Buying as we do eliminates all bad wheat and only the good is made into flour. With equal milling facilities this way cannot help making better flour.

Many large mills try to make every ounce of flour that is in the wheat. In doing this it seems to us that some flour of inferior quality must be made.

Our White Lily brand is the result of carefully selected wheat scientifically and carefully milled and by many considered the very best flour on the market.

Our Superior brand is equally as carefully handled and is composed of Michigan wheat flour and a large per cent of the Celebrated Gold Medal and is especially adapted to bread baking, though the following may be truthfully said of it:

Good for Bread or Pie or Cake,
Good for everything you Bake.

Thirdly, Decatur for Decatur. We feel that the Decatur Roller mills is a good institution. It is a benefit to the village and the surrounding country. The Decatur Milling Co. is one of the leading contributors and assistants in all movements for general improvements and the uplifting of the moral and social standing of the village.

We believe in the economic administration of public affairs and heartily approve of the actions of the present officials.

We believe in loyalty to home institutions and industry and sincerely hope for your protection and support. Not in pity, but through real merit, we solicit your business.

SKETCH OF MR. AND MRS. JAMES BRAYBROOKS, SR.

"I am going to marry that girl." The speaker was a young man and the girl spoken of was one of two girls that were passing along the road in Old England many years ago. Upon being questioned as to which one of the girls he meant, he replied, "The one with the black eyes." Little did this young man dream that the words that he uttered at the time would prove true, and that the one with the black eyes would, indeed, in time become his wife. But such is the case, and today they are known as Mr. and Mrs. James Braybrooks, Sr. And because the greater part of those lives have been lived in the bounds of Van Buren county, and because they are still with us and able to receive our congratulations, we undertake to write this sketch of those lives which are so full of suggestions for the youth that is standing at the other end of the avenue of life.

James Braybrooks was born in Woodhurst, England, February 14, 1822. Jane Simmons was born in Camberhire, England, April 16, 1823 Their first meeting occurred while Miss Simmons and her companion were passing along the road with a threshing machine. This today may seem a strange thing, but it was a very common thing in those times in England. At this meeting the words were spoken that we quoted above.

October 13, 1846, in the church in the town of Elem, England, his prophetic words were made perfect and the black eyed girl became Mrs, James Braybrooks. Two years following this marriage were spent on English soil, and then came the "Call of American Opportunity," and Mr. Braybrooks, leaving wife and child and all that was dear to his heart, started for the land of Promise. After six weeks upon the Atlantic he landed in New York in October of the year 1848. He then went westward until he came to Ohio. Here he stopped and after laboring and saving for two years he was enabled to send sufficient means for the journey of wife and three year old child This child is is now the wife of Mr. James Brown of Lawrence. This trip required four weeks upon the waters. Today the same journey is being made in about five days, at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour.

Now that all were here and united again, with willing hearts and hands they began life anew and many are the incidents of those pioneer days that come to us, giving us new courage and determination to meet boldly the obstacles that may beset our paths.

Time passed on and by hard labor and rigid economy that was taught to them by the hard hand of English necessity, they were soon laying by a little money for the future Again, we find them on the move for better opportunity, as they start out for the great west, of which Michigan was then a part Journeying and laboring they came on. We see them starting from Monroeville, Ohio, to Perrysburg, then by boat upon the Maumee river, from Perrysburg, Ohio, to Detroit, Mich , a two or three days journey. Afoot and by rail road they go to Pontiac Here they visit with a friend that crossed the ocean with Mrs. Braybrooks Then to Southfield Center they came where Mr. Braybrooks rented a house and searched for work. After staying three weeks and getting only three days' work in that time, they moved on to Northville Center. Here fortune smiled more genially, for he found work that lasted five months. This took up the whole summer and in the fall he started again and made the final lap of the trip, reaching Lawrence in the fall of the year 1852. Since that time Lawrence has been their continuous home Then with all the hardships of travel they still managed to save a little money and when they came to Lawrence they had one hundred and eight dollars laid by. Eight dollars were used in purchasing a fat hog and the remainder was soon invested in land.

The first land that they owned was a forty lying east of Lawrence, in the Crawford district But this was soon sold and they purchased the old homestead southwest of Lawrence, where they resided and labored for forty years. When they moved to Lawrence about ten years ago they had accumulated 280 acres of some of Van Buren county's best land Today they are residing on their little plot of two acres in the southern limits of the village of Lawrence, all alone. This is not because they could not have the care of the loving hands of their children but because it is their choice to remain alone.

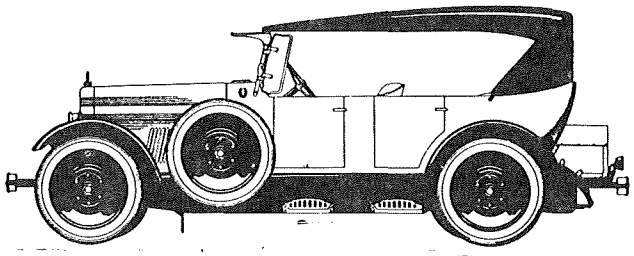
And now Mr. Braybrooks at the age of 85 and Mrs. Braybrooks at the age of 84 are in a position to answer that sometimes vexing question, "Is Life Worth Living."

Eight children were born to this union, six of whom are still living, two having ventured across the tide in their van There are also twenty-seven grandchildren and fourteen great grandchildren.

Mr. Braybrooks cast his first vote for Mr Lincoln, he being the first man that he felt safe in voting for. We are wondering how many voters today are as conscientious in their voting, to see to it that the man of their choice is a safe man. It is an easy matter to guess Mr. Braybrooks' politics; 'and it is a matter of congratulation upon his good judgment that he has never since seen any good reason to regret or to change, and we testify that he is and always has been a staunch republican in principle

In the history of such lives as these there is much to make the calamity howler take to the woods or hide his head. When you hear the next man talking hard times, just ask how he would like to change back to the time when two little girls, aged ten and thirteen, had to walk to town carrying ten dozen eggs, to receive only three cents a dozen for them, just the price of a good broom, then taking the broom upon their shoulders walk home again. Or how much would we enjoy a journey today if we had to ride on a railroad made with wooden rails with a strap of iron nailed on the top. Such were the times and condition of things when Mr. and Mrs Braybrooks came to Michigan.

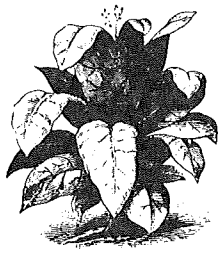
One more thing that is interesting to know and that is, that today there is a school house located upon one corner of their farm in south Lawrence, that is destined to keep their name fresh in the memory of the people for years to come, a sort of monument to their name —The Braybooks School.



BREAK TELE-PHONE POLE

And Oldsmobile Runs as Well as Ever

Frank Stapleton and George Nesbitt went out to the latter's farm Sunday morning and returned with a load of pears. Frank was driving his Olds runabout and a few rods this side of Foster's corners, in turning away from a frightened horse the machine crash into a telephone pole breaking it in two places. The occupants and contents of the automobile were strewn upon the ground and the front of the machine was wrecked. Fortunately Messrs. Stapleton and Nesbitt were uninjured and the game little Oldsmobile brought them on home with but little delay.



MEMORIES

There's a marvelous mirror in the half-way house of life. It is crystalized "mist of years, made half of smiles and half of tears". You sit before it in perfect quiet, your mind like a sensitized plate before the camera and slowly, bit by bit, to the most trivial detail life's roll of films passes before you. You see the waving of a grass blade, you smell that old fashioned puckered rose that blossomed under the window. You dig the moss away from the first ground nut with eager fingers and crunch the dainty with plenty of good black wood loam between sturdy young teeth. There's not a detail left out of that marvelous record and the little soul that was you, loves and hopes and fears and sobs and smiles for you, the sober faced audience of one. Every thought and even the hidden springs of action are laid bare before you as from God. One should tenderly love this little child of long ago.

I have been looking into this magic mirror to find when this awful thing called war first entered into the life of the little girl that was me. Away back in the mists there stands a tall straight Michigan lad with arms so strong he could toss little girls up in the air like a feather, and he had the kindest gray eyes in the world. He must have been about twenty years old and his name was Webster Rowe. His father was the village doctor and they lived right next to the village lawyer who was the great big father of the little girl that used to be me. When does a little girl begin her hero worship and learn to adore strength and courage? Before she is out of long dresses I have not a doubt. At any rate this little girl who used to be me knew all about it.

She would not change places with even the princess who sat on a throne. She had a throne, too—it was up on Webster's shoulder. He could toss one up so easy and hold one safe with his big hand. Down the path he would canter through the garden past the peach trees, over the brook and back again to mother baking pies in the kitchen. "Here is a nice plump loaf all ready to bake", he would say, and into the oven went the head of the little girl that was me. What happiness that any one so big and tall and splendid should want to bake a dumpy little thing with nothing but some baby curls and a dimple or two to commend her to the royal favor.

And then one day he came wearing such a pretty new coat, all blue with bright shiny buttons. He lifted the little girl and set her on his knee. She felt of the big, shiny buttons and traced the letters on them with her finger. Webster put back the curls and held her round face in both his big hands. "Little woman, I'm going to the war," he said. "When I come home I shall be a general maybe, and I will build you a house and then I shall marry you, little lady." That was very nice. Anything was nice that Webster did. Next morning the boys in blue went marching down the village street. The sun shone on the ends of their guns and on the bright cans they wore by their sides. The little girl sat on the top board of the fence with Webster's mother and mine both holding on to her skirts. Webster laughed out of his eyes as he went by keeping step to the pretty music. Down the street, across the old red bridge, along the country road and out of sight they went, and all the mothers and the little girls stayed behind. Webster's mother cried and cried, and so did mine. But the little girl, that was me, rocked her dolly to sleep. "When he comes home he will build us a house," she sang to herself over and over again, to a funny little tune she made up for herself, just as little girls do to day.

There was something the matter at Webster's house. All the women went in and when they came out their eyes were all red. Mother said Webster was dead. The little girl was sorry because they all cried. If only they knew about that house he was coming home to build; but little girls cannot tell all they know, even to comfort mothers who cry.

A wagon came from the railroad town, the very town the soldiers marched to when they went away. The man drove up to Webster's house and they lifted out a long box. It was so heavy all the neighbor men had to help. They carried it into Webster's mother and shut the door. The little girl was glad because of that big present that had come to Webster's mother. Now she would not cry any more. Mother came home, her eyes were so red you could hardly see the brown in them. She brought out the best little white slip, the one for Sunday, out of the bottom drawer of the bureau.

REMINISCENCES

This excellent toast was written by Clyde Parmelee of Chicago, a graduate of the Decatur High School, class of '83, for the Decatur Alumni Association. Mr. Parmelee expected to be present to deliver it but was prevented at the last moment by business and it was read by Miss Ida Trowbridge. The toast is published by request;

Chicago, June 10, '08

Dear Fellow Alumni of our loved school:

We meet tonight to celebrate an event that should be fondly cherished by everyone who has gone out from its friendly walls, into the great busy world, throbbing with its myriad of activities, and testing to the full of our real metal. How our minds revert to those happy days, now long gone, when we were students in this institution. How many pleasant memories flock to our assistance, and remind us of those cherished days; and of the blessed privileges of student life. How our hearts go out in gratitude toward faithful teacher, and generous citizen and patron, who made these opportunities a valued realization. How we have carried with us down through the years, which under a busy life have passed all too swiftly, the memories of many kindly deeds performed by the citizens of our school-home town.

This was as bread cast upon the waters. What an inspiration these things have been to us, as we have trudged along life's road. We have never forgotten the words of admonition from the lips of our faithful principal by the looks of reproof, or kindly smile of approval from our other instructors, or the genial hand shake or word of encouragement from the school board, or the friendly visitor; and so we say all hail to our school! — and so we come, from near and from far, with greetings for our Alma Mater.

Comrades of '83, twenty-five years have passed, since we, a class of eight boys and girls, received our diplomas from the High School of Decatur, a pleasant village in Southern Michigan with no greater attraction to commend it than the high grade of its school, its ample churches, and the high order of its citizenship, Among the last, we shall ever cherish the memory of our faithful principal, Prof. Henry Upton, and our equally faithful preceptress, Miss Abbie Pearce. The former has long since been called to his reward, but the latter still lives and labors faithfully on. It was the prerogative of all our faithful teachers, to explore and examine into the minds of such as came to them for instruction; and well do we remember how thoroughly some of them performed this duty. Some day there would be rich finds—like unto mining, and as unexpected—when a nugget of knowledge would pop out of a brain that had heretofore seemed barren of wit or wisdom.

As a class our teachers praised us, but did not leave the impression that we excelled all the classes that had gone before. At this we were not downcast, for we had the consciousness that we had within our ranks both genius and talent, wit and wisdom, although in its incipiency, and it was years before the waiting public discovered the germ.

Thoughts are things, and words are power. As we went forth with our thimbleful of knowledge, thinking it enough and thinking made it so; how large did the world seem to us then, with its broad avenues leading out in every direction to greatness! How high were our hopes, how lofty our ambitions, how exalted our ideals! But we have gleaned in the field of experience, and tonight, bringing our trophies and humbly laying them on the altar of our Alma Mater, in the spirit of the motto of the class of '83, "I serve" and in the the words of Kipling we ask, that "Only the Master shall praise and only the Master blame."

To our young minds a quarter of a century ago the world was large. Tonight, as we place our ear at the simple device, the telephone, and hear a voice a thousand miles away, we realize how very small was our world of '83, before the Wizzard awakened the springs of genius that gave the world new sounds and new lights.

The name of Thomas Edison is one to conjure with. In twenty-five years the mind of man has enlarged and broken the bonds that bound him to his purse. This is the "Evolution of Dodd" in manifestation. Educational methods have outgrown our day. The great Universities East and West show the marvelous growth of mind. Rockefeller, with his far-seeing instinct, and with the millions of money of the common people, has built better than he know. Rich harvests will be reaped from the Chicago University as the years go by. Andrew Carnegie, too, is a product of the twentieth century who builds libraries in such a way as not to pauperize the people. Knowing full well the deteriorating influence of a large gift to individuals or communities, he has made wise provisions by which each recipient must contribute a like sum. No doubt he is familiar with the story of the lazy man who, when his neighbors refused to feed him longer, asked them to bury him alive. As they were on their way to the cemetery, a stranger intercepting the procession requested an explanation of the unusual proceeding and was told the facts of the case. "Oh if that is all, I will give him a bushel of corn," The man sat up in his coffin and said, "Stranger, is it shelled?" "No," he replied, "but I have a sheller and you can use it." He dropped back and said, "Drive on, boys." This is an extreme case of too much charity pauperizing, but extreme cases prove the rule. Other great souls are working unitedly in every city to save the children from becoming criminals, and thus preserve the nation from wreck and poverty.

The high tide of education rolls on. In the world of science, Luther Burbank, through patient study and experiment, has caused astonishment by the change he has brought about in improving plant life. Dr. Leon Landone, an English scientist, catching the idea, purposes to try it on children to develop two brain cells where there is now but one. From twenty thousand school children in Los Angeles he will select twelve on which to prove his theory. This school of experiment will be located at Hollywood; a suburb of Los Angeles. We must not lose sight of this latest project to improve the human race. At the same time Prof. Loeb is measuring and weighing chemicals and making selections to find the life elements of the sea urchin. He affirms that when the chemicals are in the right proportions and subject to the right temperature, life will spring forth, and Lo! God creates and man recreates.

O yes, the world has grown since '83, and we are enjoying the pleasant sensation of looking forward twenty-five years to hear our grand-children poke fun at us for having been born in the nineteenth century when everything was so crude, when our fastest ships today can only make the trip from New York to Liverpool in four days and twenty hours. While they sail the air and drop bouquets on the passing vessel, and 'ere the Captain can wave a "Thank you," they are out of sight. Oh, well! We will do what we can, and continue to carry the motto "I serve" in our heart of hearts, and try and be satisfied, as we look backward tonight, to leave with you this beautiful sentiment of the poet:

"Let me today do something that shall take
A little sadness from the world's vast store,
And may I be so favored as to make
Of joy's too scanty sum a little more.

Let me not hurt by any selfish deed
Or thoughtless word the heart of foe or friend;
Nor would I pass, unseeing, worthy need
Or sin by silence when I should defend.

However meagre be my worldly wealth,
Let me give something that shall aid my kind,
A word of courage or a thought of health
Dropped as I pass, for troubled hearts to find.

Let me tonight look back across the span
'Twixt dawn and dark, and to my conscience say,
Because of some good act to beast or man,
The world is better that I lived today."

THE SAINTS' CAMPMEETING

Ten Days at Grand Junction by Mrs. Mary McCormick Rumbaugh

A STORMY NIGHT

A the request of our editor we will write about the Saint's campmeeting and how it is conducted. We will try to give you some idea of how they work and what their plans are.

In the first place the Saints take only the bible for their guide, and while God lives we don't need anything else. It alone will lead men from earth to heaven: no man made conference, no class book, not even the scratch of a pen. By the way, you don't have to join any thing to get to heaven.

A company of us attened the Grand campmeeting. It is 28 miles Junction from here. It was a ten days' meeting with the best of order, no disturbances at all.

There is a tabernacle which holds about 600 people. The Saints' buildings on the grounds on which the people are tented are all of lumber. There were only two cloth tents on the grounds, Mr. Palmer's and our own.

The first two nights terrible wind storms came upon us. The roar and rumble of thunder, and flash after flash of lightning made it frightful. The first night was the worst. Every little while it seemed as though our tent would be torn from its fastenings and lifted into mid-air. It was at the lonely midnight hour and the sharp flashes of lightning followed by the inky blackness made the bravest of us shudder. Mr. Rumbaugh leaped out of the bed, grabbed the ridge pole and above the din of the thunder he sang "Whiter than Snow."

But just at that time I was not thinking much about snow, we were having plenty of rain. I was afraid we would surely have to part with our tent for the wind was blowing a gale. I got down to the ropes and pole below and hung onto the tent with all my might.

For an hour we held our frail residence to the ground by main strength until the wind and rain finally subsided. We did have our hands full to keep our tent with us. Mrs. Simmons and others who had buildings to live in came in the next morning to see if we were alive. They said they thought of us and got up and came down stairs, for the wind was so great that it shook the buildings.

Well, the next night the rain and wind came onto us again, but we all escaped without much trouble this time.

There were 23 preachers at the campmeeting and we did not pick out any one of them to take the pulpit or to preach. They all sat in the congregation. The Saints all sang the songs of Zion and then prayed and then sang again, and sometimes one would preach and sometimes another.

When one would start out to deliver his message there was no end to it. Seemed as though it were like the days of old. In those days they had rolls and they'd keep unrolling and it seemed as though there were no place to stop. They read and study the bible, but a Saint never was known to have written sermons. They go far beyond that. They all go to head quarters and get a hearing from their heavenly father. The bible says "Open your mouth wide and I'll fill it." Well, that's the way the Saints all do.

I have seen a poor preacher stand behind his pulpit before a crowded house and a wind storm would come along and, lo and behold, the man's written sermon was scattered all about. Therefore he lost track of the thought he had written down. Sad state of things. It would have been better for him if he had been a man of God.

The meetings began every morning at six o'clock. At nine Young People's meeting was held in the grove nearby, also Children's meeting at the same time in a tent, led by Miss Jessie Osborn of Hamilton, assisted by others. Preaching began at 10:30 and lasted till noon, then after service dinner, and preaching at two and at seven.

Two boy preachers were there, one was twenty-one and the other seventeen. Their father was a wonderful preacher. When he would preach he would hold crowds for hours at a time. He was a poor drunken wreck, soul and body. He tried to be a man but failed many times. He said, "I was a traitor doomed to fire, yet my injured Creator has snatched me from the flames by the costly sacrifice of his own dear son." He finally changed masters and became the child of a King. His name is W. Brown and his home is Hedrick, Iowa.

His two sons did a great deal of preaching. I never did hear such preaching from boys. The words came out of their mouths so fast it was something like Niagara Falls. They held the people's strict attention. There were a number of other preachers who helped to roll the old chariot along.

About forty were baptised; not sprinkled but put under water—by the way there is a lake near camp.

We had a fine boarding house. The tables were set and all were welcome three times a day. They had three long tables all filled, also a small box called "free will offering" on each table. People were welcome to put something into the box to help set the table, but all were welcome to eat if they had nothing.

After the meeting closed, Mr. and Mrs. Wraight took us to their lovely home in Bloomingdale, nine miles distance, where we spent many pleasant hours. By the way, we did enjoy the shortcake she made. It was fine. He took us to the depot, about two miles from his home, and we got there just in time to catch our train. We stopped at Kalamazoo and were very kindly received at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lowell. A fine dinner and then we took the three o'clock train for home.

After the campmeeting a few meetings were held here at the Saints' chapel. Mrs. Jane, who was on her way to Virginia and then to the sunny south, her native land, was here. She with some others came from the campmeeting. There were two other Saint preachers here, one from Covert, Mich., by the name of Chapen, the other a black man by name of Ritcherdon. His home is in Reform, Alabama. He has been a slave, and Mrs. Jane's mother was also a slave.

By the way, speaking of this woman's going to Virginia reminds me that my father was raised in that place and born in Kentucky, and at the age of 27, married in Plainwell, Mich., at the home of our mother and came here and settled for life.

They came here when there was no depot and no railroad and only a few shanties on the stage of action. Seven of us children were born here and Decatur is the only place we ever lived. It is near and dear to us. Although we have traveled far and wide, this is the dearest spot to me.

Father was the first stone mason here. He was a cooper, too, and also owned a brick kiln on the Congdon farm, a mile north of the village.

But my husband says, "you are off from your subject, better commence where you left off." Well, where did we leave off? The colored man thinks of buying here. He don't like the south. He says the rest of his people would leave if they had the money. At his home in Reform, Alabama, the white men whipped a white man for teaching the colored children and gave him a certain length of time to leave town.

In a town called Hartsell, Alabama, were a company of white Saints and black Saints, but they held meetings at different chapels. The white people of the world would not let them meet together. One night a colored preacher stepped into the pulpit at the white Saints' meeting and began to preach, and outside white people of that town came those armed with guns and began to fire into the chapel. The Saints all ran and made their escape the best way they could, and all this commotion because the black man wanted to preach to the whites.

Methinks the poor white people of the south won't have much time to devote to killing the black people when this old world is on fire. They will have their hands full attending to their own business.

By the way, when we were down in the sunny south last winter we were afraid to speak to the colored people; we did not know how soon some white man would shoot us down. We had to be careful and watch.

THE BATTLE OF LAKE OF THE WOODS

Being an account of a desperate conflict between the tribes of American Indians, and the only known battle ever fought in the county of Van Buren.

Michigan sends out the pleasant word to all the world,— "If thou seekest a beautiful peninsula, behold it here." And southwestern Michigan adds another line,— "If thou seekest a most beautiful part of this beautiful peninsula, behold it here.

Of all the fair states of the union, none surpasses Michigan, and of all the favored counties of Michigan, none quite equals Van Buren.

Typically rural, its population varies, but little. In 50 years it has neither increased nor decreased perceptably. A century ago venturesome young men from the east began to follow the Indian trails through the forests of the then unorganized townships and to take up land from the government. They cleared it of its native timber, tilled the fertile land and established homes.

Perhaps if they were doing the clearing today they would leave more of the stately timber standing, especially that which surrounded the numerous lakes, for it would have made the land more profitable to the owners for summer homes than as fields for crops.

Lake of the Woods is one of the best known lakes in the county. It is located in the townships of Decatur and Hamilton and when named was surrounded by heavy timber. It was a beautiful body of water, nestling deep in the forest, the favorite haunt of the elk, the deer, the badger, the otter, the mink, the wild turkey and many other animals and birds. The few lonely trees shown in this picture give no indication that the Lake earned its name by being in fact the lake of the woods.

The first white man who settled in Van Buren county built his log cabin in Decatur township, 119 years ago this spring. For centuries before this the place had been a favorite habitation of the Indian.

The lake and all the surrounding country was populated by these original inhabitants, and their arrow heads, stone axes, hammers etc. have been picked up by the bushel. They are still to be found as the soil is

THE CHALLENGE

There is a tradition, handed down from the earliest pioneers, that some 200 years before the white people came here to live,—a terrible battle was fought on and around the Lake of the Woods, between three tribes of Indians and that one of them was utterly exterminated.

The Pottawatamie and Chippewa tribes then occupied this section of the country. They lived together in friendship and peace and were allied to resist any outside aggressor. But one time a strange tribe appeared, coming from somewhere in the west and gave the "Potts" and "Chips" notice that they could either move out and leave the country to them or be compelled to remain as slaves of the invaders. If the two tribes would do neither then they would be compelled to fight and take the consequences, the strange tribe being much the stronger.

The two friendly tribes decided that they might as well fight it out and be killed as to be driven away from their homes, so laid their plans for battle and agreed that if they had to go to the happy hunting grounds they would take as many of the strangers as possible with them.

The Pottawatomies seemed to have good generals as well as good fighters, for before the fight began they detached two parties as strong as they could spare and sent them around the lake to take a position near the little bay where the inlet enters, and remain there carefully concealed until a certain signal was given. Then they were to appear suddenly and attack the enemy in the rear and flank.

They had no big cannon or machine guns, but they accomplished the same purpose with bows and arrows, stone axes, clubs and any other instrument of war that would crack a skull or sink a boat.

THE ATTACK

On the day the battle was fought the home tribes were posted in the woods and in their canoes on the side of the lake nearest the site of the present village of Decatur, while a strong force was on the side near the outlet.

The strangers began their attack early in the morning with the expectation that they would annihilate their enemies quickly and celebrate the victory with a feast at noon.

But the Pottawatomies and Chippewas had other plans. They knew that they must either win or die, and they were not quite ready to die. They fought their best amid flying arrows and war whoops.

By midday the lake was littered with overturned canoes and bodies of Indians. The home tribes fought bravely and for a while held their own, but gradually the superior numbers of the invaders began to prevail. It is said that every Indian on the island was either killed or badly wounded, and the others were being pressed back onto shore and into the woods.

THE VICTORY

Then there in the very thickest of the fight the signal was given and the reserves came dashing out from the little bay on the north shore of the lake. Before the invaders knew what was coming, a fleet of canoes loaded with fresh warriors, thirsting for the fight, struck them from the rear and flanks, while those in front who had been fighting all day, received new courage and attacked the enemies with renewed ferocity.

The strangers seeing their expected victory turning into defeat, were stricken with panic, their canoes were wrecked and sunk, and all who succeeded in reaching the shore were hunted down and killed without mercy, for no quarters were given on either side.

Before sundown the battle was over, The Potts and the Chips remained in possession of their home territory and for many years afterward lived here in peace, while the invading tribe was utterly exterminated.

It was a great victory but was won at a great cost, for the best warriors of the home tribes gave up their lives in the struggle and it was many years before more warriors could grow up to take their places.

So ended the battle of Lake of the Woods, the greatest battle ever known to be fought within the boundaries of the present county of Van Buren.

The Sunday School Convention

Pursuant to published programme, the 19th annual meeting of the Van Buren County Sunday School Associa- convened at the Presbyterian church in this village last Tuesday at 2:30 p. m.

The representation from such portions of the county as have township organizations was very good but other parts of the county were but meagerly represented. There are nine unorganized townships in the county and some means should be devised to get them interested in county and state work.

The session was opened with devotional exercises conducted by J. H. Hammond, pastor of the Christian church at this place. Rev. W. Prouty, pastor of the Decatur M. E. church, spoke some appropriate words of welcome response to which, in the absence of Rev. Anna Barton, who was on the programme for that duty, was made by President Free, and G. W. Myers of Paw Paw.

"Are there places in the county where new schools ought to be organized and are there weak schools that need help by the convention," led by President Free called forth some very interesting discussion and might have profitably occupied more time than the convention had to spare for the topic.

Dr. Kneeland of Benton Harbor, musical director of the convention, sang a beautiful solo, "Guide Us with Thy Heavenly Light," and sang it in a way that was highly satisfactory to his listeners.

"The graded System in the Sunday School and the Advisability of Written Examinations," by Mrs. E. A. Wilson of Paw Paw, was an excellent paper and very instructive and called forth considerable discussion.

The evening session consisted of a song service led by Dr. Kneeland followed by an interesting platform meeting, during which the Dr. treated the audience to to another pleasing solo, "Glory to Thee, My God this Night.

The morning session opened with a largely increased attendance from abroad. Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev Henry Geerlings, pastor of the Decatur Presbyterian church. This was followed by the annual reports of the secretary and treasurer and short reports from the various different Sunday schools that had representatives present.

The remainder of the morning was mainly occupied by answering the large number of questions that were propounded through the "question box." Some of these quetions related to matters of importance to Sunday school work and elicited valuable instruction and information by way of reply. Other questions were of a character out of place and foreign to the occasion and, although of a stereotyped nature and invariably propounded at every opportunity, in season and out of season, are productive of no good and might better have remained unasked.

The afternoon was begun with a song service led by Dr. Kneeland which was followed by an excellent paper on "The Greatest Need in our Sunday Schools," written by Elder I. H. Durfee of Bloomingdale, and, in the absence of the author, read by G. W. Myers. The writer contended that efficient workers was the great need. The paper was followed by quite a vigorous discussion, the prevailing sentiment being that better organization and teachers' meetings were two of the available means by which better laborers might be obtained.

Rev. E. M. Stephenson of South Haven, gave a talk on "Missions," referring particularly to the Central African field as a most promising locality for missionary work. He used a map to illustrate his talk which was very entertaining and instructive.

During the session, Dr. Kneeland sang "Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me" and "Calvary" greatly to the delight of the audience.

The nominating committee reported officers as follows: President, J. [illegible]; secretary, L. G. Brewart; treasurer, G. W. Myers, together with an executive committee and a vice-president in each township. Report adopted.

The principal features of the evening session were a brief and instructive address by Rev. W. C. McCarthy of Lawton, on "Scripture Reading", and a keen, incisive and wonderfully interesting lecture by Rev. H. M. Ford of Hillsdale, president of the state Sunday school association, on "The Future Man and How to Make Him." Mr. Ford's talk was frequently interrupted by applause and was highly appreciated by all who heard him. He called upon all who favored the present local option law in preference to the former system of regulating the traffic to manifest the same by rising, whereupon the large audience —the church was packed—rose to its feet en masse.

A strong resolution was adopted against opening the world's fair on Sunday and the secretary instructed to forward a copy thereof to the managers of that institution. A resolution was also adopted thanking the people of Decatur for their generous hospitality to their numerous visitors. The next annual convention will be held in Paw Paw.

All in all, the convention was a great success from beginning to end. The church was beautifully arranged and decorated for the occasion; the citizens of this place vied with each other in making everything pleasant and agreeable for their guests and their kindness and cordiality will not soon be forgotten.

JOHN ALDEN'S HOME AND RACE

Old Homestead at Duxbury Still in Possession of Descendents of John and Priscilla, After 270 Years

PRESENT OWNER AND OTHER ALDENS OF TODAY

[Written by Henrietta Freeman]

The fact that the old Alden homestead at Duxbury, where John Alden with his Puritan wife, Priscilla, settled in 1631, has recently passed into the hands of another branch of this family, lends renewed interest to the old landmark. More especially because the present owner announces his intention of rescuing the place from its somewhat dilapidated condition, and converting it into a mecca for all patriotic Americans, filling the ancient house with accumulated art and historical treasures directly associated with the Alden family, some of them reaching back to the time of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins.

Standing on the summit of Captain's Hill—so named because it formed a part of an early grant to Capt. Miles Standish—in the southeast part of Duxbury, one will see spread out the pleasant landscape where, more than 275 years ago, the Pilgrims laid out the colony of Plymouth. Duxbury was the second town incorporated in the colony, being laid out in 1637, but previous to that date several families had settled there. Some years before John Alden had come to Duxbury to live, and there on his grant of 169 acres had built his house near Eagle-tree pond, so called from the oak trees in the region, which were a favorite resort for eagles. To this day some of the old oak trees stand. From that time the old homestead at Duxbury has remained in the Alden family, descending regularly from father to son. During this period of 266 years it is a remarkable fact that but two different houses have been occupied by these descendants of John Alden—the one built by the Pilgrim himself, and the one now standing, which is said to be the oldest habitable house in the United States. It was built in 1653 by Capt. Jonathan Alden, the third son of John Alden, who was born about 1627, and lived on the paternal domain which he inherited by the will of his father, who came to reside with him on the completion of the house now standing there, and for thirty-five years dwelt under its roof. The present occupant of the old house at Duxbury is John W. Alden, a direct descendant of the seventh generation from Capt. Jonathan Alden. He was born at the old homestead, as were his father and grandfather and all his paternal ancestors before him. Up to a few months ago he believed himself to be the head of the Alden family in this country. Owing to reverses of fortune, however, he and his brother, who owned the place jointly, were compelled to part with it, and there was a prospect that the old place, after remaining in the Alden family for more than 250 years, would pass into the hands of strangers to be used for museum purposes. Just as matters had reached this crisis it happened that Mr. Alden received a letter from a cousin in St. Louis, Mo., whom he had never seen—John Tolman Alden—a successful manufacturer, and withal, a student as well, having been educated at Yale for the ministry, but who, not feeling called to this profession, had gone into active business life. He retained, however, his love for books, and has written several himself. He wrote his Duxbury cousin begging leave to dedicate to him a forthcoming volume. Permission was given, and this opened a correspondence. When the wealthy manufacturer learned the condition of affairs, he came to the front and bought the old place, to prevent its passing into stranger hands. Up to the time of purchasing the property at Duxbury, John Tolman Alden had no accurate knowledge of his genealogy, except the mere fact that he was a descendant of John Alden of Puritan fame. Upon acquiring the old homestead his interest was aroused and he set the genealogists to work. After considerable research it was found that he, and not the former owner of the place, is the head of the Alden family in the United States, being of the eighth generation from John Alden, and the only living descendant in a direct line from father to oldest son of Joseph Alden, the second son of the illustrious Puritan, the descendants in a corresponding direct line from John Alden's eldest son having all died out. This discovery was a genuine surprise to Mr. Alden and his Duxbury kinsman, who, when the facts were made known, gracefully relinquished his distinguished place as head of the family, and wrote his St. Louis cousin: "I am more than gratified to receive your genealogy, which is correct in every instance. I congratulate you on being the head of our illustrious family, and trust you may live to enjoy the honor for indefinite years. When I look at all the facts as they exist, and the romantic way in which you came to secure the homestead, and by which your own identity was discovered and proved, then I say I thank heaven that things should have happened so divinely".

The present owner of the Duxbury homestead has installed this cousin, John W. Alden, as tenant for life, and he with his family, continue to reside there. One of the interesting members of this family is little Priscilla Alden, a sprightly miss of nine years, who represents the ninth generation who have lived under the old roof-tree. The construction of the old house is very picturesque. Some of its timbers were in the log cabin that John Alden himself built, and which stood about one-eighth of a mile from the present homestead, where a marble slab bearing the inscription—"John Alden House—1627", marks the spot. In four of the ancient rooms, immense beams run through the center, and the general air of substantiality about the whole structure prove that the habitations of the early descendants of the Pilgrims were like the religion and principles of their forefathers—intended to endure for all time.

Owing to successive sales by different members of the family, who encountered hard times and found it necessary to dispose of the land, less than two acres of the original grant now remain, merely that surrounding the house—but it is the intention of the present owner to round off the property by additional purchases and create there a beauty spot, which will be the pride and glory of all patriotic Americans and a lasting memorial to his dintinguished ancestor——John Alden.

"We have a tradition in our family", says John Tolman Alden, "that when John Alden stepped off the skiff that brought him from the Mayflower to Plymouth rock, he held his Bible in one hand and his cooper's hammer in the other, and that same hammer was preserved for several generations in the family, but all trace of it has now been lost. In that tradition, however, lies the central thought of the Puritan principle."

With reference to the claim that has recently been made by Rev. Mr. Griffis of Ithaca, N. Y., formerly pastor of the South Congregational church in Boston, that John Alden was an Irishman, the present head of the family denies in the following emphatic language: "If there ever were any Irish Aldens they certainly are, and always were buried in that country, for they have never come to light. There are no Irish Aldens in this country, and never were. All the Aldens in the United States are descendants from one original stock. It is no libel upon a family to say they are Irish, for the Irish are a great people, but it is not right to fasten upon an old American family any nationality to which they have no claim. As a matter of fact, the original John Alden of 1620 fame was of Hertfordshire stock in England, and belonged to the same family as John Alden of the Middle Temple, to whom a coat-of-arms was given in 1607. Our John Alden was born in 1599. He was apprenticed to a master cooper in Southampton at about eighteen years of age. He became a member of the Pilgrim colony only after the arrival of the Speedwell and Mayflower at Southampton, in the summer of 1620. John Alden was never in Holland. He was not of the original Pilgrim band, styled Puritans because they sought a purer life, and so named in derision. These Puritans fled from the persecution of England in 1610, and sought refuge in Leyden, Holland. Disappointed, they again sought a new life in a new world. They left Delft Haven July 22, 1620, on the Speedwell and Mayflower. Their first point was Southampton, England, and here it was that John Alden, at the age of twenty-one, first joined them. In the streets of Southampton he, like the majority of the citizens of that thriving town, noted with curiosity and interest the Pilgrims in their strange garb, and at that time was strangely and suddenly attracted by the charming Priscilla, who, all unknown and unexpected by himself, was, in the following winter, to become his wife. It was this attraction that first drew him to the ships, and brought him to an intimate acquaintance and connection with the Pilgrims. He joined them on the 6th of September, 1620, and put to sea with the Mayflower company. The rest is a thrice-told tale."

Long life seems to be a distinctive trait of the Alden family, and its present head, John Tolman Alden of St. Louis, belongs to that school of modern hygienists, who believe that the natural term of man's life is 120 years. "I expect to live until I reach that age", he says, "in the enjoyment of perfect health, unimpaired mental faculties and that natural vigor which always pertains to a healthy man." He is an accomplished athlete, and devotes two hours a day to exercise, giving the balance of his time to business, books and rest. His personal appearance suggests a remarkably well-preserved man, for one who has passed the 55th milestone of life.

With reference to the length of days characteristic of the Alden family, we read in the Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society the following:—

"The very advanced age which several persons of one particular family attained, whose descendants now live in Duxborough, is worthy of notice. John Alden, who came to Plymouth in 1620, was one of the signers of the compact established immediately upon the arrival of the first settlers, and who for many years was chosen an assistant in the government of Plymouth, lived to be 88 years old. David Alden, his son, attained the age of 73, and Capt. Samuel Alden, son of David, and grandson of John Alden, lived to the 101st year from the settlement of Plymouth, and died in 1780, aged 93. He had a sister, who attained nearly the same age."

But the patriarch of all the Aldens was John Alden of New Bedford, Mass., who was born about 1720—just a century after the landing of the Pilgrims—and attained the remarkable age of 103 years. His great-grandson—Henry Sherman Alden—resides in Chautaqua county in western New York. John of New Bedford was the father of 19 children, the oldest of whom was the grandfather of Henry Sherman Alden, who says: "I recollect hearing my grandfather tell about his father going on board a gunboat lying in New Bedford Harbor on one occasion and the captain of the navy ordered a salute fired in his honor, because of the fact that he was a centenarian, being at that time over 100 years old". Henry Sherman Alden in his general appearance and manner resembles more nearly than any Alden descendant now living, perhaps, his famous ancestor as described by Longfellow. It may be he inherits some of that traditional timidity himself, for he is a bachelor of 75, and lives all alone in an old, weather-beaten farmhouse, which stands on a slight eminence near the four corners of a country road, not far from Chautauqua lake, the seat of the famous summer university. The place has always been known as Denton's Corners. There is a district schoolhouse near by, and opposite it is a picturesque country church. Recently the government has given the place a legal name, by establishing a post-office and designating it "Denton". It is probably the smallest postoffice in the United States, not more than a dozen families getting their mail there. Mr. Alden has been installed as postmaster. He is an exceedingly well-read man, and a natural student—tall and straight as an arrow, with courtly, dignified manners, and possessing that same "grace of speech and skill in turning of phrases" which Longfellow ascribes to the Pilgrim John Alden. If clad in the garments of those days Henry Sherman Alden would be a veritable replica of the proxy of Miles Standish.

Stored away in this ancient dwelling among the Chautauqua hills, where he has resided for the past half century, Mr. Alden has some curious and valuable mementoes which will doubtless eventually find their way to the Alden museum which the present head of the family intends to establish at Duxbury. Among these souvenirs of Puritan days is an old, decayed snow-shoe, purchased by John Alden of Plymouth from a tribe of Indians round about the Pilgrim settlement. It has been handed down from generation to generation, and the seaweed and buckskin of which the heel and sole are woven are badly motheaten. This stately postmaster at Denton stamps the letters daily on an old fall-leaf table, which once served as a writing table for James Monroe, in the state room of the vessel in which he made his voyage across the ocean to France, whither he was sent as minister by Jefferson. Mr. Alden's grandfather was a famous sea captain, and was part owner of the ship in which Monroe took passage. When the ship's company dissolved, the owners cast lots for the furnishings, and this table fell to Capt. Alden. A large mirror framed in tortoise-shell, which was brought over from Amsterdam in 1803 by some of the Alden family, hangs on the wall. Its original cost of $95 was an extravagant sum to pay in those days for what was then considered a household luxury. Mr. Alden has his grandfather's large family Bible, printed in 1768, "by Mark Baskett, printer to the King's moft excellent majefty; and by the Affignf of Robert Baskett"—so the inscription informs us. In this old Bible, with its worn leather binding and broken clasps, is the family record, reaching back to the date of his grandfather's birth, February 8, 1741, and recording the fact that he married Lois Southworth in 1766 and lived to the age of 77. History shows that the Aldens were a scholarly family. "My father", says Henry Sherman Alden, "was a good student. He went through Providence university, and was a classmate of Adoniram Judson, the missionary to Burmah." In an ancient bookcase Mr. Alden has a library of his father's Greek and Latin text books, one of which—a Latin-English dictionary published in 1797, has inscribed on the fly-leaf "Nathan Alden's Liber". Although a farmer, he never lost his love of study. "I have known him to fasten a Latin book into the plow handle", says his son, "and study while he pushed the plow-share."

Not far from the old homestead at Duxbury is the old original cemetery, where many of the Alden family lie buried. Here, too is the grave of Miles Standish, who died October 3, 1656, aged 72. How long before 1700 this burying ground was used is not known.

BRYAN FOR PRESIDENT

The Peerless Leader Endorsed by the Democratic County Convention

Last week the Democrats held a county convention at Hartford. Fred B. Ockobock of Paw Paw, the chairman of the Democratic committee, called the convention to order and named W. C. Wildey of the same village presiding officer.

Three committees were appointed of which M. S. Carney was on credentials and Emory H. Squier on resolutions. The Republican was unable to obtain a copy of the resoluions but they endorsed William Jennings Bryan for President and instructed the delegates to the state convention to work to secure an instructed delegation for Bryan to the national convention at Denver. They further expressed the opinion that conditions were right for Democratic success and predicted the success of the national ticket in November.

The delegates to the state convention which met in Lansing Wednesday were T. J. Cavanaugh and W. C. Wildey of Paw Paw, M. S. Carney of Decatur, A. C. Cross of Bangor, H. H. Engle of South Haven and Lyman Bridges of Hartford.

There were about fifty delegates to the convention.

The Passing of Nicholsville.

(BY FRANK L. KERN)

Was Nicholsville a joke? That little old famous town as we knew it nearly fifty years ago when Douglas was running for the presidency against honest old Abe Lincoln in 1860. Great old burg, whose smallest dirty kid could lick me before I could find out what it all meant. A town worth gossiping about with two good general stores, postoffice, hotel with spring floor dance hall, apothecary shop, two wagon shops, two shoemakers, tailor, tinner, basket maker, stave and barrel factory, sawmill running day and night, (in those days our best walnut timber was split into fence rails. They are there yet.) a cabinet shop and a good flouring mill with a score or more of good residences. That was Nicholsville with its busy life when at the age of seven I first saw it from the top of a big load of stave bolts drawn by a yoke of unruly steers led by Lute Howe, my brother-in-law. Then came on that cruel "rich man's war but poor man's fight," and the president's call for 75,000 troops to crush the rebellion in a month.

Fire! Fire! A prairie fire? No, the little town was ablaze with patriotic enthusiasm which spread all over Marcellus. A crowd of hearty men had gathered across the street from where, under a big new flag, a band of women were trying to sing "The Union forever, hurrah boys, hurrah." Lieut. C. W. Thorpe stood out, towering above his fellows in body, mind and soul. He tried to suppress that kindly smile that ever adorned his features and his eyes flashed fire as he addressed his townsmen in a stirring speech ending in a hoarse whisper with "This is the supreme test of genuine manhood, gentlemen, and we must answer the question, 'Shall this Union be preserved?' My name is written there, boys, will you now come up and enroll for Berdan's First Regiment of Sharp Shooters?"

God of battles, did those men enlist? In nearly every home in Nicholsville and of the surrounding country, there were mothers, wives and children left to suffer more than widows and orphans. That very first call for troops cleaned out the town of every able bodied man and left all business at a standstill.

Michigan may well boast of her brave volunteers, but no town in the dear old state could beat our Nicholsville for she gave all she had and that was no joke. I saw those devoted women sadly weep at parting from the strong arm of comfort; they wept again in vexatious disappointment because their sex debarred them from fighting beside their husbands; again they cried in sympathy for those little sons, training with wooden guns to the music of tin pans, because those brave little chaps were not old enough to carry a musket in the ranks with their fathers. I saw them bravely bear the sad, hard burdens of life during those four years of awful torture of body and soul, while the heads of homes left jobs paying from three to five dollars a day, to take up the hardships and dangers of the camp, march and firing line under sub-tropic skies, for thirteen dollars a month.

Do not tell us about Sparta and Athens for while memory holds, Nicholsville and Marcellus heroes and heroines will keep first place.

There was never conventionality or pretense in Nicholsville. They called things by plain, hard names, but they were the livliest, jolliest bunch of happy-go-lucky people that ever lived. They could drink more and keep sober, use a bigger variety of profanity without swearing, dance longer without tiring, shoot, swim, skate, fish, fiddle, flirt and fight all the way from Bunker lake to the "Little Bridge" where the boys did their hardest work. But when the old flag went down on Ft. Sumter every man showed himself a hero and a patriot.

I would like to write a big book and fill it with pictures of those good old days when

> "The bedbug had no wings at all
> But got there just the same."

When Holden T. Wing and Ribe Gough kept store, when polite and genial Jonathan Nichols was landlord and ran the mill, when the Goodspeed boys, John Potter, the Nashes, Thorpes, Biteleys, Simmons, Moshers, Emmons, Clelands and others were coming up into manhood and doing things. I would enjoy giving incidents connected with each one to show what great fellows they all were. Sarcastic? Well rather, everybody was guyed, ridiculed and nicknamed: Porky, Skinny, Limpy, Steeple-painter, Old-four-eyes, Bean-pole, Pinchy, etc., ran the scale from flabby John Jakeways to midget Warren Lockwood. But it takes a retrospection over at least a full generation in order to get a proper perspective for measuring up men and show who and what make good. Times have changed and so have we. Some have died and some moved away. Did the hotel go dry when Stormy Davis closed his mock prayer meeting to go off and get a new heart and become a great evangelist?

Did the swimming hole at the Little Bridge get too shallow for the Thorpe boys? Did fire and and drought destroy the huckleberry swamp? Did 'em" to the under dog; smile at the silk purse made from a pigs' ear and applaud the chap who can throw himself over the fence by pulling at his bootstraps. Did you see Montgomery Peters graduate from college with a big degree made of capital letters, later become a bookkeeper and take his orders from Peter Montgomery, president of the thumb-screw trust, who was kicked out of school because he was such a troublesome worthless dunce? Now here's the joke.

"Wee, Wah, Wow!" bellowed a little toddler in tattered jeans. "What do you want?" inquired the poor mother of the suffering little Danny. "Me dot tummy-ache, 'nat's what I want." Then the mother explained apologetically, that "green huckleberry pie is not so good for babies when a body has no sugar to put in it." Maybe years of gaunt poverty with so much more of bitter than sweet, were what nerved those Caswell boys to face the dangers of the Rocky mountain mines where at last they struck pay-dirt and now have plenty of that "sugar" that sweetens up so many of the hard ways of life.

Rocky Woodmansee became a great educator and is now editor and leading citizen at Lambert, Okla. Marshall Nichols is a leading railroad man in Kansas with cultured wife and fine family. Fred Rowe is a wealthy banker in Hill City, Kansas, and he also has a charming wife and lovely children. Charlieboy Thorpe is regimental surgeon in the U. S. Army with rank and pay of major. Elmer Thorpe became a medical expert, married Buffalo Bill's oldest daughter and was on the high road when death claimed him. Rollin L. Thorpe, our re-union president, is a leading physician and surgeon of Denver where the common people are kept busy dodging his motor car and where he entertains his old friends at a fine home presided over by a beautiful and talented wife. For recreation, he frequently runs up to Cripple Creek where he is president of a gold mining and milling company. There is nothing small about Rollin.

Joel Nash is a prosperous merchant and leading citizen of Marcellus. They tell me that Jasper and Henry Rowe, Alpheus and Charlie Nash, the Cleland boys, Eugene Thorpe, Clarence Wright and indeed all the boys who were our schoolmates at the old Prairie school, have made good and are leading sober, prosperous lives. And the girls, bless their hearts, have nearly all lost their identity by taking other names, but often the little bird comes fluttering in telling good things and we want to meet them all next August at the great reunion.

> Toil on my friends until some day
> Success has crowned your patient pluck:
> A few staunch friends will say "Hooray."
> But more will sigh "a fool for luck"

If I had room for a little honorable mention, I would like to speak of William Caswell, the honest, skillful carpenter; Stevie George, the courteous little gentleman; shrewd, clever Vet Thorpe, the mechanic and champion fisherman who never let a big bass get away; George Woodmansee, the genial, talented 'squire; Bill Rowe, the fancy skater; the five Goodspeed boys whom

Vet catch all the bass and pickerel out of the lakes? Where is the joke anyhow? Well we know times have changed since the little lad had to carry a gallon jug full of whiskey two miles to the men who could not do the haying and harvesting without "somethin' coolin'."

Could any good come out of such a town? Let's see. Few of those boys and girls had the advantage of wealthy homes with an environment of culture and refinement. There was no one to send them through college and then give them a financial start in life. Somehow we like to see the miracle of something from nothing and say "sic everybody loved; harmless Dr. Sackett; substantial Jerome Bitely; good-hearted Al. Shaw, Smith Thompson, Wes. McInterfer, Eli Finch, Dr. George and others, but best of all that peerless soldier, philosopher, gentleman and true friend, Carles W. Thorpe, whose great heart and level head were always on the side of right. But good-bye Nichlsville, rest in peace.

A MEMORABLE REUNION

Boys and Girls of Prairie 25 to 50 Years Ago Meet at Saddlebag Lake

MRS. BUELL DIES AS REUNION CLOSES

Continuation of the Little Prairie Ronde Reunion held August 12 and 13, and the death of Mrs. B. G. Buell.

Never was there a more perfect day than dawned the morning of Thursday, August 13. It seemed that nature had shed all her tears the day before, and was wearing her brightest smile to welcome those who were to attend the meeting on the second day. And it was a day long to be remembered by those present, not only in meeting friends whom they had not met in years, but the sudden illness and death of our long loved friend Mrs. B. G. Buell, at the close of the reception held at the home of Mrs. Benjamin Hathaway.

This cast a gloom over the two days' festivities; and while it made us very sad it touched our hearts and made the bond of friendship between the friends left behind a higher, holier one than we could have thought possible. I would that I could omit all that went before and dwell only on that evening's entertainment and the sorrow that came to us all in the loss of our dear friend.

There was a goodly number in attendance at the reunion and among those who came from a distance were Marshall Franklin of Three Oaks, Mrs. Mary Franklin Monroe of Chicago, F. D. Huff and wife of Centralia, Mo., Mrs. Nestle and son of Flint, A. W. Copley of Detroit, Lincoln, Frank and Mrs. B. G. Buell of Ann Arbor; Mrs. Bertha Shaw Dunnington, Mrs. May Shaw Johnson, Mrs. Salome Sackett Touchatt and sister Mrs. Isch of Dowagiac; Mr. and Mrs. Owen Hice of Council Bluffs, C. E. Buell of Webster City, and F. L. Kern of DesMoines, Iowa; Dr. R. L. Thorpe of Denver, Colo.; C. J. Thorpe and wife of Coldwater; Mrs. May Thomas Ballard of Niles; Mrs. Edie Goodspeed Goodrich of Marcellus; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kidman and Miss Laura Morris of Lawton; Frank Morris and daughter and Mrs. Carrie Rix of Mattawan; Dr. Carl Morris of Pontiac; Dr. Ray Morris of Keeler: Dr. Charles Welch of St. Charles; Mrs. Muirl Aumock of Benton Harbor; Vet Thorp and family, G. W. Kroll and others of Marcellus, with many from Decatur and Little Prairie.

The drum corps consisted of Horace Wheaton, Nelson High, and Fred Pound, and there was music, swinging, dancing, and foot races among the younger members.

After a bountiful dinner spread out on the long table under the trees, a business meeting was called to elect officers for the next meeting. It was first decided to hold the next meeting in three years and the following officers were chosen:—R. L. Thorpe, president; F. L. Kern, first vice president; Mrs. Ella Dolloff, second vice president; L. L. Lawrence, secretary; A. E. Lawrence, Treasurer: Mrs. Adelia White, E. B. Copley and C. E. Rosewarne, executive committee.

Among those who took part in the speaking were Elias Morris, Mrs. B. G. Buell, A. W. Copley, E. B. Copley, Carl Morris, L. L., A. L., and A. E. Lawrence, M. S. Thomas, and Mrs. C. J. Thorpe gave a reading.

Mrs. Buell spoke feelingly of the old Sabbath school and of her work as teacher which she had had to give up on account of ill health. She spoke, too, of the far-reaching influences for good of the Sabbath school still felt in the community. Then she moved that a vote of thanks be given those who had worked so hard to make the meeting a success.

At the close of the speaking the secretary referred to the absent ones, Jennie and Flora Buell, Kittie Rosewarne, Katy Kern, Mrs. Kate Buell Martin, Mrs. Marilla Franklin, Mrs. Edna Spicer Lawrence, who sent greetings and regrets that they could not be present.

Toward the close of the afternoon it was decided to have a picture of those who attended the picnic. About 150 formed the group, some sitting, some standing. Later one was taken consisting of about twenty-five of the old schoolmates of the '60s and '70s. Frank Brown of Marcellus took the pictures.

The second day of the picnic passed all too soon and the party broke up to attend the reception at the home of Mrs. Benjamin Hathaway. After the customary handshaking and chatting in groups here and there, we were invited out on the lawn where a surprise for most of us had been prepared by Lincoln E. Buell, state secretary of the Y. M. C. A. With a stereotican and some slides which he had prepared, some interesting pictures were thrown on a white canvas a few feet distant. Some of them were the boys and girls of the '60s and '70s. There were others in connection with the Y. M. C. A., with the singing of some of the old Sabbath school songs, the repeating of the Lord's prayer, interspersed with interesting talks by Mr. Buell throughout the entertainment, closing with the song "Nearer My God to Thee."

While in the midst of this interesting entertainment Mrs. Buell fell suddenly ill, soon becoming unconscious from which she never recovered. A few moments after midnight she passed away and the next day at 11:15 Lincoln with his mother's remains and in company with Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Lawrence returned to Ann Arbor. A message from there later told us the funeral was to be held at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

While it is to be regretted that she could not have been with her own loved ones in her last hours it is a comfort to know that she was tenderly cared for by her old friends and that she breathed her last near the old home she had loved so well.

JESSIE THOMAS
Secretary

HATTIE COPLEY BUELL

TO THE REPUBLICAN:

Dear Friend:—I have been asked to pay a little tribute to my old friend, Mrs Barber G. Buell, who passed from earth so quickly, peacefully and happily after those two days with old friends at the reunion.

But everybody knew "Aunt Hattie" and there is really nothing I can say that would add to her sweet and beautiful character.

Months ago her nephew, Chalker, told me he was trying to get her to come back to her old home that he and others might see her again; likely for the last time on earth. So from her home in the great university town she came and through rain and mud she joined us at the lake where everybody rushed to greet her. Oh, how happy she seemed as she mingled again for two long, sweet days with the loving admiring friends of the old Sunday school. Then during the exercises, I saw the pale face sober and a far away look come into those tired eyes and I knew she was thinking of the sixties and seventies, when with her kind and noble husband they were rearing an ideal family; Lincoln, Frank, Harry, Jennie, Flora, Bertha. And about them neighbors, nearly all of whom have passed on, were then also in the prime of life and "sowing the earth with little men and women" whom she now sees grown to sturdy manhood and womanhood.

Later, on that second memorable day, tired but still happy and cheerful she stood with about 150 of us to be photographed and again I saw that far away look, saying plainly in the strong faith of the preacher-poet, Robert Browning, whom she loved, "The life of immortality is ours today. I feel in myself the future life." Or with Victor Hugo, "The soul is more luminous when the body begins to fall; winter is on my head but eternal spring is in my heart. The nearer I approach the end, the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the upper world inviting me." Yes, this is home, sweet home, and these are my dearest earthly friends. As one speaker said, "Home, the dearest, sweetest word to the human heart, the safe shelter when the human bark is tossed upon the sea of adversity and trouble, an arbor of beneficent shade when the sunshine of prosperity gets to dazzling." Dear Aunt Hattie, the faithful christian worker. She remembered that her Christ had said, "I go to prepare a place for you." To her there was no dim star shining through a mist, but sure immortality, the one bright star of humanity's hope fixed, full-orbed and splendid, beaming high upon her pathway, lighting her on to glory and to God. This mortal must soon put on immortality, and she was ready. With faltering steps she had made the last milestone up the long life-hill.

Evening comes. We are gathered under the beautiful arbors at the grand old home of the nature poet and seer, Benjamin Hathaway, adjoining her own dear old home. Oh, the soft, balmy air of that perfect summer night, sweetened with the perfume of juniper, arbor vitae and rare flowers which the great gardener had planted years ago. The hum and whirr and singing of katydids, crickets and other noisy, saucy insects, filled the air just as we heard them forty years ago.

Lincoln, who as state secretary of the Y. M. C. A., has consecrated his life and talents to the saving of boys and young men from the filthy and intemperate habits that ever bring ruin and misery, had brought his lecture apparatus and prepared a rare treat for us in the way of pictures of the old boys and girls. But before showing us the pictures of the old scenes and faces, how appropriate to have a little opening service of the old Sabbath school over which his uncle, A. B. Copley had presided so ably many years.

On the big screen was thrown the old songs and with choking voices we tried to sing them while Lincoln's fond mother joined us. We rose and read together the comforting scripture lesson which appeared like magic before us, then bowing we repeated the old prayer. What moment more fit for the Heavenly Father's call? His angel messenger must have been hovering near, awaiting the sweetest moment in which to make the final summons. The stroke came and sadness filled our hearts.

Almost while yet the eloquence, inspiration and persuasion to a better life by that son were ringing in her ears, she passed on to her sure reward.

And so we can say in the words of her favorite author:

"And for thy confidence
In that which was our mother's ground of trust
We thank thee, thou so nobly learned and just,
In judgement, thought and feeling; so intense.
In all that makes a woman, we give thee praise
And thanks, thou trusting soul, midst doubting days."

MUST HAVE ANOTHER TEACHER

Our Decatur School Will Be Taken from the University List says Inspector

VALUABLE PAPER BY SUPT. TREMPER

Supt. Cyrus Tremper gave an interesting and valuable paper before the Every Tuesday Club a few weeks ago upon the subject of Education. The ladies were greatly pleased with what he said and the last phase of his subject, "the school and community," contained so much of interest to the people in general of Decatur that we are pleased to reproduce it herewith:

"How often we find people who have no children complaining about school taxes. Oftentimes people think the possession of excellent lighting and water plants, village buildings, etc., of greater importance than schools, and if there is to be any indebtedness it should be for these things rather than schools.

"Perhaps it is the part of wisdom to keep out of debt in everything. The majority of people will concede the greater importance of the school, though, I believe. The school system has a powerful influence on the village and surrounding country, and in this day of progress we can afford none but the best.

"I have been proud of the Decatur High School in years gone by. I found by experience that the graduates of this school were prepared to compete, either in college, or in stress of life out of college, with the graduates of the city schools.

"The Decatur school has been one of the best because the people wanted the best. I am sure too as the school grows in numbers and the requirements made upon it become greater, the people will recognize its growth and realize that its progress is but in keeping with the progress of the village in other lines; and will not only permit but demand that it be kept up to the standard of the times.

"I can't close this paper without a few words concerning my hopes for the school while under my supervision. I think these are things the people should think about. Surely the superintendent, of all school officers, should have the support of his people; nor do I think him worthy of this support if, on finding conditions that are not right, he says nothing about them in order that he may be popular with the tax payers. I think he should be unpopular if he says nothing about these things.

"I have been pleased with the organization of the grades. The teachers are not over burdened. With a music teacher I think they would be happy.

"In the high school conditions are not right. You will remember the twofold function of the high school alluded to in the first of this paper. Last year our school was inspected and conditionally placed on the University list. Some of the conditions made have been met, others have not.

"Our high school teachers are overworked, making it very deficient indeed to secure results desired. I am warned by the University inspector, Prof. Davis, that something must be done. We can't expect a teacher to conduct eight forty-minute recitations per day with large classes and secure the best results. It fact, it requires strong nerves to prevent a physical break down. Nor can a superintendent, spending his whole day in actual teaching, have very efficient supervision.

"My plan is to secure a music teacher who will spend half of each day in teaching and the other half with music in the grades. Such a teacher can be secured for $500.

"This would mean an increase of not more than seven cents per thousand in taxation. Not a large amount surely, and yet all conditions of the University could be met, teachers would not be overworked, and our high school greatly improved. Last, and not least, your children would have the benefit of music in the grades.

"I believe that the subject of music in the grades requires no argument. I believe there are many people in Decatur who desire it and are willing to give it their support. Yet in this connection I must sound a note of warning lest people expect too much of music for the first few years. Since the majority of our pupils have never studied singing, the primary courses would have to be given in each grade, and it would be unreasonable to expect much from eighth graders at the end of the first year. The work could not properly be judged until the present kindergarteners have passed through the successive stages of singing as taught in the succeeding eight grades. Then we should expect to find, at the end of the grammar course, that the pupils are able to sing in all keys in both notations; to write on the blackboard the scales with signatures, key notes, and easy exercises by ear; and to sing in two, three, and in some cases in four parts.

"For many years your school has been accredited by the University. Can we afford to let it drop behind in this day of progress."

UNCLE VET REDMOND

One of Decatur's Oldest Residents Died Last Week.

Sylvester Redmond was born in Dublin, Ireland, August 19, 1821. Died at his home in Decatur, Mich., Monday, April 13, 1908.

Sylvester Redmond, familiarly known as "Uncle Vet," came from his native land to Michigan in 1846.

When the discovery of copper in the northern part of the state was made he immediately went to that district where he worked for three years, being one of the first ones employed in that industry.

He came to Decatur and at the commencement of the civil war enlisted as a volunteer and served three years and seven months, during which period he suffered the hardships and privations of Andersonville, Libby and Florence prisons for seven months and seventeen days, not being allowed the privileges of the exemption laws on account of his wonderful physical constitution.

After the war he returned to Michigan accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Ellen McVey, who is the only surviving member of the family.

After returning to Decatur he went west and located a soldier's claim and spent his time between that place and his home here until he had cleared up on his western land.

He passed a year in California, sold his western property and came back to Decatur and purchased the property where he lived until the time of his death.

He was a whole-souled, kind hearted man--a good neighbor and a good friend; thought much of by all who knew him.

He remained a bachelor, and when bantered as to why he had not married always remarked that "the ladies were better off without him than with him."

The funeral was held at the Catholic church in this village Thursday afternoon, Father Clarson of Paw Paw officiating

In an able discourse Father Clarson, among other things, paid especial tribute to the local G. A. R. who attended in a body.

The friends and surviving relatives wish through this medium to express their sincere thanks for the courtesies extended in their bereavement and especially to the ones who furnished flowers and to Mr. Odlum and Miss Agnes Mahoney for the music.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral were Miss Francis Cheeseman of Detroit; Mr. Wm. Allard, wife and daughter of Lawton; Mr. John Perkins and wife of Lawton and Katherine Perkins also of Lawton.

LYLE PROPERTY APPRAISED

All they Have Except Exemptions Will Soon be Taken From Them

Chas. H. Kimmerle, trustee of the Dowagiac City Bank, and E. Bishop, Burget L. Dewey, W. January and W. G. Bonine, the appraisers, drove to Decatur in the former's automobile last Friday and after dinner went out to the farms of Oliver and Levi Lyle, the two unfortunate Decatur stockholders, to appraise their property.

They placed a value upon everything except an eighty acre farm belonging to Oliver which was 12 miles distant and this they appraised Monday.

The Lyle brothers made no attempt to conceal anything. They gave all the information desired and gave up all of their property for inventory. They are resigned to the calamity which has befallen them.

Though Messrs. Levi and Oliver Lyle were innocent parties to the transactions which ended in ruin the one hope of the depositors has been in the amount of property these two men could produce. They have been counted on for $15,000 each and it is a great disappointment in Dowagiac that the appraisement will fall short of this figure.

Levi owns the eighty acre farm that Melvin is on jointly with his wife and each one set off forty acres to which he is entitled as his exemption. There are debts against Oliver's property amounting to about $11,000.

OVER A "HOSS" TRADE

Exciting Case in Justice Court Occupied all day Monday

"Rhodus, how'll you swap horses?"

This regulation opener to a "hoss" trade make by Almond Shoudy, the clerk of Fritzburg, to Clifford Rhodus resulted Monday in one of the fiercest lawsuits the local justice court has had in many a day, and according to the doughty clerk, whom his versatile attorney affectionately nicknamed Herman Cohn, the end is not yet in sight.

Both parties to the suit, one of the counsel, half of the jury, two-thirds of the spectators and all of the witnesses were residents of Hamilton. Every business place closed in Fritzburg and the population turned out en masse.

Rhodus and Shoudy swapped horses, a bay mare with a spot on her leg for a colt and $25 to boot.. Shoudy was to pay over the $25 at an auction sale a few days later, but he did not show up. After the sale the traders met about a mile this side of Fritzburg. There were numerous witnesses. Rhodus demanded the money or return of the mare. Shoudy said the mare was not sound as represented, but was wind broken, and refused to pay the $25 or to trade back. The next day Rhodus attempted to trade back with the aid of an officer, but when they arrived at the Shoudy home they learned that the clerk and the mare were on the road to Bainbridge, Berrien county.

The next move was the suit in assumpsit which was tried by a jury in justice court last Monday. Clifford Rhodus' attorneys were Bret H. Cockett, who acquitted himself with credit and should have his shingle displayed more conspicuously, and A. L. Moulton. Almond Shoudy's attorney was the keen, firey, witty Bill Barnard of Paw Paw.

The jury were M. S. Thomas, Orville Pritchard, Clem Ball, Emory Foster, George Nesbitt and Jacob Knolls.

Clifford Rhodus, Bret H. Cockett, Earl Barrett, Lon Phelps and Thomas Rhodus were sworn as witnesses for the plaintiff, and Almond Shoudy, George Conway, Thomas Conway and Mort Bullard were witnesses for the defendant. Then came the arguments which occupied the better part of two hours and held the crowd to the finish.

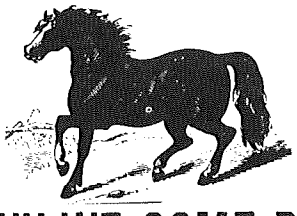
The jury after being out about an hour returned with a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, Clifford Rhodus, of $15 and the costs of suit.

Mr. Shoudy immediately declared his intention of appealing to the circuit court and the same was reiterated by Mr. Barnard, his attorney. The defendant has five days in which to make an appeal.

Later: Messrs. Rhodus and Shoudy met in the Justice's private office Tuesday afternoon and after a consultation of two hours settled their differences and parted as friends.

Best Healer in the World

Rev. F. Starbird of East Raymond, Maine, says: "I have used Bucklen's Arnica Salve for several years on my old army wound, and other obstinate sores, and find it the best healer in the world. I use it too with great success in my veterinary business." Price 25c at M. S. Carney's and E. S. Peterson's drug stores.



WHY WE COME BACK

Read by Chalker Buell at the Little Prairie Ronde Reunion, Wednesday, August 12

Mr. Toastmaster, Ladies and Gentlemen:

You ask me why we come back?

Why does the Moslem travel over thousands of miles of burning sands to reach his Mecca, enduring hardships by day and dangers by night impossible to describe? Why do the wild fowls reared in the north, at the first chill winds of winter, fly away to their warm southern home? There is planted in the breast of this Mohammedan a religious zeal that no dangers by day or terrors by night can dim or pervert. Though called upon to face instant death he would neither falter nor turn aside. So it is with the little bird, compelled to pass through shot and shell, trap and snare. God has created a something, an intense longing in their little breasts for this shelter and haven of rest, that regardless of danger, nothing else can satisfy. So it is with us, dear friends. We are like the prodigal son who journeyed into a far country. Here at the parental roof everything is hallowed by sacred memory. How dear to all our hearts is the old Beach tree! Everyone here entrusted some secret to its keeping; how faithful unto death were all those secrets kept. The old row boat, too; how many happy hours we passed therein. So it is with every wood-lot, lake shore and stream; all, all, every spot and place became endeared to us by some incident "which fond recollection presents to our view."

While all these blessed spots of nature were taking such a hold upon us, what were the influences one upon another. I will tell you. There was forged a chain with metal so fine and links so true, that all the events of life could not tarnish, let alone break or rend asunder. This little invisible cord reaches out from this beloved center, all over this broad land of ours, fulfilling its mission on every hill and within every dale. We find that little chord drawing with such power that like the weary Turk on his way to worship at the shrine he loves, and the little birds obeying the divine call to their summer home, so we, drawn by this chord of love, forged in infancy, welded in youth, and tempered and annealed by passing years, cannot resist its force. And so far as this little group here assembled is concerned, it will continue to increase its strands, and grow stronger and stronger until we are summoned to appear "against that day."

Ever since our last meeting the air has been filled with sweet melody. I hear the sound of voices on every breeze. Once again there comes floating in accents full of feeling and deep emotion, and I distinctly hear the words "To Our Forbears". A noble tribute full of pathos and affection to a dear good mother. How it made all our hearts beat in sympathy. I see and hear a dear friend with tears in his eyes, and with choking voice, telling us of certain "boys and girls". I also hear a very sweet sister, we all love dearly, who was always equal to the emergency, when unexpectedly called upon, arose and said in a manner befitting a queen, "They were the best boys and girls the sun ever shone upon."

THE BEGINNING AND END OF OLD NICHOLSVILLE

Aged Harnessmaker of Marcellus Moved There in '37, Departed in '70

FRAGMENTS OF EARLY HISTORY

The stories of Nicholsville and the Prairie by Mr. Keen have set many an old resident to fondly recalling the days that are past. And it is with pleasure that the Republican puts them in print for the benefit of the younger generations.

If the letter following is read by the readers of the Republican with as much interest as it was by the publisher, Mr. Scott will certainly be repaid for the trouble of writing it.

Marcellus, Mich., May 13, 1908.

To the Republican:

I will give you some of the recollections of a resident of Cass county since 1837.

I moved with my parents, William and Sarah Scott, to Volinia village which was located on the farm now owned by R. J. Huyck, Ezra Houk and Langdon Daniels.

Houk was my half brother and Daniels married my oldest sister, Jane. Abija Huyck run a cooper shop and there was also a blacksmith shop.

In 1840 a Doctor Chatfield was practicing medicine in Volinia, but he afterwards moved to Charleston which was a lively place with two hotels, two stores, school house and a stage line from Kalamazoo to Niles.

Where Nicholsville is located there was nothing but a saw mill, and two houses and a school house that was burned down the winter of 1844.

In 1853 a man by name of Harry George had built a grist mill and kept a store on the south side of the pond on land now owned by Mrs. William Clealand. The place at that time was called Georgetown, but one day at a shooting match about two years later Nelson Copley wrote over the blacksmith shop with his left hand the name Nicholsville and the village has gone by that name ever since.

In 1844 the Finch, Lockwood and Knapp families settled on the farm now owned and occupied by Joel Riegels and wife.

Nelson Copley was one of the first school teachers in Nicholsville. He taught in the school house that burned in 1844 and afterwards he taught a select school at Volinia village, nicknamed Huycktown.

Miss Evelyn Copley taught school there for several years. She was the late Mrs. Levi Lawrence and a finer lady never lived. I was one of her pupils for some time.

The R. J. Huyck house was at that time a hotel. The road ran along the north side of the house and straight west to the John Shaw farm afterwards known as the Buell farm and now the property of Lineus Lawrence.

My mother died at Huycktown in 1845 and I went to Kalamazoo to live with my sister Mary Ann Church. In 1848 I went to Nowich, New York, and staid five years, learning the harness trade. I returned to Nicholsville in 1853 and run a shop there ten years.

In 1870 I left there because Marcellus had started up and ruined poor old Nicholsville. I have always had a warm place in my heart for it. I lost my first baby tooth on the first bridge that was built across the pond there. Four times since the old bridge has worn out and a new one has been built to replace it. Once I rescued a girl from drowning there. Her name was Veleda Witheral, now Mrs. Pitcher, a sister of Mark Witheral the chicken man at Thompson's corners.

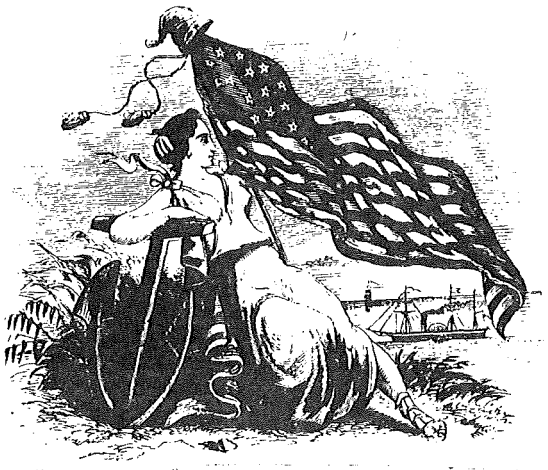
I went to Oshkosh, Wis., where my beloved wife's mother resided, and from there to Oakfield, seven miles south of Fond du Lac, where Olive and I kept a hotel called the Vermont House for one year.

In October, 1880, we came to Marcellus and lived 23 years in the building on Main street opposite the Columbia Hotel, but for four years I have lived alone and continue to make harness and repair them.

Yours, truly, GEORGE SCOTT.

Chas. Rawson,
Robert Lundy, Witnesses.

I. B. Galbreath has bought of L. S. Jones the house that Charlie Hakes built back of his blacksmith shop and had it moved on to his lot and adjoining his residence on St. Mary street for a home for Mr. and Mrs. James Ellis. John Graham moved the house Monday with a traction engine.



LAST DAUGHTER OF THE REVOLUTION

Mrs. Sarah F. Huyck Passes Away May 21st in the Ninety-Second Year of Her Life

Died in Decatur May 21st, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frances E. Anderson, Sarah F. Huyck in ninety-second year of her life. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the home. She was laid at rest at Nicholsville cemetery in the family lot surrounded by old friends and neighbors whom in life she had loved so dearly.

Deem her not dead but as sheltereth one
Her home, after long years of work well done.
Thus in God's hand in benediction lain,
And stilled forever all care and pain.

At the time of her death Mrs Sarah F. Huyck was probably the only real Daughter of the American Revolution in Michigan. She was made an honorary member of the D. A. R. about fifteen years ago and was presented with a solid gold souvenir spoon presented by the society to its real Daughters. Every Christmas the Society remembered her with a handsome gift.

The following sketch of the life of Mrs. Huyck was written two years ago by herself at the request of the secretary of the Lansing chapter of the D. A. R. of which she was a member and read at the State D. A. R. Convention:

After leaving Toledo we had no wagon track to follow and were obliged to follow the Indian trail. We found one house at Coldwater and a very small collection of houses at Monroe. It was here that my father, who had gone to Michigan the year previous to prepare a place for us, met us. So this place will always stand out clear in my memory. It was at Monroe my father purchased thirty bushels of wheat which he left to be ground into flour; later on we had many calls for a little flour to make a wedding cake or something else equally important.

After a hedged in life among the Pennsylvania hills, the western prairies seemed boundless, and I expected to find everything on an equally extended scale. But when we reached the home prepared for us, a little log house with only two rooms, I wondered where we were ever going to stow ourselves. Immediately I made up my mind that I should always have to sleep in the wagon, a thing most heartily despised. Indeed I have wondered all my life how my mother with such an unusually large brood, managed in such pinched quarters leaving as she did a large and convenient house.

As I remember, we never suffered for any of the necessities of life, the soil was fertile, the small fruits grew rapidly and we soon had an orchard started. The second year we raised more grain than we needed and had a quantity to sell. To be sure, going 135 miles on horse back or in lumber wagon for supplies, would now seem almost an impossibility, but it was not so bad, or at least did not seem so bad for we always had horses to spare, and boys too, for that matter.

There was one thing, however, we did miss and that was the clear, sparkling spring water that gushed from the rock or gargled over the stony bed of the creek. We had never before known what hard water meant and when I was stricken with the inevitable chills and fever, I thought if I could only have a drink from the old spring out of the gourd dipper, I would certainly get well.

The first post office in Kalamazoo county was at our home and my father was postmaster. He received his commission from General Jackson. I very well remember the first mail he brought from White Pigeon; there was a bushel and one-half of it; father had to pay 25 cents for every letter given in his charge, but he never lost anything, for everyone was only too glad to hear from the home folks "back in the states", not to be willing to refund the amount paid. If a large amount of money was sent in the mail, for instance, a fifty or one hundred dollar bill, it was cut in two and one piece sent at a time.

I remember very well the great meteoric shower of 1833 which we were called up to witness by our doctor, who was making a professional call in our neighborhood.

HOLLANDERS IN DECATUR

More Families Coming This Year—Means Much to the Future Developement of Our Village

Al. VandenBerg, formerly a resident of Holland, Mich., but for the last few years of Prairie View, Kansas, arrived here last Saturday with his car of household goods. After a two weeks visit with relatives and friends in Holland and Grand Haven, Mr. and Mrs. VandenBerg will take up their residence here. Mr. VandenBerg is one of the number of Hollanders who have recently come to Decatur to make it their permanent home.

Decatur has become quite popular among the Hollanders of Ottowa and Kent counties. It became known to them that there were large tracts of good fruit, peppermint and celery soil around Decatur, many acres of which were as yet practically undeveloped. Some ten families have already moved here and it is expected that many more will have located here before another year has passed.

The Dutch are an economical and industrious class of people and as a rule honest and a desirable and welcome class to help develop the industries in and around Decatur.

They are delighted with the place and seem to feel quite well at home, especially since they succeeded in organizing a Reformed church here. They are enthusiastic over this new organization and a growing interest is being shown in their meetings among both the young and old. The "good old orthodox Reformed church" is dear to them and in general they are very true to their religious principles.

Theological student C. Muller of Holland, Mich., has been stationed here for the summer. Last Friday evening some twenty-five young people gathered at the home of John Borst to greet Mr. Muller as he enters upon his work among them. The evening was delightfully spent in playing games and the singing of gospel hymns interspersed with other music. Tasty refreshments were served and the inevitable hour of parting came all too soon.

Last Friday afternoon the Decatur high school team went to Lawton and brought home a victory to the score of 6 to 4. Chas. Thomas officiated as umpire to the satisfaction of both sides.

Saturday Decatur high school played Lawrence on the home grounds.

Lawrence made ten scores and won the game in the first three innings. After that the home club got down to business and played a fine game. The final score was 12 to 5.

LE GRAND R. ANDERSON

A Brief Sketch of an Eventful Life

LeGrand Redmond Anderson, youngest son of LeGrand and Catherine Shaw Anderson, was born February 27, 1834, on the old homestead five miles south of Decatur where his father began to make a home for his family in 1828, bringing there his wife and children from Ohio in 1832.

The son began his education in the district school near his home and also at Olivet, Kalamazoo and Hillsdale colleges, for of him it can be truly said his instruction ended in the school room but his education only when life closed. After leaving college, with the youthful love of adventure, he spent some years in the west as a member of a surveyor's party which surveyed a considerable portion of the land which later became the state of Kansas.

On February 26, 1860, he was married to Miss Susanne Morris, daughter of Dolphin and Nancy Morris, who were some of the earliest pioneers to make a home in this county. Three children came to gladden this new home, Mrs. M. Grace A. Hammond who resides on the old farm, Mrs. Clara S. A. Rennie of Paw Paw, and LeGraud. The first decade of happy married life had not elapsed when the family circle was broken by the death of his wife and a few years later, the little son was also taken. The two daughters were tenderly reared by their father's sister, Mrs. Mary V. Murdock of Paw Paw, and remained in her home until their marriages.

Previous to the fall of 1900 Mr. Anderson spent his time between his farms which aggregated about fifteen hundred acres of choice land in Van Buren and Cass counties, and the homes of his sister and younger daughter, Mrs. Rennie, in Paw Paw, and the home of his elder daughter, Mrs. Hammond in Decatur. Owing to his poor health and the partial loss of his hearing he then decided to seek a milder climate and has since spent much of his time in Old and New Mexico, Colorado and other western states.

Last June, after having made his Michigan relatives and friends a few months' visit, he returned to Colorado, then on to Ogden, Utah, at which city he passed quietly away on October 14 after an illness of only a few days.

Mrs. Hammond and her son, LeGraud, brought the remains to Decatur and on to the farm home where the obsequies were held on Friday afternoon, Rev. Edward H. Harvey of Paw Paw officiating. A large concourse of old friends and neighbors were in attendance, to many of whom he had been a valued counselor as well as faithful friend. The interment was in the Anderson cemetery beside the wife and son who so many years ago had preceded him to the Beyond.

Mr. Anderson was a man of strong affections, ever thoughtful and considerate of his family's welfare, and was devotedly attached to his three grandchildren, Mary, Clara and LeGrand Hammond. As a citizen he was most highly esteemed and respected. He was ever broad-minded and liberal, taking an especial interest in and doing much for the causes of temperance and equal suffrage.

In the early days of the Grange, he took a prominent part in its establishment in this portion of the State and refused election as Master of the State Grange, his being a nature that did not seek honors.

Mr. Anderson was a man of wide information, a devoted reader of the best of the world's literature, in history, science and poetry. Such was his love for some of Scott's writings that he could repeat from memory nearly all of such poems as The Lady of the Lake, Marmion and Rokeby. It was a rule with him never to read a book unless thereby he gained in knowledge or was made a better man. He was ever ready to extend a helping hand to the deserving, but so quiet was he in his charities that only of late years, in the many unsolicited tributes that have come to his daughters from those he had materially assisted, have even his family had any idea how far-reaching were his benevolences. He was possessed of unusual business acumen and for many years was a director in the First National Bank of Paw Paw and the former National Bank of Decatur. Many years ago he became a member of the Masonic fraternity and always remained loyal to the principles of that order. Politically, Mr. Anderson was a staunch Republican and took an active interest in the affairs of his country. Although he never subscribed to any church creed, he ever gave liberally to Christian work and continually strove for the betterment of mankind. He thought much on matters pertaining to religion and the Life beyond as is shown by the following poem, composed by him during his travels after he had reached the advanced age of seventy-two. It is entitled "Destiny", and was read by Rev. Mr. Harvey at the last service as showing his views in this regard.

Man, a child of since yesterday,
An heir to Eternity,
What shall that Eternity be?
Shall our acts shape it?
Shall we ourselves make it—
Make endless destiny?

The good Father above
Is the type of pure love.
If we a law shall transgress,
Shall we cease suffering sore
From fierce flames evermore,
Too terrible to try to express?

Ocuntless cycles may roll
O'er the immortal soul
Without any abatement of time;
But the soul's weal or woe
We ourselves shall bestow;
Shall make its shadow or shine.

That great terror to all,
The dread fear of Death's call,
Shall not be a terror to me.
Should I dread to depart
At the stroke of Death's dart,
From the ills of Earth to be free?

Should I sorrow and moan
When called to go Home,
A victim to hopeless woe?
I should surely rejoice
At the call of the voice
That bids me homeward go.

When I cross that silent and tideless stream,
May my life flow on like a pleasant dream
To the celestial land above.
I shall hold my father's sustaining hand
Until I reach that beautiful strand
And rest in His enveloping love.

DECATUR CANNING FACTORY

As Seen by Mary McCormick Rumbaugh. A Model Factory

Decatur, November 16, 1909

Mr. Editor and Readers of the Paper:

With your consent I feel strongly impressed to write a few lines in regard to our Decatur canning factory. Surely it is a success. As we chance to look outside we see the apples piled up on all sides. Team after team comes from every direction and unloads, only to come back with a lot more apples. Our eyes never did see such a sight before.

We have worked at South Haven factories and other places but this Decatur factory goes far ahead of them all. Mr. and Mrs. Squires who are the head are kind to us and never look cross at us. All they have to do is to tell us what our work is and we all stand by our work as one man. We didn't feel like finding fault and do enjoy it very much. No doubt what makes us good is because they are so kind to us.

Mr. Rumbaugh's work principally is to carpenter and any thing else he can find to do. My work is to stand at the paring machine and pare apples nine hours every day. Yesterday we pared eight bushels in one hour by the clock, but we did not stop to look around. We don't have to work so hard. Mr. Squires said I would get my pay whether I run the machine fast or slow.

It seems to me the work and workers are complete. No trouble amongst us. All agreed to pull together. All contented. No bell sheep among us. Come and see us.

By the way I have forgotten the watchman's name but he does the work well. Everything is clean and in its place when we return to our work in the morning. It almost reminds me of a palace car, so clean and ready for business. We get our pay every week. By the way we had our pictures taken, factory and all of us.

Mary McCormick Rumbaugh.

THE OLDEST PIONEER

Was Benj. Hinkley the First White Child Born in the County

PLAYMATES WERE INDIANS

Took First Trip Out of County to be Married

In reviewing the life of the late Elias Morris in a recent issue of the Republican we stated that he was the second white child born in Van Buren county and that the first one was his brother who lived but a few months.

Now comes Benjamin Hinkley, a good old citizen of South Haven, to question the correctness of our statement. Mr. Morris was born the 11th of May, 1833, and the biographer of Mr. Hinkley gives his birthday as March 9 of the same year.

The sketch of Mr. Hinkley printed below was given to the Republican by one of its subscribers and was written by Marshall Mackay, ex-Supervisor of South Haven and one of the best young men of the county:

"Although many old settlers have laid claim to being the first white child born in Van Buren county, the title really belongs to Isaac Coleman Hinkley, a resident of this city. Hinkley was born in Paw Paw March 9, 1833, when there were no towns in the county and only Indians were residents, the younger members of the tribes being his playmates, there being no white children to play with.

His father, Rodney Hinkley, came to Michigan during the latter part of the last Indian war, much against the wishes of his friends who feared the savages would kill him, but, instead, the dusky men were his best friends and many times protected him from other tribes.

After living in Paw Paw twenty years and having had experiences galore with wild animals and treacherous Indians, the family moved to South Haven, where the father died in '59 and the mother two years later.

His Family

Isaac is one of the two children living of a family of seven, Mrs. J. L. Tracy of this city, being the other. On September 15, 1857, the pioneer married Miss Henrietta Campbell of Sycamore, Illinois, the trip being his first outside Van Buren county. The couple had four children, two girls, Mrs. Thomas Kyme and Mrs. Sherrod Tyler, both of this city, being the only ones living.

Neighborhood Provider

Arriving here on foot in the spring of 1852 Mr. Hinkley found this place a forest. Sheltering here during the summer he began to clear what is now the central part of the city, on Phoenix street, and soon erected a small cabin which the father and mother came to the following year. Only six buildings were in the village at the time and Hinkley was the main support of the inhabitants, it being his duty to shoot deer and catch fish for them to live on.

He has seen the small town grow into a small city of 5,000 people and is today as active as many younger men and is able to do much harder work.

The First Train

In speaking of his early boyhood he relates an incident in his life when the family were driven twenty miles to see a train of cars for the first time, and also remembers Kalamazoo when there were only two stores there.

Hinkley has only been out of the county 18 months since his birth.

Reliable Sporting News

It is a curious and significant fact that men who can be satisfied with distorted and unreliable news in other departments will instantly resent the falsifying of sporting news. Those interested in the sporting events of the world long ago discovered that the Chicago Record-Herald is a reliable authority in this field, printing all the news, day by day, year in and year out, with a steady accuracy and terse completeness unsurpassed anywhere. It has a large staff of editors and reporters, who devote all their time and skill to this department alone. The Sunday Record-Herald has a separate sporting supplement of four full pages—a newspaper in itself—in which the athletic events of the whole country, reported by telegraph to the last moment of going to press, are presented with numerous illustrations. All that is of interest in baseball, football, racing, athletics, hunting, automobiling, yachting, golf, tennis, boxing and other sports can always be found in reliable form in the Record-Herald. Every man on the sporting staff is an expert trained to see straight and write the truth without bias. This is why the Record-Herald is the favorite paper among the true lovers of sport.

IS JUMPING INTO FAME

Decatur Bids Fair to Become Celery Center

BIG CROPS ARE GROWN

Several Thousand Acres of Peppermint Under Cultivation—Also Raise Grapes

The Kalamazoo Evening Press gives Decatur and its growing celery industry the following write-up:

Decatur, the little Van Buren county village down the line, is jumping into fame as a celery center. The draining and clearing of the swamps is having a very stimulating effect on the celery, peppermint and fruit industries.

About ten years ago some of the farmers about Decatur undertook to raise celery. They have since followed the business with varying success and the business has grown. A citizen of the village the other day made a rough estimate of the value of the celery crop there. He placed it at about $85,000 a year.

There is a small colony of Hollanders in the vicinity of Dowagiac and that is tantamount to notice that the celery business is going to be a great success. It is believed that eventually the crop will reach the quarter million mark. Land owners and real estate men say they can readily see $250,000 a year in the muck.

The Dutch have, of course, moved there in families and they are preparing to stay. As is always the case with the Dutch, they are anchoring themselves to the soil and are taking the second step—building a church. Two or three of the Dutch ministers of Kalamazoo have been preaching there at various times and it is expected that a regular congregation will be organized soon. A minister has practically been engaged.

There are several peppermint farms within five miles of Decatur and they are doing well. Several farmers have made comfortable fortunes in the business. There is a disposition to keep down peppermint growing and rely more generally on celery. It has been found that the land, after it has been worked a few years, yields excellent celery.

The peppermint business is old in that section. It was one of the pioneer sections. There are yet several thousands of acres to be reclaimed and brought into subjection, and with the digging of a few more ditches, the real estate values of that section will be vastly increased.

As a result of these industries the village is taking on new life and a marked growth is expected for the next few years.

Decatur is very much in the grape belt and the highland sections are pretty well covered with vines. The poorer lands have been utilized for grapes and now the rich muck is to be used for other crops, which would indicate that Decatur is going to pile up some wealth.

The village is one of the seven leading shipping stations of the co-operative associations of the grape growers. A few more vineyards go into bearing commission this year.

Peaches are raised to some extent.

THE STORY OF A DUTCHMAN

It May Be His Skull Found by Vroegindeweys Near Pickeral Lake

POOR FAMILY SHOWS STACKS OF GOLD

Since the human skull was found in the swamp near Decatur a few weeks ago, speculation has run rife as to whose it could have been and how it could have gotten to the place where it was found, and since an account of its finding was published in the Republican two weeks ago many people have called to see it. Among them are Quinton Curry and Brook Goble, two of our earliest pioneers, by whom we are told the following story, which may or may not solve the mystery:

A short time previous to the year 1856, a family by the name of R——— (name given by narrators but omitted by publisher) consisting of an elderly man and his wife, two grown up sons, James and John, and a daughter, came from somewhere in the east, presumably Pennsylvania, and located upon rented land in the vicinity of what was then Charlestown. They were considered to be very poor and had but one horse, an old harness and an old single wagon, but they gradually got more until at the time they left here they had three good teams, new harnesses and wagons.

In 1856 a "Dutchman" came to Decatur from the east and, leaving his small trunk here, went across the swamp looking for land. He could not speak the English language but the old man R———, who could understand his talk acted as interpreter and assisted him in looking for land.

The "Dutchman" finally entered into an arrangement to buy a farm then owned by Elijah Goble and the deal was all completed except that the Dutchman had to return to Decatur and get his money which he had left in his trunk. He came for the money accompanied by the R——s, father and sons. Later in the day the R———s returned to their home and reported that upon their arrival in Decatur the "Dutchman" had told them he did not want to buy any land and that he went back east. The Dutchman was never heard of afterwards.

A short time after the "Dutchman" was in the vicinity of Charleston the R———s moved from the home they had occupied to Whitewater, Wis. Old man R—and the women went by train. The two boys, James and John, took the three teams overland, the late Isaac Higgins and Jasper P. Warner going with them. Before they got to Whitewater the R——— boys got out of money with which to pay their expenses and borrowed some of Mr. Warner, telling him that the family had plenty of money with them and they would pay it back when they reached Whitewater which they did. At the time of doing so they took Mr. Warner into the pantry and showed him a large amount of gold money which was in small stacks upon the pantry shelves and which according to Mr. Warner's judgement contained several thousand dollars in gold.

When the R———s came to Michigan they were at least supposed to be very poor. When they reached Wisconsin they were in affluence. The Dutchman was never heard of after the R———s reported that he had returned to the east.

Now the query arises: Is there any connection between the gold that was supposed to have been in the dutchman's trunk in Decatur and the gold that was seen by Mr. Warner on the pantry shelves in Wisconsin,

Is there any connection between the dutchman that was about to buy Goble's farm near Charleston and the human skull that was found in the swamp by the Vroegindewey boys?

Could the R———s, if alive, tell of "ways that were dark" in connection with both the dutchman and his gold?

UNEARTHS AN INDIAN CANOE.

Other Strange Relics Found in Digging Brigham Drain

During the past week another find has been made in the swamp surrounding Pickerel lake. Edwin Kinney who has the contract to dig the Brigham drain which empties into Pickerel lake, last week dug into an Indian canoe.

The canoe was found three feet below the surface of the miry, mucky soil of the swamp through which the drain passes. It is about eight feet long hewn from a solid log of white wood, and very artistically carved with ends turned up in regular Indian style.

In all probability it has been buried here for many years but being deeply covered by the water and dirt, unexposed to the atmosphere, it was preserved from rotting and decaying and is still in a solid condition. The canoe was found upturned. Inside of it was found a wooden instrument of Indian manufacture, a kind of paddle-shaped hand-ax such as was used by the natives for barking trees. It is probable that the owner of the canoe had been using this instrument as a paddle.

The canoe was lying some sixteen rods from the present edge of the lake and about thirty rods from the spot where the skull was found by the Vroegindewey boys last week. About six rod farther up the drain Mr. Kinney also unearthed at about the same depth broken parts of horns of an animal. One of the pieces is some three feet long and four in diameter with three large branches. Another piece seemed to be the tip of the same horn. The horn is most to large to be that of an elk and the elk is the largest animal which was known formerly to roam in this section of the country.

Whether there is any connection between the history of the canoe and the story of the skull is difficult to conjecture. It gives us some light upon the former condition of the land around Decatur. Some of our old pioneers remember well that the small lakes surrounding our village formerly were much larger than at present. It seems that the large tract of present muck land formerly was one large lake and a popular hunting resort for the Indians. But during the age the shallow parts of this lake have been filled in by decaying logs and vegetable matter forming our present fertile tracts of celery muck. It is possible that before long more curios may be found which will attract interest to this vicinity.

Drowning of Ray Athey

Ray Athey was drowned in the old old swimming hole, Lake of the Woods, last Friday evening.

He did the delivering for Evans' grocery that day and put the horse out at 6 o'clock. Then he and Floyd Mullinex and Dalton Brown went to the lake.

At the swimming hole the water gets gradually deeper to about 5 feet and then there is a pitch-off to about 10 feet. Ray waded out too far and went over the pitch-off. He could not swim and called frantically for help. Floyd tried to save him but was not strong enough to do so. Walter Brown's boy is still smaller and was powerless to help. The boys ran to town for help and in a little while a large crowd gathered at the lake. It was 11 o'clock before the body was recovered.

Ray was 17 years old, the eldest son of James and Elsie Athey. He was a junior in the high school and popular with his school mates. The bearers at his funeral were Arden Treat, Floyd Odlum, Harold Lawrence, Allan Baker and Myron Hinkley. (Of these six boys only Floyd Odlum, the nationally known financier, and Myron Hinkley of Clovis, California, are now living.)

OAK PLANKS WERE CHEAP

FARMERS FIFTY YEARS AGO USED THEM FOR HIGHWAYS IN MICHIGAN

Sixty years ago plank roads were common in this state and toll gates were built and operated to pay the expenses of keeping them in repair. There was one for years running from Smith's Chapel in Milton Township to Niles, and the plank used in its construction, if it were placed on the market today, would pay the Cass County debt.

In fact, there was plank enough used in Michigan in an early day for this purpose to pay the state debt. Timber was plentiful then and the man who had a chance to sell it that way was mightily pleased,

There was one of those roads between Paw Paw and Lawton, but the man who put it down, got into trouble over the settlement of the bill and took up every fourth or fifth plank the entire distance of about a mile. The road remained in that shape for years with a wagon track on each side of the plank.

Because timber was plentiful planks were cheap, and yet the plank road Company, with few exceptions, was not a financial success. To build such roads in modern times, when lumber has become so scarce and valuable, would cost many times more than it did in that early period.

The "Paw Paw" Plank Road Company was chartered with power to lay out a plank road from the village of Paw Paw, to some point on the Michigan Central Railroad, at or near, where the little Prairie Ronde road crosses the tracks.

By the legislative Act of 1849, a charter was given to the "Decatur, Lawrence and Breedsville Plank Road Co.," which was authorized to lay out a plank road from the village of Decatur to the village of Lawrence. Aaron Broughton, Marvin Hannah, Henry Coleman, Jonathon Hinckley and Benjamin Chadwick were appointed commissioners to receive subscriptions to the stock of the Company.

The Decatur and St. Joseph Plank Road Company was created to construct a plank road from the village of Decatur to the village of St. Joseph, Berrien County. Such a road was laid out from Detroit to Niles, October 7, 1849. An excursion train was run from Detroit to Niles in celebration of the opening of the road.

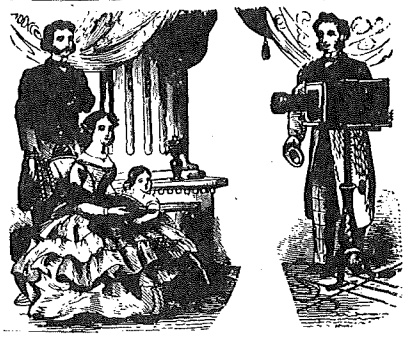
THE PHOTOGRAPHER HOLMES

A QUEER CHARACTER BUT A GENIUS WHO OWNED DECATUR GALLERY FORTY YEARS AGO

In looking over the collection of photographs which he has been a life time accumulating, Charley Pritchard came to a large likeness of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morris, whose tragic death over thirty years ago was told in a recent issue of the Republican. The picture was taken by Photographer J.C. Holmes and in presenting it to the publisher, Mr. Pritchard told the following story of this peculiar but in many ways remarkable man.

Of the old-time business men of Decatur, probably one of the most eccentric characters was J.C. Holmes who was engaged in the photograph business here from 1868 until the early '70's. He was an expert in his line of work and few there were who could excel him.

He was always courteous in his manners and when he first lived in Decatur was one of the best dressers that ever came to town. When he appeared in public he was dressed in the height of fashion. He sported fine jewels, a silk tie and a gold headed cane.



But as time rolled by, all of this changed, owing, it is said, to his having been disappointed in love by one of Decatur's fairest daughters. He became negligent in his business, often leaving it for several days at a time to go fishing. Consequently, work he had on hand would be neglected for weeks.

During the time he was in Decatur he had an apprentice — Charley Pritchard, to whom he agreed to teach the art of photography for the sum of twenty-five dollars. He had gotten down to the point where his clothing consisted of two pairs of white linen trousers and a black coat and vest. He wore this combination all winter, wearing both pairs of trousers at the same time so that the holes in one pair would be covered by the good places in the other.

Sometime during the spring, Charley Pritchard payed him the twenty-five dollars and shortly thereafter, Holmes came into the studio with a new, cheap suit of clothes. Throwing the suit on the table, he remarked, "There Holmes, you've got a new suit of clothes!" Unfastening his coat collar, which he always wore pinned up close to his chin, he displayed an old, soiled, white shirt.

Mr. Holmes was an avid reader and was very fond of Shakespeare. One morning he came into his studio, picked up a volume of Shakespeare and began to read aloud, in which manner he continued to read until two o'clock in the afternoon, stopping only long enough to occasionally exclaim in a tragically deep bass voice: "God! Ain't that fine! Ain't that grand?"

DECORATION DAY

From the Scrap Book of the Late Mrs. Jeremiah Watts

"Tis Decoration Day!" The voice I heard,
And in my heart an old-time wound was stirred.
The dark, sad days of war came trooping back,
Death and destruction following in their track,
The days when insurrection wild did run,
And rebels shot their first menacing gun!
The guns that pierced thy walls, O Sumter and Fired loyal hearts with wrath throughout the land,
Then from the patriots hearthstone and his door
How many sires went forth — to come no more!
How many sons kissed mothers, sisters, then,
And never pressed their trembling lips again!
Bravely they fought an evil rooted deep,
May holy angels whisper as they sleep.
"Ye fought not vainly, O brave sons and sires!
Ye fought for Freedom's dear loved altar-fires!"
And lo! today the "Old Flag" proud and free, with stars as bright as Heaven's own canopy,
Its stripes — the dear old colors dyed anew,
All, all are here — the red, the white, the blue!
Long wave, dear Flag! No man may say again
You wave o're reeking whip and chain!
Your gracious folds, your colors pure and warm
Hold for the oppressed of every land a charm
O soldiers dead! Brave soldiers living, too,
How much our country owes to God and you!
Brave comrades of the brave men bivouacked here,
While to the dead we give the flower and tear,
We thank high Heaven, that, scattered through the land
Tired, brave and honored sentinels still stand,
Silent, but watchful, ready evermore
To well defend fair Freedom's open door
Long may you live, O noble Boys in Blue!
Flowers for our dead! — The warm right hand to you!

DEATH

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so.
For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow
Die not, poor Death, nor yet canst thou kill me.
From rest and sleep, which but thy pictures be,
Much pleasure; then from thee much more must flow,
And soonest our best man with thee do go,
Rest of their bones, and soul's delivery.
Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell;
And poppy or charms can make us sleep as well
And better than thy stroke; why swell'st thou then?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally,
And death shall be no more; Death, thou shalt die.

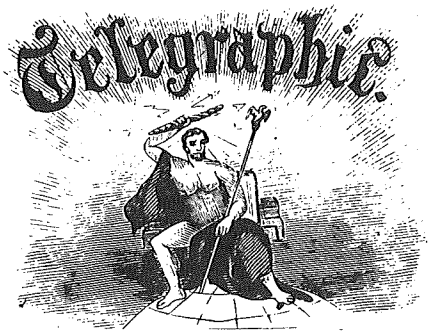
Mr. Carris has recently sold his farm in Lawrence township and moved into the Bruner house on Wheeler street in this village.



LOSE NIGHT TELEGRAPHER

Michigan Central Makes Shift that Will Inconvenience Decatur People

The night operator was taken off at this station Sunday and Decatur is without this service for the first time within the memory of the present generation. Whether or not the order to abandon Decatur as a night telegraph station will be permanent is a matter of guess work, but undoubtedly unless our people are considerably interested and make a strong protest, it will be.

The order was not made by the the railroad company to save money but operators. Since the Union was organized and operators refused to take students the demand for men has exceeded the supply. The demand is still further increased by the nine hour law which requires the railroads to make three shifts instead of two, and Decatur's night man will be sent to a place where the call for the service is greater.

A night man will be kept at the station to check baggage and sell tickets and travelers will receive the same attention that they have in the past. Allan Baker has been appointed to the position.

WILL LIGHT THE DEPOT

Needed Improvement Promised by Michigan Central At Once

Geo T. Pomeroy, president of the Citizens' State Bank, received last week a letter from the general superintendent of the Michigan Central Railway Company in which he says: "In answer to your letter of April 11th in reference to providing better lighting facilities at our station at Decatur, I have arranged with the chief engineer to have electric lights installed at the station, which I believe will make a vast improvement in the lighting arrangement."

The people of Decatur have long complained of poor lighting at the station. Outside of the station there is not even a light to indicate from Main street the location of the station and one citizen in particular is known to have once spent an hour in looking for it before finding it and missing his train. The waiting rooms are dimly lit by kerosene lamps.

About a month ago sixty two ladies, most of them members of the Every Tuesday Club, and forty-four business and professional men petitioned the Company for better lights.

MEETS DEATH ON FARM

Austin E. Dwight, One of Decatur's Grand Old Men, Overcome by Heat and Falls Into Fire

Austin E. Dwight met death in a field on his farm on the north line of Decatur township about three o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Dwight went to the farm in the morning and was spending the time cleaning up. He set fire to some brush and dead weeds and the fire went beyond his control. He was last seen alive by Daniel and Robert Orr who were drawing hay from the field adjoining. He was beating the fire back but it had not then spread enough to alarm the boys. They went to the barn and unloaded the hay, their father, James Orr, helping. They were not in the barn more than fifteen or twenty minutes but when they returned they saw a pile of wood and the fence burning and Mr. Dwight was not in sight. They concluded that he had gone to the further side of the field to keep the fire from spreading that way and went to work to save the fence. Then they went over to help Clarence Lindsley save his hayfield and on returning discovered Mr. Dwight lying on the ground face downward, dead. The ground around him had been burnt over and the clothing was burned from the body. There was no indication of a struggle and to all appearances he had been overcome by the heat and fallen before the flames reached him.

Mr. Orr and his sons hurried to the McLeese, home the nearest place from which they could telephone; and notified the friends in Decatur.

L. L Hamilton brought the body to his undertaking rooms in the evening where it was prepared for burial.

His children from Kalamazoo arrived on the night train and his daughter, Miss Jennie Dwight, arrived from Washington, D. C, today.

Mr. Dwight was one of the eldest and best citizens of our village and there is universal sorrow expressed over his untimely death.

Funeral services will be held at the Presbyterian church Friday morning at ten o'clock and burial will take place in the family lot in Lakeside cemetery.

AUSTIN E. DWIGHT

AUSTIN E. DWIGHT

BORN 1832 DIED 1910

Austin Erksine Dwight, son of Samuel and Darsa Bartlett Dwight, was born February 21, 1832, at Belchertown, Hampshire county, Massachusetts. He was one of a family of twelve, children, seven of whom are now living, to wit: Corydon G. Dwight, of Cun Lake, Maria E. Dwight, of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Clara J. Aldrich and Mrs. May V. Snow both of Ware, Mass., Mrs. Sarah E. Munsell of Enfield, Mass., Albert E. Dwight of Northampton, Mass., and Mrs. Emily Hicks of Lowell, Mich.

Mr. Dwight was raised on a typical New England farm, in the vicinity of Mounts Quabbin, Monadnock, Holyoke, and Tom.

In 1853 he attained his majority and left the old home and went to Pembroke., N. Y. A year later he came to Michigan, and located at Kalamazoo, where he lived about a year. In 1855 he came to Decatur where he made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Trowbridge.

On November 23, 1860 he was married to Hester A. Hosselkus, at Oaryville, N. Y., who died at Decatur, Mich., on December 26, 1876.

Two children were born to this union, Miss Jennie H. Dwight, now a resident of Washington, D. C., and Louis D. Dwight, now residing at San Francisco, Calif.

On November 20, 1880, he married Miss Ellen Devendorf, who survives him.

Five children were born to them, three of whom are now living, Albert O. Dwight and Blanche L. Dwight, both residing at Kalamazoo, Mich., and Samuel Harold Dwight, who lives at the old home.

He died July 5 at Decatur, Mich., aged 78 years, 4 months and 14 days.

Austin E. Dwight was one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Decatur. He came here early in manhood, and his home has been in this village for fifty-five years.

He came to Decatur equipped by nature with a sturdy manhood, honesty, earnestness of purpose and the determination to provide a home. He succeeded, and all who know him bear willing testimony to his sterling virtues as a citizen, friend, neighbor, husband and father.

His ancestors were of sturdy New England stock. The first Dwight of whom there is any record in this country, was John Dwight, of Dedham, England, who came to Dedham, Mass., in 1635. Col. Simeon Dwight of Warren, Mass., was a soldier of the War of the Revolution, and the grandfather of Austin E. Dwight. His great grandfather on his mother's side was Robert Brown, who was a soldier of the war of the Revolution.

Born among the rocky hills of Massachusetts, he learned early in life what labor and economy meant. From such ancestry and such surroundings in his early life were inherited the sterling qualities and characteristics which were his distinguishing traits.

As a citizen he was law abiding and just; as a friend loyal; as a neighbor, considerate; as a husband, kind and faithful, and as a father, affectionate. By his death Decatur has lost one of its early settlers, and a most estimable citizen.

OUR OLDEST PIONEER

Dolford Tittle Lived Seventy-Five Years in Decatur

Dolford Tittle was a son of George and Nancy Tittle, who were among the very first settlers of Van Buren County, and was born on the farm where he spent almost his entire life.

His father came to Decatur township in 1831 and located his home there on section 35. It was here that Dolford Tittle was born about seventy-five years ago and where he lived until a little over a year ago, when he sold the old farm and bought the William Anson place in Hamilton Township, here he died. His life was quiet and uneventful but he was respected as a citizen and as a good neighbor.

He died at his home in Hamilton May 29th leaving a widow and two children, Mrs. Alice Rogers, and Cameron.

The funeral was held Wednesday, June 1st, at his home, Rev. J. W. Davids officiating. He was buried in Hamilton cemetery.

RAILWAY BONDS ON SALE

Electric Railway to be Completed to Decatur by First of Next May

S. B. Downer of the Chicago, Indiana and Michigan Railways Company, has been in this vicinity the past few days completing the right of way of the road from Kalamazoo to Benton Harbor.

Mr. Downer will be in Decatur Saturday to place before our people a proposition to buy the Company's first mortgage five per cent. gold bearing bonds, interest payable semi-annually. These bonds are contracted for a 90 per cent. of par value and will be used to pay for right of way.

They are of the same series that the financial house accepts for building the road and are not payable until the road is constructed and in operation from Benton Harbor to Decatur.

It is the plan of the promoters to have the road in operation as far as Decatur by the first of May.

LIVED EIGHTY-ONE YEARS IN DECATUR

John Eckenberger, probably the oldest resident of the township — was here long before village was begun and remembers time well. He was born in the township of Volinia near the home of Mrs. Zerelda Van Curen June 17, 1832.

In 1834 Mr. Eckenberger moved with his parents into Decatur Township and Decatur has since been his home. If Decatur has an older living resident, we shall be glad to hear from him or her. The older Eckenberger took of the Government which is now the home of Mrs. L.B. Greenman.

John Eckenberger was a good hunter and trapper as well as a painter. He remembers well the settling of Decatur village and the building of the first stores here.

Building Brooks Store

Brook's store, now being overhauled, was built in 1851 by A.H. Dixon, commonly known as Ham Dixon, who came here from Kalamazoo, bringing carpenters from Kalamazoo to do the work. He stocked the store with drygoods and general merchandise 'til he made it the best trading place in the county, and in a few years he failed.

William Larzelere next conducted the business and was here five or six years. E.P. Hill then bought the building and it is still owned by his daughter, Mrs. Gordon. Mr. Hill added about four feet to the height of the building leaving it as it appears today.

Mr. Dixon dealt in furs and used to send John Eckenberger out to buy for him. Once he was sent into Ottawa County to buy of the Indians and was so successful that Mr. Dixon paid him sixty dollars for a day's work. Mink were common in those days and the hides brought nine dollars each.

Decatur has improved in many ways since this landmark of the town was constructed sixty-four years ago and we predict that it will show a much greater per cent of improvement in the next sixty-four years.

Speaking about Brook's store reminds us also that Ely Hincher is one of the old residents of this town. Dan Johnson, father of Mrs. Arthur Watson, was one of his friends and in their early visits he had told him of building the corner store. Mr. Johnson got out the big timbers and most of them came from within a block of the building, along where the Methodist Church now stands.

UNCLE JOHN COOK

Known and Respected in Decatur and Van Buren County Died at the Age of 84

Good old Uncle John Cook, after 84 years of upright honorable life, has at last passed beyond the River to that land where such as he will receive a bright reward.

John Cook was born August 27th, 1826, and his baptismal register is recorded in the old parish church at Bolingbroke, Lincolnshire, England. He was the second child in a large family born of poor but honorable, industrious and highly respectable parents.

His parents were too poor to send him to school and he has often been heard to say that he never attended school a day in his life, but by close observation and study of the ways of life he became possessed of a broad practical education such as but few would acquire in a lifetime even longer than his.

At the age of seven years he began to support himself, his first labor being as a shepherd boy, tending the flocks of the English land owners.

Then for ten years he was a servant in the house of an English Lord, after which he became a laborer on the public works at Hull and Grimsby, England.

In March, 1851, he took passage at Liverpool for America and arrived in New York April 16th and came at once to Paw Paw, where he engaged himself as hostler at the Dyckman House barn, and many of our older inhabitants well remember of tossing Johnnie Cook a quarter to pay for feeding and caring for their horses and the horse was well fed and cared for too.

He has often been heard to say that when he arrived at Paw Paw all he had in the world was twelve English sovereigns, a good constitution, sober habits and "right willing to work".

In 1873 he left the Dyckman House barn and located 160 acres of land on Secton 24 of Decatur township and went to work to make for himself a home in the then unbroken forests. By hard labor he cleared and improved the land and it became one of the best and most fertile farms in the township. He lived on this farm until a few weeks before his death and owned it when he died.

In politics he was a strict old democrat of the old school and never voted for but one republican in his life and then he voted for Abraham Lincoln the first time he was elected President.

He always attended the county conventions of his party and frequently attended their state coventions. For many years he never failed to attend the elections held at Decatur, but last spring he was not present and many wondered what was the matter with Uncle John. He was always appointed a challenger at the elections for the Democratic side, which gave him a right to sit with the election board, a privilege which he greatly enjoyed and his genial, good natured remarks always made him welcome by all present. He was nominated in 1904 for state senator by the democrats and in the election following ran far ahead of his ticket but was defeated owing to the overwhelming Republican majority in this senatorial district.

As a friend and neighbor he was respected and liked by all who knew him and it is fair to presume that he did not have an enemy in the world.

He was always courteous and jolly and was just one of the kind of men whom people enjoy meeting.

He was married twice, his first wife died many years ago, leaving one daughter who is now Mrs. Mary Johnson of Fulton, N. Y. His second wife died in 1893. By the last marriage there were six children, four of whom survive, one, a daughter, having died less than a year ago and a son, Thomas, having died only about four weeks ago.

Mr. Cook was a familiar figure on the streets of Decatur during all the years he lived in this township and it was only some five or six weeks ago that he paid his last visit here, and then his friends noted that his extreme old age was beginning to tell upon him.

He had no particular disease. He simply lived his alloted time and died. He was like a candle; burned down, serving its purpose and going out.

He died at the home of his son, John Cook, jr. in Porter township on Tuesday morning, November 22, at 3 o'clock at the age of 84 years, 1 month an 25 days.

His funeral was held Friday, November 25, at the Porter church and his remains were laid beside those of his wife in the Porter cemetery.

WILLIAM IRWIN AT NINETY

Celebrated Birthday January Tenth. Decatur's Oldest Citizen

William M. Irwin was ninety years old Monday, January 10. Mr. Irwin lives with his step daughter, Mrs. Helen Lindsley on East St. Mary's street and the Lindsley relatives gave him a birthday surprise party.

Relatives and friends to the number of sixteen came with their dinner baskets and in the language of Mr. Irwin "made quite a spread". He was presented with a fine oak rocker, and a beautiful boquet of carnations.

Mr. Irwin is one of the oldest residents of Van Buren county and probably the oldest citizen of Decatur. He is in good health for one so old. When the walking is good he walks to the business street nearly every day, he enjoys reading, tells a good story and enjoys a good joke, laughing as heartily as the young people.

He was born in the town of Hampton, New Jersey, January 10, 1820. He was the oldest of five children of whom a sister is still living in Rochester, New York.

When he was ten years old the family moved to Mount Morris, New York, where he lived on a farm until he was twenty three. About this time he was attracted by the emmigration westward and decided to cast his lot with the venturesome young Americans who were building homes for themselves in the wilderness. He was married in York, Livingston county, to Miss Lucy Gardnerland came on to Michigan with his bride in the fall of 1846. They located first in Schoolcraft where he worked on a farm for three years.

In the spring of 1849 the great gold fever spread over Kalamazoo county and Mr. Irwin joined a company of forty robust men bound for "California or bust".

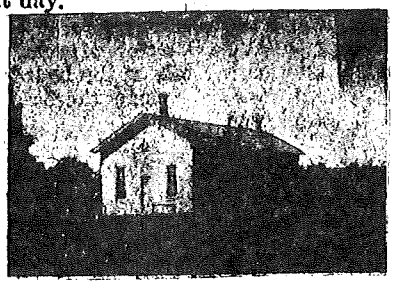
They left Schoolcraft the fifth of March with a dozen teams prairie schooners and a complete camping outfit for the overland trip across the continent. The trip was replete with thrilling experiences and many narrow escapes, but they arrived in San Francisco without the loss of a life on the tenth of July.

Mr. Irwin was taken ill of fever as soon as they arrived and it was afyear and one half before he was able to begin the homeward trip. His illness prevented him from trying his luck at prospecting. As soon as his health would permit he began the homeward trip going by boat to Central America, crossing Lake Nicaragua to Santi Carlos, thence to Havana and New York, arriving in February, 1851. He remained in New York three days, stopping at the old Battery Hotel near Castle Garden, and then returned to Schoolcraft. This same year, 1851, he became a resident of Van Buren county. He first purchased fifty acres of solid forest near the present site of the Plopper school house and built a log house 18x26 feet in size. The neighbors helped him to raise it and the job was completed in three days. When he first came to Decatur the business street consisted of two or three small whiskey shops, a blacksmith shop and a general store. The Michigan Central came no nearer than Kalamazoo.

Mr. Irwin's father and mother followed him to Michigan and located on a farm adjoining him. They are both buried in Prospect Lake cemetery. Mrs. Irwin died in 1887 and Mr. Irwin sold his farm two years later. Since then he has lived with his step daughter, Mrs. Helen Lindsley. He has lived in Decatur village five years.

H. J. Beld and son who live on the Martin Knoll farm north of the village, have been visitors among relatives in Grand Rapids the past few days.

Little Ida Pritchard went to Paw Paw last week to visit her grandfather. She was taken seriously ill of croup and Mrs. Pritchard was called there Thursday afternoon, the stormiest day of the winter. Del Adams made the drive for her with one of Creagan & Carris' best horses and made the trip over in less than two hours. The little girl was better the next day.



HAMILTON FAIR REPORT

Prepared by Sec'y C. F. Cole and Containing Statement of Finances

The Hamilton Fair, held on the 6th and 7th of October, 1910, has come and gone with better success than for several years. It was an ideal day and a large orderly crowd attended with 152 entries outside of the hall making a good display.

Division F, Foreign Manufacturing, was represented by Rob. Johnson with his potato digger.

After the awarding of premiums the crowd was entertained by an able speech by E. L. Dare of Chicago, whose subject was "Co-operation Among Farmers". It highly pleased those who were thoughtful enough to listen to him. Mr. Dare is one of the finest gentlemen I have ever had the pleasure of entertaining. He talked as long as he had time and be able to meet the train. He said he would like to have stayed longer as he thought that the farmers of this section would be interested if they could have further information on the subject.

The display in the hall under the able management of Mrs. J. O. Cooper was the largest and best that it has been for years. Too much praise can not be given Mrs. Cooper and her lady assistants for the arrangement of the hall. There were upwards of 70 entries that won prizes and numerous others that are not mentioned in their report.

The financial report is about as follows there may be some premiums unpaid.

Amt on hand Oct. 6th	$42.05
Receipts	$51.47
Total	$93.52

DISBURSEMENTS

Paid out for premiums	$55.00
Printing and other supplies	8.50
Other expenses	12.95
	$76.45
Leaving balance on hand	17.07

As anyone can see by the amount left on hand something has got to be done besides wind work if the Fair is continued and as there will be a call to elect officers in the near future it will be up to the people of Hamilton to turn out when that time comes and elect a set of officers that have some hustle about them and not sit around and say it can't be done and let some one else do all the work.

So wishing the future officers and especially the next secretary the best of success, I will close.

O. F. Cole, secretary.

DR. N. D. THOMAS

The Brief Sketch of A Good Man Whose Life's Work Is Finished

1826-1910

Nathaniel D Thomas was born in Logan County, Ohio, March 5, 1826. He was the eldest of eight children born to Abel and Rebecca Thomas.

At a very early age he manifested a love for study and a desire to gain an education. He obtained the rudiments of an education from such common schools as existed at that time, and then began teaching, in order to work his way up that he might enter higher schools of learning. Here began his early struggles for an education. He taught school twelve winter seasons and for two terms attended Ohio Central College, and for two years pursued his studies in Ohio Weslayan University.

It would seem unjust not to note in passing that the struggles of a young man in those days to obtain an education were far greater than those of the present time. In those days the usual compensation for teaching was ten or twelve dollars a month, and one who made his own way by teaching had to do without many of the necessities of life in order to obtain the coveted prize—an education.

Wishing to make the practice of medicine his life-work he began studying in the office of his cousin Dr. N. M. Thomas of Schoolcraft, Mich. After studying three years he attended Starling Medical College of Columbus, Ohio for one year.

On his return to Michigan, he began the practice of his profession in Flowerfield, St. Joseph County, where he remained for three years, and during that time was married on the 24th of Oct., 1850, to Marcia Smith, daughter of James Smith, a prominent merchant of Schoolcraft.

On leaving Flowerfield in 1853 Dr. Thomas removed to Little Prairie Ronde, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1869, when the arduous labors of a country physician began to undermine his health and he took up the occupation of farming. In this he continued up to the time of his death, October 18, 1910.

To Dr. and Mrs. Thomas were born six children, Mark S. of Decatur, Jessie to whom has fallen the care of the father and mother in their old age, Willard S. of Traverse City, Lillian who died in infancy, Isabel who died in 1897, and May who is now Mrs. Harry Ballard of Niles. Mrs. Thomas preceded her husband to the better land May 29, 1906.

By nature Dr. Thomas was a student. He was more of a student than a business man. All through his long life this trait formed a marked feature of his character whether as physician or farmer. It was his greatest delight to solve the most difficult of problems and there are few individuals who possess such persistent determination.

He descended from the early Quakers and was a quiet, unassuming, home-loving man. He had an unusually bright mind, he was a lover of the best literature, well versed in all the current topics of the day, and he was a true patriot.

On looking back over the years of a long life we see the successes and failures the struggles and triumphs as the shadows deepen toward the close. We see in memory many faces brighten as he was called to the bedside of suffering and those who knew him best feel that his greatest success was in ministering to his fellow-man.

The funeral sermon was preached by Mrs. Olivia J. C Woodman of Paw Paw, and the interment was at Rose Hill, the Nicholsville cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We desire to thank our neighbors and friends for their help and sympathy in our late bereavement.

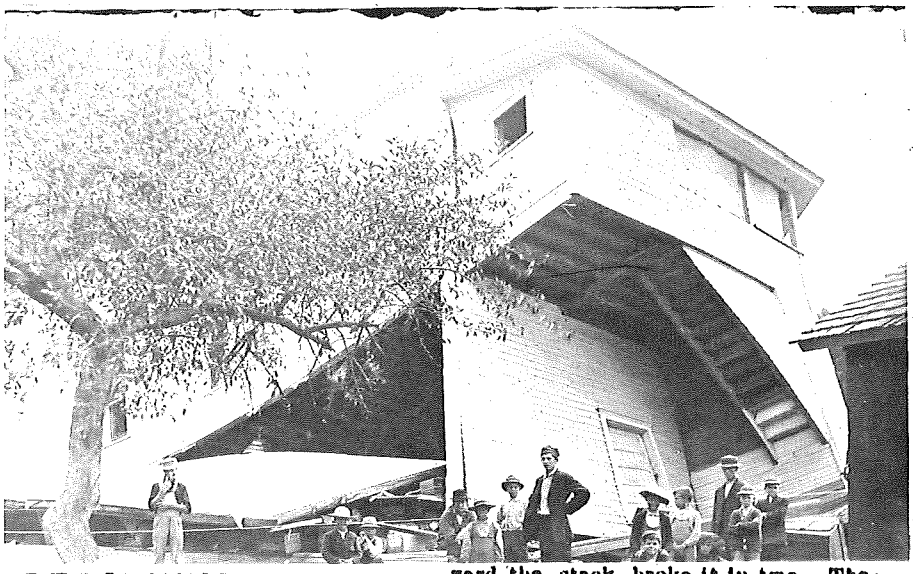
BOSLER'S AUTOMOBILE

Alex Ramsey Has First Horseless Carriage In New Wyoming Town

The toot of the automobile is already heard in the land. Mr. A. Ramsey has a handsome machine, and when he wants a pound of starch or a cigar, jumps in and makes to town in a few minutes. One of his neighbors said if Ramsey kept his machine going for a couple of months, he would have all the prairie dogs on the plains either run down or scared to death.



DECATUR'S FIRST CYCLONE

Much Damage Done to Trees Roofs, Chimneys, Etc.

SO. SIDE GROCERY DESTROYED

The most severe wind and rain storm that our people have ever experienced passed over this village about two o'clock last Tuesday morning, wrecking buildings, destroying trees and doing a large amount of damage.

The storm came from the north and passed in a quarterly course over the village, doing the most damage on the south side of the Michigan Central Railroad.

The South Side Grocery Store, a large building erected only a little over a year ago and owned by Al. VanDenberg, is a complete wreck and the stock it contained is badly damaged. The storm struck the building on the north side and leveled the first story with the exception of a small addition attached to the western end of the main building and which was built for a stairway.

The front of the second story of the building was carried about twenty-five feet south and dropped to the ground, the rear remaining in very nearly its original position, being supported by the stairway. Except for its position the second story of the building is but little damaged but the first story is crushed to pieces. The damage to this building and the stock it contained is estimated at about $2500.

The large smoke stack on the Decatur Milling Company's mill was blown down and destroyed. Falling across Stub. Woolfe's dray that stood in the yard the stack broke it in two. The barn at the flouring mill was moved about four feet off its foundation.

Considerable of the roof of the Hinkley Roberts and Co.'s plant was blown off but otherwise the building was not damaged.

Many out buildings and a number of large trees in the south side of the town were blown over and limbs are scattered all over. The people living in the path of the storm were badly frightened but no injury to life or limb was done.

This is the first time Decatur was ever visited by a genuine cyclone and it will be remembered by a number of our people a good many years.

The damage to crops was slight in comparison to the amount of good the rain did. Corn was blown down

SHIPPING POTATOES

Calvin Millard Bringing Two Thousand Bushels to Market This Week

During the last two weeks the potato market at Decatur has opened up quite extensively and scenes about the warehouses where the farmers are loading their crop into cars for shipment are lively.

Calvin Millard of Hamilton Township is now delivering his crop of over two thousand bushels to Sol Schpok, bringing them in with four horses harnessed abreast and drawing as high as one hundred and thirty-five bushels of potatoes at a load.

Sol Schpok has bought and shipped over twelve thousand bushels since April 18th and has three thousand bushels bought which he will ship this week and next.

He estimates that there are still fifteen thousand bushels unsold in this vicinity, a part of which will be delivered to market but the larger part of which will be left in the pit or fed out to stock.

Mr. Schpok has paid from twelve and one-half cents to seventeen cents per bushel for what he has bought.

Roy Bond has shipped twelve carloads of about six hundred bushels each, this spring, paying twelve to fifteen cents per bushel for them. He estimates that there are now remaining in the hands of farmers about twelve thousand bushels, which are tributary to this market, the most of which will be fed out to stock or remain in the pit.

These potatoes were worth thirty-five to forty cents per bushel last fall, but the shippers could not obtain cars then in which to ship them and farmers were not very anxious to sell, hoping for better prices this spring.

Had shippers been able to obtain cars last fall the price of potatoes would probably have been a shade lower then than they were, but if a considerable quantity has been shipped out then it would have had a tendency to make a higher price this spring and very low, if any, would have gone to waste.

VETERAN OF CUSTER'S BRIGADE

Geo. Lusk Attended Unveiling of Monument at Monroe Last Friday

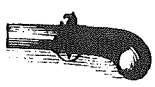
George Lusk went to Monroe last Friday morning and attended the reunion of his regiment and the unveiling of the Custer monument Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Lusk was a member of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry. The 1st, 5th, 6th, and 7th Michigan Cavalries were known as Custer's Brigade and the 5th's first hard battle was the battle of Gettysburg.

The state papers contained extended accounts of the great demonstration in Monroe at the unveiling of the monuments of the city's fallen hero, General George Armstrong Custer. President Taft was the city's guest of honor and so was every veteran that served in Custer's Brigade, some five hundred in number.

Mr. Lusk was well pleased with the entertainment he received. He was not allowed to spend a cent from the time he arrived in Monroe Friday night till he left Saturday afternoon. He was entertained at night at the home of the police justice of the city and everything possible was done for his pleasure and comfort.

Friday evening at the camp-fire he met and enjoyed a pleasant visit with Mrs. Custer whom he had not seen since she visited the camp of his regiment during the days of the Civil War.



C. W. TUCKER

Scraps of ancient history of the village of Decatur

By Abe Norwood

This is the name of a man who was a merchant here fifty years ago. He occupied a wooden building where Woods Hardware now stands and sold general merchandise. This is a rare phrase here but in small towns in the southern states you will often see this sign "GENERAL MERCHANDISE."

Besides dry goods and groceries, Tucker kept hardware, crockery, drug and patent medicines, fruits and vegetables.

He bought everything that came for sale and did some shipping. He did a great deal of credit business and probably this hastened his fall financially.

When things went against him he began to borrow money in small sums. He would strike a man according to his means, from twenty-five dollars up to a hundred and sometimes more. In course of time he went by the board, his store was sold and he went west.

Tucker was an odd, strange, eccentric character. Those who have been in his store much will remember seeing him sprawl out in his chair and yawning, stretch up his arms and say, "Ho hum, hiho." He would often spring to his feet and walk briskly, and exlaiming, "A land of rest."

He was offhand and reckless in his business. A stranger came in his store one evening and showed a piece of yellow money, said he must go to Kalamazoo and wished to pawn this piece for twenty dollars until he came back. He wanted it understood that he was to have his money back. Tucker loaned him the money, but for some reason the stranger never returned.

Late one evening a stranger came into Tucker's store and inquired if he bought furs. Of course he bought furs. The stranger had what appeared to be a mink skin, a large one and nicely fixed for market. Mink skins were dear and Tucker gave a good round price for what in the morning proved to be a cat skin.

His knowledge of mathematics was rather limited and he sometimes got into trouble for such case he always called for help. His son, William Henry, the late lawyer, was his right bower and he often called for him — "Bill Hen, Bill Hen, here quick."

He was always on the alert for customers and when anyone entered his store he would meet him, salute, and then commence, "Well, friend, what can I do for you today?" If the customer asked for an ax handle or anything else he had Tucker would respond, "Yes sir, you don't think we would be here without them, how many will you have?"

He always carried the idea that you wanted a great deal of anything.

In those days folks burned wood, usually buying four-foot wood and cutting it in lengths to suit their stoves. There were fellows in town, called corporation fiddlers, who made a business of bucking wood, but Tucker didn't want to hire then. He had a clerk and in the morning before trade commenced he would have his clerk at the big wood pile in the back yard practicing that part of the art of merchandising. The fellow got so sick of that part of the business that he never got over it.

HAD RELATIVES HERE

Unknown Man Whose Neck Was Broken Proved to be Lewis Wickens

On the second day of May in the little city of Toloua, Ill., a man was driving in an old mail wagon. The horse became frightened and ran away, the man was thrown out and his neck broken. He was a stranger in Toloua and his body was taken to the undertaking rooms and searched. He was roughly dressed and his beard was long and unkempt, but in a leather belt about his body was found $750 in bills and over $20 was found in the pockets of his overalls. In the pocket of his coat, was found a bank book from a Grand Rapids bank in which he had money on deposit.

Written on the bank book was the name of "Lewis Wickens, Grand Rapids, Mich."

The Chief of police of Tolona telegraphed to Grand Rapids and learned that Lewis Wickens left there five or six years ago, whereabouts unknown. The story was given to a Grand Rapids paper and was pulished. A sister living in Coloma saw the story and sent it to Asel Scott in this village.

Lewis Wickens was a brother of Mrs. Asel Scott and lived with the Scott family in this village for several years. He left about 15 years ago and they had not heard of him since. Will Wickens of Hamilton, is a brother and John and Henry Nower of Lawrence are cousins.

The Nower brothers went to Tolona but were unable to positively identify the body. Then the brother went out.

The body had been buried but by giving a description of the dead man's appearance and of a birth mark he was able to convince the officers that he was a brother. Will Wickens returned last Saturday.

Lewis Wickens was about 45 years of age. He was never married so far as known and his only heirs are a brother and sister and the two daughters of the late Mrs. Asel Scott.

THE DECATUR NOVELTY WORKS

Originated by the Late Henry Brown. Revived by Chas. Behnke

If you should wander down to the east end of Delaware street you will see a sign which reads, "Decatur Novelty Works."

Go a little further and you will see the original home of this industry where twenty years or more ago Henry Brown made caskets, chairs, tables, telephones, and in fact almost everything in the line of wood work.

Mr. Brown was an undertaker and had some patronage, he made his own caskets and his hearse, the countless other things and cider all in the same building. He made the business pay and kept at it until the angel of death came and took him away.

After Mr. Brown's death his son Walter kept up the business for a while but finally abandoned it for other work and is now located in Kalamazoo.

About a year ago Charlie Behnke bought the Frank Sink place nearby and made the barn over into another novelty works shop. He has a nicely equipped shop, lathes, drills, saws, etc., with which to make implements of wood and repair machinery. He is busy most of the time and his little factory adds another industry to our village.

EAST DECATUR REMINISCENCSES

In the spring of 1867 a stalwart young man, John Wooster Lewis, went westward, leaving his family in New York State. He became one of the early settlers of Michigan and settled on an eighty-acre farm in East Decatur. He spent the summer there and became convinced that it was a good place for a future home and that fall, returned to New York for his family. The family included his wife, Orpha Jane Lyman Lewis, and their three sons: Millard, Henry and John. Thus it was that in the fall of 1867, the entire family began in earnest to wrest a living from Michigan soil, which, in that location, was mostly sand.

Sometime later, John Wooster Lewis' parents came to Michigan and he sold the south forty, with the buildings on it, to them. He built his own home on the north forty where he lived for over forty years, or until his death in 1910 at the age of eighty-four. His widow remained a number of years on the farm until her health compelled her to live elsewhere.

The oldest son, Millard, became a doctor in Boston. The second son, Henry, went to Connecticut, and the youngest son, John Lewis, spent most of his life on a farm in East Decatur, near the old homestead.

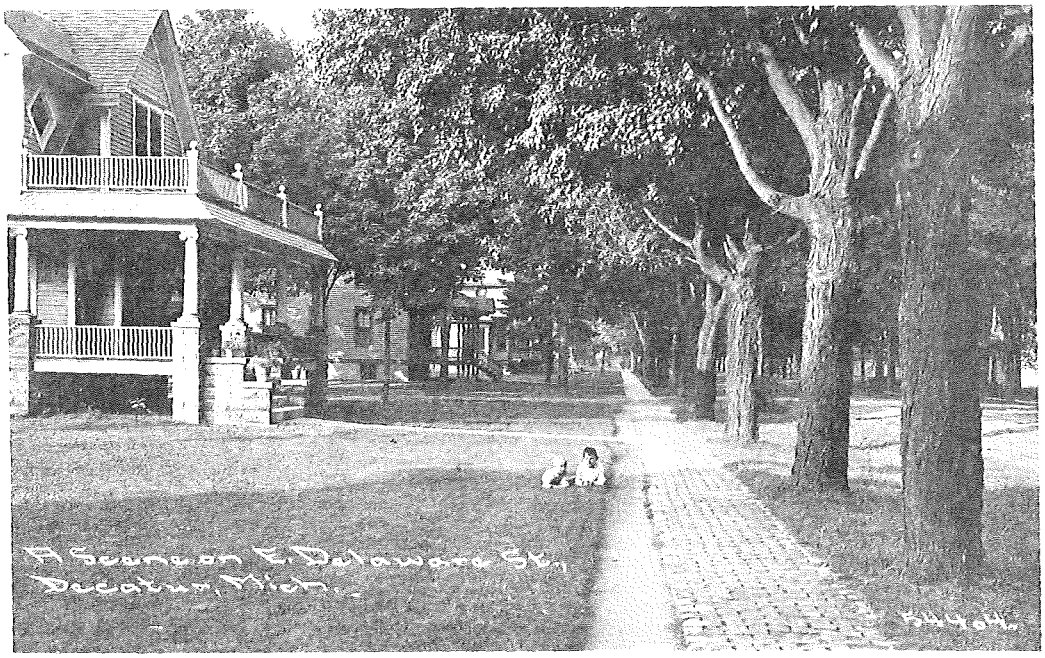
PLAN AUTO HIGHWAY

Decatur to be on Route From Detroit to St. Joe

The Republican is in receipt of information from St. Joseph that a plan is under way to build an auto highway across the state of Michigan from Detroit to St. Joe via Manchester, Homer, Vicksburg, Schoolcraft, Decatur and Keeler.

This route has an advantage over any other on account of its being straighter and more level. The road would be of great value to Decatur, not only on account of its advantage to automobilists, but for the general highway improvement.



BIG DAY FOR DECATUR

Fourth of July Celebrated in Fine Style. No Accidents or Disturbances

Decatur celebrated the Fourth of July in the old fashioned way and the day was a success.

A few people came to town in the morning, they came fast in the afternoon and the climax was reached with fully 2,000 people on the street in the evening.

The Decatur band acquitted itself nobly. The boys did not shirk their duty at any time and kept the crowd entertained when nothing else was doing. The band opened the celebration with a concert in the forenoon.

At one o'clock the athletic events were pulled off on Main street. The promoters tried in vain to get entries for the dressing contest but the other events were given according to program. The biscuit eating contest made a lot of sport for the spectators and was won by Harry Taylor. Orlo Tinney won the sack race with Fred Welcher a close second. Fred Etter of Marcellus won the potato race with Fred Welcher second, Harvey Goble and Harry Taylor won the three legged race and Etter won the 100 yard dash.

The quoit pitching contest fell through. The pitchers did not get together at eleven o'clock as billed but decided to pitch after the ball game. The game held till late and the contest was finally abandoned.

The ball game between Decatur and Kalamazoo Co. O. was the principal event of the afternoon and Barton Park was packed with spectators.

The receipts were $86 at 15 cents per spectator. It was a ragged game. Decatur started out to be easy winners blanking their opponents and making three scores in the first inning, but they did not keep up the pace and when the battle was over the score was Kalamazoo 11, Decatur

One Kalamazoo player was seriously injured, the accident happening while he was not in the game. Kalamazoo was at bat and this player started to cross behind the catcher. A foul tip struck him squarely in the side of the head knocking him senseless. Physicians were summoned and he recovered sufficiently to be helped to the hotel. The club returned to their homes on the accomodation and the injured player was still so weak that he had to be helped onto the train.

After the ball game Chas. E. Oriffield, the clothier, put on a contest that was not on the program, an extra number, but it made a hit. It was called a tug of war. Six strong young men went onto the band wagon and pulling three on a side tried to rip apart a pair of Sweet-Orr trousers. The prize for winning the contest was to be six pairs of these unequalled tug of war trousers, but after tugging till their strength was exhausted the six young men were compelled to give up.

The baloon ascension advertised did not materialize. The baloonist did not come. A big crowd was present to see the ascension. Some smiled wisely and said there was no intention of having a baloonist, it was advertised to draw a crowd. The wise ones were entirely wrong. The celebration committee had a contract with a responsible baloonist and fully expected to carry out this part of the program until the morning of the fourth when the following special delivery letter was received by O. W. Newell:

Addison, Mich., July 2, 1910.

Dear Sir:

Owing to a disability of my aeronaut I can not send up my baloon for you on July 4th.

Regretfully,

E. A. Cleveland.

The fireworks in the evening made up in part for the disappointment in not seeing the baloon. It was certainly the nicest entertainment of fireworks ever seen in Decatur. They were fired by George Steele, assisted by Frank Stapleton, Oscar Newell and Leon Knights.

The main show of fireworks was made more resplendent by those sent up by the merchants.

The village was literally covered with the stars and stripes. We never before saw such elaborate decorations here. Most of the business houses were decorated inside and outside.

Much to the credit of the village officers and the officers of the day and particularly to the credit of the crowd itself it can be said that there was not an accident of any kind nor drunkenness nor disturbance to mar the pleasure of the day.

WILL CARLETON HERE

Entertained a Large Audience at Town Hall Last Friday Evening

Will Carleton appeared before an audience that filled the big town hall last Thursday evening.

He delivered a lecture replete with humor interspersed with readings of some of his best poems. The audience was highly entertained and probably no one went away regretting that he had heard Michigan's famous poet.

The lecturer was secured by the Masons and it proved to be a successful venture financially. The gross receipts were about $130 and Mr. Carleton was paid $75. This was not Mr. Carleton's first visit to Decatur, he was here about thirty years ago and some of our old residents remember hearing him then. He is 65 years of age.

RETURNS TO DECATUR

Mrs. Gertrude Charles Metzger Will Give Instruction in Music

Mrs. Gertrude Charles Metzger of Grand Rapids will return to Decatur, her former home, next week and will occupy her residence on West Sherwood street.

Mrs. Metzger announces in another column of the Republican that she will accept pupils for vocal and instrumental instruction and the announcement will be gladly received by the people of Decatur and vicinity.

Mrs. Metzger has had eight years of musical instruction in Europe and holds diplomas from Italy and London. She has been a student of music all of her life and has gained notable success in concert work as well as teaching.

SCHOOL COLUMN.

HINTS TO TEACHERS.

It is a well known fact that our country schools are but poorly equipped for carrying out a well organized plan of study; globes, outline maps, plenty of black boards and books of reference are generally conspicuous by their absence. Thus it is that the teacher is thrown upon her own resources in order to make up for the deficiencies. A six inch globe showing the rotation of the earth can be purchased for twenty-five cents and every teacher should own one. Large railroad maps can be had for a small sum; indeed, each teacher, by the sacrifice of a small amount of money, can secure quite an outfit, which, by careful use will last a long time. A set of colored crayons, a box of drawing pictures and a box of sectional maps are excellent additions to the collection. For the amusement of very small pupils I paste bright colored pictures and illuminated texts on heavy paste board and slice them; they serve to to keep the little ones busy for many a long hour and can be made a source of instruction as well. Picture scrap books and cards bearing squares, circles or angles, are easily made and are nice in making up a variety.

In a quiet exchange of confidence between several teachers not long ago, one of them said: "I am nearly discouraged in trying to gain any headway. I have only twenty pupils but it seems as if they were all posessed to carry a different set of books and stubbornly refuse to give them up. Thus it is that but five minutes can be spared to a class and nothing can be accomplished. If any one can help me out with advice I shall be very grateful." After a moments silence the youngest teacher present, said: "I had a similar experience and settled it in this way. After explaining the necessity of combining forces, I said in place of the fifth reader we will adopt history. Bring any U. S. history you can borrow or beg; it is not necessary they should be alike; we will make our own charts and read from them all. The first fifteen minutes on Monday afternoon will be devoted to simple forms of book keeping; on Tuesday, to the government of Michigan on Wednesday, to advanced physiology; on Thursday to natural history; and on Friday, compositions by the pupils relative to one of the subjects discussed during the week. This plan satisfied them all but one, a big girl who had decided to study algebra and declared very emphatically that 'Ma said she didn't need to give it up for nobody.' So I went to see 'Ma' about it. I told her kindly that algebra was in advance of her daughter's grade; that I had too many classes now, and as she was alone in the class I thought it best to discontinue it as our aim was for the greatest good to the greatest number. But she was obdurate, so I called on the officers next, explained my position and gained their consent to carry out my plans. After some little trouble in which I remained firm to my principles, the matter was dropped and from that time on I had plain sailing." A TEACHER.

Teachers Elected

The school board has elected teachers for the coming year as follows:

Supt. E. R. Washburn, $1,200
Principal, Mabel C. Willison, $700
Assistant, Sarah E. Huyck, $550
Eng. and History, Mabel A. Bechtol, $550
8th grade, Mabel Toney, $427.50
7th grade, Ella Eckenberger, $427.50
6th grade, Sarah DuBois, $400
5th grade, Lottie Welch, $427.50
4th grade, Ethel Ray, $400
3rd grade, Alsie Bradfield Hall, $400
2nd grade, Mae McWilliams, $427.50
1st grade, May Gish, $427.50
Kindergarten, Ida Trowbridge, $427.50.

CLARENCE G. COLEMAN

OBITUARY

Died Thursday morning, January 25, at Maywood, Illinois.

He was born at Middletown, Vermont, December, 1860. When three years old he came with his parents to Decatur, where he resided until he was twenty-one. He learned the drug business in the store of the late T. Browning. Afterwards he was engaged in business in Dowagiac. One year he went to Colorado, hoping to benefit his health. For three years his home was in Grand Rapids. Last July he went to Maywood, at which place he had been married to Miss Mattie Jackson, June 12, 1888. His remains were brought here and the funeral was at his mother's home Saturday afternoon. Burial was at Lakeside.

SAD ACCIDENT

An accident occurred last Sunday afternoon resulting in death of Alvin E. Auton of this place, whose untinely end saddened the entire community.

About 3:00 in the afternoon, W.E. Secord and the Misses Nellie Wakeman and Rose Dennis went to the lake for a sail. Mr. Auton was invited to join the party. He accepted and the ride was destined to be his journey from life to death. The boat capsized and the rest were saved by clinging to the boat. Mr. Auton was an excellent swimmer but was unable to cling to the boat. The others did not see him sink and it is thought that he had a cramp or perhaps became entangled in some of the ropes of the boat's rigging. The others of the party were saved by Perry Udell.

Mr. Auton had been in business here only two and one-half years and displayed a pleasing manner and sterling worth. He was twenty-six years old.

DEVELOPMENT OF MUCK LAND

HOW DECATUR'S BIG SWAMP BECAME VALUABLE PROPERTY

The history of development of Decatur muck land covers a period of nearly a half century and shows years of patient toil and experiment, overcoming obstacles seemingly beyond man's powers and at last realization of many dreams, 600 acres of the best tillable soil in Michigan and perhaps the United States.

Before the sixties little was thought about the big swamp; everyone accepted it as one great bog, full of saugers and other wild animals and an exceedingly handy place in which to get lost.

The valley which comprises it starts within a couple of miles of Paw Paw and extends nearly to Dowagiac, making a kind of circuit around Decatur, and at the time spoken of was covered with a heavy growth of timber and underbrush, being nearly impassable.

Having to draw all the grain and other products of Little Prairie Ronde and the surrounding country to Paw Paw around the swamp, and then on to St. Joseph for market was a long and expensive journey and became especially irksome after the Michigan Central Railroad was put through. The first road across the swamp followed the present Deuel Road to about where the Hinckley and Ellis branches off and then took an angling course across to the high land. A more direct route was made when the old Swamp Road was built several years later. The first road is now completely lost.

The new Swamp Road was built by donation from Decatur citizens about the year 1886 to give the people at the west end of the prairie a more direct route to market. Thus the necessity of making highways across the great swamp eventually led men to attempt its cultivation.

In 1865 Lyman Rawson, then a prominent resident of Decatur, bought several acres of land just at the edge of the swamp on the old Swamp Road and it included a few acres of muck. After a few experiments he became satisfied that it could be made to raise fine crops.

Another prominent citizen, Ransom Nutting, also became interested in the muck and bought eighty acres of it in the heart of the big swamp, just north of the Charles Brigham farm.

He went to work clearing and cultivating and at times would raise good crops, but a heavy rain was sure to drown them out. Both men suffered the ridicule of the townspeople but kept on faithfully experimenting and believing that some time folks would wake up to the great opportunities awaiting them.

In 1871 a dry season was experienced and Mr. Nutting had several acres of corn planted on his land. The swamp was in just the right condition without the rains and people surely did sit up and take notice. It was a better crop of corn than any had seen for many a day.

Meanwhile Mr. Rawson, who had cleared his land, tried some celery he had gotten at Kalamazoo and saw that Decatur muck would grow as good and better celery than the Kalamazoo land.

This was the first celery and the crop on our muckland dates from that time, although it was not raised to any great extent 'til Henry Houseman settled here a few years ago.

William H. Clark tried a clearing in the west of the swamp, but was forced to give up extensive plans on account of too much water.

When Lyscum Brigham came to Decatur in 1900, that was the beginning of peppermint raising and he and Lyman Rawson put out a field together on some of Mr. Rawson's land, as an experiment. It thrived but water backing up in the creek soon drowned them out.

In 1882 through the influence of these pioneers of the swamp, an appropriation of state land was given by the legislature toward draining the swamp and the township was given the right to levy a special tax amounting to about twenty five hundred dollars for the same purpose. The creek leading from Pickeral Lake into the Dowagiac creek at the west end of the swamp was widened and deepened and this brought the water level down so that the land at the east end could be cultivated very nicely; but the west end still suffered from too much water.

Ten years ago a drain was put through the south end of Hamilton Township that took the water off so that now the entire swamp is under cultivation.

A few years ago there was hardly a dwelling to be seen; now the valley is covered with houses along every road and more are needed to house the many families of thrifty Dutch people who wished to follow the example of their friends and relatives who have settled here.

Muckland sold in the early days at the government price of $1.25 per acre; now it sells for $75.00, $100.00 and even higher, according to its state of cultivation. It has been brought from an idle waste to a high state of cultivation and brings thousands of dollars into Decatur every year, and the best part is it is not nearly half developed. We hope some day to see Decatur a city, and know it has been made such by the efforts of its own citizens upon its own land.

ONE HUNDRED MILES TO RAILROAD

Mary Shaad Hanks Proving Up On Claim in Oregon

News from Mrs. Mary Shaad Hanks we know will be welcomed by her many friends in Decatur and vicinity. That which we print herewith was not written for publication but is the part of a letter written to one of her Decatur friends to whom we are indebted for its reproduction

Mrs. Hanks went to Tacoma to reside a few years ago and this spring has gone with her husband into Oregon to take a claim

Redmond, Ore., April 17, 1910.

Well, if this isn't a peach of a country. Its all new and I suppose all new places are like it. About three years ago we bought 40 acres for $13 an acre and water tax to pay of $24 a year, must have one-eighth of it under cultivation inside of four years and live on it at least three months. Mr Hanks thought he could live on it alone but found out that he had to bring his family in order to prove up.

He came in February and liked the country so well that he bought 80 acres more, and here we are living in style, like our neighbors. We are two miles from town and have one room like the cottages at Eagle Lake, and a tent. We sleep in the tent and it is also the parlor.

We have a rag carpet, a bed with a curtain around it, two chairs, some boxes, a stove and a table. We rented our house in Tacoma and stored the our furniture. All I brought was a trunk and it cost $9 to get it here from Shaniko. Shaniko is the end of the railroad and its over 100 miles from here.

I came part of the way on the stage, it broke down and I walked a mile, then I came three miles in a lumber wagon through the worst country I ever saw, then Mr. Hanks met me with his automobile and we made the rest of the way easy.

The land is covered with sage brush and juniper trees, but we are having it cleared and will put in potatoes, clover, oats, etc. Redmond is new, about 300 people in the town but lots of them in the country. Every one expects the land to increase in value very fast.

Everything we buy is very high. It costs 3 cents a pound to get things hauled here from the railroad. Lime is $7.50 a barrel, apples 8 cents a pound and potatoes 3 cents.

We bought a team this week and have a third interet in an automobile. The auto costs more than it is worth to keep it in repair and we pay a driver $25 a week to run it, that is, all three of us pay that.

We have the little girl with us and I do not get lonesome at all. Our nearest neighbor was a milliner in Ohio. Mr. Hank's son is across the road from us in a tent, and a man who was in the office with Mr. Hanks is here with his wife proving up on an ighty.

I would not wonder if we stayed here. Mr. Hanks wants to build a house but no one can get any lumber now. I guess he will find it this fall. We have stone enough for a barn.

We can see thirteen mountains from our door, some of them covered with snow. This is an irrigated country, very little rain and if we stay we will have an artesian well. One man bought 160 acres of land here four years ago for $2200 and sold 40 acres of it this spring for $6,000.

DECATUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Open Tuesday, September Sixth

The outlook for a year of successful school is more encouraging than it was last year for several reasons Another teacher has been provided to relieve the congestion in the second primary and first grammar departments. The eighth and seventh grades will be put together in the grammar room. This will give the eighth grade a better opportunity than they had last year. The four high school teachers will be enabled to give their entire time to high school work and as a consequence the work there should be better than it was last year. New and modern readers, spellers and chemistries have been adopted for use beginning this fall. For these reasons we may look forward to a better school than we had last year.

The additional teacher will occupy the Free Methodist church which has been leased and fitted for a school room. The teacher there will have charge of forty pupils, 10 from each the third, fourth, fifth and sixth grades This will not entirely relieve the crowded conditions at the main building but it will alleviate them a great deal The school board tried hard to get another room so as to provide for two more teachers but another suitable building could not be found.

The teacher in the new room will necessarily have more classes than those in the main building but none of these classes will be overcrowded so each pupil there will be given more individual help than will be possible in the main building.

The Brooks' Readers, and Mayne's Speller which have been adopted are the books recommended by the county commissioner for the country schools. This will simplify the book problem for those moving from the country to the village and vice versa More than that the texts are both down-to-date and thoroughly usuable. The work in those subjects should be better if not easier. The text in chemistry is one of the best modern works in that new and developing science.

Every senior who does not intend to go to college should elect chemistry for the applications of the science are many in modern life and such students will have no other opportunity for gaining the essentials of this important subject. Those students who go to college will find stronger courses offered there than can be given in a high school and such students can well defer the study till a later time.

Again as last year a foreign language will not be required for graduation. Generally, however, a foreign language should be elected and is required for college entrance though not for entrance to the short courses in normal schools for which no degree is given.

There is a good school spirit in the community and this is a warrant for the success of the schools in the future for eventually what the people want that they get. One of the first questions asked by a prospective resident is regarding the kind of schools and the answer to the question may be the turning point that gives us a new citizen.

The tie vote on the $12,000 bonding proposition shows that the people are awake to the fact that our school population has outgrown its present quarters and the petition for a $3,000 building on the south side is further evidence to the same fact. Where the new building should be located and how much money should be put into it should be thoroughly discussed by every person interested in the schools directly or indirectly and it is safe to predict that the final outcome will be in favor of continued progress.

The success of the schools for 1910-11 as well as for any time depends on the hearty co-operation of three factors: Patrons, pupils and teachers

These three can make or mar the success of any school. Let's make it right this year.

A meeting of the teachers of the schools of the village will be held in the high school room at 4 o'clock Monday p. m , September 5.

Pupils coming from other schools should bring their promotion certificates or cards with them Tuesday, September 6.

The Decatur Postoffice has on sale the two cent stamp issued for the Alaska Yukon Pacific Exposition. The stamp bears the portrait of William H. Seward, who negotiated the purchase of Alaska, acquisition and growth of which the exposition commemorates

JUDSON HATHAWAY

One of Those Who Settled and Made Beautiful the Prairie Gone to His Reward

BORN 1824. DIED 1910

Adoniram Judson Olney Hathaway was born in Cayuga county, New York state, August fifteenth, 1824; and was the second of eight children born to Abner and Naomi Olney Hathaway.

As a lad he assisted his father in operating a lumber rafting business, from the forests of Northern New York over the Erie Canal, taking turns with his elder brother Benjamin in driving the horses along the route.

Owing to reverses in their business, the family removed in 1837 to Southwestern Michigan, hoping to retrieve in a measure their lost fortune in the wilds of a new and growing country. They settled in Cass county on what is now known as the "Hathaway Farm" which they purchased under a heavy mortgage.

Their first home was a log cabin. In course of time, however, they were able to build the large and commodious farm house which was for years the homestead of the Hathaway family.

In 1843 the death of the father occurred and the business management of the farm was left in the hands of the two sons, Benjamin and Judson, who worked like young trojans to pull the farm out of debt. In those days they braved the hardship of many a long winter drive to St. Joseph in the open sleigh with their grain or other produce in order to ship it to Chicago for marketing.

They not only lifted the mortgage but by co-operating with each other they developed the resources of the farm to a remarkable degree, beautifying it at the same time until it became known throughout Southwestern Michigan as a "Model Farm."

It never changed hands, but was divided between the two brothers in 1859 when Judson was united in marriage with Elizabeth Eckenberger and brought his bride to the home where he died, now occupied by his son Ernest. From this happy union came three children; Abner A. of Melrose, New Mexico; Ernest, and Minnie L. now Mrs. Adelbert Vought. His wife preceded him to the better country in 1899.

He was by nature a home loving man and it was failing health that induced him in middle life to make his sojourn in the west where he fell in with a government surveying company. Oddly enough he was requested by "Colonel" Parker, so called, who led the expedition, to accompany them as chaplain of the party. He camped with them in the open, slept on the ground with only his blanket for covering and "roughed it" generally, while his skill as a huntsman was almost invaluable to the company, since he was thus able to supply them with wild game which constituted the major portion of their provisions throught the trip.

The rigors of camp life must have agreed with him for he returned to civilization at the end of six weeks a well man. It would seem also that he "made good" in his position as chaplain, for though he never offered a formal prayer nor exhorted the men to experience religion, it was said of him that his silent influence worked wonders in restraining the men from profanity and in keeping them in general true to their best selves.

His taste for adventure and sport took only one turn—that of love for out door life and hunting. It was this that drew him for forty consecutive years to leave his home and follow the trail of the deer in the wildernesses of northern Michigan. On his return from one of these hunting trips in the North he brought with him a little box and planted with his own hands the seedlings which became in time the stately evergreens growing in his yard and bordering the drive to the house. His adventures in camp and on the trail formed the theme of many an exciting narrative which he delighted to relate to the end of his days. His fondness for the chase was not confined, however, to his Northern trips. For years he was a familiar figure to the whole country-side, as, equipped with his cartridge belt, his trusty rifle and his hounds, he roamed the prairies and adjacent forests for game.

Physically he was a giant in strength as compared with ordinary men and there are rumors of his prowess in the early days when the strength of the fist was the measure of the man; though he was never known to injure or intimidate a weaker one.

As a man he stood well in the community and was respected by all who knew him, as a kind neighbor and a good citizen. He never preached but held ideas of his own and on occasion would utter his religious opinions in a simple and direct manner that always struck home. He believed in purity of thought above all things and we who knew him best believe that he lived up to his convictions.

He passed his declining years in the white cottage in the family of his son Ernest, close to the brick house which had been the family home until the death of his wife.

He passed away June ninth, 1910. At two o'clock Sunday afternoon, June 12th, a large company of relatives, friends and neighbors assembled on the green in the shade of the old trees to pay their last respects to the departed. Three vocal selections were admirably rendered by the male quartette of Decatur and Rev. Bailey of Marcellus was the speaker whose excellently chosen remarks on the subject of "Man's Great Change" were most favorably received by all.

AT GENERAL MORGAN'S

WEDDING

Simeon Huff Saw the Big General

Married and Danced with the Sonthern Girls after the Ceremony

December 19, 1862.

Fifty three years ago last Sunday Simeon Huff of Decatur attended the wedding of the famous Southern raider General John Morgan.

Mr. Huff was a member of Company M, Fourth Michigan Cavalry. With forty members of his regiment he was detailed for picket duty in the Nashville and Murphrysboro fight.

While on this duty the boys were approached by the rebels with a flag of truce and a request to escort a lady through the Union lines to Nashville. It was ten miles to Nashville and the lady and her escort in a bus driven by two horses with a colored driver were held in the line while an officer went to Nashville to report to the commanding officer and receive orders.

While waiting for the officer General Joe Wheeler with the Eighth Alabama cavalry rode in behind the forty Union pickets and captured all of them, the lady in her carriage being a party to the trick

General Joe Wheeler himself went up to Mr. Huff who was then a small youngster of eighteen years, grabbed him by the shoulder and said, "Here, young boy, come with me." Mr. Huff said there didn't seem to be anything else he could do and he went right along. He says he will never forget Fighting Joe Wheeler. He was stern but kind and saw to it that his prisoners had enough to eat and did not suffer.

The forty prisoners were taken to Murphysburro, Tenn., and placed in a big guard house. While there General Morgan was married in the town hall to a beautiful southern bell and ten of the prisoners were selected to attend the wedding under escort to add to the gaiety of the southern entertainment. Mr. Huff was one of the ten and he said the young prisoners enjoyed the event as much as did the Southerners. The boys had on new uniforms and made such a hit with the young ladies of the Confederacy that they were not allowed to stay as long as they would have liked. Dancing followed the wedding and the Union boys were at their best until retired.

Mr. Huff was particularly attracted by one young lady. He gave her his home address, Decatur, Michigan, and told her he would be there after the war if he was alive. He corresponded with her for some time after he came home.

First Baptist Church, Decatur Township

First Baptist Church is located in section 6 of Decatur Township. The following church history was written by Mrs. R. A. Crosby, church clerk.

In 1868 the First Baptist Church of Decatur was established and dedicated by a community of Christian people. During the early life of the church there were about 150 members enrolled. There are two members of the church presently who were children in the early church; Essie Smith and Eve Scott both of Decatur. They are also the only living survivors of one of the first choirs of the First Baptist Church.

The founders were Isaac Moss, Thomas Winburn, Nathan Lennox, Grief Foster, Joseph Mahoney and Dosen Brown.

The early deacons numbered seven. They were: Isaiah Brown, Dosen Brown, David Moss, W. Scott, Joseph Mahoney, Melon Bradley and Robert Lennox. Mr. Lennox served as deacon for fifty years.

Sunday school superintendents were: Grandville Foster, Mort Stafford, Sam Brown, David Moss, Robert Lennox, Henery Manual and Charlie Evans.

The church still retains the old Bible which holds some historical events. It was presented to the church by Dennis Brown who was a member. During the life of the church the Bible has only been taken out once and that was for reconditioning.

The transfer of the land on which the church stands was made October 31, 1868 from Henry and Helen Lindsley to trustees of the First Baptist Church.

JOHN F. CHAVILEER VISITS DECATUR

NEARING EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY — THIS PIONEER AND BRAVE VETERAN VISITS SCENES OF YOUTH AND PRIME

RETURNING HOME FROM GETTYSBURG

John F. Chavileer of Maywood, Nebraska arrived in Decatur Monday morning and has enjoyed a delightful visit among the one-time friends of his younger years.

Mr. Chavileer was born in Butler County, Ohio seventy-nine years ago and came to Decatur with his parents in 1840, when six years old. The father, John Chavileer, traded a team of horses for eighty acres of land on the hill south of Decatur which was named for him. (Mr. Norman Webster, descendant of the Chavileers and doner of the Webster Library, was righteously indignant over the changing of the name from CHAVILEER HILL to FIFIELD HILL.) It was most impossible to get to the place and the family were a day and a half traveling the last two and a half miles. The senior Chavileer prospered for a time and came to own a total of six-hundred forty acres. He lost most of his property by signing a note with a friend.

Both father and son were in the Civil War, the former in the 12th Michigan and the latter in the famous 70th New York Regiment, Sickles' Brigade. The father died in Maywood in 1890.

Away back in the early 50's when money was scarce the taxes on the Chavileer property amounted to the considerable sum of three dollars. The hardy pioneer lacked the money to pay them. He was ambitious, a strong man and a worker, there was not a lazy bone in his body, but he couldn't raise three dollars with which to pay his taxes. He was not an exception. What a wonderful change a half century has wrought. The father of J. Pierpont Morgan was reputed to be worth $10,000,000 when he died. The son was worth $150,000,000 when he died last spring. In comparison with the times the father was a wealthier man than the son.

There was a tannery in Glenwood called Clark's Tannery and Athpens Myers told John that the tannery would pay fifty cents apiece for deer hides and he thought they could get enough hides between there and Glenwood to pay the taxes. Alf. and the two Chavileers and Ike Welcher started out, and sure enough their trusty rifles brought down the required number of deer and the tax problem for that year was settled.

Back From Gettysburg

John F. Chavileer is an old man today. His children are married and gone and he lives alone with his good wife in the little city of Maywood, Nebraska. He is approaching four score years and all winter the band of time had been pointing him toward the unknown shore. He has been ill and weak. But when that Gettysburg reunion first came to his attention it served like a magic tonic. Gettysburg and fifty years ago, those immortal days when "AMERICA FOREVER" was sealed in fire and blood. The 70th New York was there and John Chavileer was in the thickest of the battle.

He began to plan in the winter to attend the reunion and despite the opinion of his wife and friends he was able to go. And now he is on the way back home filled with emotion over the scenes of the past, prouder than ever of the Union he helped to save, satisfied with life and happy. He stopped in Kalamazoo to visit once more his sister, Mrs. N.E. Webster. He stopped in Paw Paw to see the daughter of his old friend Captain Farmer. She is now Mrs. C.C. Chappel and when a little girl she spent many a happy day in the old Chavileer home by the hill. He came on to Decatur, his home for nearly fifty years, and met the Welchers and Morelands, his relatives, his old comrade, Edward Carney, and all of the old friends he could find. He stopped at Dowagiac where fifty-six years ago he went from Decatur with William K. VanHise, Davis Ball, and William DeBolt to join the Odd Fellow's Lodge. And then he went home with a fund of reminiscences that will remain with him the balance of his years.

A Good War Record

Mr. Chavileer has a war record of which any man might be proud. He was in twenty-seven battles and over one hundred skirmishes. In every engagement of his regiment he took part. He was a sharp shooter and a sargeant of his company.

He was in the thickest of the fight in the deadly battle of Gettysburg and stood within three rods of General Dan Sickles when the rebel shell shattered his leg. He rushed to the General's assistance and was one of the six men who carried him to the rear. They had gotten him half way back when a blanket was furnished to lay him on. They placed him on a cot and he called for a cigar which one of the boys promptly procured. Then the officers came one by one to console him, but the General made light of the injury, remarking that "It was nothing but a scratch." The officer next in command came with sympathetic remarks and said, "General, shall I take the command?" The remark made the General angry and he replied, "No, d--- you, when I want you I'll send for you."

At the reunion John told this story to the old General and they had a hearty laugh at it.

Death Of A Comrade

Mr. Chavileer is an interesting talker and has numberless stories of the trials and high lights of a soldier's life. He related the manner of the death and burial of a Decatur comrade, Henry Chamberlin, at the battle of the Wilderness. Chamberlin was shot during this battle and the boys had to carry him over forty rods back to find a suitable place to bury him. In the angle of the intersection of two roads, at the foot of a big tree they dug his grave and laid him away wrapped in his overcoat and blanket. Mr. Chavileer searched his pockets and found about forty dollars which he sent to Chamberlin's wife.

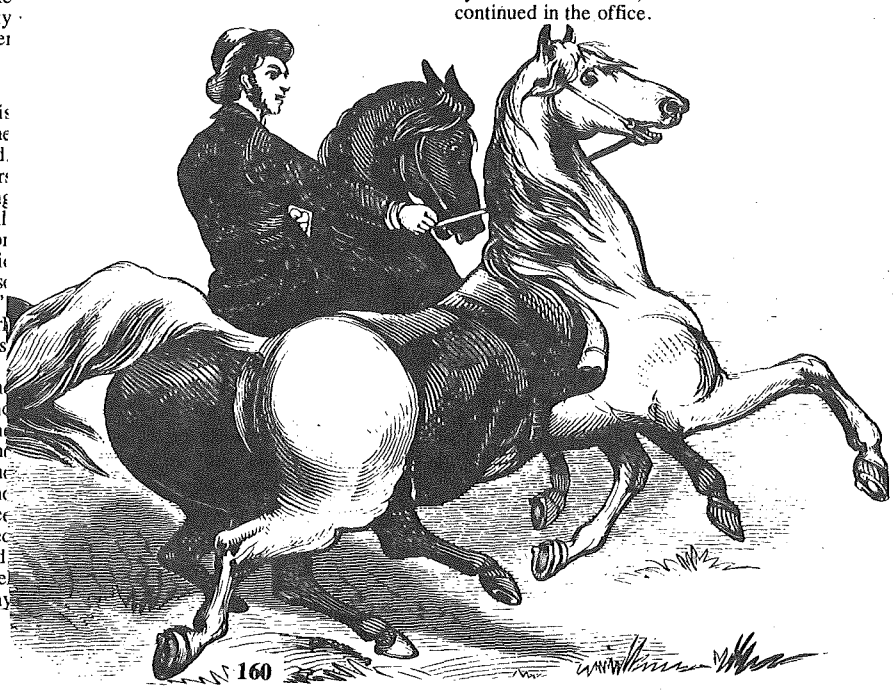
On one occasion Chavileer was sent out to dispose of a sharp shooter who had been causing considerable trouble to the officers of his command. He had a rifle that belonged to the commanding officer and Chavileer had to hunt up the commissary train to find cartridges to fit the gun.

He lay in wait for over an hour in a little valley before he could locate the rebel marksman, but finally had the satisfaction of definitely putting an end to his sniping.

Mr. Chavileer had a sharp shooter's pass, signed by General Grant, to enable him to go wherever necessary to find cartridges to fit this rifle he carried. Mr. Chavileer disposed of both the pass and the rifle, an act which he says he has regretted many times since.

First Township Supervisor

George S. Freeze was the first supervisor of the township, having been chosen to that office at the first town meeting held on the first Monday of April, 1837. The records do not disclose the names of the supervisor for the years, 1838 and 1841. John McKinney was elected supervisor in 1840. With the exception of the two years noted, the following is a complete list of the names of persons who have filled that office: George S. Freeze, John McKinney, Joseph Van Hise, Lyman Sanford, N. Le Fere, William O. Van Hise, Jeremiah Teed, George Bennett, O.T. Welch, E. Parker Hill, C. Holister, Eri Beebe, Ransom Nutting, Marvin Hinkley, William K. Van Hise, David A. Squier and Emory H. Squier, the present incumbent. Of the above named officials Lyman Sanford held the office seven years, possibly longer; E. Parker Hill served seven years; William K. Van Hise, ten years; Ransom Nutting, fifteen years; David A. Squier was elected nine times in succession and died in 1902 while still holding the office. His son, Emory H. Squier, was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by his father's death, and has ever since been continued in the office.



THIS WEEK

Simeon Huff was a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Pennsylvania January 1, 1844, and came with his parents to Volinia township soon after. His father was Isaac Huff.

Simeon enlisted in the Fourth Michigan Cavalry at the age of 18. He was captured by the rebels in December, 1863, and confined six months in Libby prison. Then he escaped and came home. He re-enlisted and took part in over 200 engagements.

At the close of the war, with other members of his regiment, he helped to capture Jefferson Davis. He took a scarf worn by Davis from the saddle on his horse and kept it as long as he lived.

For good service he was promoted to the rank of sergeant, and received $400 of the $100,000 reward given by the government for the capture of the president of the Confederacy. He spent his declining years in Decatur.

Flour Mill Destroyed By Fire

The flour mill burned down Thursday morning, February 18, right while business was going on. The proprietor, George Adams, was taking orders over the telephone when a trainman rushed in and told him what was happening. The fire burned so fast that he could save nothing but himself, his typewriter and a few records.

The insurance companies adjusted the loss at $5,661, just enough to liquidate the notes held by the bank. The equity in the business which Mr. Adams had worked for years to build up all went up in smoke.

Geo. Adams came here from Eaton county, established a home and made himself a valuable citizen. One misfortune after another practically took him to his grave.

A few years before the fire his oldest son was drowned in Lake of the Woods in attempting to rescue another boy, and a few years after the fire he himself passed away.

LETTER FROM MRS. RICHARD J. HUYCK 1910

My Dear Secretary:

When I received your letter asking me to write you a history of my life, I said, "Why, I have no history," for, while I have lived an unusually long life it has been an unusually uneventful one. However such as it is, since you ask it, I will give to you, trusting there may be some point of interest in it for you of the days so long gone by.

I am the daughter of Col. Abiel Fellows, a revolutionary soldier who enlisted from Canaan, Conn. I was born March 19, 1818, in Luzern county, Pennsylvania, and was one of thirteen children. My father was a farmer and we lived in the Shickshinny mountains, a spur of the Alleganies.

In the year 1829, when I was eleven years old we moved to Kalamazoo county, Michigan. I shall never forget this journey made with two prairie schooners, one drawn by three horses and the other by two. We were twenty days on the road, camping at night at the most convenient places. I remember very distinctly crossing the Cuyhoga river at Cleveland, Ohio, on such a strange looking bridge, which they called a float bridge. I remember, too, of the three long days in the Maumee swamp, where the mud seemed to have no bottom. It was in this swamp I saw my first Indian, which perhaps, helps to enhance the unpleasant memories

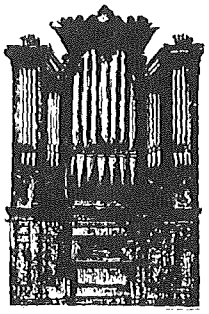
But I think you would rather hear something about my father, than so much about myself, so I will tell you about a little incident that happened in the excitement of the Black Hawk war which proved my father's courage.

In the spring of 1833 the Colonel of the First Michigan Regulars, whose regiment had been ordered to the front, had important papers and money he wished carried to Detroit. It was considered a most perilous journey at that time and I distinctly remember Col Daniels asking my father to carry these papers, saying he had been unable to find a man who dared undertake the trip. My father was at this time seventy years of age, but nevertheless he readily consented to go. He took the valuable papers and put them in his saddle bags and made a successful trip in six days, meeting on the way ten Indians to every one white man. The Indians around us at home were very friendly and often came to us for favors. I once saw the noted old Indian, Shavehead, whose boast was that he had the scalps of ninety-nine white people and was waiting for the one hundredth one. I saw him at Flowerfield a mile and one half from home. I knew it was my scalp he was waiting for, so I tied my sunbonnet strings clear to the ends, thinking I would make him all the trouble I could in getting my scalp and then ran every step of the way home

The first district school in Kalamazoo county was in our neighborhood and I married its third teacher, Richard J. Huyck. We commenced housekeeping in the village of Kalamazoo where my husband was employed as salesman and bookkeeper in the only dry goods store of the place. One year later we removed to Cass county and bought the farm I still own. I am the mother of seven children, five of them and my husband having gone to the other shore. My two remaining children and I are living together in the village of Decatur.

In writing of these past days I can scarcely realize that the little girl who, back in the Pennsylvania hills, rode the work horses to the creek for their noonday drink, and thought it the greatest happiness conceivable, can be the aged woman whom my mirror reflects, and who will be ninety years old next March and is the only living person who came to Kalamazoo county in 1829.

In reply to my grandchildren who say so often "Grandmother, would you like to be young again?", I say "No", yet save the loss of friends, I have had a very peaceful, happy life, but I am getting tired and amid the lengthening shadows I would rather go on to the end in the appointed way than to go back over the long road again. I rest in assurance that what ever the great change brings "I shall be satisfied.



ELDER J.H. HAMMOND

BRIEF REVIEW OF THE LIFE OF A WELL KNOWN VETERAN AND MINISTER.

Elder James Henry Hammond, formerly pastor of the Christian church of Decatur, was born in Greene Co., New York, April 1st, 1847, and died in Grand Rapids, Monday evening, March 28th, 1910, aged sixty-two years, eleven months and twenty seven days.

He was of English descent. His grandfather was Jonathan Hammond and his father bore the name of Nathaniel. His father was born in eastern New York, October 15th, 1815, and married Caroline Sears, also a native of the Empire state. By trade he was a cabinet maker and followed that occupation during the greater part of his life. He died in Olster county, New York, in 1856 and the death of his wife occurred in Dalaware county, New York, in 1883, whither the family had moved after the death of the father.

All of their eight children grew to mature years and one of them, David F. Hammond, is still living at Windon, New York.

When only seventeen years of age, James H. Hammond enlisted for the late Civil war as a member of Company M, 15th N.Y. Heavy Artillery, on the 8th day of February, 1864. The regiment was sent to join Grant in his campaign and participated in all the important engagements until the close of the war. Mr. Hammond was wounded in the capture of the Weldon railroad August 18th, 1864, by a minie ball which passed through his right side. He was sent to the hospital at City Point and afterwards to Lincoln hospital at Washington, where the surgeon said that had the ball gone one-sixteenth of an inch further, it would have caused his death. He never fully recovered from his wound. He was honorably discharged on the 22nd day of August, 1865.

When the country no longer needed his services, Mr. Hammond returned to Delaware county, N.Y., where for a time he worked on a farm and then entered Stamford Seminary to prepare himself for teaching, which profession he afterwards followed for a number of years. On leaving New York he emigrated to Ogle county, Illinois, and afterwards engaged in teaching for two years in Rock Island county in that state. It was there that he united with the Christian church and formed the resolve to devote himself to the ministry. He entered the Bible College connected with the Kentucky University, a school of the Christian church, and after a time engaged in preaching for one year in Dubuque, Iowa. He then returned to school and graduated from Bible College in Lexington on the 14th of June, 1877, and carried off second honors in his class. His first call, subsequent to that time was from the church in Midway, Ky., where he remained a year and then went to Pompey Hill, N.Y., the former home of Horatio Seymour. His next charge was at Grand Rapids, where he remained four years, during which time he did effective work in that place and was largely instrumental in building up the church.

January 1, 1883, Elder Hammond was united in marriage at Paw Paw, Van Buren county, Mich., to Mary Grace, daughter of LeGrand R. Anderson, one of the earliest settlers of this county. Unto them were born three children; Mary Grace, February 27, 1887; Clara Susie, January 21, 1889, and LeGrand A., April 6, 1891.

On leaving Grand Rapids, Mr. Hammond became the pastor of the church at Painesville, Ohio, where he labored a year and then accepted the position of State Evangelist of Michigan. A year later he took charge of his father-in-law's farm which he operated for two years and at the same time filled the pulpit in Bangor for several months and held a number of revival meetings. His next pastorate was at South Bend, Ind., and after about two years he went to Mt. Ayr, Iowa, where he preached one year. In July, 1890, he came to Decatur and for several years was pastor of the church in this place.

At the time he took charge of the church here it was a new organization with about one hundred members, and was largely built up through the labors of Elder Hammond. The first year he devoted part of his time to the church at Kalamazoo, but later gave his entire time to the church here. He was alike esteemed by his own members and those outside the church. Socially he was a member of the Grand Army Post and for many years was a member of the Good Templers Society.

During nearly his entire residence in Michigan he was a member of the State Board of Missions and was for some time president of the Christian Missionary Association of the state.

During the last two years he has spent most of his time at the Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, but frequently during that time he visited Decatur, which he considered his home and where he was always gladly welcomed and nearly every one in this village and vicinity was his friend.

A LONG COLD RIDE

A. E. and H. B. Lawrence Drive New Warren From Detroit to Decatur Sunday

After trying the two extremes of driving an auto from Detroit over hot dusty roads and rough frozen ones, A. E. and H B. Lawrence much prefer the former.

Failing to get a new car as expected in time to drive part way home Saturday they arose at five o'clock Sunday morning, walked many blocks to a garage and started at six, in as sharp an air as one would wish for.

Paved streets were soon left behind and then came frozen roads where due regard for tires and machinery held speed at 10 to 12 miles per hour. Of course the better stretches were traveled at 25 to 35 to maintain the average of about 20 across the state.

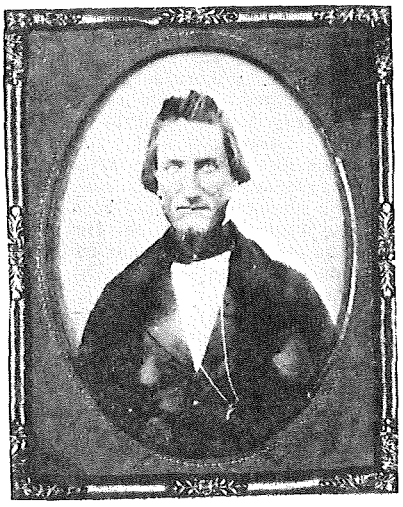
Stops were made only at Ann Arbor (where Leslie Sweetland was induced to take a polar trip home) Jackson and Albion for refreshments, thawing, inspection of machinery, etc., two hours in all..

Another stop of fifteen minutes was necessary when within three miles of home because of a nail which Providence or some other cause had left in the frozen mud just right to puncture one of the big tires, causing a replacement of inner tube just as the blizzard was getting into action. Decatur never looked better to three half frozen individuals than it did when they rolled in at 7:15 p. m. after having traveled about 180 miles (including extras at Ann Abror and Jackson) in nine hours running time

Notable incidents by the way were the carelessness of some people in crossing streets where autos and street cars are running, one lady all but forcing the autoists to run over her despite sounding horn and loud yell, though the latter were strictly within their rights.

Another feature was the lawlessness of horse drivers who would hold to the beaten track when the auto came up behind and signaled for a part of the road, often forcing the autoists to take dangerous chances in getting around them This course is strictly in violation of the law and should be punished with stiff fines as auto owners have to stand for altogether too many impositions from the law makers and should not be obliged to take any more from others.

One short diversion was when Decaturites, after driving at a very proper pace in one of the large towns and saluting the crossing "cops" with great respect, were passed by two autos evidently driven by natives who threw dust in the eyes of our townsmen and made them look as though they came from Philadelphia.



HOBART H. MILLARD

A Short Sketch of the Life and Work of One of Van Buren County's Early Pioneers.

The Republican is pleased to present to its readers a brief account of the life and work of one of this county's prosperous and most esteemed citizens, one who came here before the Indians left the trail and who gave the best years of a sturdy manhood to the work of clearing the wilderness and helping to make it the rich and beautiful county that Van Buren is to-day.

Hobart Millard was born in Lynn, Connecticut, 75 years ago the 29th of last May. His grandfather, Henry Mason, was in the old fort at Grotton, Conn., and he with a few others survived those hardships and massacre. In May, 1837, his father, Calvin D. Millard, and uncle, Ralph Mason, came to Michigan and took up land in Covington, now the townships of Hamilton and Keeler. Three months later the mother and five children came to the frontier home. They came by way of Erie Canal to Toledo, then by the strap iron rail, in coaches that seated but six people, to Adrian. Here the father met them with a team and the balance of their journey was made over the wagon route.

There was not a house between their home and Paw Paw. A family by the name of Lake lived on the McClintock place and Mr Pratt on the corner near Ira Barnum's. James Nesbitt lived at Foster's corners and the next place was Brown's Tavern.

Calvin Millard and Ralph Mason bought the farm now owned by Hobart and the land known as the Hagerman and King place, and built a house on the latter. Of all this family of pioneers but Hobart and his sister Mrs. John Bennett are left to talk of the old times.

The father died in January, 1838, and he was the first white man's funeral in this part of Michigan. He was buried a short distance from his home, but later when Hamilton cemetery was platted he was removed to the family lot.

The first white man to die in this neighborhood was Mr. Nickerbocker who lived on the southwest bank of the lake named for him. He was buried on an island in the lake but a few rods from his house.

It was seldom at that time that a farmer owned a team of horses and several would get together and make up a load of grist to take to the Flowerfield mill. Once the mill was broken and they had to return without any flour. There was a flour famine for several weeks and Hobart's mother ground wheat in the coffee mill to make bread for the children. The flour she made could hardly be termed White Lily, it was more like Tiger Lily—spotted.

Hobart's mother taught the first school at her home, then the school house was built near the old tavern and it is now George Kidman's house. The children went to school there, the road to the schoolhouse being marked out by blazing the trees.

In 1830 Ralph Mason built the old house which still stands on the homestead. In the early forties Hobart's mother married Austin Barney and he took the family to live on the farm later known as the Morehouse farm in Hamilton where Hobart did his first farming, following a yoke of oxen and breaking up the new turf. At the age of 17 he went back to the old place and commenced for himself. The sisters married, the mother and uncle died, and Hobart, the bachelor, was left alone: so in 1875 he was united in marriage to Melissa Fulghum. Four children were born to them and all are living but Ralph who died October 24, 1899. Calvin and Hazel are at home, Amy is married and lives on the McClintock farm.

Mr. Millard helped to build the road from his home to the creek near Levi Lyle's and south to Mr. Genning's. He and his uncle found the dryest ridges over which to build the road to what was then known as Decatur station. They used from 10 to 12 yoke of oxen to break up the land and about 5 yoke of oxen to cross plow. Mr. Millard says he has been to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and climbed the mountains but never saw such wild country as this was in the pioneer days.

AT LITTLE PRAIRIE RONDE REUNION

Eloquent Address by C. F. Buell of Webster City, Iowa

The following address delivered at the Little Prairie Rondo Reunion by Chalker E. Buell of Webster City, Iowa is published in the Republican at the request of a number of those who heard it. Those who read this beautiful tribute to the friends and companions of his youth will not wonder that Chalker Buell is a favorite with the pioneers of Little Prairie Rondo.

Mr. President; Mr. Toastmaster; Dear Friends:

One time there was a Knight who was possessed of a fine castle and equipment of the best. In fact he had everything apparently that heart could wish for, yet he was not satisfied. There was a great longing at his heart that would not be stilled. He longed to find the Holy Grail.

So intense became this longing that one day he left his castle and all it contained and went forth on his quest. As he passed out the gate he tosed a coin to a beggar who was standing by. He traveled over mountains and valleys and many weary miles of burning sands, yet that which he sought seemed to evade him. After many years of travel, worn, weary and penniless, he started on his long homeward journey.

At last in dire extremity he reached his castle only to find that it had been usurped by another. But a beggar stood at the gate in a worse plight than himself asking alms. He took his own drinking cup and brought him a cool drink from the spring and then taking a small loaf of bread, the last he had, and breaking it in half he gave it to him. When lo! there rose up before him that which he had so long sought and a voice said, "He who gives himself feeds three, himself, his neighbor and Me."

So dear friends, do we, like the weary traveler wander forth in seeking for things that satisfy. In our journey we hear voices that are still sounding in our ears of the sayings and doings of our last reunion. I hear the voice of our president saying "What heredity and environment has done for us", I hear a voice filled with emotion as he spoke of our "Forbears". Another rises with a husky voice and tells of "Our old School Mates." Still another in a clear ringing voice says "There were the best boys and girls the sun ever shone upon."

And one poor boy, after hearing the encomiums and beautiful tributes paid to the members of the old banner class said, "He was afraid he would never quite reach that high place that all the rest would attain, he was afraid he would never get beyond Fiddler's Green." His remarks make me think of a poem that I cannot give you the rhyme but will give you the substance. Ben Adhem one night as on his bed he lay, saw an angel writing on the wall, "What writest Thou, he asked", the angel replied, "I am writing the names of all those who love the Lord. Ben Adhem said, "Write mine as one who loved his fellowmen" and Lo! next day when he looked to see what had been written, Ben Adhem's name led all.

I saw another form at our last meeting, one that stands erect; with mien befitting a queen, and as I look I see a firm steadfast gaze as one who sees beyond the vale as she tells of her life's work almost finished and that her only regret is of inability, because of failing strength, to accomplish more in her Sabbath School labors. And later, when at the home of the dear friend of a lifetime where all nature seemed to vie with each other, surrounded by beautiful flowers, the Katydids singing to their mates, and the soft rays of the moon shedding silver light on the scene, there like in the burial of Moses, noiseless as the sun crept down the mountain side so the great procession swept, so the dear to us all passed on. It was "not death, only transition."

But, dear friends, how emergency brings out character. When I saw you one and all rise to the occasion in that country home and then and there forget all the conventionalities, forget white dresses and with the only idea to serve and help, then it was that my heart went out to you, one and all as never before. It is only in great crises, such as that that true worth and nobility of soul is made manifest.

And when all through the long vigils of that night I saw the labor so willingly performed and the sympathizing tear, and how you have always served us poor wanderers from the parental roof without money and without price, not only giving of the comforts for the inner man of all the luxuries of the earth, but that finer, that better something that comes from the soul of every true man and true woman that you give to us at the reunions, like the weary knight, we feel in our hearts that we have found in you that which we sought and we hear a voice saying to you, "He who gives himself feeds three, himself, his neighbor and Me.

Charles L. Dine, salesman for the Quaker Oats Company, is now traveling in Northwestern Canada. His headquarters are at Regina, Sask.

FIFTY YEARS IN HAMILTON

List of Those Who Have Been Residents of the Township Half a Century

Compiled by Abe Norwood.

Following herewith is a list of people now living who have been residents of the township of Hamilton fifty years:

Ezra Barnum
Arthur Foster
Roy Foster
Emory Foster
Mrs. Foster Hale
Mr. and Mrs. John Sutfin
Mrs. Horace Smith
Byron Lee
A. U. Bidlac
John Young
A. L. Norwood
Frank Stearns
Zabina Stearns
Mrs. Robert Nesbitt
Miss Minnie Nesbitt
Mrs. Hannah Conway
Mrs. Jacob Knoll
John Conway
Mort Haydon
A. W. Haydon
Lester Osborn
Mr. and Mrs. Gideon Osborn
E. A. Osborn
Roll Harris
Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Osborn
Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Osborn
Charles Hungerford
Mr. and Mrs. Horace Osborn
John Comley
Alex Comley
Fred Comley
Miss Libbie Comley
Uncle John Comley
John Brooks
Mr. and Mrs. Charles Byers
Mr. and Mrs Edw. Baxter
Andrew Corwin
Wm. Bartlett

There are several who have lived fifty years in Hamilton and now live elsewhere. Some of them are

Andrew Johnson
Robert Sloan
Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Nesbitt, now of Decatur.
Mrs. Calista March now of Keeler.

Milo Barton came very near to the mark but left a little too soon.

It is not claimed that this is a complete list. I have written according to the best of my knowledge and information. If there are others please send names to the Republican and they will be published.

It is doubtful if there are many country townships that can make as good a showing of fifty year residents. The list certainly shows that Hamilton township is a healthy place in which to live.

The list of fifty year residents in the township numbers 45.

COMMENCEMENT OF CLASS OF '11

Audience that Packed Town Hall Listened to Program Presented by Graduates

FISCHER'S ORCHESTRA FURNISHED MUSIC

Probably no event that has occurred in the town hall has called out as large a crowd as did the annual commencement of the Decatur High School last Thursday evening. Those who look for reasons for things explained that the unusual attendance was due to an increasing interest in the Decatur public schools and to the fact that each graduate took a part in the program instead of leaving the entertainment to a public speaker as has been the practice for a number of years past, It is always an intellectual treat to hear a good public speaker but on Commencement evening the public seems most interested in noting the quality of individual the public school is making of its pupils and this can be best seen from the individual effort.

The Class of '11 was ably assisted by the celebrated Fischer's orchestra of Kalamazoo and the result was a program that pleased the crowd.

A beautifully worded invocation was given by Rev. A. Bradfield which was followed by the president's address with oration by Harold Rose. His subject was "The Uses and Protection of Phosphorus" The United States is exporting large quantities of this valuable substance and the imports it receives in exchange consist of toys, dolls, etc Not a fair exchange. We should not be depleting our own land at such a rate and the nation should awaken to the importance of the matter and act.

Florence Lindsley gave a declamation, "The Treason of Benedict Arnold," in splendid style. Not only did she have a well written and interesting composition but her delivery was exceptionally good. Every word she spoke could be heard distinctly in the most distant sections of that crowded hall.

Dana Phelps read an essay entitled the "Airship Today and in the future." It was well composed and showed careful study of the subject. Dana Phelps has been a faithful hardworking student and is deserving of much credit for what he has accomplished.

That the Class of '11 has talents besides those employed in the school room was shown by the brilliant performance of a piano duet by Dorothy Oriffield and Dorothy Abbott. Their number was followed by a hearty applause.

The results of observation and thought in the scientific department of the school was shown in Harold Dwight's oration, "A Solution of the Fuel Problem." Electricity is the agent employed in this solution.

Bess E Taylor composed and delivered in convincing style the class poem which proved to be a clever take-off on members of the class and faculty. Its many humorous points kept the audience laughing during most of the delivery.

Anita Youell has pleased Decatur audiences many times in the past with her readings and all were glad to hear her commencement offering, "As the Moon Rose." It was a thrilling story of a younfg man wrongfully accused being saved from the death penalty in the nick of time by his faithful lover. Miss Youell's delivery was excellent.

The class will was a document rich in humor composed and read by Ruth Thomas. Many odd bequests were made, the audience did not fail to see the funny side of any of them. Some of the seniors and juniors also were impressed with the humor of the class will

The same was true of the Class Prophecy given by Frances Creagan and Ralph McGowan. It was supposed to be a talk over old school days by these two graduates in the year 1934. Strange as it may seem no members of the class are married 23 years hence but all are prospering in their various walks of life.

In the valedictory Jeanette Hooper displayed the ability and originality which marks all of her work. It was well delivered and a pleasing close to the graduate's part of the commencement program.

In presenting the diplomas Supt. Washburn gave a strong and convincing address upon the value of an education to the young men and young women.

The benediction by Rev. A. Bradfield closed a delightful commencement evening.

FROM THE DAYS OF THE SICKLE

The Chain of Improvements in Cutting Wheat During the Last Eighty Years

TREASURED MEMORIES OF THE PAST

Speaking about the first threshing apparatus reminds the first settler of the manner of cutting wheat before the inventions of power machinery and of the various improvements in power machinery to the present time.

Away back in the tairties when the first settlements were made in Volinia township the wheat crop was cut with a sickle. The sickle is a curved knife with a short handle. The reaper operated the sickle with his right hand, holding the wheat with the left.. When cut he would lay it in gavels or bunches and when he had cut across the field he sheathed the sickle in his belt and bound his gavels into sheathes back to the starting point. Each reaper did his own binding and a day's work for the best reaper was not to exceed half an acre.

Following the sickle came the old level or turkey wing cradle, which was operated with both hands but the weight of the work fell upon the right arm and it was a hard cradle to handle. With this tool the reaper became a cradler. One man raking and binding followed the cradler and two men would cut, rake and bind from three to four acres a day.

The next improvement in cutting wheat was the Flowerfield cradle, made in Flowerfield, St. Joe county a much easier cradle to handle than the old turkey wing. The first Flowerfield was brought into Volinia by Richard Shaw in about the year 1843. Other cradles used in the forties and fifties were the Telegraph, Grapevine, and Bow cradles, none of which were considered any better than the Flowerfield.

The first reaping machine owned in Volinia was a Huzzy bought some time in the forties by Benj. Hatha way. It had a low cast iron drive wheel and was hitched to the fore wheels of a wagon. This machine had no reel and the horses had to be driven on a trot in order to throw the wheat back onto a platform where it was raked off by a crooked rake. Five men followed it to bind and they had to go on the run to keep the wheat bound and out of the way before the machine could pass again. This machine was a five-foot cut. It required seven men and three horses to operate it and they could not do more than from seven to ten acres a day, a day's work being not ten hours but from sunrise to sunset. It was not much of an improvement in speed over the cradle. A year or two later Hubbell Warner bought a Huzzy that had several improvements over the Hathaway machine. In 1851 or '52 Samuel Morris bought a machine with still more improvements, among them being a reel.

The next machine in Volinia was a McCormick bought by the Warner brothers, Loomis, Harvey and Frank. This machine was a seven foot cut and its capacity was from 15 to 20 acres a day. It required one man to drive, one to rake off, five to bind and two to shock, and four horses to pull the machine. It was bought in 1857.

In 1859 or '60 Jasper Van Curen bought the first self rake machine, a McCormick, the rake being attached to the reel and raking every revolution of the reel or every sixteen feet.

In 1862 the Gard Brothers, Milton, Findley, Newton and Franklin, bought the first machine known to our informant which elevated the grain with a revolving canvas into a hopper, a boy turning it over and dropping it onto the ground ready for the binders. The Gard Brothers conceived the idea that they would build a platform onto this machine so that they could ride and bind. They built a platform 8x12 feet and had to go two or three times around the field before it could be attached. The capacity of this machine was 15 acres day but it could be handled by six men instead of nine. This idea of the Gard boys was copied and patented by the Marsh Harvester Company.

Some time during the Civil War the combined machines which cut both hay and grain came into the market. These were the Buckeye dropper, the Champion, Kirby, and the Tramp.

In 1869 the first Marsh Harvester was sold in Volinia to John Zimmerman. Two men could do the binding and a large number of these machines were sold in the township.

The first self-binder which bound with wire was sold to the Goodspeed twin brothers, Edwin and Edward, in 1876. This was a Wood machine, a look binder. When it was started on the Goodspeed farm south of Nicholsville over fifty spectators were in the field, many of them coming from long distances to see the work. This machine was drawn by five horses, three on the tongue and two in the lead.

David Goodspeed's thirteen year old daughter, now Mrs. Ezra Gard of Oregon, rode one of the lead horses. The capacity of this machine was from 15 to 20 acres a day and it did good work.

In 1877 Samuel Morris and the Lawrence brothers, each bought a Wood machine and with a twine binder. Mr. Morris had a six-foot cut and paid $300 for it and the other was a 6½ foot cut and cost $320. The demand for these machines was so great that the Walter A. Wood Company could not begin to supply it and the above men were fortunate to get agent's samples One came from the Vrooman Hardware Company of Dowagiac and the other from Mr. Miller, an implement dealer in Decatur.

Other binders have been brought into the township as new improvements have been invented until the present season when Linous Lawrence seems to have reached the highest state of perfection possible with a McCormick self-binder run by a gasoline engine.

SILAS M. RAWSON

Died Last Friday After an Illness of Several Weeks

Silas M. Rawson was born February 15, 1823, at Lockport, N. Y., and died in Decatur, his home, March 24, 1911, aged 88 years, one month and seven days.

He was married September 3, 1845, to Romelia M. Crandall, who died January 11, 1899. Mr. Rawson located at Decatur in 1859, and at the second call of President Lincoln for volunteers he enlisted as a private in Co. C, 4th Michigan Cavalry, and served with the Company continuously, with the exception of 5 weeks in hospital at Columbus, until discharged in July, 1865.

Company C. faced the enemy in about eighty skirmishes and battles from Stamford to Macon. The last engagement taking place April 20, 1865.

At the close of the war Mr. Rawson returned to Decatur where he has made his home ever since.

Mr. Rawson was the last but one to be taken away of a family of ten children, the only survivor being his youngest sister, Mrs. Martha Smith, now living in Paw Paw. He was the father of three sons, one of whom died at Mendon, Mich., in 1872, the other two were with him at the last.

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the many friends and neighbors who have assisted us during the illness of our father, S. M. Rawson.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP'S FIRST SCHOOL

Log Schoolhouse Built in the Higgins Woods and First Taught by Geo. Newton

"Let the soldier be abroad if he will, he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage less imposing in the eyes of some, perhaps insignificant. The school master is abroad and trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in the military array."—From speech delivered by Hon Elijah Squicks at the laying of the corner stone of the Higgins schoolhouse in the fall of 1836.

Tradition says that the first school house built in Wayne township was located in the Cornelius Higgins woods in East Wayne on land now owned by Joseph Parks.

Higgins was a pioneer of Wayne and named the township after Gen. Anthony Wayne. He was the township's first supervisor being elected in the spring of 1835.

James Kelsey, whose grandson, Dr. James Kelsey, is the leading physician, of Cassopolis, was one of the first teachers, George Newton of Volinia being the first.

The schoolhouse was set in among the trees, and the pupils would see the squirrels and pigeons from the windows and the call of the wild possessed them as strongly as the call of the primer.

Higgins built a sawmill on this tract and later built what in time came to be known as Woodland mill, at one time owned by Joel M. Smith. Mr. Smith sold the property to Sam Woodland's father and old settlers say that in the transfer he forgot to include the farm that went with it Another old timer was Richard V. B. Crane. He lived in the northeast corner of the township, and was the first clerk of the township, holding the office twelve years. Whiskey was but three cents a dipperful in those days, and Crane sometimes invested in a dipperful after which he would announce that he believed in free trade and sailor's rights from which it is presumed he was a democrat.

Abram Weaver was another early settler, and he always found time to attend the shooting matches which were common at that time. He was poor, and once asked a neighbor for the flaps to a discarded saddle which he used for soles for his children's shoes. One of these children was James Weaver, who later became a general in the Civil War, still later was a congressman from Iowa and later yet ran for the presidency on the green back ticket.—Dowagiac Herald.

RALLY DAY A SUCCESS

Supt. Washburn and Decatur School Deserve Great Credit For this Fine Educational Uplift

The educational rally held at the Decatur Town Hall Friday, March 24, was a decided success. Between three and four hundred people were present at both the afternoon and evening session. School Commissioner Hungerford was present during the afternoon meeting. Teachers pupils and patrons were present from several of the adjoining districts. The program as printed in the Republican two weeks ago was carried out with changes in time order only. The numbers given by the high school students did credit to themselves and reflected honor on the public schools. The hearty spirit with which the students entered into their parts promises good things for the school in the future and is to be commended

By his genial humor and ready wit Prof. Henderson won his audience before he had given a dozen sentences. In his first talk he likened life to a game of checkers in which one must ever move in a single direction till he has been in the king row, after which he is free to move in whatsoever direction he desires. Till one has gained control of himself mentally, morally, physically and financially his actions are largely controlled by the will of others, but after gaining these things he has greater freedom and is in the way to greater success in every way—in fact in the king row.

By apt illustrations he proved conclusively that while education is not the only thing it is one of the largest factors in success today and must be more so in the future.

Prof. French made a strong plea for vocational studies in our public schools, especially for agricultural subjects. He would not make our high schools agricultural colleges nor have them usurp the place of those insttutions but he would have enough of the science taught to enable a student to discover if his abilities lie along that line. He believes in general that it is the function of the high school to discover the pupil to himself, in other words to find his abilities and capabilities and that it is the province of other institution, higher and technical, to give him training along special lines.

He told how the day had passed in which the person who could be successful at nothing else could be a successful farmer. Farming should be as much one's profession as is law, teaching, preaching or business. He gave illustrations and specific examples to show that science in farming makes it a vastly more profitable business as well as more pleasurable and congenial one.

Prof. Henderson's evening lecture was one of the very best that Decatur people have had an opportunity to listen to for years. It was brimful of wit and humor and every story had a point to it and a good one. He pictured the years of "The Golden Age of Tomorrow" as his imagination and reason gave them to him and his pictures were uplifting, instructive and full of inspiration.

Taken all together the rally day was one of the best things that has taken place in Decatur for some time. Many people have spoken approvingly of it and, it could well become an annual affair.

CHURCH OF CHRIST

Substantial Growth Shown Under Leadership of Rev. J. J. Terry

Many people in Decatur and vicinity will undoubtedly be pleased to learn of the improved conditions that have arisen in the Church of Christ the past year.

For several years prior to the coming of the present minister the church had not maintained preaching services except for short periods. At the beginning of 1910 the present minister was engaged for half time and began his duties January 16 of that year. From September 1, 1910, he has been serving the church full time.

The improved conditions are in no way due to flashy and sensational methods. Every move made has been with the idea of permanency and enlargement. It required the exercise of great faith for the little company that remained of a congregation once numerically strong to undertake what they did a year ago. They were weak numerically and financially, but rich in faith and Christian graces.

Contrasting conditions of a year ago with those of the present, it becomes apparent that a change for the better has taken place. The first quarter of 1910 the attendance at the services ranged from 15 to 30, and two dollars paid for the necessary supplies for the Bible School. Now the attendance runs from 40 to 60 and it requires eight dollars to furnish supplies for the Bible school. The membership of the church has been increased by 13 and some of those long absent and discouraged are returning. A new chapel organ as been purchased and 75 dollars expended on improvement of the property.

The ladies' Aid Society and Missionary Society have both taken on new life and are actively engaged in their respective lines of work. The weekly prayer meetings are also well attended. Present conidtions are valid grounds for the hope that better and great things are to be realized in the near future.

The Church of Christ exists in Decatur, as elsewhere, for the uplift of man. It stands for purity in the individual, peace in the home and the betterment of society. Its great aims are to answer the prayer of Jesus for Christian unity (John 17:20-23).; proclaim the gospel of Christ in its simplicity, fullness and power; restore to the earth again the Church of Christ as established in apostolic days. For these reasons it should merit the sympathy and good will of the community and receive at its hands encouragement and help. On making these statements we are not unmindful of the many favors shown the church in the past for which it is very grateful.

To all who are at liberty to do so a cordial invitation is at all times extended to attend the services at this church. You will be welcome.

J. J. Terry,
Minister of Church of Christ.

HONORS FOR DECATURITE

Dr. Wm. P. Harlow of U. of C. Elected President of American Medical Colleges

The notice published herewith is copied from the Daily Camera of Boulder, Colo. Dr. Harlow lived in Decatur during all of his boyhood years, obtained his common school education in Decatur public school and entered the University of Michigan from here:

"The University of Colorado was signally honored when Dr. William P. Harlow, dean of the faculty of its medical college, was elected president of the Association of American Medical Colleges at its annual meeting at Chicago Tuesday.

"No western man ever before held this distinguished office and his elevation to it is due to his unselfish and persistent efforts to standardize medical education in the United States and to build at Boulder and Denver, under the University of Colorado, the greatest medical college in the west.

"Dr. Harlow is a University of Michigan man and not an active practitioner because of his devotion to business and success in copper mining. Because he is not engrossed in practice he gives the best that is in him to make his calling more honorable, more thorough and more respected among men. Weeding out the inefficient colleges, deadly hostility to quackery, highest devotion to scientific research, are the pole stars which actuate his every motive and recognition of this by his college associates is a high compliment to a citizen of Boulder and to the University to whose upbuilding he has devoted most of his time and the high mental faculties with which he is endowed.

NEW KANDY KITCHEN

Building Completed and Opened for Business Last Saturday

The new Kandy Kitchen was opened for business last Saturday and it is one of the prettiest business places in Decatur Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Rawson, the proprietors, were kept busy all day welcoming the crowds of people who came in to congratulate them and to make purchases on opening day.

The new building adjoins the Republican office on the north and makes the line of store buildings unbroken from the post office to Stern's dry goods store on the corner. The building has a full sized basement with cement floor, complete work room and commodious sales room, well furnished.

Mr. and Mrs. Rawson are outfitted to serve lunches and ice cream and have a large and well selected stock of confectionery, cigars, tobacco, etc.

WHERE NICHOLSVILLE GOT ITS NAME

Man by the Name of Nichols Owned Half of the Town at One Time. Town Was Named for Him

George Scott, a Marcellus harness maker 77 years old and still making tugs, tells the Marcellus News that in 1846 Jonathan Nichols ran a saw mill in Kalamazoo, near where East Main street crosses the river.

Later he lived at Leonidas, and moved to what was then called Georgetown in the early 50's, where he bought all the land west of the main street and operated a grist mill for 10 years.

He built the Thompson school house in 1861 and was also a cabinet maker and undertaker.

In 1853, at one of the old fashioned shooting matches, someone in the crowd suggested that the name of the town be changed to Nicholsville in his honor and the idea took so well that it was ever after called by that name.

Nichols was a jovial, companionable man, a friend to the poor and deserved all his popularity.

The town once contained 25 houses, two hotels, two stores, and at one time seven shoemakers and three harness makers worked there.

Marcellus killed the town, with its railroad and consequent better markets, but as late as 1878 John Potter was still conducting the old hotel, and Charles Thorpe was operating a grocery, the latter burning down one night.

The town is now being made into a summer resort, and it is a pleasant and attractive spot.—Dowagiac Herald.

TWENTY-ONE YEARS A SLAVE

A Remarkable Story of Chas. Grayson, A White Man Held in Bondage in South

NOW A CITIZEN OF DECATUR

Among Decatur's respected citizens is one whose life history contains more of romance and tragedy than perhaps any other in the town and brings to mind very forcibly the old slavery days in the south.

Charles Grayson, who has been a resident of this village for the last several years, was born at Natchez, Mississippi, of a slave mother in 1841.

His grandmother, Ara McLaughlan, was the daughter of poor but honest Irish parents, who resided near a small town in South Carolina.

Near them lived a wealthy planter who had a young daughter, about the age of Ara and the two children played together and spent their childhood mostly in each other's society.

When the two girls had nearly reached young womanhood, the parents of Ara moved to a distant county in the "Old South State", leaving their daughter in the care of the planter's family, with the expectation of sending for her as soon as they should become located and settled, but very soon afterward both sickened with typhoid fever and died and their young children became scattered, Ara remaining in the planter's family a companion to her childhood friend and playmate.

In the course of time the planter's daughter married and went to the distant city of Natchez, Miss., to live, giving out after reaching there that the beautiful white girl was her slave and from then treating her former friend as such.

Ara protested that she was not a slave; that she was born of free Irish parents and that there was not a drop of negro blood in her veins, but having no means or friends and being in a slave land, her protestations were of no avail and she was forced to submit and spent the most of her life in slavery, being released from bondage only by the war of the rebellion after she had become a very old woman.

Being a slave she could not legally marry a white man and absolutely refused to marry a negro, but in time she became the mother of a female child whose father was a white planter. This child afterwards became the mother of Mr. Grayson.

His grandmother, Ara, had several brothers and sisters left back in South Carolina, who after they had grown to manhood and womanhood, made efforts to find their lost sister, but owing to the fact that she had been taken a long way from them they were unsuccessful. The young mistress, her former friend, being advised that such efforts were being made, sold the white girl and her child to a planter by the name of Dunbar, who resided near Coffeeville, Miss., who continued to own her until she was liberated by the war, and she died soon after.

Her child, Helen, though not having a drop of negro blood in her veins, was raised by Dunbar as a slave and like her mother refused to marry a negro, and could not marry a white man, but in time became the mother of Mr. Grayson, the father being a white man and a high official of the county where they lived. He had promised to purchase her freedom but failed to do so.

Dunbar then sold Helen and her child to a man by the name of Hamlet who resided near Paris, Miss. and he continued to own them until Mr. Grayson was seven years old when, knowing that there was no negro blood in their veins, he became uneasy regarding his rightful title to them and sold them to a man by the name of Steen, who resided in the neighborhood and by whom they were owned during the remainder of their slavery days.

In 1848 a law was passed by the Mississippi legislature providing that where a person had been held in slavery for a period of two years the question of whether or not such person was really a slave was barred.

This law of course fixed the status of Ara and Helen and Helen's child—from then on they were legally slaves according to the Mississippi law and there was no help for them—and they all remained slaves until liberated by northern soldiers.

When young Grayson reached the age of seventeen years he resolved to make his escape from bonage if possible and laid his plans accordingly. He managed to save a little money and late one stormy night, after receiving his mother's blessing and bidding her good bye, he slipped away in the darkness and made his way to a railroad. At that time young Grayson knew nothing of the telegraph and this lack of knowledge proved his undoing. After reaching the railroad he caught a train going north, paid his fare and took a seat in the white man's car, no one believing that in the eyes of the Mississippi law he was the same as a negro and was in fact a runaway slave. At Grand Junction, near the Tennessee line the conductor of his train received a telegram from Grayson's master, giving his description and asking that he be arrested and detained, which was accordingly done.

He was taken to Holly Springs, Miss., and thrown into jail. The jail authorities, not believing him to be a slave, put him among the white prisoners, but another telegram, stating that he was an escaped slave, caused them to hustle him into that part of the jail occupied by negro prisoners. At the time of his arrest he had been taken for a criminal, trying to make his escape. Only a few years after this attempted escape, Mr. Grayson had the pleasure of helping to burn this state jail when the union army was passing through this little city of Holly Springs.

His master came and took him back to his home near Paris, where Grayson was stripped, his hands tied above his head and he was whipped until he became unconscious and it was thought he was dead. He bears the scars of that whipping upon his body to this day. After recovering consciousness his master was about to brand him on his face with a hot iron, but this punishment and mark of bondage he escaped by threatening that if he was branded he would surely kill himself.

On the seventeenth day of December, 1862, the Union army came to Paris and with it was the 3d. Michigan Cavalry. An officer of that regiment met young Grayson and accused him of being a "damned rebel" and when told that he was a slave the officer refused to believe it. Upon being convinced, however, he told Grayson that he could go with the army and would be free. At first he refused to go, fearing that he might be recaptured and suffer another whipping but was finally persuaded to go.

He remained with the army as a "contraband" a short time, acting as hostler and cook, when he was taken sick and sent north. After recovering from his sickness he hired out to H. B. Wells of Dowagiac. He remained with Mr. Wells until in 1861, when he enlisted in the 3rd Michigan the same regiment that led him out of slavery, and served until the end of the war, returning to Michigan with the regiment.

Mr. Grayson had several sisters, all by different fathers. On his return from the war he stopped at Paris, Miss., and visited his mother and sisters and again visited them in 1884, when he went to the Cotton Exposition at New Orleans.

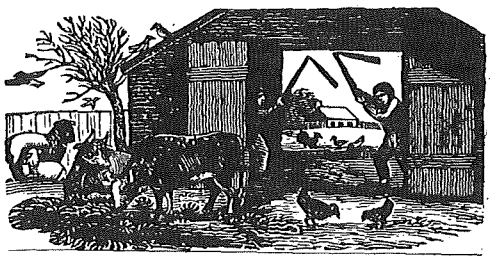
After returning from the army he attended school for a short time, where he learned to read and write and since then he has been a constant reader until he has become a man of fair education.

One seeing Mr. Grayson passing along our streets, straight and stalwart in form, would not think it could be possible that he has suffered the pains and tortures of twenty one years of southern slavery.



AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A BARN

I'm only a barn about fifty years old and good for fifty years more if I had my say. I came in to being at the instance of Bige Huyck in the middle sixties at the close of the Civil War and my companion (house) was built at the same time.

Bige made considerable extra money, as farmers go, selling $3.00 wheat and $12.00 pork. Mr. Van Sickle was the boss carpenter assisted by Jerry Fortaine, Wm. Pritchard, John H. Hamlin and others whose names do not occur to me. We soon became finished artistic realities for that period of Decatur.

Bige never lived here and sold us when brand new to Dr. Baker in 1867 or '68. Dr. Baker and I have been pals since then until a few days ago the doctor sold me to Wm. Popendick and I am to lose my identity in spite of all my protests and still more than all, they have begun to mutilate me and rack and torture by prying me up on wheels, moving me from my old home and distinguished surroundings and old time neighbors over on Sherwood street to put me on that plebeian site where the old stave factory cooper shop stood so many years I have been a little lonesome for some years since the doctor ceased practice. I may be egotistical, being nearly fifty years old, but I was a classy barn for many years and you don't need to take my word for it for all the neighbors said the same to Dr. Baker and others, and among themselves many a time in my hearing. Now that I'm "Oslerized" the new smart barns with their four sided roofs and cement floors think I'm only fit for the scrap pile. In those old days I had lots of admirers; Squire Hollister who lived on the corner where Geo. McOmber now lives, in the house Rev. Bradfield occupies, and Horace Clapp, my neighbor where Chas. Brigham is located, Wm. E. Trowbridge on the corner where Mrs. Gates resides, A. E. Dwight close by, Jack Tuttle where Mrs. Rogers lives.

Squire Hollister seemed always to have a lawsuit on hand. I don't know why. Maybe people were more contentious or because of so many lawyers. There certainly were enough lawyers. John Upton, Newton Foster, Lawyer Cole, and Wm. H. Tucker had begun his meteoric flights of forensic eloquence and one or two fledglings just jumping out of the nest. One of them married Flora Nash. He was a joke as a lawyer but he was invaluable in driving book agents out of town simply by writing his autograph at the head of the list in ornate signboard size. He always readily promised everything and never paid anything, but all that is another story.

I felt and looked grand when the veteran painter John Eckenberger put on my first two coats and he has newly dressed me twice since and though now too old for the house and barn tailoring business he visits me occasionally and talks over old times. The boys for many years played ball on the Hayden tract. I was their back stop and I've got some dents on the east side where they threw stones at a mark. I remember when the addition was built to the school house on the west side in the early 70's and also the old red school house, later used as a livery barn by Geo. Wilkinson on the corner where the Lincoln Ellis home is situated.

One of the greatest days was the laying of the corner stone of the present Presbyterian church in '68 or '69. Everyone and their families were there, all the school with the teachers marched proudly by me to form in the procession and take part in the exercises which were very impressive. Rev. Toof, the father of S. G. Toof, was the pastor and Hon E. P. Hill was a conspicuous and leading figure that day and Robt. Nesbitt was there and donated $100 to the building fund telling Mr. Hill the church probably would not give him a seat if he came to meeting. Mr. Hill replied that the opportunity to offer him a seat would probably not occur. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Nesbitt was of different religious belief he not only contributed the $100 toward building the church but later gave $10 toward buying the bell. They sealed up some things in the corner stone laying.

I don't remember what year after this the stand-pipe was built and Mr. Crane, who lived across the way used to sit up windy nights for fear it might blow down. Mr. Crane said it was dangerous.

The church, school house, the tall massive chimney that marks the site of the fire-destroyed big flouring mill built by Mr. A. A. Abbott, in the late '60s, along with many other buildings I might mention are silent substantial monuments of the energies and activities of the past. But where are the promoters, sponsors and builders of these precious monuments? They are gone, at rest, we rarely think of them except when we see their names chiselled on the cold stone, but their work live on.

Peruna.

MANY AUTOS PASS THROUGH DECATUR

The Chicago Evening American's endurance run for truck automobiles passed through here yesterday. There were about thirty-five trucks and about every kind, carrying from one to five tons. They were all loaded according to their carrying capacity, the smallest having 1500 pounds of sand and the largest five tons.

Many people were on the streets to see them pass through the village.

THE PANTHER SCARE

Hamilton Township Scene of Great Excitement Over Joke Thirty Years Ago

By Abe Norwood.

About thirty years ago there was gotten up a great scare over a strange noise, supposed to be made by some wild animal and the common idea was that it was a panther That I may be the better understood allow me to begin at the beginning of the story.

Two young men, Will Shurter and Zado Rosebrook, hailing from Cassopolis came to Hamilton and took a job of grubbing for A. S. Wise. They lived in the Col. Manley house which stood on what is now a part of Mr. Poor's farm.

These men were brothers-in-law, Zado having married Shurter's sister. They seemed to be like other folks and worked quietly away.

They got the idea into their heads to have a little fun and went at it in this way. They took a one quart tin can and punched a small hole in the center of the bottom. Then they took a linen shoe string and tied a knot in one end and pulled the string through the hole leaving the knot in the can. The string was then well resined.

Now to operate it, the can was held near the bottom with one hand and the other pulled the string Some practice was necessary to produce the best results. It certainly made a horrid noise, a coarse heavy growl that was thought to be the voice of some very savage animal.

When all was ready the boys began business. One of them went across lots to the house of James Hall and told the family he had heard an awful queer noise while coming over there and he believed it was some wild animal. They went out of doors and listened and sure enough they heard it, but it was hard to locate; one minute it seemed near and the next minute far away.

Next day all the neighbors knew about the exciting news and in the evening a good many boys and some men went to the vicinity of Hall's place.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and so every one took some old gun or pistol to defend himself against an imaginary something. That night they heard it in different fields but no one got very near it. No one got to see it.

Night after night the thing went on. It got to be excruciating. Although this creature with the big growl was so timid that no one could get near enough to see it, yet some were so afraid of it that they would carry weapons even in a buggy if they had to pass through this panic stricken, terror haunted neighborhood.

I remember one night a wagon load of armed men drove up to a squad of hunters who were listening to the growler. They did not get out of the wagon. They could hear just as well in it. Besides if it, the growler, should make a charge, those in the wagon would be in a safer position. They could fight just as well and in case of a speedy retreat they would be already in the wagon so there would be less danger of being left for the animal to tear in pieces or eat.

Rosebrook's wife had a chum near by, the wife of a neighbor. She told her chum the secret of the animal. Of course she told her husband. He in turn told another and each made a growler and went to the field to help the boys carry on the fun.

After several weeks the secret exploded and there were a mad set of fellows. A friend of Rosebrook went to his house early in the evening and advised him to stay at home that night. Later, not hearing the animal, a lot of fellows went to his house and called him out. He came out in his nocturnal habliments. Then they made him exhibit the "panther." Then they wanted to see Shurter. But Shurter objected to being on exhibition. They were going into the house to get him but one of the number objected and told them not to do that as they were likely to get into trouble. Rosebrook was then allowed to go back into the house nearly frozen for his thin apparel was little protection on a chilly evening.

Some of the parties were so mad that they were going to prosecute the originators of the farce and went to see the prosecuting attorney about it. After hearing the story he laughed and told them to go home and let the boys alone, for they had not hurt anything or anybody and it was a pretty good joke.

LOST

On the street a black parasol and a package of calico that was left on the cigar case of Fletcher's store. Finders leave at Republican office and greatly oblige.

LITTLE PRAIRIE RONDE REUNION

Third Tri-ennial Meet Proves Greatest of Them All

The third triennial meet of the pupils of the Prairie Ronde school and Sunday school from 1850 to 1885 occurred on August ninth at the beautiful private summer resort of the Lawrence boys, called Lakeview, on the west shore of Finch lake. The weather was perfect and about 125 met early to spend the day with hearty greetings, warm hand clasps and sacred reminiscences of the hallowed days of the past.

Some people deem it best for our peace of mind, contentment, health and happiness, if all the past be buried and forgotten, including our nearest and dearest who have forever passed away, and never dwelt upon, reviewed or mourned, but that we strive to live wholly in the present and up to our full capacities for good with no thought of tomorrow.

But to spend a day once in three years amid the scenes of our childhood, meeting the loved ones we knew in the old days, the truest and best friends we have, is a sweet and soul satisfying experience, even though the lip may quiver and the hot tears fall when reference is made to some fond heart that is missed and perhaps gone from us forever.

Neath the shade of the beautiful oaks the usual banquet was served on four long tables, consisting of every wholesome and delicious delicacy conceivable with hot and cold drinks. This was indulged for a delightful hour followed by nearly two hours of toasts and lively speeches.

President Thorp opened with one of his good talks and then asked Frank Kern to act as toastmaster. LeGrand A. Copley responded to the call with one of his characteristic jolly addresses full of fun and wisdom showing the same clever fellow we knew forty years ago, when with music and eloquence, he added so much to the life of the old Sabbath school. Chalker E. Buell of Webster City, Iowa, always a prime favorite with all of us, gave a good talk right from his big warm heart and fertile brain, closing with a beautiful and touching reference to his beloved aunt Hattie Buell who went off to her heavenly reunion at the close of the last meet.

Ella Huyck Dolloff, always respected and loved by all, was a leading speaker among the fair sex who claim they can always outtalk the boys—and they can. Ella knows how to say things that are rich in meaning, ripe with sense and satisfying to the soul and will always be a prime favorite with the old set. Lineus Lawrence, the faithful secretary who is ever ready with advice, money, work and a smiling face, gave us a fine talk straight from his heart.

Sorry there is not space in which to tell all the fine things said so feelingly by the many who spoke. It was a veritable close-communion love feast. Among others who gave good talks were Mark and Jessie Thomas, Amanda Thorp, Kittie Hathaway, Jessie Kern Savage, Julia Richmond Watson, Emily Warner Green, Della Wright Goodenough, George Scott and others.

A business meeting followed the post prandial exercises when the old officers were reelected: Dr Rollin L. Thorp, Pres.; Frank L. Kern, 1st Vice Pres.; Edwin B. Copley, 2nd Vice Pres.; Lineus L. Lawrence, Secretary; Austin E. Lawrence, Treasurer. The executive committee is composed of Adelia Howe White, Archie Lawrence, George Kern, Eva Morris Southworth and Charlie Rosewarne. This committee will appoint all sub committees, order time and place of next session and have general supervision of all arrangements. The feeling seemed to be unanimous that these reunions should be held every third year. Letters were read from several non-residents who regretted their inability to come.

Among those present from a distance were Hon. LeGrand A. Copley of Kansas City, Dr. Rollin L. Thorpe, Denver; Chalker E. Buell, Webster City, Iowa; Frank L. Kern, Los Angeles, California; Julia Richmond Watson, Massillon, Ohio; Mollie George, Minn.; George and Mert Nichols, Denver; Charlie Nash, Chicago; Mattie Kern Kidman and two daughters, Grand Blanc, Mich.; Katie Kern of Ypsilanti and Belle Copley of Yorkville.

Two naptha launches and several rowboats were kept busy carrying jolly loads about the lakes while autos were buzzing here and there so all found recreation to their liking. Many preferred to just sit and talk over the old days, old friends and well remembered experiences.

Before parting ice cream and cake was served to all and more lemonade than we could drink. Thirty or forty dollars was chipped into the treasury again and the parting hour came all too soon.

Bless the dear old boys, our chums; bless the darling girls, our sweethearts, and may we all live to enjoy many happy, joyous reunions.

AN AFTERMATH.

Following precedent, some of the old boys met the day after at George Kern's resort and spent the day in honor of Pres. Thorp. Progressive games were indulged resulting in a prize of a rubber doll awarded to Lester Goodspeed, The booby prize, a box of bunyon plasters, was won by Abner Hathaway.

After a hearty luncheon the boys had a fishing contest which was won by Abner Hathaway and Archie Lawrence. The fun concluded with a hot fish supper and a moonlight launch ride on the lakes.

F. L. K.

Ten Nights in a Barroom was played on the Pickle Factory grounds in a tent last week Thursday night. The play was presented in a fine manner and followed by a concert that was way above the average for a tent show.

LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Frank H. Leonard C. S. B.

Gives Third Lecture for Local Society

Frank H. Leonard, C. S B of Chicago, delivered a strong lecture on Christian Science in the town hall last Friday evening. The lecture brought out an audience composed not only of people of Decatur and vicinity, but of visitors from Paw Paw' Hartford, Bangor, Dowagiac, Kalamazoo and Jackson. The introduction was nicely made by R. W. Scudder.

A few excerpts from the Lecture follow:

The chief and overpowering, all and only purpose of Christian Science is to glorify God, and to do it by destroying sin in the world! It has no other purpose. The things that are accomplished under the ministration of Christian Science are accomplished only in proportion as man turns away from the contemplation of evil and lust and discord and in harmony and disease, turns away from darkness and lifts his gaze unto the everlasting Light, which is a better understanding of God, and learns to know that only as the worship of God is made practical, does man become Christian.

Christian Science gives men just one standard whereby all things are measured, and that standard is God, and when anything presents itself to a Christian Scientist, it is immediately measured by the standard of the perfection of God, and if in any particular it fails to measure up to that standard, it is of necessity cast to one side as ungodly, and if it is ungodly, it is not eternal and if it is not eternal it is not real. Therefore when a Christian Scientist says sin, disease and death are not real, he is saying in other words that they are ungodly, unholy and unrighteous, that they constitute the things from which we are to be saved. To enlarge upon this thought a little take the statement that we live, move and have our being in God. Then add to that the statement, there is no place where God is not, in other words, that God is omnipresent, as the Bible teaches us. God is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, and with it all, is as it teaches us in another place, the One altogether lovely. We can see from that standpoint that nothing really exists save that which exists in God, that the real standpoint from which the Christian Scientists determine as to what is real and what is unreal is viz: That that which is real, is that which can and does live and exist in God, and that that which is unreal is that which can not and does not live nor exist in God, and therefore has no real existance.

It has been said that we Christian Scientists worship Mrs. Eddy, and that statement has gone hand in hand with the belief that we have placed her on a plane with Christ. I want to tell you there is not a Christian Scientist who worships Mrs. Eddy, or any other person for the instant that personal worship enters into consciousness, that selfsame instant one ceases to be a Christian Scientist.

Do we put the Christian Science text book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which Mrs. Eddy has written, on a plane with the Bible? No, we do not, and we never have. There is just one Bible and that Bible is the Holy Bible that is used, loved and revered by Christians all over the globe.

The Christian Science text book is exactly what it is called, a text book. Now a text book to be a text book must be a text book about something and the Christian Science text book is a text book about the only thing that is worth knowing, and that is knowledge of God the Truth which our Bible teaches us makes man free.

Now Christian Scientists know the more that one knows and has of religion the happier, the more joyous, the freer he is. Religion is not something to make a long face about, it is something to make a man sing praise.

It is not something to bring distress and unhappiness, it is something to bring deep peace in everyway and Christ Jesus has set the standard of Christianity for every one of us and when He set that standard he pointed out to us the freedom and joy that might and should be ours if we were only obedient. He established the standard of Christianity when he made this statement: "He that believeth in me the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father." When He made that statement, He was healing the sick from all manner of diseases and yet He said I of myself am nothing. He said, It is the Father that works through me who accomplished all these things. Christian Scientists will say that they of themselves have never done one single redemptive thing on earth.

OLD POTTER

One of the Characters in Hamilton Township over a Half-Century Ago

Everyone called him "Old Potter" so I used the name without meaning any disrespect whatever.

He lived just west of the cemetery in Hamilton on the place that Will Young now owns. He occupied a log cabin 12x14 feet in size that stood on the south bank of the marsh that runs across the place.

Soon after I came here in 1857 I went gunning with a young man over to School Lot Lake, a pond west of Grange Hall, and when returning we went across Potter's place. The old man was in his potato patch, he dug some and picked them up into his old wool hat and asked us into his cabin.

He had a fire built in one end and an old iron kettle hung over it. He walked up to it remarking that he was going to get dinner and dumped the contents of his hat into the kettle.

Old Potter had made a lot of marsh hay on the marsh in front of his cabin and sold it to Brown, the tavern man. Brown sent me with the other fellow with a yoke of oxen to get a load of it. We drove onto the marsh and commenced loading. The old man heard us and came out with a pitch fork on his shoulder and started down the hill. Somehow he stumbled and threw the fork ahead of him away down onto the marsh and he came tumbling after.

The marsh was soft and we concluded to head for shore before we got on too much of a load. The oxen began to mire and soon one of them sank in the soft muck. We unyoked the cattle and got them out of the soft mud and then hitched chains to the end of the tongue, unloaded some of the hay and the cattle pulled the wagon out.

Potter had a very sore eye. He went over to John Linderman, north of the cemetery where W. O. Campbell now lives, and asked him if Chamberlain's Relief would be good for it. "I don't know", said John. "You can try it if you want to." John gave him the bottle and he held his head back and poured some of the fiery contents into his eye. Long afterward John would tell the story and laugh until he shook.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE

Dr. J. O. Maxwell and Game Warden "Fatty" Leach met their Waterloo while touring the country during one of the recent storms They drove into a washout north of the river in Waverly township, and the horses broke loose and ran away. The Doctor and Charley described an arc and landed on their heads. After an examination which showed that there were no broken bones, the doctor remarked "that it might have been worse."—True Northerner.

GOOD ROADS

As Viewed by a Farmer

Lawton, Mich., Aug. 21, '11.

The up-to-date Republican has been wanting criticisms on the good roads question.

The leaders of the time and fashion want one good road for spinning to and from the large towns and some to go fishing Sundays, so they are in favor of making a piece on the Paw Paw road of many thousand dollars expense and let other taxpaying farmers who live over the reef of the township sink or swim in winter or through the extreme heat of 90 in the shade draw heavy loads of grapes or produce over hills which June rains washed out, so they are most impassable.

The road Commissioner and town board are notified and the answer comes repeatedly, "Well, when we get the auto road made we will fix the road if there is any money left.". Perhaps there won't be any.

So the patient farmers pay their taxes and see their money wasted and their rights trampled on, their horses misused and work handicapped by worse road than used to be when farmers did their own roadwork.

Oh, yes, farmers should be broad-minded and always patronize their home town, just keep still and keep on grinding as they always have done before. But the up to-date farmers say equal roads and equal rights to all and no special privileges to a few who can boast of an automobile.

Some of the village people are wise but a majority look with more pride on a chauffeur who stops and buys 10 cents worth of gasoline than on the farmer who buys the material and hires men to erect a new house or barn or buys the many things which keep the village alive.

The thoughts of many are scorn for the farmer who feeds them all. Some farmers run autos; most of them were raised by the man behind the plow.

I read from the Kalamazoo Telegraph-Press that farmers of Big Prairie Ronde considered it a complete failure, this new road system. They have expended over $100,000 and yet have roads in a deplorable condition beyond any repair. Autoists and farmers shun them, they are so rough. The taxpayers of the village and county should read what it says on the first page of August ninth.

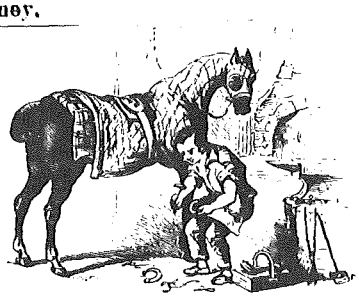
DECATUR WINS ANOTHER GAME

Defeats Lawrence on Their Grounds by Score of 3 to 0.

Last Friday afternoon our ball team journeyed to Lawrence and played a winning game, defeating that nine by a score of 3 to 0.

The game was fast from the start, and "Red" Woolfe, our star pitcher, shoved them over so hot that the Lawrence boys could smell the smoke Only one hit is recorded against him and he has twelve strike-outs to his credit. But then they all played good, every mother's son of them was on the job with a vengeance.

Lawrence plays the return game this afternoon at Barton Park and base ball fans will probably see a game well worth their time and money.



THE MORRIS HORSES

Dr. R. C. Morris Comes to Decatur With the Finest String Owned by Single Owner in Southwestern Michigan

Dr. R. C. Morris has brought his string of horses to Decatur, adding materially to the good horses of this vicinity.

He has for two years enjoyed the honor of winning more races than any amateur driver in Michigan. He has started in 23 races and has only once failed to land inside the money, when his horse pulled a shoe.

He gave Exum Mead, 2:14½, his record and started him seven times last year winning 5 first and 2 second monies. At Wauseon, Ohio, he started from 12th position and finished second in 2:11½ his horse going a mile in 2:09.

Elesa Etheridge, 2:27¼, has a trial of 2:16 and promises to trot 2:10 this year and with Camille, 2:11,½, he has the fastest pair of trotters ever owned in Southwestern Michigan by one man. Camille has won several $1000., races and is one of the fastest horses in the world from a standing start as she has been a half in 59:¼ seconds.

In Elsie Etheridge trial 2:19, Dr. Morris owns a handsome mare of nice size. He owns two Allertons, 2:09¼, a son and daughter, and he is the champion sped sire of the world having 216 horses in the 2:30 list.

In Mose Allerton he has a nice youngster who looks like Redlack, 2:07¼, that sold a year ago for $10,000.

Allerton's stud fee at one time was $1,000 Mose Alerton's dam is by Reward J., 2:16¼ with 36 in the 2:30 list. His dam is one of the great breed mares of the world, 11 in the 2:30 list.

Dr Etherioge 2:23¼ is at Hastings and is fast becoming a speed sire as well as a sire of high going horses.

Cornelius Crawford is a four year old that is a thoroughbred trotter, one who has five standard crosses. He goes high and can step a 20 shot like a veteran.

Mark Hanna, the Royal Belgian, the baby, weighs 2200 lbs and is one of the most successful sires in the state. Dr. Morris was offered $3000, for him a year ago. He is of horse show calibre and one should see him to appreciate how grand a stallion he is.

Imperial weighs 1760, a registered Percheron, is a nice clean boned horse one that anyone would be proud to own.

Dr. Morris also has a few reigstered mares of the above breed.

His horses will put Decatur on the map as a good horse town, as few stables in the state have as many high grade horses as he owns. He is a charter member of the Michigan Trotting Horse Association that give futurity races each year, thereby encouraging breeders to raise fine horses.

50th WEDDING AN.

VAN BUREN COUNTY FAIR

LOCAL TALENT

Irish Molly Kelly was one of those fun making persons, with her "dustin and swapin" poor Molly had a terrible time. Her dear Billy O'Lee was "just out o' the horsepistol" and she was nearly crazy with the answering of the telephone and doorbell. Mrs. F.C. Stapleton was poor Irish Molly and she was always a source of fun for the crowd. Billy O'Lee the stammering chore boy and Molly's beau was Ernest Foulke. Mr. Foulke's song specialties made the part an attractive one. Dutch Hans, Leon Knight, with his wooden shoes and box of Japanese Lanterns appeared in time to help Molly with her trouble and left only when she had turned him down for Billy.

The curtain rose in the first act on the Teddy Bear chorus. Little Isabel Hinkley singing the Bear song accompanied by a chorus of twenty little folks. The Cow Boy Song by Miss Marietta McDole came between the first and second acts and the chorus was enacted with enthusiasm by a group of little Cowboys and Cowgirls equipped with revolvers and whips.

Mac Young entertained the Gibsons with a Song, "I'm looking for a Girl Like You" and encore. Mac attracts attention wherever he appears.

Mrs. Adams opened the second act with "I'm In Love with One of the Stars" accompanied by chorus. Then the country folks, or as Mrs. Gibson said, "Job's poor relation," began to arrive and a genuine good time was had until the arrival of Colonel Gibson, Frank Brigham, and his son William. William was dressed in the costume of a Zouave and proved to be Carl Hamilton. He was invited to "do some of his stunts" and he gave an exhibition of the Zouave drill which he had learned as a member of the Kalamazoo company. It made people open their eyes to see one of our town boys handle a heavy rifle in the manner he did.

The Drummer Song was sung by Chester Graham, six girls forming a chorus. This was followed by the Fluffy Ruffle chorus, consisting of Miss Cleo Flagg, soloist, and twelve young people.

A real live baseball game held the attention of the Gibson Family for a time. The game was introduced by Warren Mosier in a song and a drill by the team. Then they got busy and it was surely a spicy game. "The College Boy" was sung by Ernest Foulke with a lively crowd of twelve young people for a chorus. College togs and penants produced a very neat effect.

The last Chorus was "If all Moons Were Honeymoons" sung by Mrs. Bope while seated in a large moon suspended at the back of the stage while a chorus of twelve occupied the stage. The finale, "Good Night Dear," brought on the entire company making a chorus of nearly fifty.

Decatur has presented many home talent plays but for results none can surpass the Gibson Family Reunion. In the contest on selling tickets to the Reunion Mary Moulton sold 37 and was awarded first prize. Lillie True sold 32 and received second prize.

The prizes were nice boxes of confectionery.

The Hat Girls

ELIZABETH G. CURRY

1841-1911

Miss Elizabeth G. Curry was born March 27, 1841, on Little Prairie Ronde, Decatur township, and died at her home near Marcellus May 17, 1911 Aged seventy years, one month and twenty days.

She died of tuberculosis of the bone and blood. The brother and sister were untiring in their efforts for the welfare and comfort of their sister who manifested a most cheerful and patient disposition during her three years illness. About four weeks ago she suffered a third stroke of paralysis since which she had been helpless.

She was the sixth child of a family of nine children. Her parents, David and Elizabeth Gard Curry, were among the early pioneers of Michigan coming to the state when it was a wilderness, from Ohio, in the year 1830.

Her father built a log cabin without windows, doors, or floor. After a time a floor was laid with lumber from Whitmansville. It was in this log cabin that the nine children were born. There was only one house between his place and Paw Paw.

Mr. Curry and his family experienced the usual hardships and privation of pioneer life, but succeeded in developing a good farm upon which he made his home until his death which occurred March 20, 1846, leaving the widow with eight children, the eldest scarcely thirteen years of age.

In December, 1846, the youngest daughter was claimed by death. In January, 1865, Brookfield passed beyond.

The mother with the remaining children continued together, with the exception of Mary Jane, who had become the wife of Jacob High, until June 20, 1878, when the mother passed away, followed by Juliet 2 years later.

Three brothers and one sister remained on the old homestead until about 15 years ago when they moved to their present home. Since then death has claimed three more, only two remaining of the once large family

The funeral of Elizabeth was held Sunday May 21st at 2 o'clock at the Baptist church in Marcellus and was attended by a large concourse of people showing the high esteem in which she was held by her friends.

Sister you, have gone and left us,
And your place we can never fill,
But He who has bereft us,
Has caused your aches and pains be still.

How still the empty room her presence blessed,
Untouched the pillow that her dear head pressed,
My lonely heart has nowhere for its rest.
Since she went home.

JOHN A. SHAW DEAD

One of Michigan's Oldest Pioneers Dead. Passed Away in Kalamazoo March 23

88 YEARS OF AGE

John A. Shaw, one of the oldest and best known residents of southwestern Michigan, died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Bowen, in Kalamazoo last Thursday afternoon at the age of eighty-eight years, death being due to old age. Six children survive him as follows: Mrs. Stella Mumaugh, Decatur; Mrs. F. E. Bowen, Kalamazoo, Miss Angeline Shaw, Benton Harbor, A. L. Shaw, Kalamazoo, and William H. Shaw and Charles J. Shaw of Nebraska.

Mr. Shaw was born in Salt Creek township, Fairfield county, Ohio.

July, 1828, in the same year in which President Monroe delivered the famous Monroe doctrine. In November of his ninth year he came to Michigan with his parents, the children—nine in all, a team and two cows.

They first settled in Cass county on Little Prairie Ronde outhe Jacob Charles farm, afterward owned by Austin Charles. Here the father, Samuel Shaw, built a log house in the woods. Clapboards were laid for roof. No nails were used. Michigan was then a territory and the Black Hawk war was causing considerable excitement.

John A., helped drive to Michigan not only his father's cows but also the cows and sheep of another family.

At the age of eleven in a log school house for a period of six weeks he attended a school supported by subscription. The bible useil as a reading book and Webster's spelling books were the only text books used. Later he attended a winter school in a log cabin near where Anderson grave yard now is and later school at Nicholsville, paying his own tuition. Again at Hayeektown he attended school and studied grammar, arithmetic and philosophy. In 1848 he moved to Barry county and here married Miss Rhoda Ann Hollister.

Ten children were born to them. In 1853 Mr. Shaw bought eighty acres in Decatur township, Van Buren county. The patent for this farm was written on sheepskin and signed by Martin Van Buren, president of the United States of America.

Mr. Shaw was director of the school in his district for many years. In those times, the district library was kept at the director's home and he read by the light of the tallow candle and the blazing fire place most of the books in the library. He was school inspector and justice of the peace and many cases were tried before him and many marriages performed by him. Among the latter was the marriage of the late John Cook to his first wife.

He was an honest, industrious and well read citizen and respected by those who knew him.

During his citizenship in Kalamazoo county he enjoyed reading a great deal and kept abreast the progressive movements of the day. Only a few weeks ago he attended the Kalamazoo County Farmers' institute round up at Comstock and enjoyed the program of the day and evening except the coughing which was occasioned by red pepper and snuff thrown on the stove by some boys. The results of that evening's cough staid by him until his final sickness

A. L. Shaw and his most estimable wife Abbie made a pleasant home for him during his later years until her death last September. Since then father and son have enjoyed sharing the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Bowen.

Mr Shaw's robust health was largely due to his temperate habits. He had never used tobacco or liquor.

He was a member of the Park street Christian church and Bible school. Funeral services were held at the home, 400 Prospect Place, on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, conducted by Rev O. E. Tomes.

Brief services were also held in the Christian Church at Decatur on Monday at 10:30 a. m.

Interment took place in the Anderson cemetery south east of Decatur.

DEDICATION OF REFORMED CHURCH

Services Held Monday Evening in New Building. Rev. Van Arendonk Performs Ceremony

The dedication of the Dutch Reformed church in this village was held last Monday. Sunday before the Rev. A. VanArendonk, Classical Missionary preached before the congregation in the morning service, served the communion table and gave a sermon in the English language in the evening. The afternoon service was conducted by the local pastor of the church, Mr. Patterson.

Monday afternoon the congregation and friends, able to understand the Holland language were again gathered in the nice little church building where about 160 persons can find place.

Rev. VanArendonk presided over the meeting and gave an address in which he congratulated the congregation with the success of their efforts to establish a house of the Lord for their meeting place.

He gave a report of the state of things and might announce that many proofs of sympathy had been received from like minded friends.

The organ, pulpit, Holland and English bibles, carpet, etc., were gifts, and also a great deal of the expense was received from persons who were heartily thanked for their kindness. The building has cost till now a little over a thousand dollars. The labor is not included because the members have done the work themselves. Painting inside and outside must still be done and also a furnace put in before next winter.

After reading of the dedicatory formula and prayer by Rev. Van Arendonk, the Dedicatory sermon was preached by M. H. W. Patterson. Theological student of the Senior class at the Western Theological Seminary of Holland, Mich. His introduction was taken from II. Sam. 7-10. "I will appoint a place for my people and will plant them, that they may dwell in their own place and be moved no more." Then he pointed to the words of Matt. 15:13. "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted out," which brought him to his text, Ps. 2:13, "Who are planted in the house of Jehovah shall flourish in the courts of our God." It was a forceful gospel sermon, which inspired the audience.

At 7:30 in the evening the house was again filled with many friends and members. The local churches were represented by their ministers and many members.

Rev. VanArendonk opened and presided over the meeting. Rev. Dr. Skinner from the Presbyterian church of Lafayette, led the prayer. Mr. Patterson read the scripture, Ps. 84, and after and between singing of some gospel hymns, the Rev. Van Arendonk, Rev. Terry of the Church of Christ, Rev. Nickel of the Methodist church and Rev. Munneke of the Presbyterian church addressed the congregation and brought their congratulations. All expressed their feelings in spiritual words. All said they were glad to see the Holland people becoming a part of Decatur's population, for all nations are bound to honor the heroic history of the people whose cradle stood on a small spot on the map but whose influence very mightily has gone forth in every sphere of society and especially in religious sphere.

They are the very backbone of religious freedom everywhere and are known as industrious and faithful and orthodox the world over.

Certainly those who have been present at those meetings went home with the assurance that also this new church is adopted as a sister church of the local churches and Rev. Nickel expressed it so well, although there is a slight difference in the minor points of conception of the worship of God and a difference in language to express the thoughts, because they are of different folds, "The Great Shepherd says in John 10:16, they shall hear my voice and they shall become one flock, one shepherd.".

CARVED HOME FROM FOREST

Christiana Popendick Was One of Van Buren County's Earliest Pioneers.

INTERESTING LIFE HISTORY

Christiana Buechner was born November 3, 1829, at Salzungen, Saxe deiming, Germany. She died at her home December 21, 1910, at the ripe ge of eighty-one years, one month, ighteen days.

In 1847 she, with her parents, came o America, the voyage across the ocean occupying forty-two days Landing at New York they proceeded directly to Kalamazoo, Mich., where he remained till her marriage to Christopher Popendick who came from Germany about the same time the Buechners came.

Mr. Popendick went from New York to Kingston, Canada, and from there to Detroit. The Michigan Central Railroad was in process of construction then and upon that road young Popendick found employment at Niles. There he became acquainted with the Buechners who were also working on the railroad. Being German like himself a friendship sprang up between them and the Buechners invited him to their home where he met and won Christiana for his wife.

Mr. Popendick was a stone mason and worked on the first abutment of the Michigan Central bridge over the St. Joe river at Niles. When his work there was completed he and Miss Christiana were married at White Oak, Van Buren County, April 5, 1848, and immediately settled in what is now called the Lyle neighborhood due north of Decatur about five miles.

They found on the shore of the little lake on their farm a small shanty someone had built and abandoned. Into this they moved and began the struggle of creating a home for themselves out of the primeval forest. The roads of those days were blazed trails through the forest. St. Joseph was their market then for wheat when they had raised enough to sell some. 5 bags of wheat constituted a good load for the oxcart and it required two days and one night to make the round-trip to St. Joseph.

Five or six years after establishing their home in the wilderness they built a frame house near where the present house now stands, this building is now in use on the farm The present home was erected in 1871. Here both have lived till death called them away. Mr. Popendick departing this life May 18, 1889. Sixteen years ago Mrs. Popendick was stroken wth paralysis and the last four years she was speechless and helpless.

Mr. and Mrs. Popendick were parents of five children, William, John, Matilda, Amanda and Mary. They all remained at home till past twenty-one years of age and helped what they could in developing the farm. Two of them, Matilda and Amanda, preceded their mother in death. William and John are farmers, the former living southeast of Decatur and the later in Colorado. Mary abides on the old homestead

Besides her children Mrs. Popendick leaves one sister and many other relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

Thus closes a long and useful life. Those who knew her best loved her most and speak her praise. From her early childhood she was a Christian and throughout her long life was an honest Bible student. She was a true wife, an affectionate mother, a faithful friend and true lover of nature. After long years of patient suffering mother is at rest.

Funeral services were conducted at the home, Dec., 28, by J. J Terry. Interment in Cuddeback cemetery.

CAPT. BEEBE DEAD

Former Postmaster of Decatur Passed Away in Portland Oregon

Capt. Eri Beebe, once a well known resident of Decatur, died at the home of his son in Portland, Oregon, about a month ago. News of the death has reached Decatur through the National Tribune, official paper of the Civil War veterans which records the deaths of all of the old soldiers reported to it.

Eri Beebe was captain of one of the companies of the Twenty-fifth Michigan Infantry. He returned to Decatur after the war and resided here eight or ten years. In the days following the war this village contained many active and prominent politicians. When Grant was inaugurated in '69 such men as Capt. Beebe, Capt. Ed. Farmer, Lieut. Don Rogers, Chas. Duncombe, S. T. Conway and others went to Washington to attend the ceremonies. Several of them were rewarded later with federal positions Capt. Farmer was appointed internal revenue collector and S. T. Conway, assessor, and Capt. Beebe postmaster. In those days a revenue was collected for nearly every kind of buisness. The owner of a saw mill was assessed ten dollars a year and a blacksmith the same.

Capt. Beebe succeeded Mrs. Phelps as postmaster in 1869, held the office four years and was succeeded by John Rogers. A few years later he went west. He died at the age of 88 years.

BEE KING AT GLENWOOD

Works Sixteen Hours a Day A Thousand Queen Bees Have Already Been Shipped Out

The Dowagiac Herald gives the following account of the buisness being carried on by Glenwood veteran in Bee culture:

"Elmer Mott, Glenwood's bee king and Cass county's for that matter-is working sixteen hours a day just now, attending to his apiary of 20 colonies of bees, propogating queen bees, and boxing and shipping them.

"His orders for queen bees have already exceeded the whole of last year's business and the season is not near over.

"These queens are shipped as per order. Some orders are just the queen, which is placed alone in a little wire cage, three or four inches long and an inch or two in diameter, with a little honey fastened in it, fixed so she cannot get in contact with it expect for eating.

"Some order a queen and a few bees, and some want still more bees. Hence his prices run from a dollar to two or three. He also sends out small colonies and he is constantly engaged dividing his larger colonies into these nuclei.

"It has kept him busy raising queens fast enough, and he has bought 250 to supply the demand he could not fill.

"He says his bees are not storing a surplus of honey this year, owing to the dry weather, but they are making enough for winter, and may store more out of the fall flowers.

"He has a business in which competition is limited, as very few men care for the society of a honey bee which is noted for a habit of resenting familiarity.

BALL CLUB ORGANIZED

Plans are Begun for Some Good Games this Season

It looks as though Decatur would come to the front as a baseball town this season. There are good players here and they are enthusiastic to play.

Monday evening at a meeting held in the D. A. C. hall an organization was perfected by the election of the following officers:

C. W. McGibeny, Pres.
F. C. Stapletonn, Manager.
Theo. Borst., Secy.,
Dr. R. J. Hoyck, treas.

Arba N. Moulton, Dr. W. P. Bope, M. S. Carney, C. E. Crifield, A. E Lawrence, P. M. Young, L. A. Lyle, C W. Newell, L. S. Jones, W. A. Wood and C. W. Warner, directors.

About $100 is needed to put the grounds in repair and purchase uniforms and an effort will be made to raise this amount by popular subscription.

MANY FRIENDS ATTEND MASS

Father John Hackett First Dowagiac Young Man to Become a Priest

At ten o'clock on the morning of the Fourth of July at Holy Maternity church in Dowagiac Father Hackett sang his first solemn high mass. His first mass was read the Sunday before in Detroit when he was ordained.

He was assisted at Dowagiac by Father O'Leary, Father Welch, Father Wall and Father Joos. Father Joos of Monroe in his remarks congratulated the congregation upon having the opportunity of seeing the first Dowagiac young man become a priest and the honor of having him there to sing his first solemn mass His parents were also congratulated as well as the pastor through whom Father Hackett received his first inspiration Immediately following the Gloria during the services the young men of the parish marched to the front of the church, where in behalf of the congregation Arthur Richey presented Father Hackett with a solid gold chalice in appreciation of the occasion. At one o'clock Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Hackett, served a four course Priest Breakfast at their home, about sixty relatives and friends being present. Among the guests were Mrs. Hannah Conway, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Conway, Norbert Neville and W. A. Huntington of Hamilton.

Father Hackett is a grandson of Mrs. Hannah Conway of Hamilton and one of an exceptionally bright family of five children. Thomas is a graduate from the medical department of the University of Michigan this year, Mabel is a graduate of the Normal College at Ypsilanti, Verna is completing her fourth year in the convent of Monroe, and Dan, the youngest, is one of the brightest pupils in the Dowagiac high school.

KEELER POST OFFICE ABANDONED

One of the Oldest Offices in County.

An order has been received by Postmaster Bert Duncombe of Keeler to turn over the supplies of that office to Postmaster Olds of Hartford and discontinue the office at Keeler.

The little village of Keeler has had an office for three-quarters of a century. It was first established at what is now the Chas Rosevelt farm and Judge Keeler was the first postmaster Judge Keeler also kept a hotel in the large frame building just west of the present brick residence.

The fact that most of the residents of the little village now take advantage of the R. F. D. has caused the business of the postoffice to fall to such an etxent that the government does not deem it profitable to maintain an office there longer.

THRESHING IN PIONEER DAYS

Reminiscences of How It Was Done Sixty to Seventy-five Years Ago on the Prairie

One of Little Prairie Ronde's oldest settlers wandered into the yard of John Graham's blacksmith shop the other day and saw the mammoth new Advance Separator that Fred Graham has started into the wheat fields of this vicinity this week This separator is a self feeder, self stacker, self measurer and self weigher and will thresh 15,000 bushels a day if that much could be brought to it.

This great piece of modern machinery set the pioneer to thinking of the manner of threshing in his boyhood days and the reporter for the Republican heard from him the following interesting reminiscences:

Probably the first threshing machine in Volinia was an open cylinder made out of a log with large spikes fashioned by a Volinia blacksmith driven into it. It was set up in Hubbel Warner's barn on the south side of Copley's grove. The wheat, straw and chaff all fell through into the basement of the barn where it was later separated with forks, the straw stacked out of doors and the wheat run through a sort of fanning mill to separate it from the chaff. This was along in the early forties.

The next style of thresher to the best memory of our informant was known as a runaround machine. It was driven by four horses around the field while a man pitched to it from one to two bundles from each shock. The threshing power of the machine was guaged by the speed of the horses. One man cut the bands and did the feeding and it kept him running The capacity of this machine was about 100 bushels a day. The wheat was dropped into a box under the machine which held eight bushels. As fast as the box became full the driver would drive over a canvas spread on the ground, pull out a slide in the bottom of the box and lett the wheat onto the canvas. This machine saved the work of stacking. Probably the first one of these machines was run on what is now the Benj Hathaway farm in the latter part of the forties.

The next threshing machine was drawn on a wagon from farm to farm, it was unloaded in the barn or field and run by horse power, eight horses hitched to four sweeps Its capacity was from 200 to 250 bushels a day. The first one of these machines on the Prairie was owned by the Morton brothers near Twin Lakes in 1852.

From this time on improvements were seen every few years in the machines that came onto the prairie.

The first steam thresher was brought onto the prairie in 1863 by Daniel and Nelson Gant and the boys had a Three Rivers separator. From the earliest days of its settlement Volinia has been a big wheat country and much of the wealth accumulated by the first settlers came from raising of this important cereal. Forty bushels to the acre in the early days was not an unusual yield, and oftimes the best farmers would boast of a yield of fifty bushels.

READY FOR THRESHING

Fred Graham Buys New Separator. Wheat Crop Light

Fred Graham received last week a new Advance threshing machine separator. It is a regular western separator with 44 inch cylinder, self feeder, stacker and weigher. It weighs about four tons and is the largest separator in this section. It cost $1,000.

Fred also has a twenty-five horse power engine which he bought last year. This puts him in shape to take care of all the threshing he can get.

The threshing season begins a week early this year, some wheat being cut the first of last week.

The crop as a whole is short, the Hessian fly has done more damage than it has before in years.

DECATUR'S OLDEST MERCHANT

Death Comes to John Shaad after Business Career of 46 Years in This Village

1831-1911

John Shaad was a native of Switzerland, born in Ober Hallau, Canton of Shaffhausen, February 21st, 1831, where he received his early education and learned the trade of shoemaker, serving the customary apprenticeship of five years

In 1850 he entered the Italian Army and was stationed at Naples. At the expiration of four years he returned to his boyhood home and in 1855 he came to America. He worked at his trade in Cincinnati, Ohio, and after living in New Albany, Ind, Memphis, Tenn., Three Rivers, Mich., and Independence, Ia , he located in Decatur July 1st, 1865, where he established a shoe business which still bears his name.

In 1902 he had a paralytic stroke from which he so far recovered as to be able to be at his place of business until August of last year, since which time he has been confined to his home suffering from heart trouble.

Tuesday afternoon, April 18th, 1911, he laid down the burden of life at the age of eighty years, one month and twenty-seven days. He is survived by two daughters, Anna and Mary, and one son John T., his wife having died in 1906.

Funeral services were held at the home at two o'clock Sunday afternoon. Rev. A. Bradefield officiated. Burial was in the family lot in Lakeside cemetery.

His daughter, Mrs. Mary Hanks of Oregon, arrived at four o'clock Sunday morning and was present at the funeral. Other relatives from a distance who were present are Mr and Mrs. C. W. Cox and Mrs. C. C. Bateman of Three Rivers.

OLIVER LYLE

As recorded in last week's Republican Oliver Lyle died the 14th of February, 1911. His age was 63 years, 3 months and 9 days and all of his life was spent in Paw Paw and Decatur townships.

He was a son of the late John Lyle and was born on the Lyle homestead in Paw Paw November 5 1847. November 4th, 1869, he was married to Anne McWilliams and five children were born to them, one dying in infancy. Four children, Mrs. E. J. Rawson, Edwin A. Lyle, Mrs. C. E. Slocum and Arthur G. Lyle, the widow and one brother, Levi Lyle, survive him. His twin sister, Mrs. Olive Carr, died in April, 1893.

For seven years after marriage Mr. Lyle lived on the old homestead and then he bought and moved onto the farm where thirty-five years later he died.

Oliver Lyle was one of Decatur's best citizens as well as one of the county's oldest pioneers. He had a high sense of honor, his word was as good as a bond, he was a good neighbor and friend. He had been in poor health for nearly a year and last October was obliged to give up his active duties. At the holiday time his life was despaired of but he grew better apparently and his family and friends thought when spring came he would be out again. He was as usual the night before he died and at eight o'clock of the morning he died drank a cup of hot milk. He sank away rapidly afterwards and passed away at 10:15.

Funeral services were held at the home Thursday afternoon, Rev. Munneke pastor of the Presbyterian church of which he was a member, officiated, and Mrs. W. P. Pope sang "Abide With Me" and "Hold Thou My Hand." His daughter Mrs Slocum of Denver, Colo., failed to arrive until the early morning train Friday and burial was deferred until Friday afternoon when the remains were laid at rest in Lyle cemetery. The pall bearers were Mr. Lyle's six nephews Melvin, Arley and Jay Lyle, Frank Harry and Alex McWilliams. Many beautiful flowers were sent by sympathizing friends.

EPISODE AT THE LEE SCHOOL HOUSE IN 1859

A Riddle by Abe Norwood

It was a cold windy day in autumn of that year. A small congregation had gathered to hear preaching by a Decatur minister. Among the rest were an elderly lady and a young woman, her daughter. The old lady had a very kindly expression in her face, yet there was a lofty way with her, as of one who felt her superior blood.

The services over, the young lady arose to go, but her mother wanted her to stay to the Sunday School which would immediately follow the meeting. The daughter heeded not the desire of her mother to remain.

She went to the door, her mother following her. A young man with a horse and buggy a short distance off called to the young lady to hurry. She did hurry. So did the old lady. But youth is spryer than age and the young woman bounded into the buggy. The young man was just ready to spring in after her, the old lady seized him by the coat, and so good was her hold and her strength that she tore off one of his buttons. But he got in the buggy and started.

The mother's last effort was to grasp the buggy wheel which was now in motion and sent her reeling.

The poor old lady gave a despairing shriek and gave up the chase. It was sad.

Alas, that such things should happen. Children know more than their parents and without remorse they break the hearts of those whose love has been their shield and who would die to save them from a wretched life which they so often wildly run after.

But in this case it was better. The young couple were married and lived pleasantly together for many years, most of the time in Decatur.

A few years ago she passed away and he remained in his old home, a healthy, hearty, happy old man until last spring, when he went to another Michigan town to live with his daughter and her husband.

LITTLE MAXINE CARNEY SHOT

Bullet From Unseen Source Struck Her in the Head and Plowed Into the Brain

GRANT MABRY IS ARRESTED ON SUSPICION

Maxine Carney, the little six year old daughter of Mrs. Maggie Carney, was shot in the head, presumably by a bullet from a revolver, the evening of the Fourth, and lies at the point of death.

No one saw who fired the shot but the members of the family heard the report of a weapon. The family were enjoying the fireworks and were all on the lawn in front of the house on West St. Mary's street. Mrs. Maggie Carney was sitting in a chair and little Maxine was standing on the right beside her. The shot struck the little girl on the side of the head and the bullet is lodged there yet.

Doctors were quickly summoned and by midnight Sheriff Sowle and assistants arrived in Decatur and arrested Squire C. Mabry on suspicion.

Wednesday morning Sheriff Sowle and Prosecuting Attorney Glenn Warner came to Decatur and spent the day upon the case but uncovered nothing in the line of direct evidence of the shooting. There seems to be plenty of evidence, however, that Mabry has dictated certain anonymous letters to different members of the Carney family for which he will have to answer if the charge of shooting is not substantiated.

The officers are making a thorough investigation and will spare no efforts to learn all of the facts in the case.

The fearful tragedy has brought much sadness to the village and sympathy unbounded goes out to the stricken family. Little Maxine has not regained consciousness since she was shot and the physicians hold out no hope that she can recover. She was a bright little girl of six and the youngest daughter of Mrs. Maggie Carney. Since the death of her father about three years she with the other children of his family have resided with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Carney.

Thursday morning:—Little Maxine is brighter and she seems to have an even chance to recover.

PENN LOOSES TO DECATUR

Red Woolfe Holds Down Penn Sluggers in Game of 6 to 4 the Fourth

The ball team of Penn suffered defeat at Barton Park last Tuesday after a hard fought battle with Decatur. Score 6 to 4.

Owing to the extremely hot day the fore part of the game was a bit ragged, it seemed hard to get the spirit started. But after a half hour of play the boys on both sides woke up and it was a fight to finish ending with Decatur on top.

Red Woolfe pitched in excellent form for the home team, holding the hitting to a scattering few, with several strike-outs to his credit.

A large crowd was present and the ice cream cone and lemonade stands did an immense business

LUCKY AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Bine Stearns Runs Into Ditch

Bine Stern, with his hired man by his side, came down the road in his handsome Maxwell runabout at a 25 mile clip last Sunday. He was coming over the hills from Hartford to Keeler and the wild speed of the gallant Maxwell never slackened. On one particularly long hill that Bine will never forget the little machine attained a speed that fairly raised it from the ground At the foot of this hill driving leisurely along unconscious of danger came a man in a wagon The sensation that shot through his nerves when Bine saw this obstacle in his path was too heartrending to depict in human language. But Bine Stearns was not the man to hoist the white flag or roll onto the ground in a faint. He squacked the honk till the squacker busted but when the time came he pulled out and went round the man in the wagon.

Now comes the most awful moment of all. Just beyond the man in the wagon was a bridge with a fair sized rivulet flowing some ten feet below it. Mr. Stearns made a Herculean effort to regain the road before coming upon the bridge but it was impossible. Two wheels failed to catch the plank, the machine plowed into the side rail of the bridge, and plunged straight downward into the waters below.

By rare good fortune neither Mr. Stearns nor his companion was killed. The hired man thought his leg was broken but Bine told him he had better get out of the water or he would be drowned. Just then a piece of the rail fell off and struck Mr. Stearns on the head. This was the most severe injury recorded, but the automobile is the picture of ruin.

Mr. Stearns went to South Bend Tuesday to see if he could change it for one with a speed limit attachment that will make the breaking of the village ordinance impossible.

Excerpt From "Queen of the Woods"

Entered by Donald Moline and Marvin Peterson under the direction of Catherine Howland, teacher of history and science, as a continuation of the 14th story in the Norman E. Webster local history contest.

When "Wa-bi-gon-i-gis-sis" (Moon of flowers and bloom) came, and mating birds were moving north in song, and wild flowers were blooming, and the trees were putting on their robes of green, I took the hand of my dear, young, loved Loniday, and she became my bride. No wedding cards were passed around, no gifts were made, no bells were rung, no feast was given, no priest declared us one. We only pledged our sincere faith before her mother and the King of Heaven. Our hopes, our joys were one.

Hand in hand, along an ancient trail we took our course until we reached a land of game. Here we paused, and like two mated birds that search and find a place to build "widj was-i-swan-og" (their nests of mud and straw) so we, beside "sa-gai-gan" (an inland lake), where towering woods embrowed its shore and flags, rushes, and "man-o-min" (wild rice) in plenty could be found, built our wigwam home of bark and poles. There, oft at morning dawn and evening tide, we fished from out our birch canoe; and that she might have more success than I, ofttimes I would bait well her hook and let my own go bare, then wonder why she caught more fish than I. And oft returning from the chase, weary and tired of carrying game, I'd follow down the trail upon a narrow neck of land that ran into the lake toward our home.

As I would emerge from out the woods upon the open shore, I never failed to see Lonidaw's erect and slender form on hasty run, to get the boat to bring me home. No "wob-isi" (swan) ever faster swam or more elegantly appeared than she, when bending to the oars, pushing "widg-wig-was-tchi-man" (her birch canoe) across the swelling bosom of the lake. As she would approach me while waiting on the shore, I always hailed her "Hoe" (Hallo), o-gi-maw-kwe-mit-i-gwa-ki" (queen of the woods).

No "as-a-wa-jonia" (gold) could buy the joy of admiration born in my soul, as I would catch the scornful glances of her eyes, almost concealed amid approving smiles. On our return across the lake she would cling to the oars and have me steer. I always felt her image in my heart, and loved to see it in the lake; and oft would ask if her feelings were akin to mine. Her only answer was an approving glance and downcast smile. Thus, happy in each other's love, we floated down life's stream, all unprepared for cataracts and rocks along the shore.

DECATUR PEOPLE'S POCKETS PICKED

Big Crowd at Circus Proves Disasterous to Some

As usual Decatur contributed its share of attendance at the Great Forepaugh and Sells Bros circus at Dowagiac last Thursday, more than four hundred going from this station. Nearly all had a good time but a few came home sadder and wiser.

As the immense crowd was trying to board the three little cars on the accomodation train in the evening it was attacked by pick pockets. Elliott Wooster was relieved of $55 in endorsed checks and some change, Gilbert Mead lost about $30, Jud. Southworth $17 and A. C Bidlack $15. A good many others were touched but the above are all we have heard of in this vicinity.

DECATUR'S POPULATION 1487

Recount Last Week Shows Official Enumerator Missed 201 People. County Shows Gain

So much dissatisfaction was expressed with the official figures given out from the census department recently of the population of the village of Decatur that some of the business men raised a purse and employed Lester Hooper to make a recount, which was completed Tuesday.

Mr. Hooper made a careful count and obtained the name of every resident. The count has been examined by persons well acquainted with the people of the village and it is known to be correct.

By this recount Decatur village has a population of 1487 instead of 1286 as reported by the boy from Lawton whom the Supervisor of the census sent here last spring as official enumerator.

The correct census of Decatur, while not official shows that during the last ten years there has been a gain in population of 131 and also that the imported enumerator missed just 201 people.

This careless work of the enumerator does not only an injury to the village of Decatur but to the county of Van Buren. Had Decatur been counted correctly Van Buren county would have been counted with the counties that showed gains instead of those that showed losses.

The official count gives this county in 1900, 33,274, in 1910, 33,185, a loss of 89. The correct count of Decatur would have given the county in 1910, 33,316, a gain of 42.

The official census of the township of Decatur for 1910 is 820, to this number add 100 Hollanders who have located in the township outside of the village this spring, and 1487, the correct census of the village and the result is 2407 which is the correct population of the township of Decatur today.

The names of every resident of the village as shown in the recount is inscribed in a book on file in the Republican office and can be examined by any one desiring proof of the accuracy of the count.

THE GIBSON FAMILY REUNION

Great Success in Every Way.

Home Players Show Talent on Stage

The Gibson Family Reunion is over. The distinguished visitors from over the sea and the rustic relatives of the family have all departed to their [illegible] and Decatur settles down to peace and quiet once more. For more than a week eighty of Decatur's talented people, large and small, have been in training for the great event and Friday and Saturday nights of last week presented it at the Town Hall.

The play was a success both financialy and in the rendering. The hall was filed both nights. The success was due in a large measure to the efforts of Miss Clara Andrews, the trainer sent here by the Bock entertainment Company, to conduct the show and the committee representing the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Presbyterian church in whose interests the entertainment was given. Miss Andrews' work under reverse conditions showed a skill well worth the mention. Several times during the ten days allowed for training she was compelled to completely change her plans, but she was always ready with another and the result was seen last Friday and Saturday.

Mrs. Gibson, or as Decatur knows her better, Mrs. R. W. Evans, presented the type of woman that men like to see but hate to have around. Her brain was of great capacity, her assertive manner was felt everywhere and her ready right arm made Job Gibson tremble. Mrs. Evans carried the part with much credit.

Job, the henpecked husband, who obeyed his wife, but away from her surveillance was ever ready for a song and dance, was our Racket Man, P. E. Pritchard. He might not be accused of actor's talents, but he cleverly kept the audience in an uproar and played with skill.

Phyllis, the gay daughter, and Caroline, Phyllis' sedate sister were represented by Misses Daisy Brodbed and Frances Squier. Their opposing natures, as were those of their parents, caused many complications in the plot. Ted Loraine, a jolly cousin, was Ross Hudson. He played well a difficult part and that "quare spakin chaco oied monster", Duke of Waterbury, was Ivan Geroux. Mrs. F. O. Goer appeared as Catherine Reynolds, a friend of the family.

AGED RESIDENT OF DECATUR DIES — 1911

MRS. E.P. HILL PASSED AWAY MONDAY EVENING AT THE AGE OF NINETY-ONE YEARS AND SIX MONTHS

In the death of Mrs. E.P. Hill on Monday evening Decatur has lost one of its oldest and most prominent residents. She has lived here continuously since 1858 and attained the extraordinary age of ninety-one years and six months.

Harriet Esther Hatch was born at Springfield, Mass., on March 19, 1820. Her grandfather was a soldier of the Revolutionary war, whose ancestors came over with Gov. Winthrop from England in 1680. Her early life was spent in New England.

On Oct. 18, 1843, she was married to Ezra P. Hill of Waterville, New York, and for sixty-two years they walked together in faithful love until his death in 1905.

They came west in 1856 to Davenport, Iowa, and in December, 1858 settled in the then new town of Decatur, which for more than half a century has been her home.

Mrs. Hill was a woman of strong intelligence, high Christian ideals, forceful character and great energy, and was diligently devoted to the duties of a long and useful life in the community. She lived not only for her own family but did much also for the common good.

In the Presbyterian Church, Mr. and Mrs. Hill were active and influential all their days, and her loyalty and devotion to her Lord were constant and unwavering to the end.

In 1893, Mr. and Mrs. Hill celebrated their Golden Wedding and in 1903 the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage.

She retained all her faculties of mind with sight and hearing to the last. Although afflicted for several years with an ailment which hindered her from taking proper nourishment, she was spared from great suffering and was confined to bed for only three weeks.

She returned from her winter residence with her daughter at Van Wert, Ohio, where she had many friends also. She gradually grew weaker through the summer. Surrounded by her children and loved ones, she passed peacefully to her rest at sunset on Monday evening, with many expressions of her gratitude to her Heavenly Father for all His abundant goodness through all her years.

She confidently and trustfully repeated her blessed assurance of the life to come and all the previous promises of God's word.

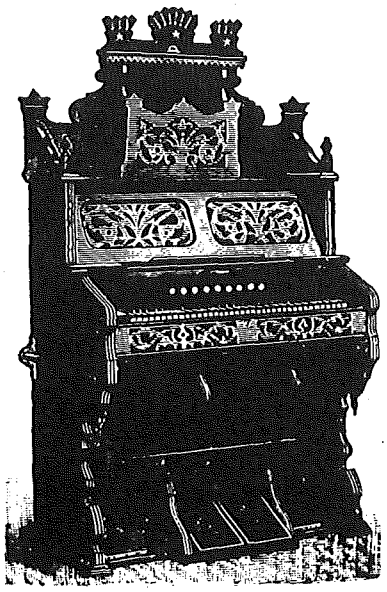
The funeral service was held at the home on Wednesday, P.M., Sept. 13, where friends and neighbors gathered with their tributes of affection for one so long a familiar presence to be seen on earth no more.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams sang, "It is not Death to Die" and "I shall see Him Face to Face." Rev. F.A. Mueneke, her pastor, read the Scriptures and offered prayer. Dr. J.A. Gordon, her son-in-law, read the obituary and added a few words at her special request. The interment was at Lakeside by the side of her departed husband.

Mrs. Hill is survived by her son, L. Dana Hill of Decatur, a daughter, Mrs. J.A. Gordon of Van Wert, Ohio, a grandson and great grandson, Delos L. Hill, and Delos L. Hill, Jr. of Atlanta, Georgia, a granddaughter, Mrs. O.E. Hunt of Detroit, a niece, Miss Thurga D. Hunt of Libertyville, Illinois, and other relatives.

Appropriate to her death seem the lines of Fannie Crosby, the blind hymn writer, who at ninety-one still writes and sings:

"Some day when fades the golden sun,
Beneath the rosy tinted west,
My blessed Lord shall say 'Well done'
And I shall meet him face to face,
And tell the story 'Saved by Grace'"



LYSCOM BRIGHAM DIES SUDDENLY

Born In Massachusetts In 1827 Came To Michigan In 1834

Lyscom Brigham was born in Shutesbury, Franklin County, Massachusetts January 31, 1827, being the fifth child of Curtis and Lydia Brigham. His father was a cobbler and a licensed preacher of the Baptist church.

In 1834 the family made the overland trip to Michigan coming with a covered three-horse wagon. The route went through Canada and was beset with many dangers. While enroute, Lyscom, then seven years old, was stolen by kidnappers who started southward pursued by the brothers on the horses taken from the wagon. When overtaken, the kidnappers were endeavoring to dispose of one horse, which had become lame and were forced to give up the boy.

On arrival in Michigan the family settled in Gunn Plains (now Plainwell), Allgan County. In that vicinity Mr. Brigham's boyhood days were spent. He followed his district school education with a course of study in Olivet College and then settled down to industrious farming. He was married January 29, 1852, to Mary E. Norton of Cooper, Kalamazoo County, and to them were born three sons and a daughter, Curtis L., Lydia M., Dexter E. and Charley W. The wife and mother died November 6, 1869, and was buried at Plainwell.

He was again married January 26, 1870, to Calista E. Cressy of Prairieville, Barry County, and to them were born five sons, Arthur E., John F., Frank M., Alfred C., and Leslie A.

He was always a very active man and in addition to his general farming in Barry County and later developing several different tracts of swampland, he readily turned his mind to inventions and received six U.S. patents and yet he found time to serve several terms as supervisor of Orangeville Township.

At the age of sixteen years he became a Christian and at different times held memebership in the Baptist churches of Otsego, Plainwell and Orangeville and later in the Presbyterian Church of Decatur.

In the past two years he had suffered several illnesses but very recently his health had so improved that he rejoiced in the marked improvement. Although death came very suddenly he was found to be well prepared for the better life beyond.

He is survived by the wife and all of his children.

Funeral services were held at the home Tuesday afternoon, Reverend F.A. Menneke offiiciating. Burial was in Lakeside Cemetery.

LOCAL TALENT

Irish Molly Kelly was one of these fun making persons, with her "shillelah and swaggin" poor Molly [illegible] Her dear Billy O'Leo [illegible] she was nearly crazy with [illegible] answering of the telephone and [illegible] both. Mrs. P. C. Stapleton was [illegible] Irish Molly and she was always a source of fun for the crowd. Billy O'Leo the stammering shore boy and Molly's [illegible] Foulke's song specialties made the part an attractive one. Dutch Hans, Leon Knight, with his wooden shoes and box of Japanese Lanterns appeared in time to help Molly with her trouble and left only when she had carried him down for Billy.

The curtain rose in the first act on the Teddy Bear chorus. Little Lucy Hinkley singing the Bear song accompanied by a chorus of twenty little tots. The Cow Boy Song by Miss Marietta McDole came between the first and second acts and the chorus was enacted with enthusiasm by a group of little Cowboys and Cowgirls equipped with revolvers and whips.

Mae Young entertained the Grangers with a Song, "I'm looking for a Girl Like You," and encore. Mae attracts attention wherever he appears.

Mrs. Adams opened the second act with "I'm In Love with One of the Stars" accompanied by chorus. Then the country folks, or as Mrs. Gibson said, "Job's poor relation," began to arrive and a genuine good time was had until the arrival of Colonel Gibson, Frank Brigham, and his son William. William was dressed in the costume of a Zoave and proved to be Carl Hamilton. He was invited to "do some of his stunts" and he gave an exhibition of the Zouave drill which he had learned as a member of the Kalamazoo company. It made people open their eyes to see one of our town boys handle a heavy rifle in the manner he did.

The Drummer Song was sung by Chester Graham, six girls forming a chorus. This was followed by the Fluffy Ruffle chorus, consisting of Miss Cleo Flagg, soloist, and twelve young people.

A real live baseball game held the attention of the Gibson Family for a time. The game was introduced by Warren Mosier in a song and a drill by the team. Then they got busy and it was surely a spicy game. "The College Boy" was sung by Ernest Foulke with a lively crowd of twelve young people for a chorus. College togs and penants produced a very neat effect.

The last Chorus was "If all Moons Were Honeymoons" sung by Mrs. Bopa while seated in a large [illegible] suspended at the back of the stage while a chorus of twelve [illegible] the stage. The finale, "Good Night Dear," brought on the entire company making a chorus of nearly forty.

Decatur has presented many home talent plays but for results never can surpass the Gibson Family Reunion. In the contest on selling tickets to the Reunion Mary Mosier [illegible], and was awarded [illegible] Trio sold 32 and received second prize.

The prizes were nice boxes of confectionery.

SCHPOK BUYS BIG MUCK FARM

SPELLMAN FARM TRANSFERRED TO DECATUR MAN BY MICHIGAN TRUST CO. THIS WEEK

The big 800-acre muck farm owned by the Michigan Trust Company of Grand Rapids, commonly known as the Spellman farm, has been sold to Sol Schpok of this village. The transfer of title has been completed, but Mr. Schpok will not take possession of the place until the first of March.

This is one of the largest and best farms in the swamp area. It has complete equipment of farm buildings, including several dwellings and a large boarding house. Under the direction of the former manager, T.F. Spellman, now of Chicago, the place was cleared and laid out for extensive tilling. A.E. Stiles, Manager for the Trust Co., made still further improvements.

During the past year, since disposing of his elevator operation, Mr. Schpok has devoted much of his time to the management of the two or three small muck tracts he had acquired. This coming season he expects to devote his time almost exclusively to the development and improvement of the big farm.

At the present time he is negotiating with the Michigan Central R.R. for a side track to the place, which adjoins the R.R. property, about midway between Decatur and Glenwood.

Decatur's First Newspapers

Along in 1859 or 1860 Rufus Nash published the first Decatur paper. He had it printed in Paw Paw and brought over here and circulated it. The paper did not pay and Rufus abandoned it after 2 or 3 issues. Probably Mr. Van Flossen, who published the Paw Paw Free Press at that time printed it for him. We are unable to learn even the name of the publication.

O.P. Sweet started the Decatur Tribune about the year 1860 and ran it till the summer of 1864 when it died a natural death.

Then Decatur was without a paper till the summer of 1865 when Moses Hull came here from Kalamazoo and started the Decatur Clarion. After publishing the Clarion for about six months, he sold out to G.W. Briggs who ran it about six months longer and gave up the job. Decatur was then without a newspaper for about a year.

In June 1867, E.A. Blackman came here from Paw Paw where his father, S.H. Blackman was a prominent attorney, and established the Decatur Republican, which will celebrate its 45th birthday the coming summer, 1912.

HOWARD HALL

Mr. Howard Hall, whose home is in Hamilton Township, is rapidly attaining an enviable reputation on the stage. He is a member of Robert Mantell's Company and during the absence of the star, on account of the sickness of his wife, a short time ago, Mr. Hall was called upon to play the leading role at Boston and Montreal.

The newspaper criticisms in those cities were very complimentary to him, a Montreal paper going so far as to say that the play would not be improved by Mantell's presence. Mr. Hall's many friends in this vicinity extend congratulations.

HOWARD HALL IN NEW YORK

Mr. Hall is playing the part of the Doctor in the well known and popular play "The Poor Little Rich Girl," by Eleanor Gates. The company rehearsed for this play eight weeks and it opened in New York the latter part of January. It is meeting with such great success that it will remain in New York 'til spring and possibly 'til June.

The play is in the Hudson theatre, the theatre that was owned by Henry B. Harris who lost his life when the Titanic went down. The author, Eleanor Gates, was born in a sod house in South Dakota and never saw a piano or went to school 'til she was twenty years old. Her ambition took her through college and she has since developed into one of the leading writers of the day.

Decatur to be on Route From Detroit to St. Joe

The Republican is in receipt of information from St. Joseph that a plan is under way to build an auto highway across the state of Michigan from Detroit to St. Joe via Manchester, Homer, Vicksburg, Schoolcraft, Decatur and Keeler.

This route has an advantage over any other on account of its being straighter and more level. The road would be of great value to Decatur, not only on account of its advantage to automobilists, but for the general highway improvement.

Life of an Honored Citizen Who Lived Three-Quarters of a Century in Hamilton Township

Henry Hobart Millard was born in Lyme, Conn., May 23, 1829, and died at his home in Hamilton township January 13, 1912.

When a little child and while Michigan was yet a territory he became one of its residents, his parents settling on the farm now owned by William King, Ed. Youells and Al Harlan.

The family was nineteen days on the road from New London, Conn. To Adrian was as far as they could come by railroad. The rails then were strap iron fastened to a two by four and the coaches held but nine people.

When Mr. Millard first came here there was no livery nearer than Paw Paw and the territorial road was the only thoroughfare, the only settler was Mr. Lake who was clearing land on the McClintock place.

His father, Calvin Millard, had built a log house on the land now owned by Mr. King. He also owned the south part of the old place. Uncle Philip Dixson owned the part where the old house stands. The old house was built in 1839.

Calvin Millard died May 25, 1838. His was the first white man's funeral held in this part of Michigan. Elder Wooster officiated and his text was, "Man dieth and wasteth away and where is he?"

In 1840 Ralph Mason built the old house which still stands on the homestead. In the early forties Hobart's mother married Austin Barney and he took the family to live on the farm later known as the Morehouse farm in Hamilton where Hobart did his first farming, following a yoke of oxen and breaking up the new turf. At the age of 17 he went back to the old place and commenced for himself. The sisters married, the mother and uncle died, and Hobart, the bachelor, was left alone; so in 1875 he was united in marriage to Mellisa Fulghum. Four children were born to them and all are living but Ralph who died October 21, 1899. Calvin and Hazel are at home, Amy is married and lives on the McClintock farm.

Mr. Millard helped to build the road from his home to the creek near Levi Lyle's and south to Mr. Gennng's. He and his uncle found the dryest ridges over which to build the road to what was then known as Decatur station. They used from 10 to 12 yoke of oxen to break up the land and about 5 yoke of oxen to cross plow. Mr. Millard says he has been to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and climbed the mountains but never saw such wild country as this was in the pioneer days.

It was seldom a man owned a team of horses so they would hitch up a team of grit and spunk and start to Flowerfield [illegible] and there came near to being a panic. There was no flour [illegible] neighborhood and [illegible] in the entire settlement. It is said that the bread from it was the sweetest he ever ate.

Hobart's mother taught the first school in the neighborhood in her own house. The first school house built is now the front part of George Kidman's house.

John Conley is the only citizen of Hamilton township who was here when the Millard family came.

The above interesting facts of pioneer history were told by Mr. Millard to his wife but a few weeks before his death.

Hobart lived at the home of his step father, Aaron Barney, six years. This farm is now known as the Morehouse farm or Broadview, and is the home of James Osborn. He left here at the age of seventeen to make a home for his mother and three younger sisters.

A man who has not passed through it little realizes the hardships and trials and privations of life in the wild, wild woods.

As Hobart Millard was one of Hamilton township's oldest citizens he was also one of its best. He stood always for the right and to enumerate his many virtues would be impossible. He was a true friend to his friends and their number was legion.

STORIES OF DECATUR CHURCHES

BY: W.H. Tuttle

Reading over Danny's recollections of the Presbyterian church, recently burned, put me in mind that I had some small interest in the building of this edifice, and that I possess yet a few relics that were deposited, not in the corner stone, but in what might be called peak box.

At the time the church was built, I was working as a clerk, in the hardware store of S.M. Thomas, my most particular friend, Marshall Cary, was the tinner for the same establishment, and he was called upon to make a tall tin steeple that was put above the belfry when the church was first erected.

This steeple was, I should think, about fifteen feet long, made of very heavy tin, with a large iron rod running up through the whole length of it. When it was finished and just before he closed the last joint, he made a small tin box, and we filled this box with a number of things — our names written on paper, the date, some coins and a few other things out of our private collection. Then Marsh. soldered the box and fastened it to the very peak of the steeple, and it remained there up in the air some twenty-five years.

In the course of time the heavy winds from the west bent the rod within the steeple so that it leaned to the East and some twenty odd years ago it was taken down, and the wooden belfry put in its place.

When the bent over tin steeple was to be removed I asked John Hughes to get this box for me and he did so, and I have the contents of it yet. It seemed almost like a breath from the grave as I read over those old papers and looked over the other things. Marshall had been dead more than twenty years, and I was the only one left who had helped to play that boyish prank.

The writing on the papers was partly illegible, but the names and dates were readable; the coins were discolored some, and the other things partly destroyed; water having evidently seeped into the box and wet them. After being up there in the air far above the church and the world for something like twenty-five years, they have for another twenty-five years been resting quietly in my mess of curiosities and relics. When I am gone no one else will care a snap about any of them, unless there happens to be something that can be turned into money, the whole lot of such stuff will be thrown out or burned up, and that will be the end of it.

The few things that we hold as sacred, will appear to the next generation to be only trash, and will be disposed of accordingly. I suppose it is best that it is so, for if it wasn't the whole world would be finally cluttered up with stuff; for myself I can never bear to destroy inanimate objects with which I have associated for a long time. It always seems to me that they can feel the same as we do. That of course, is childish, but I can never get over the feeling, and the consequence was that our house, after living in it for nearly thirty-five years, was just loaded down with worthless junk. I had to get rid of most of it, but it was a hard job for me. The few things I was able to keep, will very soon be disposed of on the dump heap as soon as I take up my permanent residence in Lakeside Cemetery.

THE OLD BELL

It is to be hoped that the old bell belonging to the burned church is not ruined. How well I remember the time when the bell was first hung in the original building. It must have been about the year of 1857 or '58. I know that I was going to school here in the old red school house and living with Miss Lizzie Thomas in her millinery shop, in the building now used as the milk factory.

The bell was bought by conscription and every one who contributed to its purchase was to have the privilege of ringing it so many minutes in proportion to the amount given by them; and when they got the bell hung in the old church they went at it with hammer and tongs, and kept it going almost constantly for several days.

I remember that two other boys, Jehiel Rogers and Jene Woodmancy, and myself went over to the church and asked some man to let us ring it awhile on their time, and they were pleased enough to do it. The three of us would get hold of the rope together and in that way we could swing the bell and we kept at it until we gave out and had to quit. We thought it was great fun. There are very few left in Decatur who heard that old bell ring for the first time sixty years ago. Mr. Van Sickle afterward was sexton for the church a long time, and after the Methodist church obtained their bell some years later, he always tried to ring his bell just a little bit ahead of the Methodist bell, and some small strife was worked up between the two sextions. They could not begin the ringing until a certain time, but if one could get even a fraction of a second ahead of the other it was a great consolation to him and kept him feeling good for all the rest of the day.

When the new church was built in 1868 the bell was lowered from the old belfry and raised again to the new, where it has remained for forty-nine years, until it went down with a crash and a great scattering of sparks during the fire. It would be a great pity if the fire had spoiled it.

There was a big time when the cornerstone of the new building was laid. I was not present at the church grounds on that occasion, because I had to stay in the store, but I saw the crowd and heard all about it. The cornerstone was laid with much ceremony, and quite a number of articles were deposited within it — papers, coins, etc. But I understand they were mostly spoiled when taken out. They did not keep as well as our peak box.

CATHOLICS BEGIN CHURCH

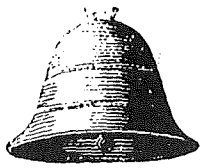
Another cornerstone for a church was laid with great ceremony in Decatur about this time — I think it must have been a few months before — and that was when the Catholics started to build themselves a church.

Up to that time the Catholics had never had any church edifice of their own in our town. Their services had always been held in private houses. I think that it was late in the fall of 1867 that they started to erect their own church.

They laid the wall for the foundation on a lot at the west end of Delaware Street. It must have been near where Frank White's house now stands. I was present at this ceremony. I do not think they had any corner stone, but there were many foreign dignitaries of the church there, and they blessed the beginning of the building. It is so long ago that I am not quite sure as to what was done, but I do know that there was a great deal of ceremony connected with it, and a large crowd was there, both Catholics and others but for some reason that I never understood, the building went no further and never got beyond the wall. It was finally abandoned entirely and after some years the Catholics bought their present building, the old Presbyterian and Universalist Church.

The original Presbyterian Church — now the Catholic — was completed and dedicated Sept. 18, 1856, on a lot that had been bought by the Reverend Marcus Harrison and presented to the society and Mr. Harrison was the first minister.

Decatur is certainly well supplied with churches for a small town; I can think of nine — Methodist, Disciple, Presbyterian, Advent, Saints, Free Methodists, Catholic, Universalist and Dutch Reformed. That must be about one church to every one hundred sixty or one hundred seventy five people — men, women and children. Besides these the Christian Scientists have an organization that holds services in the Universalist building, so really we have ten churches. Amen.



THE SAGA OF PEG LEG ANNIE

Folklore stories have been the favorite of young and old for many years. Today you can read books and stories of folklore, but in my great grandfather's day they were still making some of the legends that we read about today. There aren't too many legendary people here in Southwestern Michigan, at least that's what I thought. The story I am about to tell, I didn't read from a book, although it was made into a book after a while, but my grandfather told it, as his father had told it to him. It seems that about 70 or 75 years ago in the vicinity of Rush Lake, about four and one half miles northwest of the little village of Hartford, was a settlement of Potawattomi and Cherokee Indians. The settlement consisted of about 200 log cabins, but small farms were worked by others.

It was through this village that a stranger passed one day, and after seeing how quiet and secluded it was, decided to stay. This stranger however, was no ordinary stranger. It was a woman. Now this may not seem so unusual to you but this particular woman had a peg leg, and so got the name of "Peg Leg Annie." Now as I said, Annie liked this settlement so she bought a forty acre farm from an old Indian named Ike Seaton, whom they say lived to be around 112 years of age. Annie went right to work setting up a little business for herself. This business consisted of a cider mill, where she did custom grinding for the farmers. Well now it seemed as though some of these farmers became a little suspicious of Annie. They said that she was built a little too masculine for a woman. When she would load a wagon with kegs, each keg weighing fifty pounds, all by herself, well what do you think? This rumor was added to by a farmer who said that he thought he saw her leg tied up, and that the peg leg was attached to her knee, which simply meant that she really didn't need the peg at all. Another odd thing about Peg Leg Annie, was that she had a very light showing of chin whiskers, but the hairs were blond to match her long hair that hung to her waist, but which she wore up and under her cap when she did her work around the farm.

Years came and went and Annie went right on doing the grinding for the farmers, some of whom still had their doubts about her. Most of the farmers liked Annie, because she was friendly and sociable, but she still liked to keep to herself a lot. Well Annie wasn't getting any younger, and finally she got to the point where she had to have some help running her farm. She hired a man and his wife to keep up the farm for her.

As Annie grew older, she somehow suffered an illness which affected her mind, and sometimes made her irrational. It was during this illness that she tried to kill the hired hand's wife with a butcher knife. After this attack they called a young doctor to treat her. Had it not been for this incident there wouldn't have been any point of my telling this story, for it just so happened that this doctor found out the truth about Peg Leg Annie, as she told it to him on her death bed. The story went something like this: It seems that back in New York State there lived a man and his wife and their child. Everything seemed to be going along just fine until one night the man came home and found his wife with another man. He was so infuriated and hurt that he killed his wife and child and threw them down an empty water well. After this, disguised as a woman, he started west looking for a place to hide. He found this place just four and one-half miles northwest of a village called Hartford and settled down on a forty-acre farm under the name given to him by the people of the settlement — "Peg Leg Annie."

WILL CARLETON'S POWER

A striking example of Will Carleton's power occurred upon the first of his several appearances at Music Hall, Boston. "What kind of music would you prefer with which to have your recitations alternated?" asked the manager. "Any you like or none" replied Mr. Carleton. "But the lecturers and readers we have had here could not hold our large and critical Boston Audiences, without music to "spell" them", insisted the manager. "Give me the entire evening, and if I cannot hold the audience, don't pay me", laughed Carleton; and although many in that vast auditorium had to stand during the entire evening, none of them left until the speaker said "Good Night".

At the town hall Friday evening, June 10th. Admission 35 cents, Reserved seats at Carney's.

A PIONEER OF CASS COUNTY PASSES AWAY

John Squier, Who Came to Cass County in 1831, With His Parents and Who Lived in Vollnia Over Sixty Years.

John Squier died at the home of his brother David in Decatur Monday morning, January 9, after a long illness from which there was no hope of recovery at any time. The funeral was held at the Universalist church Wednesday afternoon, and the remains were laid to rest in the Crane cemetery by the side of his wife and five children.

The deceased was the eldest son of Daniel Squier, and was born in Butler county, Ohio, December 8, 1828. With his parents he came to Michigan in 1831, the family locating in La Grange township where the present village of Cassopolis now stands.

During the following winter the father helped lay out the village of Cassopolis, and the next spring he located near the village of Charleston, in Volinia township, which was then a trackless wilderness inhabited by wild beasts and Indians, their nearest neighbors being Indians located about twenty rods away.

At this time Van Buren county was called Lafayette township and was attached to this county for judicial purposes.

In youth John Squier learned the carpenter's trade, and worked on buildings in Cassopolis, LaGrange, Dowagiac, Decatur and the surrounding country.

On the fourth of February, 1853, he was married to Sarah Morlan, who preceded him to the other side August 23, 1903.

After Mr. Squier's marriage he purchased eighty acres of land half a mile south of Charleston where they lived until 1894, when failing health caused him to move to Decatur. Mr. Squire was a Mason in good standing, and a citizen without an enemy, which is better yet, and both Masons and citizens attended his funeral, doing honor to one whom honor was due.

John Squier was a connecting link between the past and present of Cass county. When he came here with his parents the present Wayne township was still a part of LaGrange, and the north half of the present township of Jefferson was also a part of it. Cassopolis had not been born yet, and the nearest place where flour and kindred supplies could be obtained was at the Cary Mission, near the present village of Niles.

The deceased saw the hardships of pioneer life, saw all the lack of the many comforts we now enjoy, and, finally, saw those most dear to him pass away one by one until only the brother with whom he spent his last days remained.

It is a long stretch, that of being in at the birth of a county and seeing it arrive to mature strength and wealth, seeing it grow from day to day for seventy years and taking part in the gradual change.

During his childhood his father assisted in putting down the Sauk war and those were days of trial and suspense to the housewife who was loyally doing her share to build a home for the declining years that came.

It is said of the deceased that his habits were temperate, his morals above reproach, and his word as good as any man's bond.

It was with such men Cass county was peopled in the days when it took self-denial, constant labor and strength to make a home.

REPUBLICAN OFFICE INSTALLS INTERTYPE

TYPE FOR DECATUR PAPER TO BE CAST EACH WEEK BY GREATEST MACHINE KNOWN TO MODERN PRINTING

The Republican has this week installed an INTERTYPE, a typesetting and type making machine, the product of the International Typesetting Machine Company of Brooklyn, New York. This machine is the fastest, neatest and most perfect ever constructed for the setting up of the type of a newspaper as well as all classes of type matter for advertisements and job work.

This wonderful machine casts the type new every week, making a perfect print and it places the Republican in this respect on an equal with the largest metropolitan daily papers of the world.

While the Republican believes that in taking this long step it is equipped somewhat ahead of the town, yet it shows our willingness to give this city the best service that money can produce and shows the unbounded faith we have in the betterment of the town in general.

The machine was shipped from the factory at Brooklyn, New York, and arrived here last Thursday. It was billed at 3,150 pounds and was somewhat of a load to haul, but DRAYMAN BENJAMIN handled it faultlessly and placed it in the work room Thursday afternoon.

Once the publisher of a country newspaper learns the grand progress possible with an Intertype he will waste no time getting one.

WHEN THE FOREST WAS CLEARED FOR DECATUR

BY CHARLES H. PHELPS A DECATUR BOY IN THE FIFTIES & NOW A WELL REMEMBERED PIONEER

I am asked to contribute some little of my recollections of earlier Decatur which I would be glad to do, but I am entirely out of data as to dates with the exception of a vivid recollection of Decatur as a boy.

I can only see Decatur as it was in the early fifties. Beers and Sherwood subdivided a claim of forest land surveyed for a town site, and commenced building a town in the usual way. Roads were made by the earliest settlers who took up their land and cut the great forest trees, grubbed out their holdings and like true pioneers were possessed with the spirit of progress, encouraged by their noble women, and thus commenced the foundation of beautiful Decatur.

To make this lovely place was no easy task. The founders were men of no easy mind but made of stem stuff. They realized there was a great problem before them to be solved and solved it should be.

As they began to stir up the soil and let the sun in — this drew the malaria to the surface. Every family was visited, and it seemed to be a death struggle who would be master, but brave men and noble women conquered and by degrees they became masters of the situation. But the fight left its footmarks and the record can be easily found in every cemetery in the country.

To give up and move to the open prairies of the west would seem the most logical, but they were not made of that kind of stuff. Slowly but gradually the forests were subdued and the farms would take the place of the great logs that were piled up. Magnificent trees of maple, birch, walnut, butternut, oak, cherry and many other kinds of valuable timber were placed on the altar and with fire consumed that we might live.

Crops proved plentiful and of great variety, but the prices for the same were questioned not at all encouraging to the hardy settler. For instance — a farmer had to take his wheat to the market at St. Joseph taking on a fair average, as to distance, a haul of forty to sixty miles. On poor roads slow time only could be made best, and the result, a week consumed in getting to market. He was paid in "wild cat" money, then the principal currency of the country — three shillings a bushel for his crop, surely not overly encouraging.

Our forefathers were of that spirit, that, as they had not sufficient "wild cat" to pay their hotel bills, if there were any hotel bills, they had their frying pans and coffee pots and their hardy constitutions, made by hard labor, would let them rest in comfort during the nights, fitting them for the following day.

Scarcity of any kind of money was a great hardship, but fortunately the woods were full of wild game which stood them well in hand. It provided meat for our openers up of this country.

Deer, bear, wild turkeys, squirrels, quail, partridge, pigeons, apparently no end of them. Our beautiful lake full of the choicest fish, the swamps full of berries, so that, after all we have a good larder at our hand. Then the ingenious part of our people had to meet the necessity of subduing the game, and the "Hawkins" rifle got in its work, and the entire community soon became proficient in its use and it was a great rivalry among our growing younger population as to who was the most skilled.

In those early days every Saturday, in place of foot racing for potatoes and applie pie eating contest, it was customary to have turkey shoots and shooting for the fore quarters of a steer and the one-quarter for the hide and tallow — in fact most things were settled in this manner.

The most expert spearman also had his rivals. Who could spear the most fish in a night, what blacksmith could make the best spears, these things were all of local interest. It was quite a trick to boot up pitch pine knots. I remember another thing. Some men would have quite a local reputation as a hunter. He would have a rival. They would set a day and choose sides, ten or more on a side, and set a day for the hunt in which every class of game had its value in numbers. Then after the hunt the numbers would be taken, and the side who got the greatest number would be declared winner. The losers paid the price of a game dinner and whoever cooked the dinner had the game to draw from.

My recollection takes me back to one of those old-fashioned game dinners. To think of it now makes me want to live back long enough to enjoy venison ribs, hot pies and the squirrels served in different ways, broiled quail and pigeons — and what's the use, I quit enumerating, for if I don't I am afraid I will not enjoy game dinners any more.

Just as they were getting well under way in the mastery of the forest and sickness was about overcome they had to have the war, with the history these same men helped to make. They left their pleasant home at their country's call, and their names are known and their part in history so well recorded that it is of little use for me to retell the noble deeds they did. The world applaudes and always will, their actions and achievements. Many a southern family, I reckon, wishes the sharp-shooter and his old squirrel gun had never been discovered.

What do I see now? Long avenues of maple trees, their top touching; houses well back from the sidewalk, wide lawns, concrete sidewalks, shrubbery and ornamental yard trees, good schools, vast vineyards, delightful orchards, and a number of banks and business houses. Even the kids are driving autos. The homelike conditions are very attractive. It is just large enough to be a delightful home, where you have a neighborly feeling for every one you meet, and you know them, sympathize with them in their troubles and rejoice with them in their good luck.

It is a delightful place to raise children, schools are good and the evil influence does not prevail. The fishing is still here, but all early sports — well, I can only compare them to the first crop of settlers. They have gone, but live with me in memory.

One thing more — about twenty-eight years ago, this town took it into its head to go dry, and it has never regretted the step. It is like the founders — laid away never to be taken up again. This is a sane, beautiful community. The morals are as clean as the town. In every door there is comfort.

HISTORIC HOME IN KEELER

OLD ROSEVELT HOMESTEAD FIRST FRAME HOUSE BUILT ON TERRITORIAL ROAD

By Judge Keeler

The Charles Rosevelt homestead on the old Territorial Road in Keeler is a picturesque and handsome property, and is a historical place besides. It was here that Judge Henry Keeler located in the thirties, the town being named for him. Here he built his home and his was the first frame dwelling built on that famous thoroughfare between Paw Paw and St. Joseph.

The constantly increasing travel over that road made it necessary for the owner of the property to convert his home into a hotel or country inn, and many noted people have stopped there, there being on one of the windows for many years Stephen A. Douglass' name, scratched with the diamond ring he wore and done while that wonderful orator was on one of his speaking tours.

The old hotel, built so long ago, was in the time of John Rosevelt, moved back and used for a storehouse, and a handsome and imposing brick mansion erected in its place among the oaks that graced the lawn. The present owner, Charles Rosevelt, has converted it into a tenant house within the past few years and it is still serviceable.

In the days of Governor John J. Bagley, thirty chestnut trees were planted near the house by Mr. Rosevelt and his son. Governor Bagley believed in planting trees and his speeches were full of this advice. He spoke one year at the Van Buren County Fair and he said so much about the matter that the following spring, which is thought to have been Centennial year, the father and son drove to the Al. Olds nursery, then located near Nesbitt's mill in Hamilton township, and bought the young chestnut trees and planted them near the house. Tobias Byers, Jacob Rosevelt and others in the neighborhood did the same thing.

These trees are stately monarchs, some of their being nearly one hundred feet tall and two feet through, but Mr. Rosevelt says that with the red squirrels, the turkeys and the blue jays, the latter birds pecking holes in the shells and getting at the meat, the kids seldom get more than a bushel or two from them.

John Rosevelt and wife went to the Centennial in 1876, getting away after the wheat sowing, and going on to Mt. Vernon before returning. Mrs. Rosevelt picked up a walnut, and bringing it home planted it the following spring in the dooryard, and today this tree is 18 inches in diameter. It is a patriotic reminder to the present owners of the burial place of Washington, and has been given good care.

There are 400 acres in the Rosevelt estate, all well tilled and showing the hand of a skilled farmer and a liberal one. It has under his care grown more valuable as the years went by, and himself and wife have made it attractive to the son and two daughters who have come to bless them. Since the days of Henry Keeler's coming countless people have passed to and fro around this old home site; scenes of love and passion, romance and hate have come and gone; the forests have been leveled and the community altogether different in its ways have succeeded the first who came. But none have been more prosperous or hospitable than its present owners.

DECATUR CLARION

Independent in All Things. Neutral in Nothing

Vol. I. Decatur, Michigan, Wednesday, July 5, 1865. Number I.

Moses Hull, Publisher.

Terms—Two dollars per year if paid in advance, $2.50 per year if paid at the end of six months.

The Editor's Introductory leads one to believe that Decatur always has been a good town.

"Until within five weeks," he writes, "we had supposed the enterprising village of Decatur sustained a paper. When we heard that it did not we decided that a paper well conducted there would be richly sustained.

We knew that almost everything else was going on here. There is not a village the size of Decatur on the Michigan Central that does the amount of business done here.

After deciding to come here the question arose what kind of a paper shall we publish? We cannot publish a Jeff Davis sheet. We never had any sympathy with the party whose Journals and speakers stimulated such men as Booth to assassination of our honored President. A neutral paper we cannot publish, we must have the privilege of speaking our views on all subjects.

Politically the Clarion will advocate principles and not men. We are Websterian in our definition of the term politics. In the course of human events Decatur shall have a good newspaper.

ITEMS FROM DECATUR'S FIRST NEWSPAPER

To Correspondents: The real name of the author must accompany every communication. We now have a poem which we will publish when "Ethel" sends her real name.

A full report of the Fourth of July celebration will appear next week.

We see a few whortleberries in market but as yet the price is beyond the reach of an editor. They are only worth 15 cents per quart.

RELIEVED—George Gordon while in a state of intoxication at Dan Rice's show in Decatur June 26 had his pockets relieved of $400 in greenbacks and $700 in notes. Rather a dear spree, yet if it reforms him it will prove cheap enough. We are astonished that the good people of Decatur tolerate so many nuisances in the shape of whiskey shops.

Several lots of wool came into Decatur last week from which the owners got from 45 to 50 cents.

ADVERTISERS

Among the advertisers in Decatur's first paper are:

Geo. Colt and Co., general store.
Hawks and Thomas, hardware.
Geo. McKay, blacksmith.
Hinkley and Gerow, drugs, groceries and notions.
T. E. Phelps, postmaster.
Haskins and Seymour, stage, daily to Lawrence.
Rev. J. J. Ward, Presbyterian pastor
Rev. A. L. Crittenden, Methodist pastor.
Rev. J. Straub, Universalist pastor.
Abbott and Manley, drygoods.
L. Maxham, meat market.
B. Maltby, dentist.
S. Kurtz, painter.
Cole and Parkhurst, Attorneys.
Duncombe House, John Smith, prop.
Decatur House, C. T. Tittle, prop.
Chas. N. Poor, hardware.

The Clarion did not last long. The Editor was undoubtedly ahead of the times and did not receive the support necessary to buy food even. He abandoned the paper and left the village.

The Clarion was followed by the Republican which was started in 1867.

Mrs. Haynes also sent to the office a copy of Hull's New Monthly Clarion, a Journal devoted to the Cause of Reforms, Science and Literature, Published in Decatur, Volume 1, No. 1, in October, 1865.

Rev. Moses Hull is named as Editor and the Journal indicates that Mr. Hull was a spiritualist lecturer and minister. We doubt if the Monthly Clarion had a long existence.

We have since discovered in this pile of papers a copy of Decatur's first paper, The Van Buren County Tribune, Chas. P. Sweet, Publisher. The copy is No. 8 of Volume 2, and was printed Thursday, November 13, 1862. This would indicate that the first Decatur paper was printed September 18, 1861. Among this paper's advertisers are:

Hiram Cole, lawyer.
Charles Shier Jr., lawyer.
Orrin T. Welch, Justice of the Peace
T. E. Phelps, postmaster.
C. T. Baker, M. D.
T. H. Ryan, mason.
Ira Nash, drygoods.
W. E. Trowbridge, drugs.
Richard Green, tailor.
Frank Wright, carpenter
George McKay, blacksmith.
T. P. Bashfgord, blacksmith.
H. A. Rogers, groceries.
Thomas O'Leary, dray.

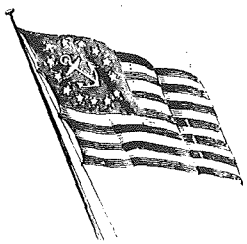
January 23, 1913.

An effort is being made to obtain an agricultural expert for Van Buren county.

J. H. Haynes passed away last Friday, January 17. Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church and Geo. B. Rogers of Kalamazoo officiated at the service and the Knights of Pythias lodge of which Mr. Haynes was a charter member, attended in a body. Mr. Haynes was the express agent of Decatur for many years and one of the county's best citizens.

Aaron Burnett, 94, died in the county home Monday, January 20. He was born in North Carolina in 1818. He was free born and when a young man moved into Indiana. He learned the barber's trade when a boy and followed it till he became too old to work.

John Young, pioneer of Hamilton township, died January 16 at the age of 82 years. He was a native of England. Wherever he was known he was "Uncle John." He located in Hamilton in 1855.



HONOR THE BOYS IN BLUE

JUNE 5, 1913

It was the grandest Decoration Day ever held in Decatur. This opinion was expressed many times on the street by those who were present.

The spirit of American patriotism, of love and reverance for the grand old boys in blue, whose ranks have thinned so fast during the past few years, was evident everywhere.

Sunshine and clouds chased each other all day across the sky. But it did not rain and the temperature was perfect for an out-of-door day.

Flags and buntings decorated every store and here again the superlative is justifiable. Decatur never before was so grandly decorated. The veterans hung the Grand Army flag across the street instead of on the flag pole and many merchants purchased the big flag for their store decorations. The little flags were too numerous to count.

Every train that stopped at this station left crowds of visitors, most of them former residents from whose families one or more members are sleeping in beautiful Lake Side cemetery.

The veterans and Womens' Relief Corps assembled at Post Hall at one o'clock, and soon a long procession of automobiles under the direction of C.E. Criffield called for them. As the autos were filled they drove around the block east on St. Mary's street and lined up on east Sherwood Street to await the coming of the speaker, Honorable N.H. Stewart, of Kalamazoo, on the 2:00 o'clock train. Twenty automobiles were in line and they carried an average of five each.

A long line of boys and girls from the Decatur Public School, selected to decorate the graves of the soldiers in the cemetery, formed an open line from the train to the speaker's auto and the Decatur Band at the head of the waiting procession assisted in the welcome of our honored guest. The long rows of prettily dressed children through which the speaker was escorted, the line of autos stretching back for a block and filled with old soldiers, the Relief Corps and citizens, the band, the Marshall of the day and his assistants, and the great crowd of people offering silent and solemn greeting, was a spectacle that will not soon be forgotten by those who were present.

There was a brief service at Lakeside Cemetery following the decorating of the soldiers' graves and then the day's program was continued at the Town Hall. The male quartet composed of George E. Adams, Harry Pritchard, A.C. and Leslie Brigham, opened the service, Ref. F.W. Nickel offered prayer, Edward Himmelwright delivered Lincoln's Gettysburg address, Mrs. W.H. White gave an excellent reading, and Commander L.G. Rafter introduced Mr. Stewart who gave a strong Memorial address. Mr. Stewart comes from a generation of men now approaching the golden sunset of life. THE GREAT CONFLICT came on as he was entering his second decade, and although he lacks the growth and years to permit him to go to the front, he did not lack the desire or the great enthusiasm that inspired every loyal citizen of the North with the cause of the Union. During the half century which has lapsed he has lost none of that enthusiasm and his address on this occasion was one a broad-minded, liberty-loving American only could deliver.

The service closed with a song by the quartet and the benediction. A band concert in the evening closed a memorable day.

OCTOBER 9, 1848

Sixty-five Years Ago To-day the First Michigan Central Train Stopped at Decatur.

The Michigan Central was built through Decatur in 1848 and the first train making the run from Detroit to Niles stopped at this station sixty-five years ago today.

This reliable information comes from a statement made by J. S. Tuttle to a Niles paper several years ago. When one stops to consider the net work of railroads that covers our great state today, the luxuriant trains and the remarkable service given by the greatest of all roads, our own Michigan Central, it is not easy to realize that within the life times of many of our citizens this road was carved through vast forests unknown save by the trail of the Indian.

Mr. Tutle says:

"In September, 1848, I came from Detroit to Lawton over the Michigan Central, the passenger trains then running only as far west as Lawton.

"From there the four horse stage line took passengers westward.

"Early in October the road was completed to Niles, and on or about October 9, 1848, an excursion train went from Niles to Detroit.

"The Detroit railway officials furnished free tickets to a goodly number of the citizens of Niles.

"This was sixty-five years ago this present week.

"The following year was when the great rush for California occurred by overland. The pioneer Californians have since been called the 'forty-niners.'

"As to the 'strap rails' being laid on the then west end of the road—I think this is a mistake of the writer.

"The State of Michigan commenced railroad building and completed a road from Monroe to Detroit and from Detroit on west, probably to Marshall, using the flat rail spiked to a piece of square timber laid on the ties.

"The state sold their railroad to a New York Company and then continued, extending the road west, reaching Niles in October, 1848, as stated."

See that robin tug and pull
At that worm down in the grass?
You might think he'd go and find
One more handy,—let that pass.

No! that worm he's bound to have—
That one worm; he'll get it, too!
If he has to tug an hour
He'll not make another do.

CHALKER
By Frank L. Kern

"May you live a thousand years,
I, too, less one day;
For I do not wish to stay
When you have passed away."

Quoth the chum of my farm-boy days, as we quaffed our soft drinks the last time we met. I replied, "The survivor must write the other's obituary in the Republican." Maybe Chalker passed on ahead because in truth I can say vastly better things of him than he could have written of me.

But Chalker E. Buell was no man's chum, for he was everybody's good friend and those who knew him best loved him most. With all his rich mentality, wit and wisdom, his heart was bigger than his head and always warm, loving and true.

He was a rare combination of egotism, altruism and estheticism, with an ardent spiritual nature, spontaneous and inspirational. A nervous, billious temperament capable of rising to the heights of supreme ecstasy, of reading down into the dark depths of deepest gloom and despondency. We were associated in business several years and while he possessed a wonderful hypnotic power that dominates men to his will and wishes and always makes good in a deal, I observed that he invariably stood for a square deal and would not knowingly wrong anyone. And so his home paper could truthfully say, "A great man and good man has passed on, one in whom the people trusted."

Applying one of Chalker's famous quotations to himself: "He lived indeed, not years; in thoughts, not in figures on the dial. He counted time by heart throbs, for he lives most who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best. Life is but a means to an end, that end the beginning, mean and end of all things God."

Chalker knew himself, trusted and expressed himself to a full realization, and one who could do that, does not live in the ordinary manner, but lives as God intended he should.

I would gladly write column after column to give full expression of my love and yours in the just praise of this thrifty, generous, Passionate and forceful man, who for over forty-five years has been my confidential friend and chum, one of the dearest and truest; but after all, the finest and best emotions of the sould can be expressed in feelings only and not in words.

And thus we see that the "second generation" is getting ripe for the grim old reaper who will mow us down one by one, as he did our forbears.

This is right that each should be prepared to answer to the call in his own allotted time, going in the sublime faith of Chalker's recently published beautiful poem "WE SHALL KNOW EACH OTHER THERE."

The joys of the next prairie reunion, will also have their sorrows for with our bright and beautiful water lilies, we must mingle the somber immortelles.

Yours in loving remembrance of our mutual friend,

F.L.K.

Decatur Man, Now 86, Pioneered In Onion And Celery Production

DECATUR, Dec. 31—Henry Houseman, Sr., pioneer muck crop farmer who contributed to the growth of the celery and onion production around Decatur, celebrated his 86th birthday on Dec. 16.

Born in the Netherlands in 1865, he recalls early days when land hereabout was covered with woods and water, with heavy rains causing so much trouble that ditches had to be dug to take care of the excess water.

He brought his wife to Kalamazoo in 1887 from the Netherlands, with their four daughters and spent four years raising celery in that section. On moving to Decatur he rented a small farm from William Clark for seven years, then bought 23 acres of land on what was at that time the Lyman Rawson farm. Another daughter and four sons were born, all nine living today.

When Mrs. Houseman died in 1925, Houseman moved into Decatur, purchasing a home on Prairie Ronde street, but still helps his son Harry, who lives on the old homestead.

For 33 years Houseman raised and shipped celery to the W. B. Daniel Co. in Keokuk, Ia. At first he sent 33 dozen a week, then in later years, 100 dozen per day.

This year, his son has raised 1,900 bushels of onions on one acre; he has six acres in celery, five in spearmint an the rest in corn and potatoes.

Henry Houseman, Sr., is regarding Decatur's contribution to its fame in celery production, secures his own long years well spent.

Far seeing men of Decatur recognized the possibilities of development that lay within this swamp, which is now cleared and drained and about six thousand acres of it is under cultivation. It has made Decatur one of the greatest shipping stations for celery and peppermint oil in the world.

Hollanders, the best of muckland workers, have begun to settle here, about two hundred coming within the last year.

Decatur is near the center of the Michigan fruit belt and shipped about one hundred fifty carloads of grapes last year.

Decatur has several small factories, a flower mill, strong banks, enterprising merchants and a weekly paper. It is located in a local option county and is free from saloons.

Decatur has a fine public school system, municipal light and water plant, good roads and cement walks. Numerous small lakes are within easy driving distance and the surrounding country is very attractive.

COMPANIA, THE WORLD'S GREATEST MINT FARM

PURCHASED BY MR. TODD IN 1892

In his youth long years before he thought of going to Congress, The Honorable A.M. Todd conceived the idea of owning and operating a mint farm. He tried out his plan first in Nottingham and it continued to look good to him. Then he acquired possession of one hundred twenty acres of the rich Decatur muck, and could he have purchased sufficient land to satisfy his desires, Decatur would have been the home of a Todd industry. A large acreage was not obtainable here at prices within the range of the mint man's limit and so he disposed of the land he did own and looked elsewhere.

Compania Farm was purchased by Mr. Todd in 1892 at an average cost of not to exceed ten dollars per acre, but it cost him much more per acre to clear it and make it ready for the rich crops it now yields. The land is a good quality of muck which responds well to scientific farming and seldom fails to yield a satisfactory profit to the owner.

For thirteen years D.W. Brodhead of Decatur was the manager of Mr. Todd's mint farm. He cleared and erected the original building on both places, and after his accustomed manner of doing things thoroughly and well, he claimed these vast fields of the forest and made them ready for the planter.

Compania and Mentha are twenty-five miles apart and Mr. Brodhead made his headquarters during those thirteen years at both places. But he was the most of the time at Compania. There are many old timers who worked under him still tending the mint at each farm and a touch of pathos was evident in their friendly meetings. It was plain to see that the old-time manager was popular with his men and that the pioneer days of Compania are treasured in the memories of the pioneers.

The original tract of Compania consisted of 1,700 acres, its present size is 1,400 acres. It is practically all improved, the buildings are first class and a sufficient number of men and teams are employed to keep the land under a high state of cultivation. Four and one-half miles of poplar trees set out by Mr. Brodhead, border the farm and add to the beauty of the landscape.

One hundred men and sixteen teams do the work. Paul Todd, a son of the owner, has supervision of the farm, and Frank Crane, who has grown on the muck from childhood, is the capable manager. the workmen receive $1.75 and $2.00 per day. The majority of them are Americans, but there is one gang of fifteen Bohemians and another of seventeen Italians.

The bulk of the plowing is done by a forty horse power gang traction plow and the ditching is done by a powered ditcher that will dig a half mile of ditch in a day.

On Compania farm there are eight hundred acres of spearmint of luxuriant growth, 350 acres of peppermint that has not done so well, and 100 acres of sugar beets. These are the market crops.

Sugar beets were an experiment last year, 65 acres were raised and yielded 800 tons that tested 14% saccharine. They were sold to the Holland Beet Sugar Factory at a profit and the acreage was increased this year.

On his two farms Mr. Todd has 1,300 acres of spearmint and to all appearances it will yield an immense crop of oil. One would think that this crop alone would flood the market, but when we stop to consider that the well known Mr. Wrigley is circling the globe with spearmint gum the prospects for fair price look better.

Certain it is that a visit to these monarchs of muck land farm is well worth while.

DECATUR, MICHIGAN IS KNOWN AS CELERY SHIPPING STATION

Clean, enterprising and happy Decatur is located on the main line of the Michigan Central Railroad but three hours ride from Chicago and has a population of 1500, which is increasing steadily.

Village is on the north border of a rich tract of muck land. Twenty-five years ago this land was a vast swamp through which was supposed to run the Dowagiac creek, but most of the creek spread out over the land forming small lakes in the open places. A forest of pine, basswood, elm and other timber made the great swamp for the most part impassable as it was the home of every wild animal known to Michigan forests.

EARLY LAWRENCE HISTORY

The village of Lawrence was born in the summer of 1835, while Michigan was yet a territory and a year and a half before she became a state. John Allen, at that time a resident of Ann Arbor, entered a forty-acre tract on Section ten in the Township of Lawrence and platted a village which he named Mason, in honor of Stevens T. Mason, acting governor of the territory and subsequently the first governor of the new state and known in history "as the boy governor."

At that time Mr. Allen had no intention of becoming a resident of his new paper village, the plat of which has never placed in the records of the county. One Ephriam Palmer was employed by him to look after the interests of the location. Palmer put up a log cabin but did not remain long, he and his wife going further west. After Palmer's departure the cabin was occupied by John Reynolds whose name is perpetuated in the name of Reynold's Lake, southeast of the village.

Allen built a sawmill on Brush Creek in 1836, but the town increased so slowly that in 1843 there were but ten families: John Allen, Watson Poole, Alexander Newton, Norman Bierce, afterward familiarly known as Uncle Norman, John R. Haynes, Joseph Hayes, Israel Branch, Alex H. Phelps, John P. Fisk, Benjamin Dunning, and Rodolphus Howe.

Up to that time the village was generally called Brush Creek and the name Mason passed into oblivion. Indeed there are many of the present inhabitants who are not aware that it ever bore that name, but all, except newcomers and some of the younger generation, remember Brush Creek.

OLD LANDMARK DESTROYED

Sunday morning Chet Graham discovered that Clem Ball's slaughter house down by Mud Lake was on fire.

He hurried his little brother over to inform Mr. Ball and then went to the fire. He succeeded in saving three choice hogs for a pleasanter fate but the building, together with tools and other possessions were destroyed.

The building was formerly the property of the late Edward Arnold. It was not insured and the loss was about two hundred dollars. Mr. Ball will rebuild.

WHY WILD PIGEON HAS BECOME EXTINCT

HUNTERS IN SOUTHWESTERN MICHIGAN FOLLOWED THEM TO NESTING PLACES AND KILLED MILLIONS

A writer in the Lawton Leader says that along about 1872 the passenger pigeon had a nesting place near Hartford, and during forty days of their stay there hunters shipped from that station three carloads per day of birds, each car containing 150 barrels and each barrel 35 dozens. This made a daily slaughter of 180,000 birds.

From Petoskey, Emmet County, two years later, the shipments were five carloads a day, with 8,250 dozen to the carload. Old Simon Pokagon wrote for the CHAUTAUQUA in 1895 that between the years 1840 and 1880 he visited in the states of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, many brooding places of the passenger pigeon, some of which were ten to thirty miles long and four miles wide, every tree on its limbs being spotted with nests. "A pigeon nesting was always a great source of revenue to our people," says the old chief. "Whole tribes would wig wam around their nesting places. They seldom killed the old birds, but made great preparations to secure the young, out of which the squaws made a squab buttered and smoked and dried them for future use."

The greatest nesting remembered was at Petoskey in 1876. It extended for 28 miles and was 4 miles wide. Five thousand people took part in the slaughter of these birds there. Birds were shipped to New York by the carload for fifteen weeks, and this was the beginning of the end. No flocks were ever seen after that, and although in the early eighties there were still a few to be seen, they gradually dwindled away in numbers until now there is not a passenger pigeon left.

A LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

By: Virgil O. Strickler, C.S.

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF LECTURESHIP OF THE MOTHER CHURCH, THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST SCIENTIST, IN BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

However much people may differ in their attitude towards Christian Science everyone will admit that it has done many good things. Entirely apart from the question of physical healing it is generally conceded that it produces a happy and contented mentality, that it destroys fear, and makes people loving and kind. When we add to this the fact that it has healed many sick people who had previously been unable to find relief under other systems, that it has cured many of the drug habit, and of the liquor habit, has restored harmony in many homes that were discordant, and has given hope and courage to people who were discouraged. It is easy to understand why Christian Science has spread from one end of the earth to the other with such wonderful rapidity.

Why should anyone not wish to believe that God heals the sick? Is it not a thing to be desired? And is it not something for which humanity has been praying through centuries? Now that it is here why should anyone not wish to accept it? Let each one ask himself that question.

The demand for practical things also demands a religion that is practical. People are no longer satisfied with theories about what is to happen in another world. What is desired is a demonstrable religion that saves from present troubles — from sickness and sin, and failure, and unhappiness, and the countless ills of every day human experience — and if there is a religion that will do that, it can be safely trusted for the future.

Christian Science is essentially a practical religion. It has been called applied Christianity. There is the same difference between Christian Science and other systems that there is between mathematics and engineering. Mathematics does much good in many ways, but it is not until the rules of mathematics are applied to human affairs that we see brought out great bridges, railroads, subways, lofty buildings, and other things that are of public utility, and which contribute to the well-being of mankind.

HOWARD HALL IN "THE DOCTOR"

HAS LEADING ROLL IN PLAY THAT IS ATTRACTING MUCH ATTENTION IN NEW YORK AND CHICAGO

Among the plays that are attracting greatest attention in the leading cities this fall is that of "DAMAGED GOODS" by Brieux, member of the French Academy.

The play opened in Chicago a couple of weeks ago and received elaborate notices, mostly friendly, from the newspapers. It is characterized as "A Powerful Sermon," and "Out of the ordinary," and one paper said it is a protest against the tendency to cry, "Get thee behind me Satan."

In one of the strongest companies playing "Damaged Goods" the leading part, that of the "doctor," is taken by Howard Hall of Decatur. The play opened in New York City and then took up engagements in the other leading eastern cities. Everywhere Mr. Hall has been given praise for the excellent quality of his acting. One paper said his "work as the doctor is especially deserving of mention," and other papers said "he handled the role of the doctor most capably." Every good word given to Howard Hall brings pleasure to his many friends back home.

Mr. Hall's company is headed this way and will appear in Kalamazoo some evening in November, the exact date will be published in the Republican as soon as it is learned.

ISAAC KAKKAK TELLS OF EARLY DAYS

WAS HERE WHEN LAWTON HAD ONLY ONE STORE

"Indians camped there," said Isaac Kakkak as he stood on the north side of the M.C.R.R. depot the other day and pointed to the location of the Fruit Belt depot and Lambert & Co's Lumber Yard. "Indians picked huckleberries and brought them here. Only one store then and that was where the hotel stands," he continued. He further explained that at that time there were a number of oak trees there and the Indians would come and camp there for the night. Sometimes they would have a tent and sometimes they would lie out under the trees. Mr. Kakkak is sixty nine years old and was born in Paw Paw township. He is a grandson of Grey Wolf and one of the Pottawatamie Indians who claimed title to the Chicago lake front. In speaking of early days he said the Indians had wigwams in the west part of the village of Paw Paw, located on the ground now occupied by some of the blacksmith shops. Indians to the number of three hundred at one time occupied the land southwest of Paw Paw but they all moved away except his father's family. Mr. Kakkak is still a resident of Paw Paw but has frequently worked in Lawton. He had just returned from a visit to his son in Detroit.

THE COLD NEW YEARS

FIFTY YEARS AGO THE FIRST OF JANUARY WAS THE COLDEST DAY IN MICHIGAN EXPERIENCED BY MEN NOW LIVING

Last Thursday, January 1st, 1914, was the semi-centennial of the cold New Years which has gone down in history as the coldest day this country has experienced since the winter that Washington camped at Valley Forge, and it is not at all certain that those brave Continentals of the Revolutionary War passed through a day as cold and stormy as the first day of January, 1864.

There are few people past the age of sixty years to whom the bitter day does not stand out in their memories as one never to be forgotten. We hope the privation and suffering experienced by our fathers and grandfathers and great grandfathers during that terrible winter will never be repeated.

William H. Tuttle had learned telegraphy under Mrs. Mary Wright in the old Michigan Central Passenger depot and was considered competent to take charge of a station. Although he was but fifteen years old he was assigned to the station of Parma, this side of Jackson, and he was there on the cold New Years day.

Mr. Tuttle thus describes the day as he remembers it: December 31, 1863, was very warm for winter weather, there was no snow on the ground and it rained all day. At about midnight the rain turned to snow and the warm air turned to bitter cold. By five o'clock on the first of January the thermometer had dropped to thirty five degrees below zero, a fall of nearly seventy degrees in five hours. The storm raged and it remained bitter cold for a week.

Soldiers in camp froze in their tents.

Fire broke out in a building in Dowagiac and half of the business block was destroyed. There were no hose nor engines in those times and volunteer firemen attempted to fight the fire with buckets of water but the water turned into ice before it reached the fire and they were compelled to let it burn itself out.

A train load of hogs were being shipped to the eastern market and the trainmen reported that 400 of them were frozen and the live hogs were eating the dead ones.

J.S. True called at the office to renew his subscription while we were talking about the cold New Years. Mr. True passed the day in a pup tent in Chattanooga and while it was not quite so fierce as Michigan reported, it was so cold that the memory of his efforts to keep comfortable are fresh in his mind today. The mud was knee deep in Chattanooga the last day of December and the next morning it was frozen hard enough to hold up a team.

Le Grant Fisher was at a recruiting station at Lexington north of Port Huron, on the cold New Years. The last day of December was warm there and after midnight the terrible change took place. The young soldier in his room in the hotel became so cold that he could not sleep and dressed and walked the floor to keep from freezing. The thermometer there went down nearly sixty degrees in a few hours.

REWARD OF PERSEVERANCE COMES TO DECATUR BOY

RALPH L. PETERSON WHO GRADUATES FROM ALBION COLLEGE THIS MONTH, WILL BE ASSISTANT PASTOR OF THE LARGEST M.E. CHURCH

Mr. Peterson, who made a name for himself while at Albion for his prominence in oratory and debating, having represented the college in several state and inter-collegiate contests, has already completed his college work and will get his degree in June without further studies.

He is in the East at present, and will attend Drew Theological Seminary next year, in conjunction with his pastoral work in New York. In fact it was while on a trip to Drew that Mr. Peterson so impressed President Tripple that he at once recommended him to Dr. W.H. Morgan, pastor of the New York church, as assistant, the recommendation coming after a single conference between Mr. Tripple and Mr. Peterson.

The position will be given over entirely to Mr. Peterson during the summer months while Dr. Morgan goes on a trip to Europe. Mr. Peterson is only twenty-six years old. He will return in June to receive his degree and graduate with his class.

The above despatch from Albion was published in the state papers last week. Decatur people have watched with just pride the progress of Ralph Peterson. He has been a faithful and persistent toiler. He has developed rare talent in oratory and his fine character and pleasing manner supply the necessary requirements to recognition.

That he will be successful in the large field to which he has been called is beyond the question of doubt to those who know the preparation he has made.

DECATUR FLOUR MILL DESTROYED

MUST BE REBUILT

The Republican press was turning out the paper last Thursday morning when the alarm of fire was heard. Two hundred papers had already been run but business was stopped instantly and the force rushed to the fire. It was eleven o'clock.

The Decatur Flour Mill was a busy place Thursday morning. The machinery was grinding. George E. Adams, the proprietor, went over it carefully and everything was working nicely. He was taking orders over the phone in his office when a train man rushed in and told him the building was on fire.

Fire had caught in some unknown manner in the east corner and in a remarkably short time the building was a mass of flames.

Mr. Adams saved his typewriter and ledger and a part of the records of the Decatur schools and a few sacks of flour and grain were also saved, but aside from the power plant which was located in the small brick addition, the big flour mill, which has for years been one of Decatur's most valued industries, is entirely destroyed.

The mill was insured in the Michigan Mutual Millers' Insurance Company of Lansing. One Thousand dollars was carried on the building, twenty-three hundred on machinery, two hundred on power plant and three thousand on merchandise, making a total of sixty-five hundred. Mr. Adams received five thousand six hundred twenty-four dollars and sixty-five cents and his total loss was ten thousand six hundred ninety-three dollars. Practically all of the insurance money will go to pay claims held by the two Decatur banks and the five-thousand dollar interest in the property which Mr. Adams has accumulated, after years of labor has gone up in smoke. He will be fifty years old this year and the thought of beginning all over again is somewhat discouraging, but his friends know that he will arise to the occasion and the way will be shown him.

Mr. Adams was prostrated by the smoke and his loss. He is still far from well and has been unable to plan for the future, but Decatur needs a flour mill and we hope to see him rebuild it.

DECATUR'S OLDEST LIVING RESIDENT

Mr. and Mrs. William F. Stone and great grand daughter, Pauline Stone of Flint have been guests at the home of Mrs. Stone's sister, Mrs. Andrew Simpson, the past week.

Mrs. Stone is the oldest living resident of Decatur. She came here with her parents in 1848 when she was six years old and her sister Mrs. Viola Smith was a few years younger. She was the oldest daughter of William M. Pardee, a native of Ohio.

Mrs. Stone remembers well the day the family arrived in Decatur. They came from Battle Creek and this was the end of the railroad. Workmen were laying the track on through and building the depot.

There were four buildings here: Two log houses located on the site of Hinckley's livery barn, a store kept by Charles Tucker on the corner of Main and Sherwood street where the Duncombe House burned, and a house where the freight house now stands in which the Pardee family moved.

William Pardee came here in the employ of Beers & Sherwood who owned all of the land now included in the village of Decatur. He surveyed and platted the village. He was the second post master, Mr. Phelps being the first. William Street was named for him.

Poor House For Decatur

It is not generally known that the first poor house in Van Buren County was located in Decatur. William Pardee was appointed Overseer of the Poor in 1859. He lived then on land he had purchased near Harrison cemetery and Pickeral lake. There was no place provided for the county's delinquents and he turned his house into a county house. The number of inmates averaged from four to five in the summer to a dozen in the winter. Among the number Mrs. Stone remembers Edmund Hayes of Paw Paw, Aunt Betsey, the blind woman, High LaRoo and Ellen Raun. The last named was insane and caused much trouble. She would run away and wade out into Pickeral lake as far as she could and stand there and Mr. Pardee would have to wade out and drag her in.

Mr. Pardee died in 1860, a year after he became commissioner of the poor, and his widow continued the work until 1861 when another commissioner was appointed and the poor house was moved to Paw Paw.

Mr. Pardee raised the first celery in Decatur on the sand, planting it in a trench and filling in as it grew. The only road across the swamp in his day was a plank road crossing east of Harrison cemetery.

William F. Stone was a resident of East Decatur when he was united in marriage with Mr. Pardee's oldest daughter, Amian.

FROM NETHERLANDS TO DECATUR

They went to the station of the little city of Utrecht in the Netherlands and bought tickets for Decatur, Michigan, U.S.A.

Monday morning they arrived safe and sound, so Dutch that they could not speak a word and could hardly eat in English and without a friend or relative on this side of the Atlantic ocean.

Such is the fame abroad of the rare and beautiful village of Decatur.

Their names are Johan Spekenyer and Mevrouw Spekenyer. They are farmers and good in the dairy line. He milked on an average of twenty-five cows for thirty years. They were referred to Decatur on account of its Holland settlement here and will stay here and work at what they can get to do.

They were directed to Harm Smith's home where they are finding shelter until they get located.

DECATUR POST OFFICE

It is sometimes said that the Post Office is an index or rather a sort of barometer to the business conditions of a community.

We give it here as an insight from a different angle as to the business conditions of Decatur and adjacent regions.

There has been a gradual increase in the business of the Decatur Post Office for several years and the receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 exceeded $5,937.86.

Few towns the size of Decatur have better equipped or a more convenient Post Office situated as it is in a large, well-lighted room next to the First State Bank.

Mr. M.S. Carney, the post master, is courteous to all, most obliging and is giving the patrons of his post office efficient service and we believe his efforts are appreciated. He is very ably assisted by Miss Gladys Lincoln as assistant post master and Miss Amanda DeBolt, clerk.

Miss Lincoln has been in this office nearly thirteen years and Miss DeBolt more than ten years. Their courtesy, capability and loyalty have contributed much toward the efficiency of the service.

There are five rural routes being handled by efficient carriers. The personnel of the rural force is Route 1, Frank M. Brigham; Route 2, Guy Calbetzor; Route 3, Stephen Calbetzor; Route 4, Fred G. Rafter; Route 5, Harry C. Jones.

HOWARD HALL'S LATEST PLAY

"THE NATURAL LAW" — a drama written by Howard Hall was given its first presentation at the Shubert Theatre, Minneapolis, several weeks ago. It broke all records for big business at that theatre and received the unqualified endorsement of the dramatic cirtics of Minneapolis. Mr. Hall has received letters of congratulations and endorsement of his play from the Hon. A.O. Eberhart, Governor of Minnesota; Rev. G.L. Morrel, Dr. J. Warren Little, M.D.F.A.C.S. and Richard Burton, College of Science, Literature & Arts, University of Minnesota.

Mr. Hall has been spending his time during the holidays with his family and returns to New York City on the tenth to resume his position in the celebrated sociological drama (Damaged Goods) in which he assumes the leading role of the Doctor, and will continue with it until the end of the theatrical season.

FIRST STATE BANK REORGANIZED

L. EARL VAN ANTWERP ELECTED CASHIER TO SUCCEED L. D. HILL, RESIGNED — NEW DIRECTORS ON BOARD

An adjourned meeting of the stockholders of the First State Bank was held last Thursday at which there was a re-organization of the Board of Directors and officers.

A.W. Copley sold his interest in the bank and retired from the Board, H.D. Wickett purchasing his stock. A.W. Haydon also retired from the Board and L. Earl Van Antwerp was selected to succeed him.

The Board of Directors is now composed of E.B. and H.E. Copley, Mrs. Belle Baker, H.D. Wickett and L.E. Van Antwerp. E.B. Copley remains president and E.E. Copley, Vice President. L.D. Hill tendered his resignation as cashier and was succeeded by L.E. Van Antwerp.

The bank enjoyed a successful year in 1914 and the usual semi-annual dividend was declared the first of January.

L.E. Van Antwerp, the new cashier, has been connected with the bank the past nine years and for several years past has held the position of assistant cashier. He is known to be conservative in business and has also won a reputation for courtesy and strict integrity. He is in every way fitted to fill the responsible position held so many years by Mr. Hill.

IN THE DAYS OF LONG AGO

PROFESSOR BURKHEAD AS PRINCIPAL

Professor Burkhead was not only a good disciplinarian but an up-to-date, thorough and conscientious teacher. He believed in the finer part of education as well as the practical, the part that made you appear educated, such as good writing, spelling, reading, and good language, in contrast to Professor Upton, whose hobby was Latin and mathematics.

He did a great many things not required because he believed in them. The first half hour after devotionals was given to music, and we were marked the same as for any other studies. I remember that was the only thing in which James Jordan did not stand nearly perfect. He used to be marked as low as three in music.

Then for five minutes every forenoon and afternoon every window was raised and we went through exercises in physical culture.

In the botany class we were required to draw pictures on the black board which served to bring out a talent in many not known to exist.

The last ten minutes before school closed he gave us good talks on things we ought to know which I still quote as those around me can testify. For an hour after school he drilled the Seniors in Normal work, the notes of which I kept until left behind in the old home.

He regraded the school and put it on the University list; we had all the sciences, higher mathematics and others not in the list now.

We had a good School Board too, the names of Newton Foster, L.T. Rawson, J.L. Harrison, A.B. Copley, and W.E. Trowbridge being on my diploma, and I think we were pretty well equipped for those days.

Many Mottoes

There was a motto on each side of the clock "Knowledge is Power" and "God Bless our School" and the pictures of George Washington and Daniel Webster on each side of the entrances and such mottoes as "He that would have the first fruit must climb the tree," and others printed at the top of the black boards all around the room. It was in a day of mottoes.

I remember a fine collection of specimens in a large case in the office for geology and natural history and also plenty of books, (his own private collection, I think, which he took away with him) and we had things required for experiment in physics and chemistry in the east recitation room.

If we had a talent it was discovered, and we were required to use it. I only regret that too strenuous practice injured my voice in preparing for entertainments given every two weeks to pay for an organ, which is now in one of the lower rooms.

We had a large school then, one hundred ten in the High School room, of which a great many were foreign pupils. Some of the finest scholars were turned out occupying the highest positions.

Professor Burkhead is now an old man, broken in health, as a letter received from him last Christmas would indicate, living in California with his wife and married daughter, his only son having died in 1911. He had no grandchildren to cheer his declining years, which is a sorrow to him, but his memory and good works will be carried down to coming generations.

THE POORE BLOCK

Repairing Of The Three-Story Brick Building Recalls Stories Of The Days Of Their Building

The three-story brick buildings known as the Poore Block are undergoing extensive repairing in front. Time has left its mark upon the brick and they have gradually crumbled until the buildings had become in a measure unsafe on account of falling pieces. The old brick were taken out for a space of three feet from the top and new layers substituted and the entire front was reinforced where needed.

The block consists of two three-story buildings, one is owned by M.S. Carney and the main floor and part of the second story are occupied by his drug store. The other building is owned by Mrs. E.fi. Vincent of Rockford, Illinois who was the widow of the late E.B. Copley.

The block was built by the late Charley Poore and was completed in the summer of 1864. Ira Nash and Lon Keables were the first tenants of the room now occupied by Knights' and the printing office conducted by the Late Prof. Bellows and later by A.E. Blackman occupied the second floor. William E. and Philander Trowbridge were the first tenants of the room now occupied by Carney's Drug store. Theodore Trowbridge clerked for his father and uncle the year they opened the business and he is there now helping Mr. Carney. He was the owner of the building and conducted the drug store there for many years.

The building adjoining these two stores on the north and now occupied by the Rackett, is also a three-story building and was built by Mr. Poore in 1852. Mr. Poore conducted a hardware store on the north side of this building and John and Fred Chadwick conducted a dry-goods store on the south side. George Boughton had a photograph gallery on the top floor. This building was constructed of brick made on the bank of Lake of the Woods.

Mr. Poore built and resided in the house adjoining his store, now the home of Mrs. Josephine Potts.

Dealers in necessity like lumber and builders' materials can hope for large and permanent success only when they are equipped to do business on a large scale. This is one explanation of the success in this line, which has been won by L.S. Jones, the lumber dealer, in Decatur.

This splendidly equipped plant maintains at all times, large quantities of rough and finished lumber, and is thus enabled to make prompt deliveries, which in itself is an important feature in this line of business.

Besides lumber of all kinds, Mr. Jones is stocked with lime, cement, brick, sash, doors, slate and composition roofing and shingles of all sorts.

The yard is conveniently located on George Street next to the Michigan Central tracks and near Hinckley's Measure and Planing mill, so that those desiring special lengths and sizes of timber, or dressed lumber can get them at this yard without delay. They also maintain a cement block manufacturing device which is a great convenience to the trade. They not only furnish the material for building but will design and contract to build complete anything desired.

INDIAN

The Hartford Correspondent of the Detroit Journal recently sent in a one-half column write up of Peter Wapsey, an old Indian, who is supposed to be one hundred ten (110) years of age, and the oldest person in Michigan. He was born near Pokagon in July, 1783 and is one of the almost extinct Pottawatomie tribe, the remnant of which can be found in a settlement five and one-half miles north east of Hartford. Wapsey has been twice married and had thirteen children. He has been known, in the vicinity where he now lives, for sixty years. Wapsey says he was the greatest bear hunter in south western Michigan and formerly killed hundreds of bear and deer in Berrien, Cass and Van Buren Counties.

SELA N. THOMAS

Sela N. Thomas passed away at his home on north Phelps Street March 15, 1915 after a short illness. His age was seventy-eight years. He had been identified with the business and social interests of Decatur since the days before the Civil War and had established a name here almost as well known as the village itself.

Mr. Thomas was a native of Chautauqua County, New York, and was born in 1836. He was married in 1857, to Drucilla V. Bentley at Cherry Creek, New York, and three years later saw them established in this village. Decatur at that time was just beginning to take form as an enterprising settlement among the grubbs and timbers, and Mr. Thomas as much as any man helped to develop it into the beautiful village we enjoy today.

Mr. Thomas, in partnership with Nathaniel Hawks, who is past eighty years of age and resides in Galesburg, opened the first hardware store in a small frame building where the office of Dr. Bope now stands and his simple home was located on the present site of Frank Baker's blacksmith shop. After a time Mr. Hawks retired from the firm and was succeeded by a Mr. Quinn. The brick building on the corner of Phelps and Delaware street was erected in 1872 and Thomas & Quinn moved into new and better quarters. The firm continued until 1878 when Mr. Thomas bought out his partner and he became sole owner. In 1885 he gave his son, Frank, a half interest in the business and the firm became known as S.N. Thomas & Son. In 1902 Mr. Thomas retired and the business was conducted by his son until 1907.

From the small beginning Mr. Thomas built up one of the largest hardware businesses in this part of Michigan. His big double store contained everything in the hardware line commonly used and many things rarely used and many a time citizens of other towns came here to purchase from his stock. As a merchant he enjoyed a reputation of more than ordinary excellence. He was industrious and enterprising. He never misrepresented and his word was as good as gold. Such a reputation coupled with good judgment must inevitably bring success and Mr. Thomas was successful.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were parents of two sons, Arthur and Frank, the latter residing in Decatur. The wife and mother passed away in 1886 and since then Mr. Thomas has resided with his sister.

Dowagiac was telephoned for assistance and FIRE CHIEF U.P. LEADER and three assistants with 500 feet of hose came down on the 1:40 train. They made sure the control of the fire and their work was greatly appreciated.

The total damage is not far from fifteen thousand dollars.

Knights of Pythias Lodge

This organization was inspired by the story of Damon and Pythias as presented by the young Irish author, dramatist and poet, John Banim. The legend dates back to the time of Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, born in the year 430 B.C.

"And greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." Dionysius had doomed Damon to death, and he was ordered chained in his dungeon 'til the hour of execution. All the world has seemingly forsaken him, but one friend, Pythias, remained steadfast.

Damon's one request was that he might see his wife and child before he died and Pythias pleaded for this brief respite for his friend, pledging his life that he would return for the execution. The request was granted, Damon hurried to his home far away and Pythias was chained in his place.

The hour for the execution arrived and Damon did not return. Pythias was brought to the scaffold to die in his stead while the crowd jeered and taunted him with the apparent falseness of his friend. Phthias doubted not the honor of Damon and with face radiant with smiles exclaimed, " 'tis sweet to die for those we love."

As the hour that would proclaim the death knell of Pythias was about to strike, a cloud of dust was seen in the distance and a horseman in desperate speed rode to the scaffold, and Damon, in time to save his friend, fell exhausted from his steed.

This friendship is the foundation of the order Knights of Pythias and with it goes charity and benevolence. Its ceremonies are beautiful and impressive; it teaches the broadest lesson of nobility and inspires its members to grander and better things. No one can be a member of this order and abide by its teachings without being a better, broader, kinder and more charitable man.

That is why it is growing and spreading its influence over all the world and why its power for good is felt in every community in which it is established. As long as friendship is considered a virtue, so long will the Order Knights of Pythias endure.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A BUSINESS MAN

The following story was written by Charles Schuster for many years a leading merchant of Decatur who established the dried goods and clothing stores now conducted by Fred L. Mosier and Charles E. Criffield, and made the name of "Schuster" a household word in two counties. He is now manager of the Milwaukee Twelfth street store of Ed Schuster & Co. and editor in chief of the store magazine, "Keeping In Touch."

The story refers to one of the writer's Decatur experience and to the late Dr. G.L. Rose, to whose memory it is a deserving tribute. Mr. Schuster very kindly gave the publisher permission to publish in the Republican.

Ed.

When the writer was conducting a country store, he was informed one cold winter morning, after a heavy snow fall, that a day laborer he had employed to shovel snow from the roof of his residence, had fallen off and evidently was badly injured. Hurrying home he found the man lying on the snow, moaning pitifully with a number of men helpless around him, because every movement the poor man was subjected to caused him intense pain. The writer immediately dispatched men to the several doctors' offices in the town to hurry help to the sufferer. But one was found and he sent word that if Mr. — (the merchant) would guarantee the bill, he would come at once. The messenger had just been told to rush back and state that the bill would be so guaranteed when someone said, "Here comes Dr. Rose." He was just then returning from a distant call in the country and having heard of the accident on the street, hurried to the patient and upon examination, established a fracture of the upper leg. By his personal aid and direction the patient was gently placed in his cutter and by the doctor himself taken to the man's home. A compound fracture was established and the patient made as comfortable as the meagre conditions permitted. An hour later, to the merchant's surprise, the doctor came to the store reporting the patient's serious condition and that he found the home — a simple, bleak, log cabin at the outskirts of the town — insufficiently protected from the cold and the family destitute of both food and necessary bed covering. "We must make this man comfortable at once," he said, "And if you will send down some bed covering, I will buy them some groceries. I will be back in a few minutes and take the things along myself." Needless to say that the covering was furnished and all ready when the doctor returned with a large basket of groceries and provisions, all of which he immediately took to the poor man's home. All this, too, before he returned to his own home, after a long drive in the country. He treated the man conscientiously and with the same care and patience that he would bestow on one of his wealthy patrons. When at last the patient was walking on crutches, the merchant asked the doctor for the bill, when he said, "You don't owe me a cent." Upon the merchant's reply that the man would probably be unable ever to pay him and that he (the merchant) was ready to pay the bill, the doctor stated if the county wants to pay me anything for the poor fund, well and good, but I will take nothing from you. It is not your affair, for you are in no way responsible for the accident.

Dr. Rose was not a religious man, as the world is apt to consider religion. In fact he was apt to be quite gruff and plain spoken, but he carried the right kind of heart under his coat and was ever ready with word and deed for the suffering whether rich or poor, as the case here recited simply proves.

Is it a wonder, that when Dr. Rose died some years ago, there was not a hall nor church large enough in town to hold the crowd who gathered from near and far to tender their silent testimonial to the worth of one whom they had loved and admired, to silently express their grief at the loss of not only an excellent physician, but a noble, large-hearted man.

ELMER WOOLFE SIGNS WITH KALAMAZOO

Elmer Woolfe, one of Decatur's star ball players, has signed with the Kalamazoo Club of the Southern Michigan League to try out as an outfielder.

Elmer is known in this section of the state as an all-around player of ability. He is a good fielder, a good baseman, a good pitcher and a strong batter.

He goes to Kalamazoo to begin with the club the twentieth of April and his Decatur friends are sure that he will make good.

WILLIAM K. VAN HISE

VETERAN OF THE CIVIL WAR AND ONE OF DECATUR'S OLDEST AND BEST CITIZENS PASSED AWAY SEPTEMBER 20.

Wm. K. Van Hise was born at Trenton, Butler county, Ohio, July 10th, 1835, and departed this life at his home in East Valley, Decatur, Mich., on the 20th of September, 1914, aged 79 years, 2 months and 10 days.

He came to this state with his parents when a babe ,and nearly his entire life has been spent here.

On the 10th day of July, 1858, he was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Armitage, and to this union were born four children, one son, Eugene E., who died in infancy, and three daughters, Mrs. Inez Maguire of Paw Paw township and Misses Susa and Carrie Van Hise, who reside on the old homestead.

The widow of the deceased, three daughters and one grandson are left to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and a loving father, besides a host of friends and relatives ,he being the last of a family of eight children.

Mr, Van Hise was a veteran of the Civil war having enlisted at Kalamazoo in Company H. Twelfth Mich. Infantry, under Captain Claflin, and served until the close of the war, being mustered out on the 15th of February, 1866.

He was a lifelong member of the Masonic fraternity and the last Charter member of the Decatur lodge.

He was converted and baptised in the Christian church in 1876 and was a conscientious Christian until his death.

He was noble and upright in all his dealing in public and private life, a good citizen, a kind and helpful neighbor, who will be greatly missed.

The family have the sympathy of the entire community.

Mr. Van Hise has held every office in Decatur township but that of constable and was supervisor of the township for thirteen years. Everyone liked "Uncle Billy" as he was affectionately called and he was almost sure to be elected when he was on the ticket. He was a life long Republican and when the outlook for the local G. O. P. was not the brightest he was more than once urged to run to help "pull the ticket through"

He will be remembered as one of the grand good citizens of his day.

Funeral services were held at the home Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock Rev. A. Bradfield officiating. Members of his regibent were pall bearers and veterans of the Decatur Post were present at Lakeside cemetery where the remains were buried.

FIRST DECATUR BLACKSMITH

POSTMASTER OF MORA, MINN., WRITES LETTER THAT WILL INTEREST THE PIONEERS.

C. E. Williams, postmaster of Mora, Minn., President of the Mora State Bank, Secretary of the Rudd Lumber Co., etc, writes the following letter to Postmaster Carney:

My Dear Postmaster:

I am enclosing you clipping from our local paper, as I formerly lived some twelve miles south of Decatur, but left Michigan, 32 years ago. When I learned that uncle Ben formerly lived in Michigan, I looked him up and had may talks with him. He told me he had a blacksmith shop in Decatur before the Michigan Central was built through the town. Speaking of old men, I met an old gentleman by the name of John Dobney, who lives near here and he mentioned that he used to work on Little Prairie Ronde. I said, "you must have known Ben Hathaway and B. G Beuel." No, he said he did not know them. I said that is strange, when were you there. "Oh, about seventy-five years ago." There was nothing more for me to say. Mr. Dobney informed me he was ninety-four years old. He was in Little Prairie Ronde in 1837.

If the publisher of your local paper or papers see fit to publish the obituary of Uncle Ben Randall, kindly send me a copy or copies. The editor of our local paper is speaker of the Minnesota House of Representatives and is a candidate for State Auditor.

Respectfully,

C. E. Williams.

FLAGG AND THOMAS TO SELL OVERLAND

Flagg and Thomas have just closed a contract with the Willys-Overland Company of Toledo, Ohio, and are now sales agents for this territory of the handsome new Overland, one of the prettiest and best cars in the thousand dollar class made. They will not give up their Mitchell agency, which car experience has told them has no equal in its class, but the new agency will enable them to please all desires for a standard automobile.

July 16, 1914.

John F. Chevlleer died at the home of his daughter in Chico, California, the first of July. He was 80 years old and a veteran of the Civil war. He was a brother of Mrs. N. E. Webster and one of Decatur's first residents.

The first teacher of District No. 8, Hamilton township, was Mary C. Duffin. Her contract was made with Director Erastus Osborn for "the term commencing December 6, 1869, and the said Mary C. Duffin agrees to faithfully keep the list and record required by law and to observe the rules and regulations established by the Board." She was to teach 14 weeks and her salary was $106.

EIGHTEEN YEARS WITH THE REPUBLICAN

RE-ESTABLISHED THE FIRST THURSDAY IN JANUARY, 1897, IN ROOMS OVER L.G. STEWART'S GROCERY — MOVED INTO REPUBLICAN BUILDING IN FALL OF 1901 — ENTIRE EQUIPMENT CHANGED.

Eighteen years ago this Thursday a first issue of the Decatur Republican by the present publisher was printed. Eighteen years may be a long time to look ahead but it's not far to look back, and it does not seem long ago that, without experiencing in printing or publishing, we tackle the job.

The office was then located in the front half of the second story of L.G. Stewart's building where Dr. Easton is now located.

In 1893 or '94 M.O. Rowland moved the Republican over to Paw Paw leaving the village without a paper. W.E. Secord was foreman of the office under Mr. Rowland and in partnership with Fred H. Dewey, now editor of the Marion Despatch, he established the Decatur Independent. The Independent expired the last Thursday in December, 1896, and the Decatur Republican was re-established the first Thursday in January, 1897.

The paper at that time was a five-column sheet, four pages printed at home and four in Chicago. It has been enlarged from time to time until at present from six to eight pages of seven columns each are printed and all at home.

In 1891 the Republican moved from the second story of the Stewart building into the brick block built for it, its present home.

The Republican subscription list originally contained three hundred names, it now has twelve hundred. A number of these subscribers have taken the paper the entire eighteen years and a few have been subscribers to the paper continually since it was established in 1867.

The Republican has undergone a complete change in equipment since it was re-established eighteen years ago. Not a machine nor a tool or a font of type that made the Republican in 1897 is still in use. Only the type cases and racks and publisher are the same, and these are none the worse for wear.

A year ago the work of the office was revolutionized by the installing of the greatest of all inventions for printing, — the Intertype.

Producing the Republican each week is not an easy task but it is a pleasant one. The effort to bring out in each paper comething commendable sometimes taxes the mental and mechanical resources of the force, but the effort is worth while and every word of commendation or assistance produces new energy.

In looking back over the past eighteen years we see much for which to be thankful and not the least is the good will of the public we have labored faithfully to serve. We are content to face the future in the assurance that only good can come of honest endeavor.

HORSE AND BUGGY STOLEN

Last Saturday morning an elderly man went to Hinckley's livery barn and asked to hire a horse and buggy for the day to visit the marshes about Decatur and buy huckleberries. Mr. Hinckley harnessed the bay mare he bought of Robb Johnson two years ago, one of the best horses in his barn and the stranger paid him in advance.

Saturday night he failed to return and Sunday morning Mr. Hinckley began to investigate. He called the sheriff to help and every effort has been made to recover the rig but so far without success.

It has been learned that the man's name is Riley, and that he has a wife and daughter in Buchanan. It is thought he drove to Indiana and disposed of the property and skipped. A similar theft was reported at Goblesville last week.

A.M. Lyle identified Riley as a man who worked on the Ring farm a couple of years ago. Mr. Hinckley has not yet given up the search for his property although the prospects of finding it do not look good to him today.

"OLD GLORY"

THE ORIGIN OF THE TERM

Captain Stephen Driver was without doubt the first man to christen our flag "Old Glory." He was born at Salem, Massachusetts, March 17, 1803. When about to sail from that port in command of the brig "Charles Doggett", in the year 1831, he was presented with a large American flag. As it was sent aloft, and broke out to the air, Captain Driver christened the beautiful emblem "Old Glory", and that was the name he evermore used for it. His flag shared with the Captain the perils and adventures of the deep, and on his retirement from the sea it was taken by him to Nashville, Tennessee, where he made his home, and where he died in 1886.

The captain was a most pronounced "Union Man", and his outspoken fondness for the flag made him widely known as "Old Glory Driver." When the Civil War broke out every Confederate in the town felt a special call to get hold of that particular flag. The Captain's home and grounds were repeatedly searched in vain. They knew it was there but they could not find it. The old captain told them they should see it when it again floated over the city. In order to keep it safe until that longed-for time, the Captain with his own hands quilted Old Glory into a comforter, and made it his bed-fellow. On February 25, 1862, the Federal Troops took possession of Nashville, and, true to his promise, Captain Driver took the flag to the Capitol and it was soon waving over the city. As he saw it once more in the air, the old man exclaimed, "Now that Old Glory is up there Gentlemen I am ready to die". In his happiness the Captain gave another flag, which he had secreted in the same way, to the Sixth Ohio regiment, with the hope that they would raise it over every cotton state capitol. In 1882 the Captain gave his beloved flag to his niece, Mrs. Cooke, with directions for her to do with it as she thought best after his death. She afterward presented it to its present care-takers, the Essex Institute, of Salem Massachusetts. So after all its voyages and vicissitudes, the Original "Old Glory" is to-day safe in the very port from which it first sailed away eighty-two years ago.

On June 14, 1777, in old Independence Hall, Philadelphia, Congress adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, that the Flag of the Thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation. The stars to be arranged in a circle." Enter here the Star Spangled Banner, with thirty-seven years to wait the song that was immortalize the name.

The Stars and Stripes was first used in actual military service at Fort Stanwix, re-named Fort Schuyler, now Rome, N. Y., on August 6, 1777, and first carried in battle at a skirmish at Cooch's Bridge, near Wilmington, Delaware, September 3, 1777.

* * *

On February 14, 1778, Captain John Paul Jones had the great satisfaction of seeing the Stars and Stripes "recognized for the first time and in the fullest manner by the flag of France by salutes first to the "Ranger" and then to the "Independence" of Jones' fleet. This was probably the first recognition by any foreign power of the colors of the United States of America.

* * *

John Paul Jones was also the first to see a regular British Man-of-War strike her flag to that of the United States. Jones received his appointment to the command of the "Ranger" on the very day that our national flag was adopted by Congress. He said "That flag and I are twins. We cannot be parted in life or death. So long as we can float, we shall float together; if we must sink we shall go down as one."

* * *

The flag was not changed until 1795, when two stripes and two stars were added for Vermont and Kentucky. By 1816 four more states, Tennessee, Ohio, Louisiana and Indiana were in the family and a committee was appointed to give them a place on the flag. Realizing that there must be a limit to the stripes, the committee made a recommendation which was adopted April 4th, 1818, that the flag be permanently thirteen stripes, representing the original thirteen states and that a new star be added for each state as admitted.

* * *

The plan of arranging the stars to form one large star was abandoned at that time and the method of placing them in rows was adopted. Since then a star has been added to the flag on the Fourth of July following the admission of a state to the Union.

* * *

The flag of the United States at the time of the Revolution had thirteen stars; in the War of 1812, fifteen; in the Mexican War twenty-nine; in the Civil War, thirty-five and in the Spanish-American War, forty-five—the number to-day is forty-eight, arranged on the blue field in six rows of eight stars each.

The flag making plant of the navy is at the Brooklyn Navy yard. The bunting comes from Massachusetts. Every case costs the Government $560 or $11.25 a roll. Every piece must weigh five pounds to forty yards and stand a test of seventy pounds to two square inches. The bunting is steeped in salt water for six hours and then exposed to the sun for another six. If it passes these tests it is pronounced fit for our country's service.

* * *

"Morning and Evening Colors" are observed on board all our naval vessels and at naval stations. The ceremony attending the raising and lowering of the flag is very impressive. "The Star-Spangled Banner" has long been played at the raising, but in 1904 Secretary Moody ordered that it be played at the evening ceremony also, instead of "Hail Columbia," which had previously been used when the colors were lowered.

* * *

In many schools in this country, and also in the Philippines, Hawaii and Porto Rico, there are frequent salutes to the flag. When it is brought forward every pupil rises and gives a military salute, then all together they slowly and distinctly repeat:

I pledge allegiance to my flag and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

PADDOCK HOTEL IN DECATUR

Does Decatur's hotel put Decatur behind the times, is it below the average of hotels in towns of equal size, can Decatur support a better hotel? These are some of the questions noted by the publisher in a conversation with a valued subscriber.

Decatur's hotel, the Paddock House, is a frame structure built by the late Henry Shelters to take the place of the original Shelters House which was destroyed by fire some twenty-five years ago. George B. McComber bought the building shortly after the death of Henry Shelters and has since owned it.

Mr. McComber has been successful in securing good renters and the present proprietors, Mr. and Mrs. Mead, serve excellent meals and take good care of their guests.

It was shown to the writer that a new modern hotel building would cost eight to ten thousand dollars and that it could not be made to pay, in a town the size of Decatur. Mr. McComber has given the subject much thought and has several times considered seriously a plan of building a hotel and store building on his lots on Main street, but he was never able to see how the investment could be made to pay anywhere near satisfactory return. It was cited that the leading hotel of Kalamazoo loses about $500.00 a month and that the Oliver Hotel of South Bend does not pay expenses.

Michigan Central trains are scheduled to stop so frequently that traveling men get into and out of town even between meals, and bars, which in olden times were the principal source of the hotel's dividend, are barred by law.

A handsome modern brick hotel with tile floor, elevators, rooms with bath, bell boys and a banquet hall, is a pleasant dream for Decatur, but the man with the money to build it, is not making himself known.

Hamilton Grange Marks 95th Year

ONCE LARGEST Grange in Michigan, the Hamilton Grange will be 95 years old on March 24th. While the National Grange observed its 100th anniversary last year, the following article is now being reprinted from the Republican files by request of some of the older Grange members.

The following story was taken from the Apr. 9, 1914 issue of the Decatur Republican. It was prepared and read by Miss Beulah Hemenway at a meeting which celebrated the 40th anniversary of the Grange.

On the 24th day of March, 1874, a meeting was called at the Red School house in what is now known as the Barber district for the purpose of organizing a grange, and that day under the direction of J. J. Woodman, who later became master of the National Grange, Hamilton Grange was launched on its career with the following officers: Master, A. W. Haydon; Overseer, John Bennett; Lecturer, J. B. Hendryx; Steward, J. B. Morehouse; Assistant Steward, A. A. Olds; Chaplain, S. L. Cooper; Treasurer, G. B. Yeckley; Secretary, A. S. Wise; Gatekeeper, A. J. Johnson; Ceres, Mrs. Mary Haydon; Pomona, Miss Mamie Morehouse; Flora, Mrs. Lucy Bennett; Lady Assistant Steward, Miss Jennie Perry. Six of these officers are still llving and two are still valued members of Hamilton Grange.

The second and third meetings were held at the home of G. A. Osborn, pending arrangements for the renting of rooms in Brown's Tavern.

Jarvin R. Bacon was the first candidate to receive a degree, but Mr. and Mrs. James Osborn were the first to receive all four degrees.

The first record of death in their ranks occurred in the spring of 1875 when G. B. Yeckley was called to the higher life. One of the charter members, he was the first to enjoy the distinction of representing his district in the legislature.

Early in the year of 1875, there began to be talk of building a grange home. March seems to be a lucky month for Hamilton Grange for it was in March, 1875, that the talk culminated in the appointment of a committee consisting of Robert L. Nesbitt, J. B. Morehouse and S. B. Hagar to make arrangements in regard to building a hall.

Troubles with the landlady in the following month caused them to leave the spacious ball room in the old tavern, and to seek quarters in the Haydon school house. Undoubtedly this made them all the more anxious for a hall. A committee was appointed to get the cost of the material.

It seems strange at this time that there should ever have been the hesitancy about the best location for the hall. But there were spirited discussions in regard to the site. Some were anxious to have it located on Fairbanks corners (Fritzburg), while others inclined to Gano's corners (opposite cemetery), but it was finally decided to locate it at the center of the township, A. W. Haydon donating the land for the site.

After the report of the committee on materials, the final building committee consisting of A. S. Wise, A. W. Haydon and J. M. Weeks were appointed, and the struggle for a hall began in earnest. Struggle it must have been for those sixty people to set about building a hall with comparatively little means. But they were young and stout hearted, all worked with a will. Those who were financially able advaned their dues for a term of years to furnish money for the enterprise. Others gave freely of time and labor. So well did they work that December, 1875, found them in the new hall.

It was still far from complete. Improvements and additions were made from time to time as finances warranted. The furniture, consisting of the three desks and the altar, were not added until 1877. These were the work of John Peck, an early member of the order.

The Grange has received some gifts in the form of pictures and dishes, but the most of the evidences of comfort it has added in the years have been the result of hustle and honest merit.

The second organ which is still in possession of the Grange was earned by getting subscriptions to the Michigan Farmer. The piano was paid for largely through the efforts of Frank Ring and W. F. Woolcox. The sheds were built in 1886.

In 1893, there began to be felt the need of more room in the hall, particularly for a stage, but it was not until 1896 that this idea took form in the addition to the hall known as the basement and the stage built in conjunction by the Grange and the Hamilton Fair Association. The scenery and drop curtain for the new stage were secured through the efforts of Howard Hall and wife in return for which service they were made honorary members of Hamilton Grange.

Life is full of ups and downs and Hamilton Grange is no exception to the rule. There was a time for three or four years in the late 80's when interest lagged somewhat, and the attendance was small, notwithstanding the fact that the treasurary was so full that a cash dividend of 50 cents per member was given each one attending a meeting.

In 1892, under the leadership of Thomas Mars a' that time master of the state grange, a big revival was held and the grange entered upon its greatest era of prosperity. The twenty members who had kept the faith and remained true, were increased by many more, and under capable administration of Mrs. M. E. Haydon, Hamilton Grange attained a state-wide reputation. At one time it was the largest grange in the state, boasting a membership of over 300.

That "Hamilton plan" which was to have an hour for business, an hour for social enjoyment and an hour for the program, was held up as a model for other granges throughout the state to follow.

During Mrs. Haydon's eight years of mastership she initiated 245 candidates. It was during this period that the famous games of "Bingo," "Pigs in the Parlor," "Solemn Occasion," etc., were introduced, and young people from near and far joined the grange. Scores of happy matches had their beginnings at grange meetings.

Hamilton Grange has ever allied itself on the side of progress and reform. As early as May, 1874, it put itself on record as being in sympathy with the temperance question. In July, 1874, an open meeting was held for the discussion of woman suffrage. Good schools have ever been a source of interest to it, and the minutes of the last forty years plainly show that it has ever been interested in the great questions of the day.

Of the fifty and more who helped in the first organization, only 18 are still numbered with the living and of these only six are still members of the order — Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Haydon, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Osborn, Mrs. E. F. Baxter and J. M. Weeks.

Among those who have served as master are A. W. Haydon, J. M. Weeks, G. W. Wait, Mrs. M. E. Haydon, C. W. Byers, Waldo Phillips and Grace Osborn.

No organization can be built up without thought, labor and personal sacrifice on the part of its members. Especial honor is due those who for forty years have never lost courage but have maintained their way in spite of obstacles.

No one can measure the good it has accomplished in its long career; there have been little unremembered acts of kindness and of love; many lonely hearts have been cheered; many pleasant friendships formed, and a broader, happier social life made possible by a common meeting place.

Hamilton Grange still enjoys a good working membership, and it hopes to be of still greater service to the community in times to come.

The charter members of Hamilton Grange were: Eli E. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. Ames, Mr. and Mrs. A. Ashley, Mr. and Mrs. Milo J. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Baxter, Mr. and Mrs. John Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Cady, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Cooper.

C. Fields, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Hagar, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Haydon, J. B. Hendryx, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Levi A. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Lee, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Mallory, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Morehouse, Miss Mamie Morehouse.

A. A. Olds, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Osborne, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Osborn, Mr. and Mrs. Judson Phelps, J. C. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Prince, F. E. Shoudy, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Smith, B. F. Sterritt, Jarvis Skinner, C. VanDuzer, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Waite, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Weeks, Mr. and Mrs. G. G. B. Yeckley.

FIRST AUTO RIDE

By the courtesy of Mr. Fred Payne of Hamilton, a friend and former neighbor, Grandma Rice, had her first automobile ride last Saturday evening.

Owing to a sprained ankle she had to be carried to and from the car and at first she thought she could not ride far, but she enjoyed the ride so much that she said nothing about stopping and she was taken for a ten-mile ride.

She also had a short visit with Mrs. Payne and her three daughters, and with her grandchildren Mr. and Mrs. John Rice. The evening was a very happy one and many thanks are due to Mr. Payne for his kindness.

VOLINIA SCHOOL HAS HISTORY

SESSIONS FIRST HELD IN HOME OF MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH WARREN IN THAT TOWNSHIP.

Among the Volinia pioneers of the thirties were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Warner, parents of Asa Warner, says the Dowagiac News, who bought 80 acres on section nine and passed their days there. In the days before a school house was provided, school was kept in their home a short time, a three or four months school in winter being all that was held in those days. In 1845 plans were laid for the first school, and Richard Huyck was clerk of the Board which sent out the notices that the school inspectors of the township had formed a school district of sections nine and 16 and that the first meeting would be held at the home of J. B. Gard, September 30, 1848 Mr. Huyck spelled Volinia somewhat differently than it is spelled now, spelling it "Volena", while in some of the papers relating to the organization it is spelled "Volina."

Among some of the old time settlers who helped organize this district were Hubbel Warner, Joseph Warner, Jasper Van Curen, R. J. Huyck, Oscar F. Hall, the latter moving to Marcellus township and at one time being a preacher; J. H. Rich and others, all prominent in their day. They finally voted to erect a school house on the south west corner of what is now the Van Curen farm, across the road from Mr. Warner's and to build the school house by subscription instead of tax At a meeting held September 2, 1852, it was voted that "School District No. 6 unite with the adjoining district providing that District No. 2 agree to locate a school site at the westwood west of Charleston."

This historic school is being taught this winter by Miss Lisle Casterline of Penn. The surroundings are different from what they were back where these pioneers were trying to find a place to school their children, and the methods of teaching and the books are different.

VOLINIA IN THE FORTIES

GEORGE SCOTT OF MARCELLUS TELLS ABOUT THE CASS COUNTY SETTLEMENT WHEN HE WAS A BOY OVER SEVENTY YEARS AGO.

George Scott of Marcellus, says The News, has now reached his four score years. He came with his parents from New York state when he was but three years of age and has spent 77 years in this vicinity, so reminiscences from him are not only interesting, but authentic.

Mr. Scott's boyhood home was in the old village of Volinia, which was located about a mile north of the present village of Nicholsville. The ground on which the east side of the village stood is now a part of the M. B. Lawrence farm and the west side of the village is a part of the F. G. Pollock farm. In the northwest part of the village lived Ezra Houk, a half brother to Mr. Scott, then came R. J. Huyck, who was village postmaster and kept a hotel. Mr. Huyck also owned property in the village. South of him was property owned by Wm. Scott, the father of our friend George. He also had property in the northeast part of town.

Here George Scott went when he was three years of age and spent the days of his boyhood and young manhood. Next east of Wm. Scott lived his son-in-law, Landon Daniels. The main street of the town was the north and south road, which is still the main road in that locality, but at that time there was also an almost east and west road which is now closed.

Although the village was very small it supported two schools, a common school on the north side of the cross street and a high school on the south side taught by T. N. Copley, whose daughter, Mrs. Eckenberger, now lives in Decatur. At these schools Mr. Scott commenced his education with the three "R's" in the year 1840. There is but one other person living who attended school there at that early date. That is Mrs. Nancy Gard, mother of Ed. Gard, she being now 86 years of age.

The school Mr. Scott attended was burned in 1842 and with it his books also went up in smoke. After that for some time the reading and spelling lessons were given from the Bible.

Volinia then had a public square, a public well, two stores, a cooper shop and a blacksmith shop and had promise of being a thriving village.

MARVIN HINKLEY

Marvin Hinkley was born in Monroe county, state of New York, on the 21st day of February, 1845, and died at his home in the village of Decatur May 15th, 1914, at the age of sixty-nine years, two months and twenty-one days.

His father, Henry Hinkley, and mother, Cecelia Wellman Hinkley, being farmer folk, the first eleven years of his life were spent on a farm four miles from the village of Spencerport, one of the numerous small towns that line the banks of Erie Canal.

In 1856, an emigration movement to Michigan, Illinois, and other frontier states was popular and the Hinkley family, with relatives made the journey to Kalamazoo, Michigan, via the New York Central and newly constructed Michigan Central railroads. A year was spent in that city, during which the father and an older brother, Myron, were employed at hewing ties for construction of the railroad west of Kalamazoo and little Marvin "helped to keep the wolf from the door" as ne often expressed it by carrying wood into second and third story office buildings.

The winter of '57 brought the tie hewers to Decatur, where the father thought best to locate. One cold night in February the family made the trip to this village, through a severe snow storm, being nine hours on the road. And here Marvin Hinkley has since lived, grown to manhood, established for himself a home, and created a life business, making an everlasting reputation for honesty and uprightness.

As a young man, he was industrious, ambitious and a good mechanic. In 1861, during the first of the Civil War he went south as a Commissary's Aide, served six months and saw much of real warfare. For a number of years he held various positions in the stave and heading mills of Decatur, later becoming owner of numerous heading mills located at Hartford, Galien, Breedsville, Berlamont, and other towns in southern Michigan, as well as in this village.

December 27, 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Mattie J. Lumbard of Decatur. To this union were born seven children, Edith, J. Henry, Morris, Agnes, Cecelia, LeRoy and Myron A. Of these five are still living, Edith having died in infancy and Morris passing away in 1895 at the age of eighteen.

During the year 1871 he was made a Master Mason by Decatur lodge F. and Accepted Masons and was a faithful and highly respected member of that fraternity the remainder of his life. He was active in the lodge as long as health permitted, after which he took much interest in reports of its welfare.

As a public man he was very active. Probably no one has given more time and thought for the welfare of this community than Marvin Hinkley. He served on the School Board of School District No. 4, for twenty-one years, was several times elected Supervisor and Treasurer of Decatur township, and has served a number of years on the Common Council of the village, both as President and Trustee. When the Water Works of the village was established, he was President of the Council, and was one of the most influencial workers for it. As a fellow-member on one of these boards said, "his clear brain and straightforwardness solved many problems for us."

He was not a member of any church organization, but contributed liberally to the support of the churches. When a boy he served several years as usher in the Presbyterian church of this village.

In 1870 Mr. Hinkley became a partner in the Decatur Stave Company, holding an interest in the institution as long as it was in operation. In 1890, with L. D. Roberts as partner the Hinkley & Roberts Measure Factory was started. A few years later the plant was enlarged with the addition of Theodore Trowbridge as third partner, and until 1911, it operated under the name of Hinkley, Roberts & Co. That year he bought the interests of his partners and became sole owner, a dream of his declining years.

But dreams are not always to be fully realized. Within a month after the purchase, he was stricken by a sickness from which he never entirely recovered. The few months of life were continual suffering, made as light as possible by the care of a wife who never left his side except when relieved by loving children.

His friends will miss him, but in the family his place can never be filled. He loved home and spent his time there when not at work. He was away from home but one Sunday during forty-three years of married life.

He is survived by a wife, five children, eight grand children and two sisters, both of the latter being ill and unable to attend the funeral which was held Tuesday, May 19, at one o'clock in the Presbyterian church. Services were in charge of the Decatur Lodge F & A. M., Rev. Tench preaching the funeral sermon and the Masonic burial service was given at the cemetery.

Those from away who attended the funeral were Mrs. Mary Hinkley, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Hinkley, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moore and Mrs. Emma Cole of Benton Harbor, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hinkley of Hartford, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Pierce and family of Kalamazoo and Mrs. J. H. Hinkley and daughters of Bloomingdale.

ANDREW CORWIN, PIONEER OF HAMILTON

Well Known Citizen For Many Years Passed Away In His First Illness At Age of Seventy-Seven Years.

EVENTS OF HIS LIFE

Andrew Jackson Corwin was born in Allegheny county, New York, February 16, 1837, and died in Hamilton township, Van Buren county, Michigan, March 1, 1914, at the age of seventy-seven years.

When he was eighteen years old he came with his parents and brothers and sisters to Michigan, making the journey overland with team and wagon The family located in the township of Keeler and later Andrew returned to New York, where he married Maria J. Hardy, January 23, 1862.

He brought his bride to the farm he had acquired in Hamilton and there was born their eldest son William. They afterwards returned to New York where they remained four years and there their eldest daughter, Ella was born. Thoy again returned to the old home in Hamilton where Mr. Corwin resided until his death.

The children are William of Houlton, Oregon, Ella, who married Edw. Corwin and died in May, 1900, Lenna, wife of Robt. L. Johnson of Lawrence, Fred of Wayne township, Lizzie, who married Daniel Weist and resides in Dowagiac and Orson of Brooklyn, Indiana.

The parents of Andrew Corwin were Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Corwin, they died in Keeler township and each lived to nearly ninety-one years of age. Of their children there are left, Lewis and David in New York, Hiram of Keeler, Mrs. Lydia Baxter of Dowagiac, and Mrs. Frank Baker of Decatur.

With Mr. Corwin's hereditary right to long life, his powerful physique and his excellent health, it was thought by his relatives that he would live many years longer. He passed away of typhoid pneumonia and it was his first illness.

Mr. Corwin was married a second time to Lydia Ann Geer May 13, 1907, who survives him in the lonely home.

Mr. Corwin was a man of temperate habits, upright moral character, strict business integrity, kind in h's family and an accomodating neighbor to those whom he regarded as his friends He was generous almost to a fault.

While not one of the earliest settlers he came to this county when the cleared farm was the exception, when large tracts of forest sheltered game in abundance and lured the sportsmen to their shadowy retreats. He passed many days of pleasure and profit in the woods.

In the earlier times when the social life was that of a new country many an evening's visit was enlivened by Mr. Corwin's hunting stories delightfully told in his characteristic way.

A few more years, a few more occasions when we shall be called as today to assist in the rites of a friend and neighbor and the race of pioneers will have passed away.

Years of our Childhood merry with play,
Years of our youthtide, happy and gay,
Years of our manhood covered with care,
Years when they cometh, silvery hairs.
Swiftly and silently, onward they roll,
Each one is bringing us nearer our goal,
Courage thou Christian, mourn not their flight,
Bravely press onward, home is in sight
Safe through those portals toil shall be done,
Sin shall be vanquished, Christ shall be won.
Let the bright prospect, then gladden the soul,
As the years bring us still nearer the goal.

Funeral services were held at the home Wednesday, March 4, at one o'clock in the afternoon. Elder J. J. Terry of Buchanan officiated and burial was in Hamilton cemetery.

WILD PIGEONS

By Franklin S. Dewey.

The American wild pigeon (ectopistes migratorious) was the most beautiful and graceful bird that ever inhabited North America. Its back was a variable blue, its neck richly glossed with metallic golden violet and below a purplish or brownish red blending finally into violet and white. Its supern stately grace was in perfect harmony with its surpassing beauty and tint and coloring.

At the time of the early settlement of the Lake Region up to fifty years ago these couriers of the air swarmed in immense numbers and while all the various other birds were far more numerous than now, yet the endless swarms of pigeons must have far outnumbered all the other birds combined. They were caught in trap-nets by the thousands and shipped to eastern markets, and whole shiploads were sold in New York as low as a cent apiece. As with the buffalo, many more fell to the appetite to kill than to the appetite to consume. They were essentially a gregarious bird, living and moving in flocks of many millions, and as they swept in vast clouds low above the earth, they fairly darkened the sky. By taking a partially concealed position on some bare round top elevation one could easily strike down hundreds with no other weapons than clubs or long poles.

As they were too heavy to light on the top of growing grain without going down out of sight, they were rarely destructive, but after the grain was harvested I have seen them literally cover great stubble fields and in two or three minutes every kernel in the field would be consumed. Whereupon at a given signal they would simultaneously mount the air and with their hundreds of wings striking each other the rushing noise was like that of a teriffic gale or hurricane. They were in a sense migratory birds, and yet not as other birds are, for they went in any direction that their wants impelled them, or the storms or snows might drive them.

A hundred miles west of Detroit was one of their nesting places or breeding grounds, where year after year they congregated by millions. They built their nests mainly in oak trees. These were completely loaded with nests and many were broken down by their weight. So far as I know this was the only nesting place in Michigan except two or three very much smaller ones near Petoskey, but there were ohters both in the United States and Canada. The tract which these birds occupied as their home was about twenty-eight miles long and four miles wide, or more than seventy thousand acres, thickly wooded with more than five hundred nests to the acre or at least forty million nests, with fully seventy-five million eggs all hatching at the same time.

Men and boys traveled long distances with teams and great lumber wagons and armed with long poles, carried on their ruthless slaughter until their wagons were filed with dead birds and their thirst for slaughter was satisfied.

The celebrated naturalist, Audubon, describes a similar nesting place in Kentucky which was forty miles long and three miles wide and contained as many nests as the trees could hold without breaking. Indeed, many were broken down by the great weight of nests and birds.

These beautiful aristocrats of the wild moved with almost incredibility swiftness, and the flock that was here today might be five hundred miles away tomorrow and still five hundred miles farther the next day. Distance seemed nothing to them.

The flocks were all perfectly generaled. The leader selected the place for alighting and for feeding, and posted many sentinels on tall trees whenever the flock was feeding.

A single sharp prolonged scream of warning would instantly lift that mighty swarm of tens or hundreds of thousands and in a minute they would be a mile away.

I was never able to make an estimate of the numbers in those vast living clouds. Professor Audubon describes many flocks, one of which he estimated to contain one billion one hundred million pigeons. The figures are bewildering, and if understood they would be all but unbelievable, and they are still more incredibility when we consider this vast number from another viewpoint. A full grown wild or passenger pigeon from the tip of bill to end of tail is about eighteen nches long. Suppose, therefore, this flock of more than a billion birds were flying in single file nose by tail, they would extend one billion six hundred million feet or three hundred thousand miles or twelve times around the world, or the line would reach from earth to moon and sixty thousand miles beyond.

The celebrated naturalist, Wilson, also describes one of many flocks observed by him. It was 240 miles long, requiring more than four hours to pass, and according to his reckoning, contained two billion and seventy two thousand birds. This flock would furnish a pigeon and a half apiece for every man, woman and child on earth. In a single file, they would reach 633,523 miles, or twenty-five times around the world. To feed this single flock of birds for one day he estimated would require 17,424,000 bushels of grain. But while they were fond of grain, it was not their natural food. They subsisted mostly on acorns, beechnuts, berries and even insects which were found in vast quantities apparently almost for them alone, and as their digestion did not always destroy the seed germ, their food plants were perfectly disseminated over the entire area of their habitat.

While describing further this most interesting creature of memory and history, we may be pardoned for trenching still more on credulity by analyzing the amount of its required daily consumption. Seventeen million, four hundred and twenty-four thousand bushels would be about a billion pounds, or 26,000 carloads of 40,000 pounds each. In close trains ,these cars would reach 200 miles .This would mean that in fifteen days that single flock of pigeons could unload a solid train reaching across the continent of North Amerca.

And there were other flocks with gripes in their tripes and hunger to be assuaged. And, too, there were billions of other birds and animals all daily and hourly digging and pecking at the breast of Mother Earth, while she mas making her utmost exertions to keep pace with their demands.

Where have all these myriads of beautiful birds gone?

The ruination of their feeding grounds, the destruction of their vast forest homes by the onward march of civilization, their easy slaughter, the terrible blizzard over their entire range on the first day of 1864, and the severe winters and long cold springs between 1860 and 1870—all these have swept them from the earth. The last remnant of their race that I ever saw in the wild was more than thirty years ago. It was persued by a "bullet hawk" or "pigeon hawk", and was fleeing at the rate of a mile and a half a minute. A lucky shot brought down the hawk, and I have the satisfaction of feeling that I saved the life of the last wild pigeon my eyes ever looked on.

IN THE DAYS OF LONG AGO

THE DECATUR SCHOOL AS IT WAS WHEN I ATTENDED WITH MR. BURKHEAD AS PRINCIPAL.

Professor Burkhed was not only a good disciplinarian, but an up-to-date, thorough and consciencious teacher. He believed in the finer part of education as well as the practical, the part that made you appear educated, such as good writing, spelling, reading, and good language, in cantrast to Professor Upton, whose hobby was Latin and mathematics.

He did a great many things not required because he believed in them. The first half hour after devotionals was given to music, and we were marked the same as for any study I remember that was the only thing in which James Jordan did not stand nearly perfect. He used to be marked as low as three in music.

Then for five minutes every forenoon and afternoon every window was raised and we went through exercises in physical culture.

In the botany class we were required to draw pictures on the blackboard, which served to bring out a talent in many not known to exist.

The last ten minutes before school closed he gave us good talks on things we ought to know which I still quote as those around me can testify. For an hour after school he drilled the Seniors in Normal work, the notes of which I kept until left behind in the old home.

He regraded the school and put it on the University list; we had all the sciences, higher mathematics and others not in the list now.

We had a good school board, too. The names of Newton Foster, L. T. Rawson, J. L. Harrison, A. B. Copley, and W. E. Trowbridge being on my diploma, and I think we were pretty well equipped for those days.

MANY MOTTOES

There was a motto on each side of the clock 'Knowledge is Power" and "God Bless Our School" and the pictures of George Washington and Daniel Webster on each side of the entrances and such mottoes as "He that would have the first fruit must climb the tree," and others printed at the top of the blackboards all around the room. It was in a day of mottoes.

I remember a fine collection of specimens in a large case in the office for geology and natural history and also plenty of books, (his own private collection, I think, which he took away w' h him) and we had things required for experiments in philosophy and chemistry in the east recitation room.

If we had a talent it was discovered, and we were required to use it. I only regret the too strenuous practice which injured my voice in preparing for entertainments given every two weeks to pay for an organ, which is now in one of the lower rooms.

We had a large school then, one hundred ten in the high school room, of which a great many were foreign pupils. Some of the finest scholars were turned out occupying the highest positions.

Prof. Burkhead is now an old man, broken in health, as a letter received from him last Christmas would indicate, living in California with his wife and married daughter ,his only son having died in 1911. He has no grandchildren to cheer his declining years, which is a sorrow to him, but his memory and good works will be carried down to coming generations.

WELL KNOWN LAND MARK DESTROYED

WASSMAN'S GRIST MILL IN HAMILTON, BUILT BY ROBERT NESBITT IN 1857 STRUCK BY LIGHTNING AND BURNED SATURDAY NIGHT.

The grist mill built by Robert Nesbitt in 1857 and one of the oldest land marks in Hamilton township was destroyed by fire last Saturday night.

Mr. Nesbitt sold the mill to Charles Wassman and eleven years ago it was purchased by his son John Wassman who has gradually improved by installing new machinery until it became one of the best of its kind in the state. Only last spring its flour won second prize in a national competition.

The cause of the fire is not definitely known but the building was undoubtedly struck by lightning. Mr. and Mrs. Wassman, whose home was near by were awakened by the bright light caused by the flames, at 3:30 Sunday morning. The building was then enveloped in flames and nothing could be saved.

The building and its contents are insured in the Miller's Mutual of Lansing for $2,500. The machinery alone invoiced $2,600 and there was also a loss of 800 bushels of grain. A representative of the Insurance Company adjusted the loss Tuesday. About 150 bushels of grain belonging to farmers was also lost. This was insured in the Cass County Mutual and Edson Woodman adjusted their claims Wednesday.

The total loss to Mr. Wassman is $6,000. Neighbors and customers from that vicinity in large numbers have offered their services to help in rebuilding the mill and construction of a new mill will begin immediately.

PLEASANT RECOLLECTIONS OF THE PAST

BY CHARLES A. BELLIS.

San Bernardino, California.
Editor Decatur Republican:

While looking over my daily mail I took a pleasing glance over the newsy columns of the dear old Republican, which through its many years of faithful service as a news messenger has become a part of every home that it enters, no matter if it be in Decatur or surrounding country, or in the home of former residents of Van Buren county, who have chosen other parts of the world to seek fame or fortune. Each number of the Republican brings some message from the old home that takes one back over the mountains of time, and as we turn each page we find ourselves wandering again in the Valley of Yesterday when we were boys and girls in the Wolverine state.

Among the most interesting articles in the Republican that have come to my notice recently was the news letter by Mr. Frank Flagg, giving an account of the homecoming Picnic at the Lee school May 29th.

It is with deep regret that I was not a member of that happy group of former students of that district, that gathered once more under the majestic old oak trees on the school ground, and reviewed old stories of other days. For I, myself, have spent many happy days as a boy among the famous old Oaks, that have stood guard over the school grounds for over half a century. I lived there several years in the immediate neighborhood of the Lee school and worked as a farm hand on the old Lee homestead, and recall the many happy evenings that I have spent at the Debating contest or old-fashioned Lyceums in the old Yellow school house in the winters of 1890, '91, and '92.

The method of entertainment, though somewhat crude compared to the present day functions, was then enjoyed by all, both old and young, for they would bundle up in fur coats and big robes and go in sleigh loads for many miles to the Lyceums, which were looked forward to with as much interest as the young people of today would to a banquet.

I will endeavor to give the program of the evening as I remember it over 20 years ago:

AT THE LYCEUM

With the round oak stove filled to the top with glowing embers to thaw out the frost bitten toes and fingers, everyone gathered around for a short visiting intermission, then meeting is called to order by President Jim Henry. Minutes of the last meeting read by secretary Kit Lee. Speaking--recitation by Winnie Crawford nee Marks; Banjo Solo by Henry Utter; Song Duet by Will and Essa Lennox; Oration by Owen Marks; Duet by Mrs. Jennie Steele and daughter, Halo; Mouth Organ Solo by Chas. Bellis; More recitations by the Conklin children; dialogue Speaking by Lee District Young People.

Recess, followed by debating on question "Is there such a thing as luck." Sides taken by Owen Marks, negative, Will Lee affirmative, after a red hot debate for 2 hours, question won by Owen Marks. Good night song sung by Will Lennox, meeting adjourned for one week by Mr. President.

Question Chosen for next meeting and another school district challenged for a joint debate.

I am sure that many of the readers of the Republican will recall these happy events with pleasure, and will say for Mr. Frank Flagg, whom I recall as a little barefoot boy of the Braybrooks District, that he deserves a great deal of credit for once more calling together the old friends and neighbors who are left in the nearby country.

If Life's wheel of fortune ever turns to the right place for me I shall some day attend one of those home coming events, for to me there is nothing that brings us all nearer together in this life than for old friends to meet once a year and swap stories of bygone days. I know that many readers of the Republican will remember me as a Hamilton farm hand when a boy, and I trust some of the other boys who have left Decatur for other fields, will write a news letter, for I surely do enjoy reading these letters, and hav many of them preserved as future reference.

Mrs. Carrie Quest Thomas, wife of M. S. Thomas, was born in New York in 1856, came to Decatur in 1872 and graduated from the Decatur High school in the class of 1875. She passed away August 8.

Eckenberger and Hunt own 70 acres of muck land a half mile out of Decatur on the New Swamp road. They have just rebuilt their distillery and it is one of the best on the muck.

Miss Elizabeth Dewey has been teaching in Thief River Falls, Minn. She has also filed on a government claim of 160 acres.

Pete Smith and Garret Neinhuis have received telegrams from the government of Holland which read,--"I call thee immediately to arms." Neither heeded the call. Both are native Hollanders who came to America about 2 years ago. A large number of Hollanders in Kalamazoo received the call and about 60 responded. Holland has not yet made declaration of war but is making all arrangements for a dangerous conflict.

THE HINCKLEY MEASURE MFG. COMPANY
DECATUR'S LARGEST MFG. ENTERPRISE

By far the largest manufacturing enterprise in Decatur in respect to size and equipment of plant, number of men employed and volume and extent of business is the Hinckley Measure Factory located on George Street near the M.C.R.R.

This enterprise was established here twenty-four years ago by Marvin Hinckley and L.D. Roberts. Later it was owned and managed exclusively by Mr. Marvin Hinckley. Since his death recently, Mr. L.R. Hinckley has taken charge and is now the efficient superintendent and manager.

They employ more than twenty expert workmen who are kept busy the year through. They make wooden measures in various sizes from quarts to half bushels, also potato crates, celery and asparagus crates and peppermint and celery boxes.

The latter find a ready sale in our local trade area, and in nearly every state in the union. Large candy manufacturing corcerns use their products, also tobacco growers and manufacturers throughout the south.

The importance of this firm and its products in extending the name of Decatur as a manufacturing point can hardly be over emphasized.

Mr. L.R. Hinckley, the manager and superintendent is a thorough business man and much credit is due him for his hearty support of movements for the growth and improvement of Decatur and this region.

SWEET THOUGHTS OF THE PAST

Written By One Of The Earliest Pupils in the Lee District School Who Attended the Reunion in May

Having been a pupil in the Lee School from the age of five to fifteen years, and later a teacher, I was entitled to the privilege of attending the reunion or home coming which was celebrated this year for the first time on May 29, 1914.

A few weeks previous to the occasion it was announced by their teacher, Frank Flagg, urging all who were interested to come and meet with old teachers and school mates and make it a glad and happy day, one long to be remembered.

Thinking as one naturally would, after the passing of so many years, that there would be few, if any, familiar faces there to greet me, I was loth to go, and had it not been for the kindness of Mr. Hanilton, an old-time pupil, who offered to take all his auto would accommodate, I should have missed a rare treat.

It was as I had anticipated, however, not one of my old teachers was there; only four school mates and but two of my pupils.

Visions of the Past

Upon entering the old school house for the first time, perhaps, in forty years, I caught as it were, visions of the many dear forms that had passed in and out of those same doors and on into this great beyond where the last great reunion will be held. While all around me was joy and gladness, a feeling of sadness stole over me which was hard to overcome.

Many who were present gave incidents and experiences of their old school days in a pleasing and happy manner with an occasional response by Mr. Flagg which added much to the interest of the meeting. The music was inspiring, especially the opening song, "Sweet Home," which touched a tender chord, owing to the change which time and sorrow had wrought in many of the older ones present.

A request was made by Kitty Lee Warner for the old song, "Silver Threads Among The Gold." She had heard it sung by Eda Youells in days gone by and would love to hear her again. The request was granted, Mrs. Youells singing it very sweetly, accompanied by Mrs. Ruth Guerney Alden on the organ.

Lydia Kinsbury

As memory brings before me the many teachers of my early school days there was one in particular, a beautiful young girl of eighteen, who was a graduate of Hillsdale College. Not only was she beautiful and lovely, but she was an artist and writer. The walls of the school room were covered with her paintings, and many of her writings were published in the Dollar Newspaper, a weekly paper then published in Detroit. She also wrote for other periodicals of note.

All the scholars loved Lydia Kinsbury and she had warm friends among the older members of the district. She had known much of trouble and sorrow for one of her years, which may account for the vein of sadness which runs through many of her poems, one of which is published below.

She it was who gave to the school the name of "Oak Grove." May the name be revived as no other fits it so well.

FAREWELL TO OAK GROVE
By: "Lilly Lea" (Lydia Kinsbury)

I have left thee, "Oak Grove" and forever,
Each vine covered walk and each bower,
Soon, soon, I shall wander, but never,
Will time blot from memory this hour.

Oft' here have I counted their muses
As at twilight alone I have strayed,
Something holy around thee infuses,
Inspiration within thy loved shade.

The broad silver moon has shown nightly
Above me like sentinel grand.
Each star glistens softly and brightly,
Spirit like from you June "better land."

There are flowers of unrivaled perfection,
Blooming wildly, all sparkling with dew,
I have gathered a favorite collection
To preserve which my love will renew.

I go far away and forever –
With reluctance I leave "Lilly Lake,"
But the bright dream of poetry forever ever,
Shall with thee in fancy partake.

Farewell dear "Oak Grove" with thy flowers,
And birds with the soft downy wing;
My heart shall still cherish thy bowers
When I'm lonely of thee I will sing.

MEASURE FACTORY

It Was Reported That The Measure Factory Produced One Third Of All The Measures In The United States.

THE HAPPIEST DAY OF MY LIFE

The Fourth of July, 1863, the Day the News of the Battle of Gettysburg Reached Decatur.

Of all the days of my life—good, bad and indifferent—there is one that stands out in my memory as the one day, preeminently, from which I extracted the most pleasure, and that was the 4th of July, 1863.

For weeks before this eventful day, my cousin Jim and I had been planning and plotting to have a big time at home. My people lived on a farm and my cousin in Dowagiac. The day before the Fourth I came to town with father, we met Jim at the train, and he was "loaded for bear", with fire crackers, pin wheels, Roman candles, rockets and other explosives ,and with all the rest he had an imitation cannon about a foot long, mounted on a carriage and wheels, regular artillery style. Of course, I had a similar supply of fire crackers. Cannon crackers and many other things of that sort that are common nowadays, were unknown then, but we did the best we could and had everything that would make a noise.

My mother gave us permission to invite all the neighborhood children and said she would get dinner and supper for the crowd. I cannot remember all of the children's names that were there that day, but there must have been twelve or fifteen of them, and of all that I know anything about now, I can only recall five or six, besides myself, who are still alive.

Well, as soon as there was the faintest streak of daylight on the morning of the Fourth, Jim and I were up and that toy cannon was booming away. It could make some noise, too, when it was half filled with powder and packed with wadding and stones till they stuck out of the muzzle. Why it didn't burst in the course of the day has always been a mystery to me.

We made as much noise as we could until breakfast time. After that was over the neighbor children began to flock in. They came early and stayed late. There was no town celebration that year to attract any of them to Decatur.

Jim was master of ceremonies, he always led and I followed him and in the invited company there were Emory and Inez, Tommy and Addie, Jack and Louisa, Emily and Ida, Kitty and Ella, Georgia and Russell and some others that I cannot remember now. We had a large flag that was displayed on a pole all day.

At noon mother called us to dinner at tables set out under the trees. Mother was never so happy as when feeding a lot of kids and she fairly outdid herself that day and the kids did to.

After the dinner was over father hitched up the team and the grownups went off to Decatur and left us to "go it alone". Why some of us children didn't go to heaven that day by the gunpowder route, beats me, for we certainly took chances enough. But they say that Providence protects children and fools, and it must be so, or some of us would have been killed.

I owned a model of a ship, about two feet long, rigged with masts and sails, and we called her the "Alabama"—after the famous Confederate privateer of that name, and we sent her on a voyage on the pond. Then we would load Jim's cannon to the muzzle, with stones and bombard the Alabama by the hour until we finally shot her all to pieces and she went to the bottom.

About supper time the folks came back from town, and father told us that Vicksburg had surrendered and there had been a terrible battle fought in Pennsylvania (at Gettysburg it proved to be.) and that it was reported that the Union army had won a big victory over the rebels. This news touched off our patriotism anew, and after mother had given us all a good supper, we went at it again, hammer and tongs.

Father had brought back from town, on the strength of the good news, more fire crackers, powder and fireworks and we made things ring until dark.

Then came the big thing of the whole day, the fireworks. They would undoubtedly be called very common place nowadays and most of the present day children would stick up their noses at our display and call it a bum show, but to us it was simply great. We all enjoyed it beyond measure and it was talked about by the children for weeks afterward.

I wonder if any of these children, who are still alive, remember that day as I do. They are all old people now. But everything has to have an end, and about 10 o'clock we used up the last of the fireworks, the children went home and we went to bed, satisfied that we had done our best to help our country in those perilous times.

The Fourth came on Saturday that year, so the next day was Sunday and Jim and I were contented to sleep nearly all day, for we were thoroughly tired out. The next day, Monday, Jim went home and I was left alone, to think it all over, and pick up the pieces, but that was my very best day.

(The children referred to in Mr. Tuttle's story are now grown grey with the passing of over half a century, those who are still among the living. Their full names are James Heddon, his cousin, Emory H. Place, Mrs. Inez Place Osborn, Tommie Griffin, Mrs. Addie Griffin Kent, Jack Johnson, Mrs. Louise Johnson Watson, Mrs. Emily Coleman Mitchell, Mrs. Ida Coleman Snow, Kittie Bradt, Mrs. Ella Davenport French, George and Russell Roberts.—Ed.)

A FINE BAND CONCERT

A LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS WELL-RENDERED LOCAL PROGRAM IN TOWN HALL

One of the best concerts ever given by the Decatur band was that of last Thursday evening, December second. So many encores were demanded that the program lasted fully two hours. The band was well pleased with the attendance and reception from the home people and their pleasure was well expressed by Charles Upfield in the curtain announcement. About fifty-five dollars was cleared a part of which was used to pay for suits and the rest will be used in keeping up room rent and requirements for practice the coming winter.

Those who took part in the program were: Carleton Lindsley, violin and leader; Angus Cary, flute; William Schuchert, of Dowagiac, solo clarinet; Myron Hinckley, second clarinet; Charles Upfield, cornet; Warren Moshier, trombone; Hal Crane, drums and traps; Mrs. Eva Lawrence, pianist.

Miss Lucille Owen, instructor in the Decatur High School, violinist, Mrs. George E. Adams, contralto, Miss Anita Youells, in piano logue and a male quartet composed of Henry Hinckley, George E. Adams, Frank Flagg and Charles Upfield gave excellent in this part. THE OLD DUTCH BAND was the closing number and it brought down the house.

Everybody should be a booster for the band.

HELPED BUILD MICHIGAN CENTRAL

Andrew Jackson Timmons of Iowa came to Decatur Monday morning. He is visiting his brother at Sisters Lake.

Mr. Timmons has tramped over the ground of Decatur before there was a settlement here. He was born in Ohio 88 years ago but his pioneer parents made a clearing 3 miles west of Keeler away back in the 30's and Andrew, lived there until he was 21. When he became a prospector for gold in California, he finally came back as far as Iowa, where he still resides.

When the Michigan Central railraod was in course of construction, Mr. Timmons was one of the workers. Sand was drawn by the carload to fill in the road-bed across the big swamp. Each car was drawn by a single horse and he was one of the drivers.

BEGINNING OF MUCK LAND INDUSTRY

Effort put forth on part of a few far-sighted citizens 27 years ago to have the big swamp drained.

THEIR PREDICTIONS REALIZED

Milwaukee, Wis.
Dec. 18, 1915

Editor of the Republican
Decatur, Michigan

My dear Sir:

The item in last week's Republican, "300 cars by express," stating that $50,000.00 express charges had been paid there in one year, recalled to my mind the time when some twenty-seven years ago the late L.T. Rawson and A.B. Copley, together with a few others, including myself worked tooth and nail to have the township vote an appropriation of one-half the amount necessary to drain the swamp which is now bringing the wonderful golden harvest to the town in which I always have taken and still do take particular pride. Under a special act of the legislature the state has voted to defray one-half of such expense, if the town voted the other. If I remember correctly, the proposition was carried by twenty-eight votes.

Some of the older inhabitants may recall the lively propoganda carried on in the "Republican" then edited by "Andy Johnson." I was the author of those articles, signed "S." In one of these I pictured the "Decatur of the future," a progressive town with pretty homes, good streets, uniform cement walks, water works and electric lights. Of course I felt that I was over-drawing the picture but believed that my zeal for the cause justified even that optimism. You may imagine my surprise when a visit to Decatur not many years thereafter proved that all my predictions and more, had come true and the dismal swamp had, as though by the magician's wand been transformed into the most fruitful land, into a well-tilled immense garden as far as the eye could reach which was then already bringing annually many thousands to be spent in the town. Decatur up to that period, at least in one direction, had to rely on poor farm land for support and development.

I have often regretted that the files of your paper containing the article herein referred to were destroyed in the fire of the Republican office some years ago.

Having thus taken an active part in bringing this wonderful improvement to the old home town these many years ago, I trust that I may be pardoned for my egotism in recalling the facts as above related, hoping that Decatur will continue to grow and develop until it may be enrolled among the prosperous cities of your great state, I am

Very truly yours,
/S/ Charles Schuster

DIGS UP FOUR BODIES

Attorney Otis Huff of Marcellus, who is quite a collector of relics, and who already has a large collection of ITNDIAN ARROW HEADS, BATTLE AXES, STONES FOR GRINDING CORN, ETC. HAS RECENTLY DUG UP FOUR BODIES IN AN OLD GRAVE IN Volinia and unearthed four skeletons of some prehistoric race which must have been giants in their day.

Mr. Huff said that along the chain of lakes from Big Fish Lake to Bunker Lake, there are many of these graves, although most of them have already been opened. In the vicinity of Swifts Lake, in Porter Township, Van Buren County, are alsoa number of these burial places.

Swift's Lake was once quite a large body of water, but the draining of lands in its vicinity has reduced its size. This same cause has lowered Gravel Lake, near by. This body of lakes, of which there are eight or ten within a radius of three or four miles, was undoubtedly the home of some race long ago extinct, for there are no traces of such a large race now, except in these long-forgotten graves.

Mr. Huff has located several of these graves, and as time permits, will make further explorations. He finds the bones in a good state of preservation, but seldom finds any implement of war, or peace, buried with them, although there have been some bodies dug up in the vicinity of Finch Lake which reveals quite a number of artifacts.

These were the bodies of a race which came after the race of giants. Needless to say, his findings created a great deal of curiosity.

LINCOLN CHAUTAUQUA COMING TO DECATUR

The Decatur Chautauqua course was organized Tuesday evening by the election of I.E. Roots, President, A.N. Moulton, Vice President; W.A. Wood, Secretary-Treasurer; De. J.M. Easton, chairman advertising and Oscar Newell, chairman ticket committee.

Two advance men of the Lincoln Chautauqua System were here and assisted in advertising the village and surrounding country and opening the sale of season tickets.

As the high standing of the Lincoln Chautauqua is becoming better known, interest in the week of entertainment in Decatur is increasing fast. The people are beginning to realize that something really good is coming and that it means not only pleasure to the people but it is the best evidence of the enterprise and thrift of our citizens.

It will be a duty and pleasure to all to help boost the Chautauqua and make it the success it deserves.

Application has been made to the Michigan Central Railroad Co. for use of the railroad's grounds opposite the hotel.

STATE PROHIBITION IN MICHIGAN DOUBTED BY EARLY SETTLERS

Discussion of Statement in Republican Last Week Brings Out Interesting Facts Concerning Decatur's Early History.

GEORGE NESBITT RODE HORSEBACK OVER THE SITE OF THE VILLAGE IN 1846

The statement in last week's Republican that Michigan was under state prohibition from 1853 to 1875 was read with a smile of incredulity by the oldest inhabitants whose memory of early days, including the saloons in Decatur is even more clear than it is of the affairs of more recent date.

"I don't believe a word of it", said George Nesbitt. "To tell the truth and shun the devil there were no less than fourteen saloons in Deatur during war times and business men and farmers in those days thought no more of stepping into a saloon and taking a drink of whiskey than they do now of buying a cigar. But the whiskey of fifty to sixty years ago was a far different grade of refreshment than we have now. It did not leave those raging headaches and tired feelings the next day. The boys would go on about their work as though nothing had happened.

"I remember the first saloon that was opened in Decatur. It was run by a man by the name of Dobbs in the days before the war. The story was started one cold winter's day that Dobb's whiskey had frozen up over night. It was a joke but it stuck to Dobbs as long as he stayed in Decatur. Dobbs' saloon was located where Hinckley's livery barn stands. Jim Dean opened the second saloon in Decatur about on the site of Dr. Maxwell's office and Bob Willis opened the third where Hamilton's furniture store is located. During the sixties and seventies, when the Saloon Dealers' Association says Michigan was under state Prohibition, there were more saloons in Decatur that at any other period in its history."

HAMILTON'S FIRST SETTLERS

In the visit with Mr. Nesbitt the writer gained a number of interesting facts concerning the early history of Decatur and Hamilton. His father, Robert Nesbitt, was one of the very first settlers of Hamilton township. Zabina Sterns, grandfather of our well known citizen, Bine Sterns, and a man by the name of Knickerbocker were probably the only men who came here before him. Knickerbocker lake was named for Knickerbocker and he was buried on the island in this lake about 1840. The island has since become a part of the mainland and it would not be inappropriate for the township or some interested person to mark the grave of this first settler.

Robert Nesbitt, that prince of pioneers, whose name will last in history as long as that of the township in which he settled, was born near Belfast, Ireland, in 1810. At the age of fourteen he came to America bringing $1,000 in cash with the responsible mission of delivering it to his older brother in Detroit. He first worked three years in a bakery in Detroit and then went onto a farm thirty miles distant. He next settled in Kalamazoo county for a short time and in 1830 located in north Hamilton where the beautiful Nesbitt home stands a pleasant reminder of his boundless power and energy.

FIRST VISIT TO DECATUR

George Nesbitt was born on this farm July 18, 1841, which makes him now past seventy-four years of age, but we doubt if a stranger would place him at over sixty. He made his first trip to Decatur in 1846, when he was five years old. There was no village of Decatur then, only the unbroken township. The few settlers had not been able to clear sufficient land to furnish hay for their stock and supplied their needs from the pieces of marsh hay on the nearby low lands. Robert Nesbitt and five year-old George drove to a patch of marsh hay where the Brownbridge barns now stand, but before cutting the father decided to look at the hay on a clearing commonly known as 'Ireland' and the two rode over there on the ponies. "Ireland" has since been known as the Rawson farm south of the village.

In the fall of 1848 the Michigan Central was built to Decatur and the following winter was so open that ploing and grading for the road was continued all through it. There was no depot here the first winter and goods shipped to Mr. Nesbitt from Detroit were delivered from the car.

George Nesbitt says the Widow Dixon and her three sons, Ham, Ed. and George, kept the first store in a small shack which burned down in Decatur's first fire about the year 1850. They then built the building which is now being remodeled by Brooks and Sons on the same site.

Col. Phelps first kept postoffice in a building back of Brigham's store on west Sherwood street. He later moved the office into his house which was located on the site of the Chadwick store. The Phelps house was moved onto the farm owned by Mrs. Henry McWilliams and was known for many years as the George Wesley Smith place. When George Wesley moved away the slot where letters were pushed through the door was still there. The Chadwick store now owned by L. G. Stewart was built in 1866.

DRAFTING MEN FOR SERVICE

Mr. Nesbitt tells an interesting story of drafting soldiers during the Civil War. The first draft was in the winter of '62 and '63. Able bodied men between the ages of 18 and 45 were subject to draft. Hamilton township was called upon to furnish two men and there were about two hundred from which to choose. The names of the two hundred were written on separate slips of paper and shaken together in a hat. The first two names out were compelle dto go to war or furnish substitutes. The drawing was on Main street in Decatur one forenoon. Nearly every one in Hamilton township and Decatur and other nearby places was present. The street was packed with people and excitement ran high. Tom Parmater, step-father of Milo Barton, was selected to draw the names out of the hat, and the first name out was that of George Nesbitt. Mr. Nesbitt was boosted onto the shoulders of a dozen or more young men and amid shouts and cheering headed a procession down Main street.

For the drawing of the second name the situation was equally as intense. About two hundred young men were there, all excited and wondering who would receive the other draft. Jo Steele, recklessly tempting the fates, shouted at the top of his voice, "Pull mine out next, pull mine out next." And sure enough the next name drawn was that of John Steele.

George Nesbitt hired a man from Paw Paw for $100 to go in his place. About three months later he sat down to dinner in the hotel at Paw Paw and the man sitting across from him was the man he had paid to take his place at the front. The substitute had passed the physical examination here but the army physicians had sent him back. The fellow had learned that the army physicians would not accept him and was making a business of selling himself as a substitute.

A drafted man who furnished a substitute was exempt for nine months. Later Mr. Nesbitt paid $300 under conscript which exempted him for three years and also put up $200 toward a fund to engage Canadians to enter the service.

The day of the drafting Decatur's fourteen saloons actually went dry but it was not on account of the Prohibition law. That night Robert Nesbitt, who was supervisor of Hamilton township went to Detroit and officially delivered the two men who responded to the draft. John Steele also furnished a substitute.

Michigan's Oldest Citizen

"Old Darky Banks" Still Living In Arlington Township At The Age Of 123. Was In The Battle Of New Orleans and Never Sold For Less Than $1,000 When A Slave.

(From a copy of the Republican of 1915).

Henry Banks, formerly known here as "Old Darky Banks," is still living with his daughter, Mrs. Nettie Chase in Arlington township, and is without doubt the oldest person in Michigan. As near as can be found his age is 123 years.

He still retains a good memory and relates with pride his assistance at the battle of New Orleans in 1814. He says he was a big boy then, 18 or 19, and there "wan't no feller as could put him on his back." He tells how he drove his master's team, 4 hoss and a mule from Paris to New Orleans, drew 40 soldiers on a big rack to help fight the British, and helped make fortifications of bales of cotton on the wharf to stop the cannon balls from the British gunboats under command of Sir Edward Peckingham.

He tells with great pleasure of how much he was sold for from trader to trader, never going for less than $1,000 and relates with gratitude his escape by the underground railroad to Detroit and Windsor and then to Van Buren county, 40 years ago, where he has since made his home.

He is crippled with rheumatism and gets around with great difficulty and wishes the good Lord would take him home; he says he doesn't want to live as long as Methusalah. His oldest daughter, aged 83, is living at Xenia, O., Jim is doing the clog with a show, and Oliver is a coachman in Cincinnati.

Decatur's First Newspaper

In 1859 or 1860 Rufus Nash published the first Decatur newspaper. He had it printed in Paw Paw and brought it over here and circulated it.

The paper did not pay and Ruf. abandoned it after two or three issues. Probably Mr. Van Flossen, who published the Paw Paw Free Press at that time printed it for him. We are unable to learn even the name of the publication.

C. P. Sweet started the Decatur Tribune about the year 1860 and ran it till the summer of '64 when it died a natural death.

Then Decatur was without a newspaper till the summer of 1865 when Moses Hull came here from Kalamazoo and started the Decatur Clarion. Six months later he sold it to A. W. Briggs who ran it six months longer and gave up the job.

Decatur was then without a newspaper for about a year.

In June, 1867, E. A. Blackman came here from Paw Paw where his father was a prominent lawyer and established the Decatur Republican.

MICHIGAN PROHIBITION IN NAME ONLY

O. W. ROWLAND OF PAW PAW GIVES FACTS CONCERNING EARLY STATE PROHIBITION LAW AND DECLARES THAT WHEN IT AGAIN GOES ONTO THE STATUTE BOOKS IT WILL BE ENFORCED TO THE LETTER.

Editor the Republican:

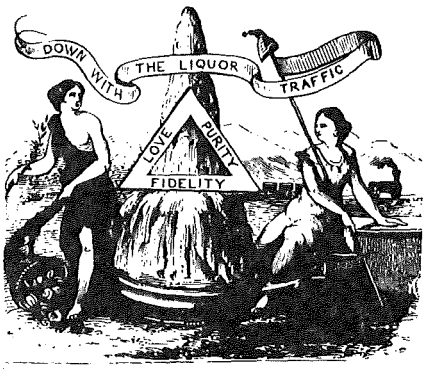
The discussion of the matter of prohibition in Michigan serves to illustrate the fallacy of relying upon memory touching events of half a century or more ago. A reference to the statutes of the state is all that is necessary to settle the controversy.

The constitution of the state adopted in 1850 contained the following provision: "The legislature shall not pass any act authorizing the sale of ardent spirits or other intoxicating liquors." This remained a part of the organic law of the state until the November election of 1876, at which time an amendment repealing this section was submitted to and adopted by a vote of the electors. It was only by the vote of the City of Detroit that a majority was obtained to strike this article out of the constitution, the state, outside of Wayne county, voting against the repeal of the section.

It is true that this clause of the constitution did not prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, but only forbade the licensing of the traffic, however, the legislature of 1853 passed an act prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spiritous and intoxicating liquors. This act was repealed by the legislature of 1855 and a new prohibitory law enacted in its stead. This latter law remained on the statute books, unrepealed, until 1875 or 1877. (I have not the statutes of those years handy and am uncertain which year it was, but I think it was 1875.)

Justices of the Peace were given jurisdiction to hear, try and determine all cases arising under its provisions. Druggists were required to give bonds, to be approved by competent authority, in the sum of from $500 to $1,000 before they could legally sell any such liquors.

The prohibitory clause of this statute was in the following words, "No person shall be allowed to manufacture or sell at any time, by himself, his clerks, servant or agent, directly or indirectly any spiritous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, a part of which is intoxicating."



The act did not forbid the manufacture and sale of wine or cider made from fruit grown or gathered by the manufacturer nor to beer made in Michigan, but it was made unlawful to sell beer in less than five gallon lots or to sell wine or cider in less quantity than one gallon.

So it appears that from 1853 to 1875, Michigan had a prohibitory law upon her statute books. That liquor was freely sold during those years in many localities in the state is true, as only spasmodic efforts were made to enforce the law, and when any attempt was made in that direction the moving parties were in danger of injury to person or property at the hands of those who were in favor of the unrestricted traffic.

Parties in the little village of Paw Paw and in other localities had their trees girdled and suffered other acts of indignity and vandalism because of their attempts to uphold the law. At best the statute was weak as compared with the provisions of the law that has been operative in Van Buren county for the past twenty-five years but public sentiment has undergone such a radical change since those old days before and since the civil war, that it has become a task of no greater difficulty to enforce a prohibitory law than it is to enforce any other criminal statute, and unless indications fail, the day is not far distant when state prohibition will again become the policy of Michigan, the traffic being already outlawed in more than half of its area

Past experience under the provisions of the local option law is an assurance that if state wide prohibition be again adopted it will surely be enforced.

CARRY PHONE IN POCKET

An entirely new device, invented by a Dutch scientist, is likely to do away with the cumbersome receiver and transmitter now in use. It is possible that the telephone connection of the future will be merely a tiny hole in the wall, not larger than the point of a pencil. The receiver and transmitter will be carried in one's pocket for in the new invention they are no larger than a watch.

The thermaphone as the inventor has named it, is much more sensative than the usual telephone receiver, so that messages can be heard much more clearly. A cross continent message with perfect relays, can be heard as perfect with a thermaphone as though the speaker were in the next room. There is no buzzing that occasionally makes telephoning annoying. Moreover, it is much more silent. No one can hear the message except the one receiving it.

The transmitter is also so sensitive that there is no need to speak loudly. The lower the voice the more clearly it can be heard. This would enable several telephones to be in use at the same time in a business office without creating a babel of sounds.

The principle of the thermaphone is simple. The magnet and diaphraghm of the present phone are replaced by a loop of exceedingly fine platinum wire within a small aluminum cover pierced with minute holes. Currents passing through the wire cause changes in temperature, alternating from heat to cold with great rapidity.

There is little to get out of order and the cost of manufacture is less than

STEPHEN BULLARD
Pioneer citizen of Hamilton who at 70 is hale and hearty, and sets good example of industry

One of Hamilton's grand old men is Stephen Bullard, farmer and sheep shearer, and The Harald has yet to hear his name spoken as that of one whose example was not good to follow.

Mr. Bullard has been a resident of Hamilton something like 50 years, and has been married 51. He is now on the shady of seventy, and since boyhood he has each season followed the occupation of a sheep shearer.

It would be hard to tell just how many sheep this wonderfully energetic man has shorn, but this year, when past seventy, he sheared over 1,000 and it didnt appear to hurt him, either, his best day's work being 40.

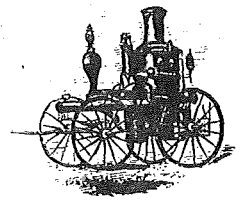
NEVER ON THE THIRTY-FIRST.

Bridegroom's Second Visit Would Be One Day Afterward.

Rev. Dr. William H. Fisburn, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, most sunshiny men in the world and likes nothing better than a good, wholesome joke, even if it is turned against himself. He was visited in his home on last St. Patrick's day by a prosperous looking couple who desired his kindly office in making them one. The man was an ironmaster from Pittsburg and the bride-elect was a Jersey woman. The business was quickly dispatched and the happy bridegroom came to the question so many in like fix ask the clergyman: "Just suit yourself as to that," said Dr. Fisburn as his eyes rested upon a thick roll of bills the ironmaster had dug out of his trousers' pocket. "Well," said the newly-made husband, "as this is the seventeenth of March I'll make it $17, and good luck to you." "My friend," said the dominie, "I wish you the greatest happiness in the world, but if ever you happen to want me again just call around on the thirty-first of the month." "No, sir," replied the bridegroom as he walked away, "I'll come on the first."



DISASTROUS FIRE LAST NIGHT

The Warner grocery and Potts building and Robert's meatmarket gone—others damaged.

Last night's fire destroyed the handsome brick store building built by Frank Potts, the Warner grocery, O.A. Robert's Meat Market and building and did serious damage in the office of Dr. Bope, the millinery store of Mrs. R.A. Secord and the restaurant of C.C. Brown & Co.

The cause is unknown. At ten o'clock Carl W. Warner was summoned by the night watch to lock the back door of his store. At a few minutes before twelve the stock in the dry-goods department was in flames. The big plate glass window crashed out and flames were rushing to the second story when the alarm was sounded. The stock and building were a total loss. Mr. Warner places his loss at sixty-five hundred to seven thousand with insurance for five thousand. Mrs. Anna Graham, the Home Phone central heard the falling glass and seeing the blaze turned an alarm into the power house.

O.A. Robert's Meat Market could not be saved. A part of the stock and tools were removed. Mr. Roberts carried no insurance.

The grocery and market building were built by the late Frank Potts and owned by his daughter, Mrs. Camilla Potts Keener of Chicago. They were insured.

Mrs. Secord's millinery store and C.C. Brown's restaurant were damaged by fire and water. This double building is owned by the A.E. Dwight estate and was insured. Mrs. Secord saved most of her stock. The restaurant stock was damaged.

On the south were the beautiful office buildings built by doctors Rose and Hooper. The Rose building was badly damaged. Dr. Bope occupied this part and his office equipment was saved as was that of Dr. Maxwell who occupied the south office. Both met with losses from moving.

Early in the progress of the fire it looked as though the whole block might go. But the gallant work of Decatur volunteer fire fighters and the fact that there was practically no breeze saved greater loss.

GARD REUNION RECALLS DAYS OF WILDERNESS

Mrs. M. B. Welcher Reviews History of Volinia at Gathering

KETCHAM IS A SPEAKER

Tales of First White Man in Stake Out Township Told to Ninety Descendants of Johnathan Gard

Descendants of Jonathan Gard, pioneer of Volinia township, gathered at the farm of the late Newton Gard there Sunday for the annual reunion. The widow of Newton Gard, 92 years old, was the hostess.

Her daughter, Mrs. Orlie Fulton Everett and her family, who occupy the old homestead, received nearly a hundred relatives and friends who came from many points.

The descendants of the late Josephus Gard and their families attended. Attorney Clyde Ketcham of Kalamazoo, great great grandson of Josephus Gard, gave the principal address.

Mrs. M. B. Welcher, a granddaughter of the pioneer, gave a history of the Gard prairie, which follows in part:

"My father, Jonathan Gard, Elijah Gohle, Samuel Ilich and George Tony were the first white men to set foot on the fertile soil of Volinia township. They came in the summer of 1828, but in the fall all returned to their homes in Indiana, my father at that time living in Butler county.

"The family consisted of father, mother and four sons, Milton, Finly, Newton and Franklin. Franklin being a babe a few months old. Being so well pleased with the country, they made preparations for locating permanently in Michigan, and the next spring they all came back, with the exception of George Tony. Tony's wife said she had enough living in a wilderness, and positively refused to come. Tony then gave father the 200 acres of prairie which he had staked off for himself, and it has ever since been known as Gard's Prairie.

The 30th of March, 1832, and lived there until his passing out in 1854. They made the journey to this new country with an ox team, cutting their roads as they came and requiring six weeks to make the journey. Their neighbors were mostly Indians and wolves, and the latter kept them company by howling nights.

First Volinia Weddings

"My father added to his 200 acres until at the time he passed away he owned 600 acres, which was divided into four farms, upon which my brothers lived until they passed away, with one exception. Finly Gard traded his Gard farm to Eli Green for one in Hamilton township, but later on Newton Gard bought that farm, and it still remains in the Gard family, so that a greater portion of Gard Prairie still remains in the hands of the Gard relatives, and we are celebrating today in the pleasant home of Nancy Gard, my brother's widow, who has been confined to her wheel chair for many years, but who is cheerful, contented and uncomplaining for she has learned the art of growing old gracefully, and is now in her 93rd year. We sincerely hope she may be with us many years to come.

"The first wedding in Volinia township were David Curry and Alexander Fulton to Sarah and Elizabeth Gard, daughters of Josephus Gard. Both couples were married by the same ceremony in the spring of '32. The first white child born in the township was John Rich, October 21, 1829. At the time our people came to Volinia, there was a band of Pottowatoma Indians camped on the Dowagiac Creek, just below the George Newton home. They were very friendly, bringing in wild honey and smoked venison, but expected something in return, such as wheat bread, and the like. It being such an effort to get flour I think mother preferred not to exchange food, and would rather prepare it herself.

"Such were pioneer days, where most of us would be considered tenderfeet when it came to roughing it."

Foreword

For many years the Decatur Schools have held an important position in the community and have been a power for great and lasting good. Three hundred ninety-four have completed the prescribed course of study and have received diplomas of graduation. These people have gone forth into life's work with no mean advantage because of their high school training. Hundreds of others have gone out without diplomas of graduation yet greatly strengthened for life's activities by their training in the public school.

Today is a time of educated workers in all the better paying kinds of work. More than ever before are the trades, commerce and manufactories demanding educated brains and trained hands. Farming has become a science and unscientific agriculture is unprofitable. Forestry is a mighty problem of today and our boys—the men of tomorrow—must meet it successfully. Chemistry now in its begining, has multiplied man's powers a hundred fold. In the coming years it will disclose facts and processes beyond our wildest dreams. Only the most menial drudgery looks for uneducated and unskilled labor.

We of this community have a duty to perform second to no other in giving the youth preparation to successfully meet the struggle of life. Let us not shirk this duty. Let us do all in our power to hold the youth in school and to help them to get the most out of school. If the conditions are made right the boys and girls will do their part. Let's give them the chance.

Announcement

The Decatur Public Schools are intended first of all to meet the wants of Decatur and vicinity and also to act as a preparatory school for advanced work. The courses of study give the pupil a good practical education. Our standards meet the requirements of the University of Michigan and the various colleges of the state. Graduates of our school are admitted to these institutions without examination. These standards have been reached only by great efforts on the part of the teachers, pupils and patrons, and no pains will be spared in maintaining them.

The work in the primary grades is based on reading and then broadens to include English, mathematics, science and history as the more advanced grades are reached. Pupils are promoted when the work is satisfactorily completed or put back into the preceding grade when the work proves beyond the capabilities of the pupil.

In the high school certain subjects are required (see pages 10 and 11) while others are elective. Two years of a language other than English are required for college entrance and pupils should bear this in mind when making a choice of electives. In general it is well to choose Latin. The courses arithmetic, bookkeeping, agriculture and physiology do not give college entrance credit. One unit of credit on satisfactory outside work as sewing, agriculture, etc., may be earned toward graduation.

No student will be recommended for entrance to higher institutions the major part of whose work in the high school has not been good and who has not acquired such habits of study as will warrant such recommendation.

In cases of irregular classification resulting from deficient preparation in antecedent studies, or from failure to pass studies, the student's work for the semester should include as far as the program permits the back studies in preference to advanced subjects. Special permission must be obtained from the superintendent to take a subject out of its regular order. Likewise only by special permission may a student take a fifth subject. Occasionally out of consideration for health or good scholarship it may be desirable for a pupil to pursue only three subjects.

Admission

Pupils entering the school for the first time will be assigned to such grades as their attainments seem to warrant. Pupils from other schools should bring their promotion cards or certificates from their teachers describing their work. Pupils holding eighth grade diplomas from the rural schools will be admitted to the ninth grade. Full credit will be given to pupils coming from schools of equal rank.

Attendance

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the year. The importance of regular and punctual attendance cannot be overestimated. Irregular attendance and tardiness not only puts the pupil back in his work, but injures the school as a whole. A written statement of the cause will be required of pupils for every case of absence or tardiness and this statement must be signed by the pupil's parent or guardian. Teachers will not grant excuses for trivial causes of absence or tardiness but the marks must stand unexcused against the pupils.

THE VILLAGE OF DECATUR

Being a Brief History Entertainingly Told by a Worthy Pioneer

The first settlement in Van Buren county was made in what is now the township of Decatur, in 1829, but the village of Decatur did not spring into existence until 1848, when the Michigan Central railroad came through.

Previous to this, however, Chas. Tucker, in 1847, had settled on the present site of the village and built a house. In 1848 L. R. Barker built a hotel on he now vacant lots at the corner of Phelps and Sherwood streets. The following year Colonel Phelps, who was postmaster for a long time and for whom our main street was named, opened a store on the corner of Phelps and St. Marys streets, now occupied by Mr. Upfield and for a year it was the only store in town.

The first school house in the village was built in 1848 on the lot where W. W. Greenman has his dwelling, and in 1869 it was used as a Baptist church. A school was opened with about twenty pupils and was taught by Miss Sarah Cook.

The sight of the village was originally obtained of the United States government by Messrs. Beers and Sherwood of New York City in a grant to them of 5,000 acres. These gentlemen were never residents of the place, but in 1850 built a steam saw mill in the low swampy place at the west end of Delaware street just out of the village. This mill was afterwards converted into a distillery which happily disappeared years ago.

In 1854 the present business center of the village was occupied as follows: Ira Nash on corner now occupied by Mr. Darkee; Trowbridge and Harris' general store, on Mr. Brook's corner; W. O. Tucker, general store, on corner occupied by Mr. Wood, and Henry Canoll, a drug store where Mr. Mosier now has a dry goods store.

Village Incorporated in 1859

The village was first incorporated by the Board of Supervisors in October, 1859, and afterwards rechartered by the Legislature March 16th, 1861. A curious provision existing in the act was, that the President and Trustees should receive no compensation but might once a year have a free dinner at the expense of the village.

The first President of the Corporation was Hon. E. P. Hill, the first recorder, Orrin T. Welch.

In 1869 Decatur claimed a population of 2500 and was considered one of the most prosperous towns on the line of the Michigan Central railroad.

At that time the village contained four churches: Presbyterian, Methodist, Unniversalist and also Baptist, seven dry goods stores, two drug stores, six grocery and provision stores, four hotels, three harness shops, two hardware stores, three clothing stores, three shoe stores, one banking house, two meat markets, one livery stable, one photographer, three milliuery shops, four dressmakers, two barbers, one bakery, one flouring mill, two planing mills, a stave factory, a steam saw and grist mill, a tannery, a cabinet shop, and carriage manufactory and—ten saloons.

The present school building was built in 1863-4 at a cost of $12,000. The Methodist church was built in 1860-61 and cost $4,000. The Presbyterian church was organized in 1852, the present church cost $6,500 and was built in 1868. There was a Baptist church organized in 1869 with twenty-six members. The first Universalist church was organized in May, 1868, and occupied what is now the Catholic church and was originally the first Presbyterian church. The present church was built in 1881 and cost $3,000.

In 1870 a town hall was built at a cost of $11,000. The First National Bank was established October 15th, 1870. A. B. Copley, President, and E. P. Hill, cashier. Mr. Copley was a member of the State Legislature in 1865, '71, and '75. S. N. Thomas was in business here longer than any other man on Main street, having been in the hardware business more than thirty years, but retired from active life several years ago.

ORGANIZATION OF BOY SCOUTS IN DECATUR

A Boy Scouts movement has been started in Decatur, most of the boys belonging to a class in the M.E. Sunday school class, though it is not confined to Methodist Sunday school boys, but is open for any good boys twelve years old and upwards who will take the obligation and live up to it. And such boys will never try to persuade any of the number who may be members of any other school to change over. That would be dishonest and therefore a violation of their oath. Otis Newell is the Scout Master and the pastor is his assistant.

This is not a military movement, although some of the best principles of army life are inculcated; such as honor, loyalty, obedience, and patriotism. These with other principles such as thankfulness, purity, chivalry, courtesy and kindness both to people and to animals are required of Boy Scouts. The boys are also taught to take proper care of their bodies that they may ever be in pink condition; to give first aid in emergencies, to rescue those in danger.

Many useful things are taught, some of which they get in the public school. How, when and by whom New England was settled? Who were the founders of New York, Philadelphia and other important cities. What is a Republic? What is required of American citizens? The duties of our public servants are taught. In short it seeks to make the boys as they grow up wise, intelligent, useful and honorable American citizens.

We expect to have the boys in condition by spring and have them march in the program on Memorial Day, doing honor to our country's veterans. They will hike in the summer time. The boys have asked the pastor if he will go with them. Sure thing! Come on, boys, out walk us if you can and you will go some. The following is the Boy Scout obligation. "On my honor I will do my best —

1. To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout law.
2. To help other people at all times.
3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

J.E. MORAN OF SHELTON NEBRASKA, KNEW DECATUR IN THE 50'S & 60'S

Shelton, Nebraska
July 14, 1915

Mr. Arba N. Moulton
Decatur, Michigan

Dear Sir:

William Trowbridge had a general merchandise store in the Dixon building in 1855. There was a partition across the center and the rear part was sort of a warehouse. Upstairs in the front part was a court room and when any lawsuit took place, it was held there.

Across the street on the east side was Tucker's store. On the next corner south from Tucker's store was a drug store — a one-story building kept by Harry Connall.

Across from the drug store west — Ira Nash, General Merchandise. I think what you call Main Street now, was called Sherwood Street in early days.

I well remember the spring of 1861 when the Decatur House burned down. It happened in the morning after a dance. Henry Chamberlain was landlord, Charles Cockett, Clerk. Champion and Teed had a store west on the opposite corner. Afterwards Henry Rogers kept a grocery store previously occupied by Champion & Teed.

Those early days of Decatur — 62 years ago — are photographed in my mind. I can see the faces of the people I knew and the buildings just as plain as if it were yesterday.

Yours —
/S/ J.E. MORAN

LINCOLN'S PRAYER FOR VICTORY ANSWERED

HOW HE KNEW GETTYSBURG WOULD BE WON BEFORE BATTLE WAS FOUGHT

GENERAL SICKELS TELLS AN INTERESTING STORY ABOUT HOW HE LOST HIS LEG, AND ABOUT PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S VISIT TO HIM

Gen. Daniel E. Sickels, the last of the generals on either the Union or Confederate side in the battle of Gettysburg, gave some interesting reminiscences of the battle, of how he was wounded, and of Lincoln's visit to him while he was recovering, that we are sure our readers will be interested in reading, especially now, when the 50th anniversary of that famous battle has just been observed. Gen. Sickels is now ninety-three years of age, and in telling about his wounds at Gettysburg he said:

"I never knew what sort of missile hit me, but the surgeons believed it was a fragment of a shell. I was struck about six o'clock in the evening of July second, after having taken my advanced position in the peach orchard and having fought for hours with the command of Gen. Longstreet opposite me on the Confederate side, to prevent the enemy's taking the Round Tops which were just to my left. I was mounted on a fine black stallion and was standing under an apple tree when the missile flying along side my horse, struck my right leg. It was a terrible wound, and pained me intensely, but it did not knock me from my horse nor make me lose consciousness, nor did it touch my horse. I dismounted by myself and was helped onto a litter by my aides.

The report up and down my line that I had been killed and officers came running to get the facts. They reported that my men were panic stricken, so I directed my aides to carry me the whole length of my lines, that my soldiers might see me. I was losing a great deal of blood and I felt weak, but had my head and shoulders raised and as I was carried along the line, I held my hat in my hand and waved it to the boys. They saw I had not been killed and they cheered me and took heart for the fighting. It seemed to be the logical, sensible thing for me to do at the time and I was surprised later, when for that service I was given the congressional gold medal of honor for bravery. My leg was amputated immediately in the field hospital, Thursday, July 2 and I was taken to Washington, arriving early Sunday morning.

I was carried to a house where quarters were obtained for me on the same stretcher on which I was laid at Gettysburg. The landlady was not up yet and we waited for a few minutes outside her door. As it was warm I had laid my handkerchief over my face. Seeing me the landlady said:

"He is dead."

"Oh, No," I replied, removing the handkerchief, "only dozing."

How Lincoln's Prayer Was Answered

"Soon after I reached my apartment President Lincoln came in to see me. After he had given a touching expression of his sympathy we talked about the battle. I said:

"Mr. Lincoln, we heard at Gettysburg that here at the capitol you were all so anxious about the result of the battle that government officials packed up and got ready to leave on short notice with the old official archives."

"Yes," he said, "some precautions were prudently taken, but I was sure of our success at Gettysburg."

"Why are you so confident?" I asked. "The army of the Potomac has suffered many reverses."

"There was a pause. The president seemed in deep meditation. His pale face lighted up by an expression I had not observed. He said:

"When Lee crossed the Potomac and entered Pennsylvania, followed by our army, I felt that the crisis had come. I knew that defeat in a great battle on northern soil involved the loss of Washington, to be followed, perhaps, by the intervention of England and France in favor of the Southern Confederacy. I went to my room and got down on my knees in prayer.

"I felt I must put all my trust in Almighty God. He gave our people the best country ever given to man. He alone could save it from destruction. I prayed that He would not let the nation perish. I asked Him to help us, and give us victory now.

"I was sure my prayer was answered. I knew that God was on our side. I had no misgiving about the result at Gettysburg."

"When Mr. Lincoln rose to leave he took my hand and said:

"Sickels, I am told, as you have been told, perhaps, that your condition is serious. I am in a prophetic mood today. You will get well!"

"Although it was General Longstreet's command that attacked me in the peach orchard, and caused me to go through the rest of my life on crutches, the general and myself became warm friends after the war.

We attended many celebrations together, he with one arm and I with one leg."

CASS COUNTY'S FIRST SETTLER

UZIEL PUTNAM DROVE THROUGH FROM OHIO WITH AN OX TEAM AND LOCATED ON BANK OF POKAGON CREEK

November 19, 1825 — Just ninety years ago last Friday, says A.M. Moon, of Dowagiac — Uziel Putnam drove across Pokagon prairie to a site he had selected a short time before on the banks of Pokagon creek, and here himself and wife began life in Cass County, the first settlers in the county and theirs one of about six families in Cass and Berrien counties, there being at that time five in Berrien, all in the vicinity of the Carey Mission.

Putnam had started from Sandusky County, Ohio, in May with three yoke of oxen, seventeen head of cattle and one horse. Two men accompanied them and Mrs. Putnam cooked for the party. The roads were almost impassable and their average travel was but six miles a day, with many days in which they made no headway at all.

Looked Up Location

In time they arrived at the home of William Kirk, near the present city of Niles, where Putnam left his family and in company with Baldwin Jenkins looked for a location. Chief Pokagon was in possession of Pokagon Prairie at that time. It was their summer home and the Indians had out a small patch of corn. Putnam told the chief of his desire to locate there and Pokagon replied, that his cattle would eat the Indians' corn. This was in October, and going back to Kirk's, he took his cattle to Cobert's creek, near the present Edwardsburg, where he cut his winter's hay.

He had in the meantime had a shanty built, a little building twelve feet square and without a floor, door, or window, blankets being used at these openings to keep out the cold. This was their home until some time in January, by which time he built a comfortable log house. He had but little shelter for his stock, and still less food. He was compelled to cut down brush before spring for them to browse on.

DECATUR FIRE

TWENTY YEARS AG

MARCH TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BURNING OF DUNCOMBE HOUSE AND NINE OTHER BUILDINGS—THE TOWN'S WORST FIRE.

What was probably the most disastrous fire in the history of Decatur occurred twenty years ago last Thursday, the 25th of March. It broke out in the Duncombe house early in the morning and before it was under control the Duncombe House, Shulters House, First State Bank, Edward Arnold store, John Shaad store, hotel livery barn, Niels Rasmusson's wagon shop, Teed House, George Johnson's shoe shop on wheels and the Universalist church were in ruins. A strong wind was blowing to the east and other buildings were saved only by hard work.

That was the last fire of the bucket brigade when the water was taken from cisterns. The water works plant was installed that year and the morning of the fire the big water pipes were lying on the ground ready to be put in place. Dowagiac's volunteer fire company came down on the early morning train but did not get here in time to be of much assistance.

NOTABLE BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION IN VOLINIA

87TH ANNIVERSARY OF MRS. NEWTON GARD, THE GUESTS OF HONOR BEING MRS. MILTON GARD, 87, AND MRS. FRANKLIN GARD, 79.

A notable birthday anniversary was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Everett in Volinia, Friday, December 10, says the Dowagiac News, when the 87th birthday of Mrs. Newton Gard, mother of Mrs. Everett ,was observed, and among the guests we Mrs. Milton Gard, aged 87, also and Mrs. Franklin Gard, aged 79.

Mrs. Newton Gard was a daughter of Richard and Julia Shaw, who moved to Youngs Prairie from Ohio in 1830, and to Volinia township six years later She was then eight years old. Mrs. Gard has lived in that township ever since, and has lived on the farm where she now resides with her daughter since 1856.

She received an injury through falling twelve years ago, since which time she gets about in a wheel chair, but her mind is as bright as that of a woman of fifty and she enjoys life with the same zest and takes the same interest in the affairs of the household and community as ever. She is a remarkable woman, the last of a family of several children, of which she was the oldest. The late Albert Shaw, a former resident of Decatur, was the youngest of her father's family and died only a few years ago.

Mrs. Milton Gard resides on the old Milton Gard homestead, a part of the original entry made by Jonathan Gard in 1828, just north of Volinia Center and on what is known as Gard's prairie.

Mrs. Franklin Gard resides in Volinia village and although living alone she, like the other two, enjoys her good old age in the possession of a good mind and a hospitable and kindly nature. Newton, Milton and Franklin Gard were sons of Jonathan Gard, and the three women who gathered on this occasion to celebrate the birthday of one of their number were also connected with the early history of the township.

Mrs. Newton Gard has three children, Ed. Gard, residing just north of Volinia Center, Mrs. Ed. Everett, residing near the Center and a daughter in Kansas.

DECATUR GRANGE ANNUAL ELECTION

R.W. HUNT, WORTHY MASTER, RECEIVED UNANIMOUS CALL TO SERVE ANOTHER YEAR — BIG DAY PLANNED FOR CHRISTMAS

The first afternoon meeting of Decatur Grange was held last Friday, December 16, 1915. It was also the annual election of officers. About fifty were present, mostly women. They left the men at home shredding corn and hustling to get ahead of the winter storm with other fall work.

The officers elected for the coming year were as follows: R.W. Hunt, Worthy Master, re-elected, Mrs. H.L. Sutton, Overseer, Mrs. Eli Keyes, Lecturer, re-elected, Ira Isham, Steward, Paul Maguire, Asst. Steward, re-elected, Mrs. Frank Lindsley, Chaplin, H.A. Goble, Treasurer, H.L. Sutton, Secretary, Eli Keyes, Gatekeeper, re-elected, Mrs. H.E. Squire, Ceres, re-elected, Mrs. Henry Howland, Pomona, re-elected, Mrs. Earl Rector, Flora, Miss Helen Lindsley, Lady Asst. Steward, re-elected.

The next meeting will be the day before Christmas. Members of the Grange and their immediate families and those who have applied for membership are invited.

KNICKERBOCKER LAKE

Fifty years ago, Knickerbocker lake in Hamilton, was a beautiful little sheet of water with several small islands. But during the past thirty years or so it has been ditched and drained and the water lowered, until its beauty is sadly marred and the little islands are a thing of the past.

One Saturday afternoon, in the spring of 1871, Dick Lyon and the writer, walked out to the Riddle farm, now the Em. Smith farm—to stay over Sunday with Thompie. We played cards nearly all night. Mrs. Riddle gave us a bountiful supper about midnight and we were as happy as kings with not a care in the world.

We slept until 10 o'clock the next morning and after breakfast Dick proposed that we visit Knickerbocker lake and see if we could find Knickerbocker's grave. He had only been dead some 35 years or so then. We started and about the time we reached the lake we were fortunate enough to meet Robert Sloan, who was one of the earliest settlers in that vicinity, and he told us what he knew about Knickerbocker. I am not quite sure, but think that Mr. Sloan lived near there as a boy, while Knickerbocker was still alive. Anyway he told us that Knickerbocker had come there in the early days, before any other white people and settled on one of the small islands in the lake and lived there as a hermit for a number of years.

Knickerbocker had been a wealthy man in some eastern city. He had been unfortunate both in love and business and becoming disgusted with the world he came to this, then wilderness, to pass his days. He finally died there some thirty years before the date of this yarn and at his urgent request was buried on the island where he had lived so long in solitude. His log cabin was left abandoned to go to ruin.

KNICKERBOCKER'S GHOST

Knickerbocker's ghost was also said to haunt the island at certain times, and was said to have been seen by several persons, walking about the old ruined cabin and the island as he had done while alive, wringing his hands and making strange sounds.

Well, us boys found a boat and went to the island pointed out to us by Mr. Sloan as the residence of Knickerbocker and we explored it thoroughly. We found a place where we thought the cabin must have stood and also a sunken spot in the ground nearby that might have been a grave, but nothing certain, we concluded to call it that and let it go and went back home.

The above story is taken partly from an old diary of mine and partly from memory. But this story about Knickerbocker differs radically from the one told in a Van Buren County history—published a good many years later. The latter yarn says that Knickerbocker was not a hermit at all, but came there with his family from the east, settled on the banks of the lake, started to build a log house there but was taken sick from hard work and exposure and died only a short time after he came there. His wife took his body back east, where they came from, so he was not buried at the lake at all.

"You pays your money and takes your choice" between the two stories, but as for myself, I am inclined to believe Mr. Sloan's account of it. Anyway that's the most romantic version, and I've no doubt "the ghost walks." In any case, Dick, Thompie and I had an enjoyable day.

W. H. T.

GLENWOOD HAD THREE NAMES

TWO OF THEM WERE RECOGNIZED BY U.S. POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT. THADDEUS THOMPSON GAVE IT THE NAME OF GLENWOOD YEARS AGO

A.M. Moon, in the Dowagiac Daily News, publishing the following interesting historical sketch of the village of Glenwood:

Glenwood is the only village in the county which can lay claim to having had three legal names during its history, two of them having been recognized by the Post Office department.

Back in 1848, when the M.C.R.R. was building its line to here, John Tietsort owned forty acres in the north edge of the present village and he gave the company five acres of land with the proviso that a station should be established there and be named Tietsort. The proposition was accepted and a small building erected for a depot and storage room for such freight as might be delivered.

OCE A Model City

This building was used until some time in the early sixties, when Amasa Worden, a Universalist minister, was appointed post master. He occupied a part of the Henry Crego house on land later owned by the Hamptons south of and adjoining Tietsort's land and sent in a request that the post office be called Modelle. The department named it MODEL CITY and as such it was known for several years, or until Thaddeus Hampton bought the vast tract of timbered land in the vicinity. Crego's house was a log structure, as all the houses were then. Shortly after this purchase Hampton sold the land he had bought to Craigie Sharp, a son-in-law of Stephen Johnson, road master of the railroad company. Sharp secured a contract for the delivery of twenty thousand cars of four foot wood to the company and brought two hundred fifty wood choppers from Chicago and put them to work in the woods. He had sixteen teams of his own and hired many others to haul the wood, but it was an open winter and he could not fill the contract on time. For the wood delivered later he was offered but a dollar and a half a cord, while his contract called for two twenty five. At one fifty he lost money, and, finally, Hampton had to take back the land. There were four or five thousand cords of wood still remaining in the woods at that time, but was of little value and was allowed to remain there and rot. It is said Sharp paid for cutting twenty thousand cords of wood when in reality, there were but sixteen thousand cut, the choppers getting paid for four thousand cords, at seventy-five cents per cord which they did not cut.

Finally Became Glenwood

Thaddeus Hampton was then appointed post master and asked that the name be changed to Glenwood, which was done. In the meantime the old depot building on the Tietsort land was torn down and a new one erected near the site of the present one — the higher land in that locality having drawn the first settlers to that point, where they could build easier and with more comfort.

The five acres donated to the railroad company by John Tietsort is now planted with catalpas, the company still owning it. The ground is not adapted to these trees and they have not made much growth. They were planted presumably for the ties they might produce some day, but possibly for an experiment.

In the old days there was a tannery here, but it was discontinued long ago and the building was used for a barn by a neighboring farmer, until it finally blew down.

Glenwood was an appropriate name when Mr. Hampton suggested it, for the forest came down to the little town from all sides but one, giving the hamlet a singularly beautiful background.

EARLY HISTORY OF MICHIGAN

By: Mary McCormick Rumbaugh

The first fire I ever saw was the burning of Mr. Tucker's drygoods store and the Post Office next door.

At the midnight hour the fearful cry of "FIRE" awakened the people and they hurried to the scene of the conflagration.

Though but little children, we joined the others in the run to the fire. There were no Portland cement walks in those days, only cow paths, which we followed and as we neared the fire we saw a woman lying by the roadside on a straw tick. Mr. Tucker's family lived over the store.

We hastily passed on a few steps further beyond the burning building, and our eyes beheld what we never want to see again. A man had a room over the Post Office. He was a special friend of J. Holmes, the photographer. We saw this man, covered with flames, leap out of the window in his nightclothes. They quickly carried him to Dr. Keable's house back of Brook's store.

We followed and got inside the doctor's door and saw the man all wrapped in a white sheet. He died soon afterward.

DECATUR FLOUR MILL DESTROYED

VALUABLE PROPERTY OF MILLER GEORGE E. ADAMS BURNED TO THE GROUND LAST THURSDAY.

MUST BE REBUILT

TOWN PEOPLE REALIZE MORE THAN EVER BEFORE NEED OF FLOUR MILL AND HOPE TO SEE MR. ADAMS RE-ESTABLISHED.

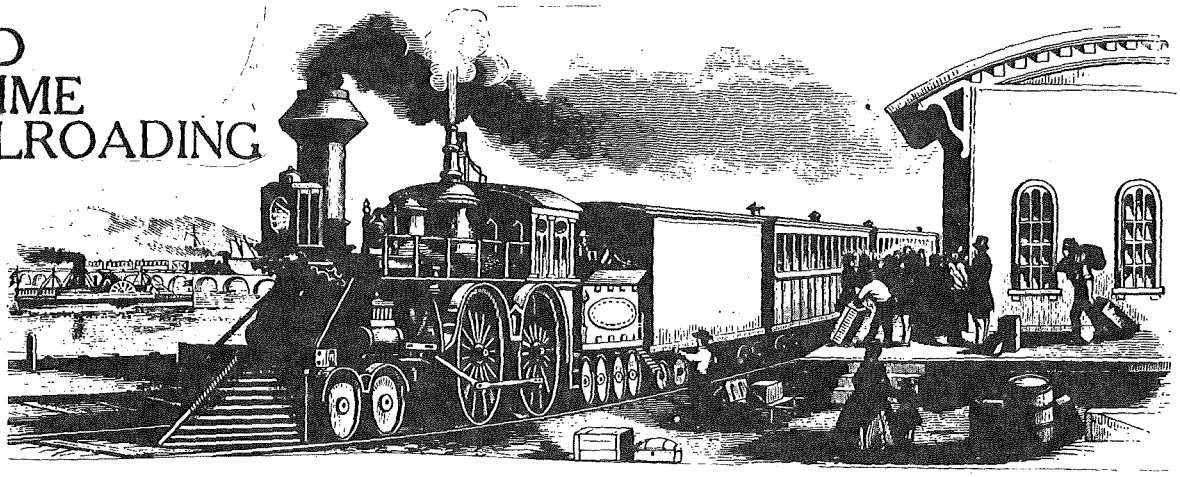
The Republican press was turning out the paper at a rapid rate last Thursday morning when the alarm of fire was heard. Two hundred papers had already been run, but business was stopped instantly and the force rushed to the fire. It was eleven o'clock.

The Decatur flour mill was a busy place Thursday morning. The machinery was grinding. George E. Adams the proprietor, went over it carefully and everything was working nicely. He was taking orders over the phone in his office when a trainman rushed in and told him the building was on fire.

Fire had caught in some unknown manner in the east corner and in a remarkably short time the building was a mass of flames.

Mr. Adams saved his typewriter and ledger and a part of the records of the Decatur schools and a few sacks of flour and grain were also saved, but aside from the power plant which was located in the small brick addition, the big flour mill, which has for years been one of Decatur's most valued industries, is entirely destroyed.

OLD TIME RAILROADING



EARLY MICHIGAN CENTRAL RAILWAY AND ITS EMPLOYEES

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle

MICHIGAN CENTRAL AGENTS

I have been asked by a number of people to write out my recollections of the early history of the Michigan Central Railway station in this village, and to give the names of the employees in that far back time.

The first agent at this station is said to have been a Mr. Goddard who was sent here when the Railway was first completed through here in the fall of 1848, but I cannot find any person who remembers him, or any record as to how long he remained here.

The first Agent here that I remember anything about was a Mr. Rosewarne, but at what time he was made Agent I do not know. He stayed here until Carleton Wheeler was appointed as his successor which must have been about 1860 or '61. Mr. Wheeler remained until about 1870 and was succeeded by James Nutting.

I was away from the village from 1873 until 1879, and do not know much about it during that time, but I do know that a man by the name of Joe Buck was Freight Agent here during part of that time. S. C. Gibbs was also agent here for several years. About 1884, N. B. McKinney, of Lawton, was made Agent and remained here until 1889, when he was succeeded by M. V. Barron, who stayed here, fifteen years. That brings the agents down to the present time.

THE TELEGRAPH OFFICE

The first telegraph office must have been installed in the depot in 1856, as that was nearly the time the Railroads began to use the wires for handling their trains by orders. Up to that time all trains were run by Time Table. If two trains of the same class were to meet at a certain place, and one of them was late, the first train to arrive waited thirty minutes, and then if the other train had not come they went on to the next station, and as I understand it a freight train had to wait indefinitely for a passenger train if the passenger was late. As may be imagined this arrangement sometimes caused great delays and much profanity by all hands on the waiting train.

For the first ten years or so after the invention of the telegraph, the wires were only used for the transmission of commercial or paid, messages, but after awhile the railroads began to sit up and take notice that the wires might be used to make new meeting points for trains, when one train was late, and the system of train orders was almost immediately adopted by all railways, and caused a great saving of time wherever used. In those days all railways were single track roads and trains had to pass each other at stations. Now all the important roads are double tracked, and the trains can pass anywhere.

THE TELEGRAPH OPERATORS

I think that the first telegraph operator at this depot was a young man by the name of Billy Weed, but I have no knowledge of how long he remained here.

My first real acquaintance with the telegraph office began in the summer of 1863, when I was fourteen years old. My cousin Jimmy had commenced to learn the profession at Dowagiac and as I always did, or tried to do, the same thing that Jimmy did, I made application at this office to be made into an operator and was accepted.

I was finally considered competent to go out on the road to work, and was sent to Parma, where I stayed through the winter of the "Cold New Years" in 1864.

The Michigan Central Railway at that time paid their telegraph operators the munificent salary of twenty dollars per month, but that amount looked awful large to me, who had always lived on a farm, and who had never had a whole dollar in my life. It seemed to me that I could get rich in a few years and retire on twenty dollars per month, but after staying with the Company six months or so I had to send home to my folks for money to pay my board, so I quit and gave it up for the time being.

In 1863 the operator here was a Mrs. Mary Wright, who remained several years, and was succeeded by her sister, Miss Josie Brown, who stayed a short time, when they both resigned and went south in the Government service. The next operator was Miss Frank Foster, who after awhile resigned and went to New York City and became private secretary to A. T. Stewart, the great merchant prince of that day. Miss Foster died there a great many years ago. The next one that I am sure of was George Northrup, and then came Harvey Trowbridge, with whom I relearned the business. The road was paying much better wages by this time, enough so that one could pay his board and go to the circus—on a pass—once in awhile. This time I remained with the company most of the time for thirty years.

After Harvey Trowbridge left here to go to a larger office, Miss Josie Adams and Miss Mary Adams were stationed in this office for a year or more, Miss Mary Adams was married in the fall of 1872, and went to Nevada to live and I was given my home office and remained here through the winter of 1872-73. That was an awful winter, extremely cold, deep snow, and trains all blocked up. Sometimes freight trains were three days in making the run from Jackson to Michigan City.

The next summer I was sent to Manistee, and Miss Franc Casto succeeded me in this office remaining here about eleven years, when I came back and stayed here this time sixteen years until I quit for good. This brings the operators down to Charlie Dine, and I guess everyone knows about him and his successors.

NIGHT OPERATORS

For several years lately we have had no telegraph office in town, everything being done by telephone, but it was very inconvenient for people who wished to send messages, for there are some kinds of business that the old reliable telegraph can do much better and cheaper than it can be done by telephone.

Just lately the Western Union Company has put in an office at the depot for sending paid messages, but it will undoubtedly be taken out again as soon as the celery season is over.

There is no doubt but that the telephone will entirely supercede the telegraph—when the telephone is made perfect, which it is not yet by a good deal—and then telegraphy wil become a lost art, and operators will disappear off the face of the earth.

As to the night operators that have worked in this office their name is legion, some of them only staying here a week or two, and even only a night or so, and it would be of no use to try to name them all. A few of the most prominent that I can think of now are George Wheelock, myself, Cass. Roberts, Channey Claflin, Homer and Newell Hungerford, Bart. Laberteaux, Ben Depew, Frank McPhee, and many, many more.

I think that Frank McPhee was the smallest and youngest looking real telegraph operator that I ever saw. He was about the size of and looked to be a boy twelve years old, and I couldn't believe it when he stepped off the train one day and announced himself as my new night operator. He was so small that I had to get a soap box for him to stand on at the ticket window to make him tall enough so folks could see him, and people would come to the office in the evening and then go away, because they would not believe that he could be the operator and ticket agent, and that he could do business.

He claimed to be sixteen years old, but none of us ever believed it. But he was an operator, all right, and a first class one too, and he had brass enough to carry him through anything. He was afterward a train dispatcher on the Michigan Central railway and the last time that I saw him, three years later, he had grown to be almost six feet tall and large in every way. I do not know what became of him, but he was certainly a character when he was here.

TOMMY MAXHAM AND OTHERS

As to the clerks and helpers at the freight house their name was legion also, but I only remember a few of the most prominent ones. For many years Tommy Maxham was the particular standby for the road, and he was the whole works when it came to wrestling baggage, for many, many long years, but he died a long time ago.

Among other early workers were Dolph and Roll Osborn, James Nutting and Henry Teed, Vet Hess, Bert Depue, and for many years now Oakey has been the chief clerk in the freight office and seems destined to stay there a long time yet.

I do not pretend to give the names of anywhere near all of them, for a great many I have utterly forgotten, and it would only be a string of strange names to almost everyone if they were all mentioned.

Forty-five years and more ago, every station of any size, had one or two water houses and a good yard, and almost every train stopped to take wood and water. This station had two water houses and two places where engines could take wood and get a drink in those days one each side of the old depot.

The railroad grounds on both sides of the track were covered with wood piles and wood sheds, and what is now our pleasant little park was then a very rough looking place. The Company used to buy thousands of cords of four foot wood every winter and then they would bring a buzz saw here and saw it in two for engine use.

The water to fill the tanks was pumped from wells, and the motive power for pumping it was at first furnished by a large windmill at each house, but after awhile the wind-mills were done away with, and then the motor was an old horse. The horse had to draw all the wood to the loading boxes, and when he was not busy at that he was hitched into a tread-mill and made to pump the water.

Tommie Maxham's duties were to attend to checking baggage and also to keep the old horse drawing wood and pumping water. At times when the old nag was left alone in the treadmill he got tired and would slack up and finally stop to rest, and then Tommie would sneak up behind him with a piece of a board and bat him over the hind quarters until the old horse would almost jump through the end of the mill.

Tommie and the old horse are both gone now, and the engines take water on the fly without stopping and they put coal enough into their tenders to last them the whole run. A wood burning locomotive would be a queer looking sight now, with their small bollers and flaring smokestacks.

In those days an engine that could pull thirty to thirty-five ten ton cars was called a good one, but now some of the larger ones can easily take one hundred forty ton cars over the road.

TRAGEDIES OF THE ROAD

A good many queer things, some laughable and some tragical happened on the road. I remember many fatal accidents at this station. Nearly fifty years ago a young man by the name of Fox was working at the freight house as helper, and one day he stepped between some cars that were in motion to make a coupling, and when he came out he was caught between the cars and the edge of the freight platform and crushed to death.

One evening about thirty-five years ago one freight train ran into the way car of way freight, and Mack Wooster was so badly injured that he died from the effects of it some years later. Then Mrs. Teed was killed instantly while trying to cross the tracks ahead of an express train. A young man from Keeler by the name of Sykes was killed while trying to get on board of an express train that was in motion; and lastly Conductor Dailey was thrown under the wheels of his train while stepping off and so badly hurt that he died the same night.

Several others who were not employees have been killed at different crossings, but the only names that I remember are Walter Mumaugh and Mr. Warner.

Away back in 1862, a young schoolmate of mine was killed near the depot. His name was Jehiel Rogers, and he was only twelve years old, but he had become very expert in jumping off and onto freight trains that were in motion. One day he made a slip and went under the wheels, cutting off both legs and dying soon after. Jumping on and off trains was great sport for the boys of those days. I used to indulge in it myself, but after I saw Jehiel brought up through town with both his legs smashed off just below his knees, I very suddenly lost all desire to play that game any more, and it cured the most of the other town boys for the time being.

A few years after that another boy by the name of Myers was killed. He jumped onto a freight train at the station and rode east half a mile or so and jumped off and was found dead. He evidently fell as he struck the ground and hit his head against a pile of T-rails, killing him instantly.

OTHER ACCIDENTS

As for smash-ups, breakdowns, runnig trains through open switches and off on to the ground and such minor accidents, they have been innumerable. The first one that I remember anything about happened one night in 1863, when Roll Osborn left a switch open just west of the depot, and Night Express ran off onto the ground, engine and almost all the cars, and they were pretty badly smashed up. The road was blocked for a number of hours, and Roll lost his job temporarily.

In September, 1863, happened the terrible accident at Lawton to the State Fair special train, when so many were killed and injured, some from Decatur and vicinity.

But any number of such things as that have happened since. I ran one train through an open switch myself.

With the split switches that are used now a train can't go off the track onto the ground even if it goes through an open switch, but split switches were unknown forty years ago.

TUCK LEACH OF DOWAGIAC

One of the laughable occurrences that I knew of happened at Dowagiac a good many years ago. They had a night operator there named Tuck Leach, and he, like all other night operators, liked to be up all day and catch what sleep he could at night while he was on duty.

He had to time and report every train that went by, and so he cooked up a scheme to wake himself up whenever a train passed. He found a post standing just the other side of the tracks opposite the office window, and tied a long cord to it and carried the cord through the open window, and after lying down he tied the cord to his foot, and laid down, confident that when a train passed that the engine would strike the cord and break it, at the same time giving his foot a sharp twitch, enough to wake him up, and after the train had gone by and he had reported it to the dispatcher, he would tie the cord together and repeat the operation with he next train that came along.

His scheme worked fine for some time, but one night he had to get a new string, and this one proved to be too strong and when the first train struck it it refused to break it first. It waked up Mr. Tuck all right, and almost pulled him clear through the window; the string finally broke and saved his life, but it left him with one leg sticking out of the window and his foot nearly pulled off, but thoroughly awake. He was more careful about selecting his cords after that, or else gave it up entirely.

NO LIQUOR LAWS THEN

Some funny things happened in this office years ago, but most of them would not bear repetition. Railroad men used to be great drinkers, not all of them, but many, and I have known engineers to be so drunk while running their engines, that their firemen would either have to watch them constantly or else run the engines themselves while the engineer slept it off, and it was not uncommon for the crews to carry bottles of fire water with them in the way car.

I have seen operators so drunk while handling train orders that they scarcely knew what they were doing, and the great wonder is that there were not twice as many accidents as there were; and then too the Company used to employ such very young, careless and heedless boys for night operators.

I was given an office the first time when I was less than fifteen years old, and only a few months from the farm. Now no employee can remain on the road a moment after the Company knows that he drinks any kind of intoxicating liquor, either on or off duty and boys under a certain age cannot be employed.

In the early days railroad work of all kinds was very simple, but it has become more complicated and intricate every year. I know very little about railroading now, but I do know that it takes a good man, well educated in his particular line to hold his job on the road.

READING BY SOUND

In the early days of telegraphy every operator used what were called "Registers" or machines that printed the characters on a long paper tape. These Registers were large brass clock works and were run by a heavy weight that had to be wound up every little while with a large key, and when you were ready to receive a message you started the clock work going and that carried the paper tape along and the stylus indented the characters in the papers.

These registers were quite expensive, they cost about $35 each and I wonder what was done with all of them.

Reading by sound was entirely unknown in the early days, in fact no such thing was considered possible, but after a time a smart young operator in Cincinnati discovered that he could take his messages by sound, without printing it on the tape, and he began doing all his business in that way, and then other operators began trying the same thing. As soon as the Telegraph officials found out what they were doing they issued an order positively forbidding their operators receiving messages by sound, claiming that it was not safe as there could be no record left to refer to when messages were received in that way.

But it is hard to stop the water from running when the dam gives way, and sound reading was so much superior to the paper tape that operators would use it, and finally the Telegraph Company had to give way and allow messages to be taken by sound; but even as late as 1870 sound operators were scarce, and only the larger offices had them. I know that I learned on a paper machine and used the tape for nearly a year. I do not think that there is a single paper machine in existence now, and one of them would be somewhat of a curiosity in these days. I have always been sorry that I did not save a piece of the paper tape that we used then, with the messages indented in the paper, as a curiosity. And the instruments we had then were very simple and crude compared with those that are used now.

STUCK IN A SNOW BANK

The winter of 1884-85 thirty two years ago, was a very severe one. It was extremely cold and the snow was so deep and the side tracks were so buried up that even the snow-plows could not clear them, and the Company had to send trains of flat cars here and hire gangs of men to load them with shovels and then draw it away and dump it some where else and in that way they opened some of the side-tracks. The Company had to keep their snow plows going over the main line all the time and even then they could not keep them clear in places. Trains were blocked in everywhere and stock in shipment suffered terribly from the intense cold and not having anything to eat or drink for many days at a time.

One morning about six o'clock Night Express going west passed through here. There had been a dance in this town the night before, and there was a large crowd up from Dowagiac to attend it, and they all started back on this train.

They had had nothing to eat since about midnight and were pretty hungry, but they thought that they would all be home in a few moments, and then be just in time for breakfast.

But somewhere near Glenwood the train ran into a cut that was filled level full with snow. The engine tried its best to push through, but couldn't do it, and they finally had to give it up and send to Niles for a road train and a large gang of men to come and dig them out with shovels. In the meantime that Dowagiac dance crowd, and everyone else on the train, got pretty hungry, and it was said that they cleaned out Glenwood completely and thoroughly.

In the meantime another much larger express train came in here from the east about 8 o'clock, and was held up here by orders until the first train could proceed, and on this last train there were some 250 passengers and in the course of the day they became hungry too, and they ate up nearly everything in the town. That was in the days before local option came into effect, and some men who lived here went through the train with baskets filled with bottles of all kinds of liquors. Trade was brisk, prices high, and some of the peddlers made a lot of tainted money. It seemed as though every passenger on that train sent from one to a half dozen messages while they were detained here. It was almost dark before the shovelers dug the Glenwood train out of the drifts, allowing them to go ahead, and thereby releasing the train here, after holding them up for over eight hours.

It is wonderful what development has been made in the last fifty years in the use of wire for electrical use, all over the country. In 1863, when I first knew anything about it, there were just two wires strung along the Michigan Central railway, one for the use of the railway and the other for commercial business, and that was all. By 1871 there were four wires along the tracks, and in 1884 there were a few more and also a telegraph wire that followed along the wagon roads east and west, that had been put up by a Company that had started up in opposition to the Western Union Telegraph Company, but it did not last long and was soon absorbed by the Western Union and taken down.

Now when one looks up it is a perfect cobweb overhead everywhere, telegraph, telephone and light and power lines, and more of them are being put up every day.

In the cities it is a complete net work everywhere, both overhead and underground. Some of the large cables that pass through the tunnels are said to contain hundreds of wires, all done up in one rope.

Many cities are compelling all wires to be put underground as fast as possible, either in tunnels or in conduits, because the rapidly increasing network of wires overhead were becoming dangerous. Wire drawing ought to be a profitable business surely.

Some eminent scientists declare that the rapidly increasing number of wires that are being strung in the air and laid underground and the immense amount of electricity that is being generated and passed through them all the time, will, sooner or later, cause a change in the motion of the earth, as it turns on its axis each day, and will finally change the position of the poles to the place where the equator is how located, and vice-versa. These same high-brows also say that our sun is the original source of electricity, and when the earth becomes all one big electrical power plant that there will be no telling what will happen next, and probably they are right.

OLD RAILROAD DAYS

THE OLD STATION AT DECATUR THE STRAP RAILS — THE WOOD YARD — THE OPERATOR

By W. H. Tuttle

My first connection with the M. C. R. R. and a telegraph office began in July, 1863, when I entered the Decatur office to learn to be a telegraph operator.

The operator at Decatur at that time was Mrs. Mary Wright, a very fine lady who died over forty-five years ago. Probably not a single person in Decatur, except the writer, remembers her now, although she lived here several years.

Telegraph operators in those days received the munificent salary of $20 per month and found themselves the best way they could. But I was a very young boy of fifteen, right from the farm where men were glad to hire out for $7 per month and board, and $20 per month looked like a very big thing to me.

About December 1, 1863, I was considered competent to "Take an office". In those days a "sound operator" was almost a curiosity. Only the very largest offices had any of them. We all used the old paper registers that run with a heavy weight. They were wound up like a clock and made a noise like a threshing machine. When the operator began to take a message he pulled the trigger, the mill started and ran until the message was completed. The message was indented in dots and dashes on a long narrow paper tape and the operator could sit down and pick it out at his leisure—if the mill worked good. Students were considered good operators as soon as they could tell their "office call" and they depended on the paper mill for the rest of it.

THE COLD NEW YEARS

The first office I was sent to was Parma, near Jackson, and I stayed there all the winter of '63 and '64. I was there during the "cold New Years" of 1864 and it was surely rightly named.

When I went to bed the evening before it was warm and raining, and when I went to the office the next morning, oh, my! what a change. It was snowing and blowing and the thermometer was 35 below zero, and it lasted something like a week or ten days.

That was a bad time. It was during the war and soldiers froze to death in their tents. I saw whole train loads of live stock frozen to death. Trains could not get over the road on account of the extreme cold and the snow drifts. But it ended after a while like everything else and not many now remember the cold New Years.

In the spring I was sick awhile and I had also found out that $20 a month, after paying $3.50 per week for my board, was not such a gold mine as I had thought it was going to be. In fact I had no more money at the end of six months work than when I began. So I did not go back to work again until 1871, by which time the railroad was paying somewhat better wages.

Those days are a good way off now but they are all very fresh in my memory, more so than many things that have happened only a few months ago.

My second attempt to become a railroad man began on the first day of September, 1871, when I entered the office here to learn to be a telegraph operator and that time I stuck to it for nearly thirty years. Harvey Trowbridge had charge of the office here and he was my teacher — and a good one he was too.

The probabilities are that telegraphy will be a lost art in a very few years and telegraph operators will be unknown. The telephone is taking the place of the telegraph everywhere and already almost all railroad work — train dispatching, messages and conversation — is done over the telephone and it seems to me that it will be only a few years before the telegraph sounder will be laid aside as a relic and the poor operators will be obliged to go to work.

Forty years ago the telephone was unknown except as an experiment and now every business place has one or more, and half or more of the private houses have them. Goodbye to the telegraph.

At the time I speak of — forty-five years ago railroading was very different from what it is now — no electric lights, no air brakes, not even on passenger trains, scarcely any double tracks, and the locomotives were only toys compared with the monsters in use now.

The engines in use around here all burned wood for fuel and had tall, flaring smoke stacks and they had to stop at nearly every station to take on wood and water. The Michigan Central bought thousands of cords of wood every winter and where our beautiful little park is now, was in those days covered with wood sheds, wood piles, old stumps and all kinds of refuse, and was a horrible looking place generally. In those days a railroad company never even so much as gave a thought to having their depot grounds beautiful in any way. Then all the trains went by names instead of numbers as now — such as Atlantic Express, Blue Line Express, Day Express, etc. and also the locomotives were all named — Aetna, Vesuvius, Reindeer, etc.

For a number of years there was a work train that ran between Niles and Kalamazoo — engine "Storm", conductor Lewis and engineer Jack Riley. Conductor Lewis had a silver nail in the corner of each eye to keep him from going blind. These nails were half as large as a lead pencil, had a large head in the outside end and must have been nearly an inch and a half long and were hollow. He would pull them out and return them in a matter of fact way that always made me shudder, for it seemed to me that they must almost go clear through his head.

One Sunday morning the "Storm" was going in a great hurry to a wreck at Mattawan and when they were about opposite the present pickle factory they struck a cow on the track and then in just no time they had a wreck of their own to look after. The tender broke loose from the train and swung around endways, the engine went into the ditch with one corner of the tender jammed into the engineer's seat, the flat cars were piled up promiscuously and the workmen who were in the caboose were all thrown up in a heap in the front end. When they struck the cow the fireman was on top of the pile of wood in the tender, throwing it down and he went sailing up into the air end over end as high as the telegraph wires and lit on his feet more than half way to the fence unhurt. No one was injured to amount to anything except the cow. I, with some other young men happened to be in the woods nearby so we saw the whole performance.

Wrecks were very common in those days. The T-rails were all made of iron for steel rails were unknown then and they would break like glass and fly all to pieces in extreme cold weather. If a train went through an open switch it had to go off the rails and onto the ground but with the split switches that are in use now, a train cannot leave the rails and must stay on the track even if the switch is left open.

Then the maximum load for a freight car was ten tons and thirty-five cars made a heavy train. Now the cars have a capacity of thirty, forty and fifty tons and we vary often see trains of eighty cars and the locomotives are so large that there is scarcely room for the smoke stack to stick out of the top of the boilers. A locomotive of fifty years ago would look very queer now: they had no air brakes, no injectors, all water had to be forced into the boiler with a pump — in fact, as I remember it, they didn't seem to have much of anything except the boiler, fire box, smoke stack and steam cylinders, while now a locomotive is fairly covered with all manner of inventions. The large compound engine used the steam from the boiler over twice and the engineer with a twist of his wrist can set every brake on the train until the wheels will slide on the rails.

Our present depot was built in the summer of 1886. We moved into it the eighth day of September and at that time we thought it was pretty nifty.

The old depot stood a short distance east and was built in 1848 — the year that the Michigan Central was finished through to Niles. It is now one of Schpok's warehouses. When they tried to move it to its present location they tore one set of mover's tools all to pieces; the frame was made of solid timbers hewed out with a broad axe and it was some heavy. A good many people had passed through it during the thirty-eight years that it was used as a depot and what an endless procession of employees, a great many that I remember and more that I had forgotten all about.

The first freight agent that I remember was Mr. Rosewarne and the first telegraph operator was Billy Weed, and following them came agents, operators, night-watches, etc. almost without number.

There was one nightwatch about fifty years ago, who climbed out the tender of the locomotive of Kalamazoo accomodation one morning to give her a drink. While he was up there a rod on the engine broke and punched a big hole in the boiler letting the steam all out at once with a terrible roar. The nightwatch jumped from the tender and was running before he struck the ground and they do say that he is still going, like the wandering Jew, looking for a place where there are no railroads.

A great many funny things happen on the road and many more that were either pathetic or tragic. My worst experience came the night that conductor Dailey was killed at our depot, about twenty-five years ago. I helped to pick him up and carry him into the office and it was weeks afterward before I could go to sleep and not see him in my dreams. It is a queer trait in human nature that makes almost every man, woman and child want to rush in to see a poor mangled body but so it is. The night that Mr. Dailey was killed the depot grounds were black with people all trying to get a look at his suffering. Men climbed on other men's backs so they could look into the office windows and I saw one man step on Dailey's arm trying to force his way into the office.

"Men may come and men may go", but the railroad will go on forever — unless the air ships run them out.

A RAILROAD WRECK

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

In the fall of 1871 I was stationed at the telegraph office in New Buffalo, as night operator. In those days all trains were named instead of being numbered as they are now, and all the engines were given names also.

One morning just before I went off duty, "Through Freight East" went through our station—with two engines pulling it, and running at a great speed. I went to my boarding place and went to bed soon afterward, but I had not been in bed long and was almost asleep when the Day operator came to my room, rousted me up and told me that "Through Freight East" and a double header freight coming west had collided a few miles east of New Buffalo, and there was a terrible wreck.

I was very much frightened at first, because I knew that Through Freight had gone through while I was still on duty, and my first thought was that I had forgotten some order and was responsible for the wreck. but the day man soon undeceived me by telling me that it was entirely the fault of the train crews.

As the wreck was only about two miles from New Buffalo I immediately got up and started to walk out to see it and when I got out there what a sight it was. I had never seen a big railroad wreck before, and I had not supposed that things could be piled up in such a head. There were four engines and thirty to forty freight cars all thrown up in one big pile, and all on fire and burning fiercely. Some of the cars were loaded with tallow and it had melted and was running down the sides of the track in the ditches, and very soon the farmers were coming with barrels and pails and gathering it up for soap grease. Other cars were loaded with green hides, and they made a beautiful smell as they burned.

ENGINEER KILLED

The two trains came together on a curve, and in the bottom of a deep cut with high banks on both sides, and the crews could not see each other until they were almost together, and the consequence was that only one engineers stopped to reverse his engine, and he was killed. The other engineers and firemen jumped at once and saved their lives, although some of them received injuries that crippled them for life.

The one engineer that was killed, after stopping to reverse his engine, evidently tried to jump, but was caught and thrown into the ditch, and a car of shelled corn broke open and spilled all over him, pinning him face down in the mud and tallow in the ditch and holding him there until he died, and then the fire partially burned him up. His engine was the only one that was found to be reversed when they were all finally pulled apart and his stopping to do this undoubtedly cost him his life. The poor fellow was in my office only a few hours before he was killed, and I got a train order for him on his way to Michigan City.

That pile of wreckage must have been at least thirty feet high above the tracks, and the heat was so intense that it burned telegraph wires off on top of the poles at least forty-five feet above the track. I wish that I could remember the names of the four locomotives that were in the wreck, but I can only recall one, the "Bloomingdale". She was the last one going west, and when they finally untangled them that was the first one out on the west side, she had jumped clear over the other three.

THE CONDUCTOR'S FAULT

That wreck must have cost the M. C. Ry. a pile of money, for it was nothing but a pile of scrap iron when the fire was burned out. An investigation followed of course, and it was shown that it was the fault of the Conductor going east, and he was immediately discharged by the Company with a letter telling him that he was morally responsible for the death and maiming of the other members of the train crews, and that he might consider himself lucky of he escaped prosecution for manslaughter. I always felt sorry for him, because he had a little excuse for what he did. He was almost sick when he was sent for to take his train out, and he asked the Company not to send him on that trip, but they were short of men and would not let him off and he had to go. When the train was ready to pull out he was feeling so bad that he went to his way car and laid down and asked his brakeman to go to the telegraph office and get his train orders, and the brakie did so, and that caused the accident for the brakeman did not understand the orders, and the train went through New Buffalo at top speed, when they should have stopped there for further orders. If the Conductor had received the orders himself the wreck would not have happened, for he would have understood them.

The M. C. Ry. were very hard on their employees in those days, and their word was law from which there was no appeal. I have known men that were obliged to work thirty-six hours and more, at a stretch, when they would get so sleepy that they did not know what they were doing, and I have seen others sent out on their runs when they were so sick that they couldn't hold their heads up, but they must either go if they were told to or lose their jobs.

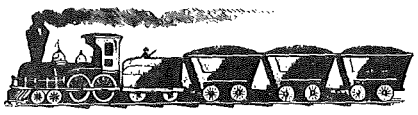
THEIR WORD WAS LAW

And the Company was just as arbitrary in their dealings with the general public; whatever they said was law. If the Railroad wanted to ruin a town or a business man they could and did do it, without any compunction; and if some Superintendent took a dislike to any employee or if the employee offended a railroad official or any of his friends who happened to be large shippers over the road, the employee very soon found himself "canned" with no reason given or asked. The employee knew that it was no use to ask for a reason. And now the Railroads wonder why the public doesn't have more sympathy for them and allow them to raise their freight and passenger rates whenever they like, and as high as the "traffic will bear." But the public hasn't forgotten the time when the railroad's motto was "the public be damned" and they are not likely to very soon. And the employees do not forget some things that happened years ago before the men were organized into unions.

The Companies do not dare to use the arbitrary methods with their men that were common years ago, for if they tried them they would have a strike on their hands in less than twenty-four hours. Chickens nearly always come home to roost, and it is the general opinion that the Railway Companies are getting just about what was coming to them. There is a whole lot in this subject that would make mighty interesting reading for the general public if it could be written up by some one who was competent to get the inside facts, and make an interesting story of them.

The Railroads are spending a great many thousands of dollars in advertising their woes in the daily papers. The Pere Marquette in particular is doing its level best to educate the public up to a point where they will be allowed to sell stock or bonds on their road for a few more millions, when their main trouble consists of the fact that the road is already stocked and bonded for at least three times the value of the road, and now they want to add a few more millions, all clear water, and of course all these stocks and bonds are expected to pay dividends, and they must have higher rates in order to make the public pay them, and of course, pay a few more high priced figure heads in Wall street larger salaries.

But all this has very little to do with "head-end" collisions on the road, and that was what I started to write about.



MICHAEL MAHONEY'S FINE RECORD

After 48 Years of Continuous Service for the Michigan Central he Takes His First Vacation

On the first of November last Michael Mahoney, after having been in the employ of the Michigan Central Railway Company forty-eight consecutive years, was upon his own request given a leave of absence for six months.

Mr. Mahoney is spending his first vacation in his home village. The building of the handsome new residence by his son, Dr. Geo. W. Mahoney of Chicago, occupies his attention and adds contentment to his days of rest.

Few men can look back over so many years of continuous service for a single corporation and no man can leave a more spotless record. He had lost less than a month's time in all of those years since he first commenced work for the company November 1, 1857.

Mr. Mahoney when a mere boy came to the United States from Clare, Ireland, with his father, mother, three brothers and a sister, the family locating in Kalamazoo. His first work was done for Isaac Parker on a farm that was afterwards sold to the state and on which the asylum for the insane now stands. The erection of the first building for the great state institution was commenced at this time and he helped roll in the first stone for its foundation.

He moved from Kalamazoo to Lawton where he commenced his long service for the Michigan Central. He was a section man for nearly two years and then was given charge of a section at Michigan City, Ind. He remained there only six months when he was transferred to the section from this village east, succeeding Alonzo Northrup.

After thirty-three years of service in this capacity Mr. Mahoney was given charge of the crossing near the measure factory and has been at his post every day for the past thirteen years.

He retires with the record of never having had a complaint lodged against him with the company, never having had a man in his employ seriously injured or an accident of any kind due to his carelessness or neglect.

During his years of service railroading has been revolutionized; from the primitive engines, cars and methods of nearly a half century ago railroading has become to-day a great science and there are things of interest that a railroad man more than any one else can follow and appreciate.

Mr. Mahoney has always enjoyed a wide acquaintance among railroad men of all classes. He always exercised the greatest care in his work and was ever watchful for the safety of the public.

His family consists of himself and wife, Miss Anna, now a student in the University of Michigan, Richard, a dentist in Kalamazoo, Henry, a soldier in the U. S. Army, and Dr. G. W. Mahoney of Chicago.

FIFTY TWO YEARS WITH THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL

JAMES MAHONEY IS RETIRED ON A PENSION IN RECOGNITION OF HIS FAITHFUL SERVICE OF OVER HALF A CENTURY.

James Mahoney has completed 52 years of continuous service in the employ of the Michigan Central Railway Company and on the first of April was retired on a pension of 52 per cent of his salary, amounting to about $36 per month.

He retires under a ruling made by the Company eight years ago which retires an employe after he has attained the age of seventy years on a pension of one per cent a year for the years of his continuous service. He is the first in Decatur to be pensioned by the Company. His brother Michael Mahoney completed fifty years in the Company's employ ten years ago and retired but received no reward other than the official recognition by the officers of his faithful services.

James Mahoney is a native of Clare county, Ireland. He came to America when he was eleven years old and the family settled in Kalamazoo county. He went to work for the Michigan Central first in Mattawan and a few months later came to Decatur which has since been his home.

Since beginning work April 15, 1864, he has not lost to exceed ten weeks time in vacations and illness and has never been off the pay roll. At different times he has been sent out on extra jobs but for the most part he has been on duty as foreman on the sections east and west from Decatur. At one time the three brothers, Ned., Michael and James were bosses of the sections from Lawton west, from Decatur east and from Decatur west.

During all these years James Mahoney never shirked his duty. The days were never too cold or stormy for him to go out. He guarded the track and protected the lives of those who rode over his section with never failing loyalty and in his faithfulness he attained true greatness. He retires with the thanks of his employers and with the congratulations and best wishes of many friends.

With his pension Mr. Mahoney is granted an annual pass on the Michigan Central and it will be useful to him in enjoying his well earned vacation. Mrs. Mahoney is improving from a season of poor health and as soon as she is strong enough to take the trip they will go to Empire to visit their daughter, Mrs. Thomas Deering.

Bert Calbetzor succeeds Mr. Mahoney as boss of the section.

SAVE THE DECATUR PAPERS

STORIES OF THE EARLY DAYS WILL CAUSE THE REPUBLICANS TO BE HIGHLY PRIZED IN THE YEARS TO COME.

The publisher and every reader of the Republican are indebted to Mr. Tuttle for the delightful stories he is furnishing this paper on the early history of Decatur. His personal recollections cover a period dating back to the days before the Civil War and he had personal acquaintance with the pioneers who cleared the forest to settle here. Every resident should have these papers. Keep files of the Republican and you will preserve for the coming generations records of their native village and county which will be to them a prized heritage.

Mr. Tuttle's story this week is about the Good Templars in Early Decatur. It is one of the best.

The letters from the front written by the late John Bennett while fighting to preserve the country in the Great Civil War are bits of history that will some day be sought by Michigan historians.

Other stories of equal merit are soon to appear. The Republican, from now on will be more than ever before worth preserving. Hunt up your past copies and make files for the year beginning with the first issue in January, 1916.

PASSING OF A PIONEER

MRS. MARY A. SQUIER WHO DIED APRIL 27, WAS BORN IN VOLINIA THE YEAR MICHIGAN BECAME A STATE.

Mrs. Mary A. Squier was born in Volinia, Cass county, June 3, 1837. She was one of ten children of Samuel and Charity Rich, who were among the very first white people to locate in the township.

She was married to David A. Squier November 1st, 1860, and moved to Decatur where she has since resided, in 1867. She passed away April 27, 1916, at the age of 78 years, ten months and twenty-four days. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Phoebe Reid of Fenton, two sons, Harley D. and Emory H. of Decatur, five grand children and one great grand child.

Funeral services were held in the Universalist church Sunday afternoon, April 30. The church was crowded with relatives and friends, many coming in automobiles from Cass county, her early home. Mrs. Olivia J. C. Woodman of Paw Paw delivered the funeral sermon and spoke well of the noble qualities of this true pioneer, whose birth dates back to the year Michigan became a state.

Burial was in the family lot in Lakeside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our sincere thanks to those who showed so much kindness during the last illness, death and burial of our mother.

OLD POLITICAL DAYS IN NICHOLSVILLE

ATTORNEY W. H. TUCKER OF DECATUR, MADE DEMOCRATIC SPEECH ON STEPS OF THOMPSON SCHOOL HOUSE WITH THE TREES FOR AUDIENCE.

Recent political activities due to the approaching elections reminds some of our older residents of campaigns in which the republicans were uniformly successful and in which many practical jokes were played upon their opponents.

One episode in particular is recalled, an episode which is said to have originated the adoption of the democratic emblem. The democrats had secured Thompson's school house, one mile south of the village of Nicholsville, for a rally, and had secured "Bill" Tucker of Decatur to make the speech of the evening. Tucker's vocabulary was extensive, and his flow of language was fluent. He arrived at the schoolhouse, prepared to skin the opposition, figuratively, but on entering the room saw on the platform a donkey which had been tied there by some of the sons of Belial of the other party. The donkey was owned by a farmer in the vicinity, and whether the grownups or the boys tied it there was not known at the time.

Suffice it to say, Tucker went out onto the steps of the little building and offered up a grist of invectives upon the republican party hot enough to wither the trees which surrounded him. He took his time, too, and the men who had hidden in the bushes nearby to see the fun did not care to answer him. And they could not had they wanted to, for they were verging on apoplexy with laughter, their noise only adding to Tucker's ire. Tucker never attempted again to speak in Volinia township and the mention of the name for years after brought from him opinions of its citizens which were anything but complimentary.

Those were the days.

HISTORY OF HAMILTON TOWNSHIP

Prepared by Mrs. Riley Zimmerman and Read by Her Before the Corwin Woman's Club October 26

Hamilton township lies upon the southern border of Van Buren county.

The Pottawattomie Indians were found by the Protestant missionaries.

In 1832 the first entry was made by Rev. Isaac McCoy. That was 94 years ago.

In 1838 by order of the government the Indians were banished to their new homes and hunting grounds in Kansas. Not a few of them, however, escaped, while on the way and returned to St. Joseph. Some of their descendants are still living and have their homes in the western part of Van Buren county.

The first structure erected in Hamilton was a hunter's cabin put up in 1833 upon section 17 by Benjamin Reynolds and Joel Clark of Kalamazoo, who came over on periodical hunting excursions. This cabin was used by the early settlers until homes could be erected.

Among the first settlers were Aaron Barney, Lewis Johnson, Philotus Haydon of New York, Zebina Sterns of Vermont who came in the year 1835.

Robert Nesbitt emigrated from Ireland in 1826 and made the first land entry in Hamilton on Section 4, April 15th, 1835.

In 1836 Mr. Nesbitt built the first saw mill and in 1856 a grist mill on the same site. The mill afterward became the Wassman mill and was operated continuously until it burned down a few years ago.

The farms of Philotus Haydon and Zebina Sterns, are now owned by their descendants.

The only log house in Hamilton is on the Sterns estate and is sixty-eight years old.

The first marriage in the town was that of Robert Nesbitt and Maria Comly December 1st, 1836. Both were residents of Hamilton.

The first white child born in the township was Mason Wakefield July 5, 1836. The first death was that of Mr. Knickerbocker, in 1835. Worn out with exhaustion and exposure he died of lung fever and in accordance with his request he was buried upon the island in the lake that bears his name. Seven men with his widow followed him to his grave.

An act of the legisalture was approved March 11, 1837, to divide the township.

The first session of the board of Supervisors of Van Buren county was organized May 27, 1837, and was composed of seven members. At this session $5 was allowed for each wolf and panther killed in the county

In 1837 Henry D. Coleman built upon the line of the territorial road on section 15 a commodious frame tavern later known as "Brown's Tavern".

The Territorial road originated from the Indian trail and later became the Michigan stage road from Detroit to Benton Harbor.

Shortly after opening his house Mr. Coleman succeeded in obtaining a post-office for Hamilton and was himself appointed postmaster. The first store was opened also by Coleman.

The pioneer blacksmith, Charles N. Poor, followed Mr. Coleman from Keeler and stuck to the bellows as long as the stages stuck to the territorial road.

About 1837 or 1838 a Mrs. Millard, who lived with her daughter, Mrs. Bennett, taught a select school and Sunday school at Mrs. Bennett's house. A Miss Litchfield, living in Pennsylvania, was brought to Hamilton by Robert Nesbitt, to teach his children, shortly afterward.

The first district school, was taught in the "Red Schoolhouse" near Coleman's tavern. It had twenty pupils. The teacher was Mrs. Craper, wife of Dr. Craper. The pupils living at the present time are Mrs. Cordelia Bartlett Bullard and William Bartlett of Hamilton, D. H. Briggs of Nebraska and George Nesbitt of Decatur.

The first church service was conducted by Grandfather Littlejohn from Allegan. Meetings were held in the same school house. Hamilton has enjoyed the benefits of local religious organizations, although there has never been within its limits a church building. There have been regular services in the Field's school house in South Hamilton and in the Grange Hall. In North Hamilton the school house now known as the Corwin has for a number of years held services semi-weekly. The last three years weekly, it belonging to the Lawrence M. E. charge.

On the opposite corner on section 5 a store of general merchandise has transacted business for several years. All public business is transacted at the Grange hall in the central part of the township.

The first public burial ground was laid out about 1840 on section 16 along the Territorial road. The first person laid to rest there was a Mr. Searls. The ground has been added to several times, and is now one of the most beautiful cemeteries in Van Buren county.

Hamilton was a dense wilderness. Among the most prominent trees were the black-walnut, maple, beech, white and red oak.

The song birds were once more numerous than at the present time, the sparrows driving most of them away. The robin, blue jay, quail, whip-poor-will, wrens, brown-thrasher, meadow lark, phoebe, were numerous. Pigeons have been known to fly in flocks so large that they would cloud the sun.

The early crops were corn, potatoes, oats and wheat. At present time nearly all kinds of grain can be raised.

Many pleasant stories have been told by our forefathers, of the social gatherings, with old Brick and Bright hitched to the sleighs, with loads of jolly good people, attending spelling and singing schools and exchanging with neighbors in apple cuttings and logging bees, cooking their meals over the fire place and their lights the tallow-dip.

At the present time we have our organizations of clubs and lodges of all kinds. We have made progress from the ox team to the automobile, from the tallow candle to the gas and electric light.

All honor is due to our fore fathers who labored and paved the way for our benefits.

Hamilton's early history was noted for its charitable work. And as the pioneers have fought, the good fight, laid down their arms, and gone to their reward, we can well say as the stars and stripes float above them, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

MEMORIES OF EARLY PIONEER DAYS IN THE MICHIGAN WILDS

By Lucy Millard Bennett

I was born of Scotch-English parentage near New London, Conn., so also were my parents and grand parents, therefore, I am a real Yankee and might lay claim to a streak of blue blood, though perhaps, I have lost my identity, having lived in Michigan so long.

In June, 1837, my father, Calvin D. Millard, and my uncle, Ralph Mason, came to Michigan. My father bought 160 acres of land, one 80 acres in Hamilton (then known as Kendall) and the other 80 in Decatur township.

They cleared a space on the Hamilton 80 and built a log house, 16 or 18 by 30, perhaps. Stone fireplace, stick chimney, plastered over with clay. The crevices between the logs ,were filled with strips split from logs driven in tight, then plastered with clay, which made a warm comfortable house.

In August the house being nearly completed, my father drove to Adrain, Mich., the nearest railroad station and brought to the new home my mother and five children.

The picture even at this remote date is very vivid in my memory: A blanket hung at the one door, sash in the two windows, but no glass, a bed in one corner, a ladder near the door to reach the loft, a large fireplace, a few chairs, table, etc., this was the new home in the wilds of Michigan.

A little incident worthy of mention transpired soon after we came. After a few days rest, my father returned to Adrian for the remainder of the household goods. My mother, my oldest sister and myself were sleeping down stairs. One night my mother was awakened by the most bloodcurdling howl she had ever heard. She sprang out of bed, took me in her arms and went up that ladder double quick, my sister close at her heels, where uncle and the rest of the children were sleeping. The tracks of a large wolf were found next morning near the house. So a door was made at once to replace the blanket.

In the beginning of the new year, 1838, my father died suddenly of pneumonia, after only a few days illness. A physician was sent for twelve miles away, but was himself sick and could not come, so my father died, leaving my mother with five young children, to struggle for an existence in this new country. Although I was less than two years old, the experiences of those days, left an indelible impress on my memory that can never be effaced.

How my mother ever fed and clothed us is more than I can understand, but she was a typical New Englander, and with my uncle's help, she kept her little brood together. He bore a large part of the burden or we could never have pulled through. He was a shoemaker and made all our shoes.

There were plenty of deer and other wild game which furnished our meat and we made our own sugar, but there were no industries of any kind, no way of earning money, save possibly on the shoemaker's bench.

The new home was just south of what was known for many years as the McClintock farm, now owned by Fred Payne and wife.

The flouring mill was 30 miles away so the neighbors were wont to join together and send a big load. But one unfortunate day found the mill out of repair, so there was no flour to be had for a long time.

The baby got tired of a continuous diet of corn bread and teased and cried for bread till the mother was almost distracted.

In the night watches she thought of a plan that she put in practice in the morning. We had a good strong coffee mill and wheat was ground in that, each member of the family old enough helping till enough was ground and sifted to make some bread. That was the first flour ground in Van Buren county.

The east 80 now owned by C. D. Millard, was heavy timber land and there a sugar camp was established. My brother, a young lad went to the camp every day to gather and boil the sap. I heard them talk much of the timberland and thought it was a neighbor, so I persuaded him to take me with him to Mr. Timberland's. I had to stay all day while he gathered the sap and boiled it down. That was enough for me. I never asked to go again.

We had but one room and uncle's shoemaker's bench occupied an important place. A lone little girl wandering about with only a rag dolly to play with asked many questions and the answers were often very mystifying. When the little girl asked, "Uncle Ralph, what are you making," he would say, "R. O. for meddlers." That settled her for a time, while she wondered what he meant. At other times when asked what he was making, the answer would be, "Something to make little girls ask questions." My hair was red and he would caution me not to go near the fire or my hair might catch on fire. It had the effect to keep me away from the fire place.

I have in mind at this late date, a very vivid picture of that early home.

LETTERS WRITTEN BY A SOLDIER IN THE CIVIL WAR

John Bennett at the Front to His Wife in Decatur.

Camp on the banks of the Hightown river.
Twelve miles south of Kingston.
June 5th, 1864

Dear Wife:

This is the south fork of the two rivers that form the Coosa River. We have been in camp here three days recruiting our horses. Where we go next I don't know, but hope to Atlanta.

Our army extends about 20 miles in length. The right extends 16 miles east of the railroad to a place called Dallas, the left wing 4 miles west of the railroad, so we show a front of 20 miles and the whole length of that line is filled with the best men of the north.

This line is drawn by the Rebs to whip us or die. This ground that they are holding is the Antoone (or Altoona Mountains) one of the worst places for us they could have chosen. The hills are very high, covered thick with bushes. There are several gaps or passes, but every one well guarded and the hills well fortified.

We have got to lose lots of men to drive them out of those hills, but it must and will be done, and in my opinion the Rebel army here will never make another stand. There is a rumor that Rosecrans has come with fifty-five thousand men. If so we will surround and whip them till they say enough.

The country along the river is level and fine, best I have seen, but the hills are good for nothing, just a vast forest of trees and bushes. Very few families live there and they have to leave now.

Whenever there is a fight one can see women and children crying, nearly scared to death, holding up their hands to us for protection, little ones with fear and hunger. There are thousands of women and children, crying for bread at sight of our men.

The rich people have gone farther south and taken all they could and the armies take the rest. May God help them for man will not.

We had a gay old dinner yesterday. New potatoes and green peas. The weather is hotter here than it is at home in August. It will burn the hair off a dog's back. Rain last night and cooler today.

JOHN BENNETT,
1st Sergt. Co. C., 4th Mich. Cavalry.

ANDERSONVILLE PRISON

The Yankee Soldier's Greatest Misfortune Falls to the Lot of Brave John Bennett, But He Survives, Receives a Commission and Returns to Fight to the Finish

By His Wife, Lucy Bennett.

The last of December, 1864. John Bennett, with many other prisoners of war who survived the horrors of Andersonville, was exchanged and came home with an appetite almost equal to an ostrich, and so thin he could shut up like a jack knife.

In after years he never talked much about those days, as he said, no tongue or pen could adequately describe the awful conditions in that prison pen. Vermin were crawling all over the ground, they would take off whatever garment they were fortunate to possess and pick them off several times a day.

Their rations were, a little coarse corn meal, with a little water cooked in an old tin can. They would dig a hole in the ground and if by chance they could get a small stick of wood, they would whittle it into shavings, put them in the hole, light them and place the can over the fire as that conserved the heat. He could not eat much of the stuff, and managed to trade it sometimes to the Rebs for a few potatoes or onions.

He had to call the roll for 100 men every morning, then later 1,000 whom he had to account for, and for that he got another ration.

They slept on the ground, rows and rows of them spoon fashion, with no shelter, and when the roll was called many were dead.

The place was enclosed by logs split and set on the ground close together, with a space several feet wide inside the stockade, on which no prisoner was allowed to set foot, or he would be shot. That was the dead line. Some did step over and deliberately challenged the sentinel to shoot as they were in such a wretched condition they wanted to die.

Mr. Bennett found a young man there, Laski Dalson, by name, who had worked for us in former years. He was in a pitiful condition, teeth nearly all gone and flesh falling from his limbs. Scurvy and gangreen caused by lack of vegetables and other suitable food. He was in rags and Mr. Bennett shared what clothing he had with him. He had been in Libby, Belle Isle, Andersonville, then Florence, S. C., where he died, after spending fourteen months in those horrible places.

If they could get a beef bone, they would whittle and scrape and eat every particle of it, incredible as it may seem to those of us who fare sumptuously every day. They were so thin they would squat on the ground, and hug their knees tight to the stomach, which slightly relieved the void within.

I have the old stub of a spoon with which he ate, preserved as a precious relic. The poor fellows would sometimes try to comfort themselves by recalling the good things they had to eat at home and even singing snatches of funny songs to cheer each other.

S. S. Parmater of South Hamilton is the only man I know who is still living that was in Andersonville prison at the same time Mr. Bennett was, though they did not know each other then.

Mr. Bennett returned to his regiment before the expiration of his furlough, where a 2nd Lieutenant's Commission awaited him and was transferred to Company B. Later he received 1st Lieutenant's Commission by Brevet for meritorious conduct in the capture of Jefferson Davis.

Many years ago I owned a book called Life and Death in Rebel Prisons. Some one borrowed, but never returned it, to my intense regret. It gave a very graphic account of the conditions in Andersonville prison.

One half of these boards could be eliminated, and two thirds of their cost could be saved to the state, without loss of efficiency.

EARLY FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATIONS

At Kalamazoo in '56---Keeler Lake in '59---Celebrations in Decatur During Civil War- -Centennial in '76--Decatur in '85 and '98

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle

AT KALAMAZOO IN '56

The first 4th that I remember anything about distinctly, must have been about 1856 or '57. My parents lived on a farm in Hamilton then.

The day before the 4th father and two of his men were out in a field at work and John Steele spoke up and said that there was to be a big celebration at Kalamazoo the next day and he would like to go, so they decided that they would all go.

That afternoon the team was hitched up and father, Ame Dopp and John Steele drove to Decatur, taking me with them. After arranging to have the team cared for until their return, they all started on either an evening or a night train, John Steele carrying me on his knees, so that I didn't have to pay any fare, going or coming back.

The most that I remember about what we saw there, was that they had a lot of fire engines—the old fashioned kind that pumped the water by hand power and they had a contest to see which engine could throw a stream of water the highest and the farthest. I remember that the Chiefs had big silver plated speaking trumpets, and I thought that they were very beautiful.

One thing stands out clearly in my memory, and that was a half dozen or so men standing on some boxes, and one of the lines of hose burst completely deluging the party, and the way that those fellows scrambled to get off those boxes and out of the way of the stream of water. The crowd seemed to think that it was very funny. The surprised look on their faces when the water first struck them was something to remember for a life time.

We came home that night, but I was too sleepy and tired to take any interest in the proceedings.

AT KEELER LAKE IN '59

The next 4th that I call to mind was a private affair in Keeler. My father had a brother whose farm was on the shore of Keeler lake. In the summer of 1859 it was arranged that all the relatives and some of the neighbors were to meet at my uncle's place, on the 4th, have a picnic dinner in the woods and while the old folks would visit, the children could celebrate with fire crackers ,etc.

My cousin, Albert, had made himself a toy cannon by taking an old shot gun barrel and sawing off about two feet of the business end of it and then fastening it firmly into a block of wood. We had great fun for a long time shooting off that little gun, and seeng how far it would throw a stone out into Keeler lake, but in the afternoon that grew tame, and we decided to take all the powder we had left, put it all in at once and then fill the gun to the muzzle with wadding and stones, and have one last grand bang. And we surely did.

After the cannon was properly loaded it was pointed out toward the lake. Albert tied a fire cracker to the end of a fish pole and touched it off. The children were all gathered in a semi-circle behind it and that old gun barrel went all to nothing, and the block of wood that it was fastened into split into slivers and went flying in every direction.

It was wonderful that some of those kids weren't killed or hurt, but not one was touched. I can hear those pieces whiz even yet. The old folks came running out to see what had happened and were very well satisfied when they found out that no one was hurt, and that we had used up all the powder and busted the gun.

We all had a fine dinner out in the woods, plenty of candy for the kids, as well as other things to eat, and went home well satisfied that we had had a glorious 4th.

Two years later, in 1861, the folks went back to the same place, and had another family celebration, but there wasn't the same fun in it that there had been the first time, because the older people took pains to find out that there wasn't any sawed off shot guns in the outfit, or anything else larger than firecrackers and torpedoes, and that took all the vim out of the day.

Still we had a nice dinner out in the woods with plenty of candy and nuts. It was all striped stick candy, for we hardly ever saw any other kind in those days, and we were very glad to get that.

After the dinner was over three of us boys went to Magician Lake, hired a boat of Fred Gould, and started out fishing, and while we were in the middle of the lake the wind began to blow very hard and we discovered also that the boat was leaking badly.

We were only small boys and didn't know much about boats anyway, and it seemed to us that the prospects were good that we would never see home and mother again. Jimmy was badly scared and as he could never keep still under any circumstances, he began to pray and he told the overruling powers that if they would let him get to shore safely this time, that he would promise to be an extra good boy and that he would never go fishing again in a d——d old leaky boat.

Albert and I were badly scared, too but we didn't have so much to say about it, and kept on bailing out the water industriously. Finally we got back to shore safely, but without any fish, well satisfied to feel the solid ground under our feet.

WAR TIME CELEBRATIONS

In 1860 there was a grand celebration in Decatur on the 4th and in 1863 Jim and myself had a big time at my home in Hamilton, but I have described these two in previous articles.

In 1862 Decatur had another celebration on the 4th, but by this time the war was going on and it was more of a war meeting than a celebration.

Many of the young men were already gone into the army and others were being urged to enlist and help save the Union.

There was a great crowd in town and they had an old iron cannon mounted on a pair of wagon wheels and fastened on with log chains, but that old gun could make some noise, and it was kept going. My memory of this day is not very perfect.

LATER FOURTHS

The 4th of 1876 was a great day, almost everywhere, as that was the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, but I was not here at that time, so I do not know what was done in Decatur, no doubt they remembered the day properly.

The 4th of 1898 most people here recollect without my help. The Spanish war was going on then and the feeling was something faintly resembling Civil War days, but nowhere near as intense.

A part of a company of newly enlisted men were at the depot to take the eleven a. m. train east to join the rest of the Company and just as the train pulled out our park cannon with a double charge of powder was fired and the windows in the coaches on the north side and nearly every window on that side of the depot as well as some up town were smashed into bits.

A lady was standing in the open door of the ladies' waiting room at the depot and the transom glass above the door was smashed, and the pieces fell on the woman's head, cutting her badly. She bled so that at first I thought she must be killed but after a little while she went off and I never knew what her name was or how badly she was hurt. The old cannon has never been fired since and probably never will be again.

On the 4th of 1885, Decatur had a big celebration and they had a small cannon that had been loaned to the town for that day by the state that had been used by the Rebels during Civil War. It wasn't much larger than a real popgun but it could make a lot of noise and it was kept barking most of the day.

Tom Brownbridge amused himself for a long time by sticking up a stick in the ground just across the track from the old depot, tying a dynamite cartridge to the top of it and setting it off. He kept this up till he smashed nearly all the windows on that side of the telegraph office and the agents' living rooms, and almost made the Agent's wife crazy.

Some of the girls that were young then, but who now are middle aged ladies, ran foot races, and fished for a silver dollar with their mouths, said dollar being at the bottom of a tub full of water.

ORGANIZING THE 19TH INFANTRY

The 2nd day of August, 1862, was not the Fourth of July, but there was a great celebration at Dowagiac. It was a great War Meeting and it had been advertised in every direction in the country for a week or two before. There was a great crowd there that day.

Early in the morning my father hitched the team to the lumber wagon and took a load from our part of Hamilton.

The state was raising a new regiment, the 19th Infantry, that was to be organized at Dowagiac, and was to camp there until they went south and they were to be recruited from Van Buren, Cass and other nearby counties, and this meeting was to get men to enlist.

I went with one of my playmates, who was a few years older, when he went to enlist. Poor boy, he was shot and killed in just a short time after leaving Dowagiac.

The company camped and drilled on the old fair grounds as long as they stayed there. I was going to school in Dowagiac and every Saturday Jimmy and I would get a bag of apples and take them to the camp and peddle them out to the soldiers.

They left Dowagiac by train in common box cars in September and in less than six months after leaving home most of the regiment were cut to pieces, and many of them killed or captured.

Decatur sent out several men in this regiment, including one lieutenant, John Stafford, a tinner, and he was presented by the citizens with a fine sword. The presentation was made in front of the old Duncombe House, then standing, on the corner of Phelps and St. Mary's streets.

It is impossible to realize now the excitement and enthusiasm that prevailed at that time. War meetings were being held and men that could leave home were urged to enlist. Soldiers were going away to the front, while others were coming home, either wounded or sick, or from some other cause. Many young men enlisted and the last thing before going away they would marry and leave a wife behind to either take care of herself or be taken care of.

The War widows and their children had to be looked after and not left to suffer, while their husbands were in the army. The Sanitary Commission had branches almost everywhere to look after the sick and wounded soldiers and their families and also to make up boxes of good things from home to be sent the boys who were at the front.

SUBSTITUTES

Some men made a business of hunting up and hiring substitutes to go in the place of those who could not go themselves, or who had been drafted. Toward the close of the war there were several drafts here in Decatur. Every town had to furnish its quota of men and if that could not be done by voluntary enlistments then there had to be a draft.

Towns offered bounties to get men to fill their quotas, and some very large amounts were paid for enlistments. I knew one man that enlisted during the last winter of the war, who got $1600 bounty in cash and never got farther away from home than Chicago, when the war closed. Some got even larger sums than that to go as substitutes. A class of men called "bounty jumpers" made a business of enlisting for a large bounty, getting the money and then taking the first chance to sneak over into Canada, changing their name, and coming back to some other part of the U. S. and going through the same performance again.

It was a terrible four years that this country passed through, and it is to be hoped that we will never have to see anything like it again. Only those who lived in those days can appreciate it fully.

EARLY SCHOOL DAYS

SIXTY YEARS AGO IN THE HAYDEN DISTRICT. OPENING THE NESBITT SCHOOL. SPELLING DOWN THE SCHOOL. THOSE WONDERFUL DAYS OF LONG AGO.

By: W.H. Tuttle

My first schooling began in 1865 when I was eight years old. At that time the nearest school house was the Hayden School on the Territorial Road, about two miles from our home, almost all the way through dense woods.

In order to get me to learn something at home, my mother had told me that it was only bad boys who wouldn't try to study any at home, that had to go to school and the consequence was that going to school seemed to me to be about like going into state's prison and something to be dreaded very much, so I did my best to learn at home. But one morning father hitched up the team and he and mother got into the wagon and took me in with them and started. Naturally I wanted to know where we were going, and I found out that they were taking me to school. It seems strange but I was just about as scared as if I were going to be hanged.

I had never had but very few children to play with and was not, then or any other time, one to make new friends, and the idea of being taken away from home and put with a lot of strangers just about frightened me to death.

The first forenoon mother had to stay there with me to keep me from going all to pieces, but as soon as I got acquainted with the other scholars and interested in my lessons, there wasn't anything that could keep me at home and I cheerfully walked two miles each way through the woods every day for the sake of going.

Nesbitt School Opens

Miss Woodruff was the teacher and I went to school there two summers. The Nesbitt school house was built and as that was only about a half-mile from our home, I went to school there as long as we were in Hamilton.

I think that the first school in the Nesbitt school house was in the winter of 1857 to -58, and John Steele was the first teacher. I remember that the snow was very deep, and John used to carry me on his back through the snow drifts. During the summer term many of the larger children were kept at home to assist with the farm work and then Tommy Griffin, Jack Johnson, Emery Place and myself were the big boys in school and we were only twelve to fourteen years old.

In the winter many larger scholars came. How many, many there were, and how I would like to go back and live those days over again. That was real life — no cares, no worries, very few troubles and those very quickly forgotten, no looking forward nor backward, just living for the present day.

We played pull away, slid down the Nesbitt hill in the winter, waded in the creek, and raced around the Nesbitt grist mill dam. It fairly makes my mouth water to think of it. Of those children of fifty-five years ago, — many are dead, and nearly all the rest are scattered everywhere. Only a very few are still living in that district, and all who are still alive are old and gray haired.

The Teachers

The teachers that I remember were John Steele, Mr. Jacobs, Miss Nancy Collins, Miss Amanda Haynes, and Mrs. Munson. There was another man teacher but I have forgotten his name. I remember the nickname that he went by but I won't write it. He thrashed one of the larger boys one day in a perfectly terrible way, and there was a lot of trouble in the school and a big law suit over it. Some of us thought that the boy got just about what was coming to him, while others thought that he was terribly misused. I do not remember how the law suit came out but anyway, that boy got a trouncing that I'll bet he remembers to this day. I know the fracas almost scared me to death. There may have been other teachers there during those years but I cannot recall them.

My people moved to Decatur in the spring of 1866 so it is fifty years since I've been inside of the old school house. The outside looks very much the same but I am told that the inside has been remodeled, and is entirely changed. I would like to spend a few hours in the old building once more and try to make believe that I was a boy again, and that I could go out and play with Tommy, Emery, and Jack, or go to the spring at the Old Red Mill for a pail of water. But I am afraid that the "make believe" would not be much of a success, and would come nearer to tears than laughter.

The burning of the Nesbitt grist mill has changed the looks of things outside very much for the old dam, and in winter the pond was a great play place of ours.

The Spelling Contest

I must say that I learned more in that old country school house that has been of use to me in after life, than I did in much more pretentious schools afterwards. We did not study algebra, botany, geology, trigonometry, French or German or music, or anything of that sort, but we did study arithmetic, geography, reading and writing and especially spelling. Every scholar was anxious to "leave off head," at the daily spelling class and the consequence was that they studied the spelling book very diligently, and it was quite an honor to be known as the best speller in school. It seems to me now to be of much more value to be a fairly good speller or to understand the common rules of arithmetic and to be able to add, subttract, divide and multiply, correctly, than it is to wear out a child's brain and use up their time in studying Algebra or other high-up studies. One they will have use for all their after life, while the other they will never think of or have any use for from the moment they leave school, and will forget all about in a few years.

What fun we used to have at the spelling schools in the winter time. The house would be crowded, and a great many who came were not scholars but older people who came to enjoy themselves. Two of the best spellers would choose sides, each one trying to get the best spellers on their side and then the fun would begin. All would stand up and whenever one missed a word they would have to sit down. At first they would go down fast until only some of the best were left and then the real contest would begin. Harder and longer would grow the words given out until perhaps only one would be left on each side, and finally one would trip on a jaw breaker and go down leaving the best speller standing, and that was considered quite an honor to spell the school down.

The rest of the evening would be given up to recitations, music and all kinds of fun. By golly, it just makes me ache to go back but I don't see how I'm going to do it.

Pe-tes'-e-ga

(Ottawa word meaning, "the rising sun")
by John C. Wright

The Original, Authentic Algonquin Tradition of the Happy Hunting Grounds

– In Three Parts –

Listen how a simple people,
Knowing naught of Christian love,
Found a gospel in the woodland,
And proclaimed a God above;
How the children of the forest
Taught a life beyond the grave,
And a happy, joyous future
For the worthy and the brave:

* * * * * *

Part I

Wherein Petasega starts out for the Happy Hunting Grounds, in a trance, Followed by his sweetheart, Winona, who, however, soon returns; while his mother, Old No-ko-qua, takes up the chase, thus stressing mother love, which was a surpassing virtue among the Indians.

On the shores of We-que-ton-sing,
Where the silver birches grow,
Lived a chieftain great and mighty,
Many, many moons ago.

There he trapped the bears and wild cats —
From the fiercest took the pelt,
And the scalps of many foemen
Dangled from his wampum belt.

He was bravest of the warriors —
He was fleet and keen of sight —
The beloved of all his kinsmen
Was Pe-tas'-e-ga — "The Light."
"Ko-ko-ko,Koji-gau-do-naw, Ho! Ta-neen da go now!"
("Do not worry, do not scowl
He won't hurt you, Little Owl!")
Thus they sang the cradle song
That had made him brave and strong.

But one day a fever seized him —
On his couch he had to lie;
All his people came about him,
For ('twas said, the chief must die).

On the softest furs they laid him: —
When his war-whoop loudly rang,
And death frenzied by his fever,
From the wigwam door he sprang.

Close behind him leaped Winona,
Fairest daughter of the band;
She, the sweetheart of the chieftain
Called to him with outstretched hand.

But Pe-tas'-e-ga was heedless
As a deer with fleeting bound;
He was eager on his journey,

Running high above the ground.
So Winona in dismay
Quit the chase and turned away.
"Ni-ni-mo-sha, Ish-pe-ming, Bah-mah-pee!" she'd often sing:
I'll be happy by and by,
With my lover in the sky."
Then his mother, Old No-ko-qua,
In her grief was nearly wild;
On his trail she followed crying:
"Oh, Pe-tas'-e-ga, my Child!"

CAMPING IN THE SUGAR BUSH

One spring while cousin Jim and myself were making maple sugar in our small sugar bush on one corner of my father's farm in Hamilton, we took it into our heads that it would be the nice and proper thing to do to stay out in the woods nights as well as days.

We had been working in our bush through the daytime, but when the dark began to come we scooted for home and stayed there until daylight came again.

But if we were to be hunters and trappers and Indian fighters, as we intended, surely we must learn to stay out in the forest nights, and not go home every night as soon as it got dark, and there would be no better chance to begin than right then.

My folks kindly consented that we should try it, for the camp was not much more than a quarter of a mile from the house and there was nothing more dangerous out there than squirrels and rabbits, or a stray cow or pig, so far as anyone knew.

We had a little hut, built in the shape of a tent, made of boards that my father had drawn out to the sugar bush for us from his sawmill. It was enclosed on the two sides and back end and open in front toward the fire, where we boiled the sap, and the floor was well covered with nice dry straw, so it was dry and very comfortable.

Bets were freely made by my father's hired men that we would be back in the house before ten o'clock, but Jim and I were determined to carry it through, and mother packed us a big basket of eatables and we started for our camp just before dark.

We gathered in the sap from the trees, built up a good fire and picked up wood enough to keep it going, and decided to keep the sap boiling until we got sleepy.

Some time in the evening the wind began to blow rather hard and it rained, and it did not seem anywhere near as nice and pleasant out there in the dark with the wind whipping the tree tops around and the rain falling, as it had in the bright daylight and to tell the truth, we would both have been mighty glad to be back in our pleasant room at home.

We talked it over and decided that it would never do to go back now and be laughed at by everyone, so we kept our courage up, but it was pretty hard work.

We were warm and dry and after a while we sank off to sleep on the straw and the next thing we realized was my father shaking us awake. He had come to the camp to see if we were all right and to tell us to come to the house for breakfast.

Well, we were two proud boys that day for we had done something that all the men had told us we wouldn't dare to do and nothing could keep us at home nights after that unless it was so cold that mother wouldn't let us stay at the camp. We soon got used to camping out and really enjoyed it after the first night or two.

We had been staying out in our hut in that way for a week or two, and then one evening along about nine or ten o'clock Jim and I were lying on the straw with a good fire burning out in front and we were just getting ready to go off to sleep, when we heard something that sounded as though someone was yelling a long way off and every few moments it was repeated and it seemed to grow louder and plainer as though it were coming nearer. Sometimes there would be quite a while that we heard nothing, and then it would break out again several times in quick succession, and every time it seemed as though it were coming straight toward us.

You better believe that Jim and I listened with all our ears and then some. When it seemed to get nearer to us it sounded like a woman screaming at the top of her voice, with a peculiar chuckling sound at the end of every scream. At last, after a pause of some time it broke out again, seemingly only a few rods from our camp, with the most unearthly scream that anyone ever heard.

Well, Jimmy and I were only thirteen years old and that last scream apparently almost at our hut immediately destroyed all of our desire to camp out in the woods and, if we thought at all, which is very unlikely, we thought that we wanted to get home in the shortest possible space of time.

Neither one of us ever knew what we did do, but first thing that we realized was that we were going through those woods towards home at a pace that would have made the fast express seem like a snail. It was pitch dark in the woods and the way was full of brush, fallen trees, etc. but that didn't bother us any. Once in awhile we would hear that awful scream behind us and that didn't detain us any. We went over and under or through everything, and finally reached the house all out of breath, our clothes torn, and almost exhausted.

The folks at the house had heard the screaming and when we got there father and one of his men were just starting for our camp to find out what it meant. They thought that it might be us two boys screaming, and they were all glad to see us safe and sound.

The next morning father went with us to the camp, and there we found everything just as we had left it, guns, syrup, basket of food, etc., nothing had been disturbed and it was a great mystery as to what it could have been making such awful noises.

Others heard it as well as we two boys. Some said it was a lynx or panther and some declared it was a crazy woman wondering in the woods.

Others thought it was someone trying to scare us boys away so that they could steal our syrup and other things but nothing in the camp was taken so it couldn't have been that, for we were scared away all right.

The men in the mill tried to make us believe that it was a cat yawling but we knew better than that. Jimmy and I did not work the next day, but tried to get over our scare, and after a day or two we got up courage enough to go back to our sugar making, but it did not take much of a noise to make us jump for awhile.

If there ever were two badly scared boys, Jim and I were the two that night, and I have never been able to make my hair lie down flat. We had no more desire to stay out in the camp all night after that; it was all we could do to stay there in the daytime.

It was never known certainly what it was but it was generally supposed to have been a stray wild cat or lynx. I do not remember that it was ever heard around there after that one night. Poor Jimmie is dead now, but as long as he lived he never got tired of talking of our sugar camp and the hut, and the awful scare that we got that night.

DESECRATING THE DEAD

In the summer of 1864, just about fifty two years ago and while our terrible Civil War was in progress, a young man by the name of Lewis Noble came home from the army to die. I think that he came from a southern prison pen, but am not quite sure about that. Anyway he was a perfect wreck physically when he arrived, and he only lived a few weeks after getting home, but he had the consolation of dying at home with his father and mother. His looks showed what the suffering must have been that he had gone through, for he was a complete wreck. I, with another boy friend attended his funeral, and we saw him laid away in Lakeside cemetery. I do not know what the boy's army service may have been, but he gave all that he had, his life, just as certainly as though he had been killed in battle.

This boy's family moved away from Decatur many years ago and they are all dead, except three brothers, and of course, there was no one left here to see to or protect the grave, and on going to the cemetery a few days ago, I was astonished to find that this young soldier's grave has been dug up, and his few bones that could be found reburied in the Soldier's Potter's field, and his resting place has been appropriated by another family.

I do not know how this may seem to others, but to me it is an outrage. It is nothing more or less than robbing the dead who cannot protect themselves and who have no one left here to guard their last resting place. This boy's father was a business man in Decatur for many years, and he provided this cemetery lot especially for the grave of his boy, and expected that this boy would remain there undisturbed; but the cemetery authorities must dig up his poor bones, and resell the lot to another man for five dollars.

And this isn't the worst of it either, for I find upon investigation, that this turning out the old dead to make room for the new, is being done in other cases in our cemetery, where there are no living members of the family left to protect them, and if this practice is kept up no one of us will be safe after the members of the families are all gone.

I understand that one excuse that is made for this kind of work is that the original owners did not buy their lots but only paid fifty cents for recording the location but the fact is that years ago, when many of the lots were taken, they were not sold at all, but were only chosen and fifty cents paid for the record; and what difference does it make whether one pays fifty cents or five dollars for anything, it is his just the same.

My father only paid fifty cents for his lot, but now my father, mother and wife are buried there, and in a few years I shall be permanently located there also, and then there will be no one left to care what becomes of it, and some fellow that takes a notion to that particular location will come along and pay whoever is in charge of the cemetery five dollars, and we will all be dug up and chucked into another hole in some out of the way place. And it will hit a good many others in the same way.

This town has another cemetery where, I understand, there are plenty of vacant lots to be had for the asking, so why not let the poor bodies stay where they were laid by loving hands so many years ago; and at least, I think that the Soldiers who died for their country, should be allowed to rest in peace, and not be dug up and consigned to the Charity Plot.

In the cases where there are only one body buried on a lot and some one else would like to use part of the same location, there would usually be no objection to using one half or three-quarters of the same lot, if permission were asked of the owner, and the body that is already buried there properly taken care of and protected. But that doesn't seem to suit.

In the case of the Noble lot it would have been very easy to find the brothers of the dead soldier for many of the older residents remember the family, and no doubt permission could have been obtained to use part of the lot, and not have to dig up his bones. But what is the use of accepting part when you can take the whole.

I would be glad to know what others think about this matter.

FURTHER COMMENTS ON THE COMET

J. C. LYLE SAW IT IN '61

Editor Republican:

I want to say a word in defense of Mr. Tuttle's remarks about the big comet.

I left Prince Edwards Island on the twenty-second of October, 1861, bound for Michigan. Ten days before I left the Comet appeared and in the dark period of the moon. On that account it showed very plainly.

My first night out I was going from St. Johns, New Brunswick, to Boston on a steamboat. As everyone on the boat was a stranger to me the comet seemed like a companion. I watched it ti.. it disappeared in the ocean.

My second night out I watched it while traveling from Albany to Niagara Falls, New York. The next night I watched it from Detroit to Lawton. When I got off the train there I paid no more attention to it.

When I saw Mr. Rowland's view of the matter it set me to thinking about my trip to Michigan and my companion in the skies. He quoted history in part but finally said that he went into the war in September, 1861, and did not believe there was any comet during his service or he surely would have seen it. Mr. Rowland's story seems to put Mr. Tuttle in the hole and that is the reason I am coming to his rescue. Where were you during October, 1861, Mr. Rowland? If you were where you could see the stars you must have seen the comet.

I was twenty-one years old that fal that I came from Prince Edwards Island to Michigan. I went direct to Paw Paw and visited friends there awhile and Van Buren has been my home county and Decatur my home town ever since.

Respectfully,
John C. Lyle.

MRS. CRITTENDEN SAYS 1858

Mr. Moulton:

That comet Mr. Tuttle speaks of in your paper happened in the year 1858. I remember it as well as if it happened yesterday.

I lived in Canada on a farm. I had been deaf about two years or a little more. One evening I went out to get a pail of water, looked up and saw a very bright light in the northeast. I said to myself that looks just like my brother's paper kite. The comet had a row of bright lights fast to its tail, like the paper knots tied to the tail of a paper kite. I looked at it for several minutes with surprise, not knowing what it was.

The next morning I got up before daylight and went again to get another pail of water and again saw the comet. It was then in the north west, the tail still pointing downward towards the northeast.

I have often wondered when I have been reading about the comets why this comet was never mentioned and this I read in your paper is the first word I ever got hold of concerning it.

I never saw the northern lights but twice in my life, then they were very brilliant with the rays of the sun shining so bright above the northern horizon. I wish I could see them again.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS OF EARLY DECATUR

Some years before the beginning of the Civil War there had been a lodge of good Templars in Decatur but I was too young to know anything about it, and I remember only one person who belonged to the lodge; that was Jack Poore, who was a clerk in the store of Charles N. Poore, the hardware merchant and post master at that time.

I do not believe that there is a single person left alive who belonged to this lodge of nearly sixty years ago. The lodge died a natural death and was gone by the time the war began.

The next lodge was organized in September, 1865 and for a year or so it had a large membership, including many of the young people in town, but in reality, I believe it did more harm than good, for in a short time they were divided into two camps — the "old folks" and the "young folks."

The old folks wanted to have all the proceedings on a strictly solemn basis, in fact they wanted to make a kind of church of it, and they would not stand for any levity, but the young people were out to have fun and wanted to make the lodge room a place where they could talk and visit and have a good time.

Young Folks Organize New Lodge

This led to a division in the membership and many of the young people withdrew from the lodge in one night, and after a short time we succeeded in having the Grand Lodge authorize a new lodge in Decatur and before the old folks really knew what was going on we had a lodge room rented and a new lodge started.

Then, you may believe me, a jolly row broke out in short order. The members of the old lodge were determined that the new lodge should not continue.

Herrick Hodge was one of the most vehement in the opposition and with several others brought all manner of charges against some of us young people.

Of course, all this "tempest in a teapot" was just the best kind of fun to the young folks, while to the elders it was all dead earnest as if the fate of the whole country depended on the outcome.

The young deputy, who was in sympathy with us, had the name of Collins, and we named our new organization, "Collin's Lodge." We fitted up our lodge room in fine shape, and very soon we had all the members that we cared to take in.

The Mysterious F. F.

Not satisfied with this some of our most trusty members got up an entirely new secret society. The members of this new order had to belong to Collin's Lodge I.O.G.T. first to be eligible to the new organization. Only young people were admitted to this society.

We had a ritual — which was composed by Stryke Noble — and some parts of the initiation ceremonies were great. Each member got a silver coin, and Fred Smith, the jeweler, smoothed out one side of it and engraved on it the initials of the order — F. F. — with a fancy border and made it into a pin, and we were at all times to wear it on our clothes.

We had such a good time and made so much noise that we finally got the reputation of being a set of young desperadoes.

How well I remember those boys, and the trick that we used to play to mystify some of the outsiders.

George Voke and myself worked in the printing office and occasionally we would print notices in blood-colored ink, headed with an F. F. in large type and after that fill it up with a lot of gibberish that really meant nothing at all, and a date and picture of a coffin at the bottom and then in the night we boys would start out and post them up on fences and buildings and the next day what a lot of talk there would be but no one could get a word about it out of us. When we went to the meeting we took great pains to disguise our identity, but really it would have been no fun at all if everyone hadn't known who we were.

But finally the opposition to the new lodge, as well as the curiosity about the F. F.'s died away. A number of the young men went away to other towns and Collin's Lodge and the F. F. order died a natural death inside of a year. But it was lots of fun while it lasted.

A Wild Town

The state of Michigan at this time was strictly prohibition. There was no property value in liquor of any kind, and if one got trusted for it either by the drink or by the barrel he could not be forced to pay for it, and I knew of some saloon keepers who took advantage of this fact to refuse to pay for the liquors they obtained of the wholesalers. But this did not happen very often for men generally pay their whiskey and gambling debts, if they don't pay any other kind.

Although the whole state was dry every town, big and little, was filled with saloons that did business without any fear of the law. This little town had thirteen open bars and a brewery, and they all did a flourishing business, and some of the best men in town kept saloons.

I have heard some say, that there is more drinking here now than there was when we had open saloons, but I know better. There is plenty of drinking yet, but I do not believe that there is one dollar paid out for liquor now where there was ten paid fifty years ago, or would it be again if we were to go back to open saloons, as many seem to wish.

Fifty years ago whiskey came as near to being free here as it was possible to be. There was no license to pay, except the twenty-five dollars demanded by the U.S. Government and anyone who could pay that and buy a barrel of whiskey and one or two of beer could start a saloon and make money. They had to give no bonds of any kind, and apparently were subject to no law. It was no disgrace to run and own a saloon. Almost everyone drank, and no one was thought much the less of because he got roaring drunk occasionally.

I really think that just after the war closed the town of Decatur was one of the toughest this side of Hades.

When the Lake of the Woods was drained the first time a lot of men were brought here to do the ditching and every Saturday afternoon they were all in town and in the P. M. and evening there were some wild doings in Decatur. I remember standing on a large dry goods box in front of Chadwicks (now Stewarts) store one Saturday and watching twelve different fights all going on at the same time, and it was no unusual sight on any Saturday to see two or more men tumbling around on the ground trying to pound one another.

But some say that business was better then than now. Don't you believe it. There was much more grain and other farm produce marketed here then than there is now because at that time it had to be brought to some town on the M.C.R.R. for shipment from twenty-five to thirty miles — either north or south of us, but now the country is gridironed with railroads and new towns have sprung up that have taken away a large share of this business.

But saloons didn't bring the wheat to this market, and if we have any number of them in Decatur now, it would not fetch the grain trade back again. We have had both kinds of a town here and anyone who has lived through it all can see the difference.

But to return to the good Templars I think that the last lodge died out some thirty years or more ago, and that there has never been one here since. Probably it is just as well, for outside of the lodge being a good visiting place, it amounted to very little. I cannot remember anyone being really reformed by joining them. Some things that happened in those days caused a good deal of ridicule to be cast upon the temperance cause. Anyway the trying to promote temperance in Decatur at that time was effort wasted.

REMEMBRANCES OF EARLY DAYS

MRS. BENNETT OF BENTON HARBOR RESIDED IN DECATUR FROM 1856 TO 1865 AND WAS A MEMBER OF FIRST ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

To the Republican:

In the Republican of March 23 W. H. T. says he don't believe there is a person now living who belonged to the Good Templars lodge of nearly sixty years ago. Myself and husband were active members of that lodge. Of the later organization I have no remembrance as the Civil War came on and I had weightier matters on my mind.

He speaks of Michigan as being a strictly prohibition state at that time. I did not know that Michigan had ever been a prohibition state and it is not now, though it is moving to the front.

Decatur was my home from April, 1856, till August, 1865, and I became quite well acquainted with the little town, but I don't remember that any of the supposedly best men, ever kept a saloon.

We lived the first year in a little house on the southeast corner of Main and St. Mary's streets, ome years after it was occupied by Miss Libbie Thomas as a millinery shop. Across the street on the right toward Delaware, a man by the name of Willis kept a disrespectable place, nearly opposite, Morgan Woodruff had a cabinet shop. Later a young man named Lavin owned the shop which burned down. McMinn lived diagonally across from us, and on the next corner north was the red school house, used also as a church, where Mr. Harrison preached.

Harry Canoll and Mr. Nash were among the early business men. Charles Tucker kept a general store on the corner that is now occupied by a hardware store. Col. Phelps was postmaster, located near where L. G. Stewart's grocery now stands, but was afterward moved to their residence around the corner on Sherwood street, where Mrs. Phelps held the office for some time after the Colonel's death, with Charles Cockett as clerk.

Dr. Baker was already established in Decatur and was married about four years later. Mr. Nash had a hardware store near where Knights' grocery now stands. Wm. Teed, Tom Brownoridge, Nutting, Chadwick, Trowbridge, Browning, Van Sickle, Poor and many others, were familiar names in the business life of the earlier years of Decatur. John Wallace conducted a general store, many years on the corner of Main and Delaware.

There are many other names familiar to the early residents of Decatur that it would take too much time and space to mention. I grew from babyhood to early womanhood in the near vicinity of Decatur before such a place had been thought of and the terminus of the Michigan Central was Adrian.

THE OLD TANNERY

By: W.H. Tuttle

It seems to be rather hard to find out anything very definite about the old Decatur Tannery. It was probably built about the year 1856 or '57 by Ransom Nutting, but about the time that he got it finished he sold it to L.T. Rawson, and went back to Boston with his family.

After staying in the East for a year or two he came back to Michigan again, and bought the tannery again. This must have been about the time the war broke out, or just before it and he took in with him as a partner H.J. Hendricks. They managed the business for some years, finally selling it to a man by the name of Hoppin.

It must have been abandoned as a tannery somewhere near 1870, and after that it remained vacant for several years. Then about the year 1880 it was made over into a factory for all kinds of wooden ware, butter dishes, fruit baskets, etc. After a few years of this is was abandoned for good, and some years later it burned down.

In war days the grounds all around the tannery were covered with piles of hemlock bark drawn from the north woods. This was broken into pieces and then ground up in a kind of a big coffee mill to be used in tanning the hides.

The hides were collected from the surrounding country and shipped here to be made into leather. There were very few houses south of the railroad in those days, and the grounds were covered with timber and grubs.

After the building was abandoned it became a great gathering place for tramps, boys and some men who might have been better off at home. It was supposed that it was some of these loafers who finally burned it down.

A great many stories were told in those days about goings on in the old tannery and amongst grubs back of there. One Sunday about fifty years ago, three men started out to enjoy themselves in the grubs back of the old building, and of course they took a big bottle and a pack of cards with them. They stayed there nearly all day, and when they got ready to go home towards night they couldn't see very clearly.

Near the tannery was an old abandoned well that had been covered over with boards and the covering had become somewhat decayed, and when one of the men stepped on the boards they broke and let him drop to the bottom of the well; fortunately the well was not deep, neither was the water in the well, so the man was not hurt, but he was scared good and plenty and he yelled at a great rate. The other men looked around, but they could see nothing of him. They hunted for him some time but could see nothing of him, and their muddled wits finally concluded that he had been carried off through the air by the Devil, and went up town and so reported, saying that they could hear their friend crying to them for help but that they could not see him because he had been rendered invisible.

Other men, seeing the condition that the two men were in did not take much stock in their story, but went to the tannery and soon found the man in the well and pulled him out none the

A PUZZLE

My mother married a widower with 4 sons and one daughter. I married a son of that daughter who was my sister, so my sister became my mother. My stepfather was my husband's grand father and his wife was of course my husband's grandmother. Was not my father my grandfather, and my mother my grandmother? Was not my mother and stepfather, my husband's father and mother, too? My sister married my husband's uncle, so was not my sister my aunt?

L. B.

worse for his fall except a good wetting.

At another time, while the tannery was still in operation, Johnny Brownbridge, who was a small boy then, was playing around the vats one day, and he accidentally fell into the "bait vat" head over heels. Now tanners' "bait" is composed of about he nastiest things in all the world, and is about as thick as good thick soup, and Johnny would very quickly have been an angel if his father hadn't to be there and pulled him out in a hurry. But Johnny was surely a sight when they got him out and they say that his father was some mad and gave him a good trouncing.

At another time, after the building was abandoned, two town boys were playing inside, and one of them had an old pistol. The pistol wasn't loaded, of course, but in some way it went off and one of the boys received the bullet in his body, quite a serious wound too.

The boys were so frightened by what they had done that they didn't dare go home and tell their parents what had happened, and the boy who was hurt went home and never said a word about it for a day or two — until he became so bad that he had to. My recollection of it is that he got over it after awhile but it gave the two a good scare.

When the war broke out the tannery was threatened with destruction by fire a good many times. Political feeling ran very high in those days, and was very bitter, and it so happened that the tannery men were all on the Southern side and didn't care who knew it, and it caused Union men and those who had relatives and friends in the Northern army to feel very hard about it. There was a great deal of big talk on both sides, but fortunately it amounted to nothing worse.

People living now, who have grown up since the war, cannot realize the bitterness which prevailed in those days between Northern and Southern sympathizers. I used to think in those days that a southern man was a great deal worse than the devil, in fact, didn't suppose that he had any right to live at all, and that it was a meritorious act to burn his buildings or even to kill him and there were lots of grown people who thought the same way.

The tannery is only a memory now, and like the Stave Factory, the old distillery, and the big grist mill, have all passed away and are almost forgotten.

OLD DECATUR

The Van Buren County Directory Printed in 1869---Celebrating Its Completion---The Old Land Marks

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

I have been putting in some of my spare time lately in going over the old Van Buren County Directory, compiled and published by Delos Hill and Charlie Leavens, in the summer and fall of the year 1868, forty-eight years ago. The book was printed in the Republican office which was then located in Poore's block, in the room over Ball's meat market.

I was a printer at that time and was one of the boys that did the work on the book, and of all the boys that worked in the office during that fall and winter that I know anything about, except two are dead. Burt Cole and myself are still alive, but Delos Hill, Charlie Leavens, Ed. Blackman, Dick Lyon, Geo. Sellick, Geo. Voke and Andy Johnson are all gone and the directory is almost unkown now, except by a few of older inhabitants. Burt Cole was quite a small boy then and was just starting in his career as a printer —in fact he was the Devil in the office. I wonder if he remembers the night Joe Pearson was killed and he was afraid to go home alone and I went with him?

CELEBRATING COMPLETION OF DIRECTORY

We had some great times in that office—especially the night that we finished the book. We had a banquet and invited in all of our friends to help celebrate the event. We had a long table in the press room, and it was covered with crackers, chees and herring, pipes and tobacco, and in a prominent place was a keg of beer, and everyone was invited to help themselves. We had speeches and funny stories galore, we kept up the fun until almost morning. I do not think that there is anyone left in Decatur who was there that night except myself—but if there is they will surely remember Bill Tucker's Side Board. That was something no one would be apt to forget.

But in reading over this old book what a lot of names are brought back to anyone that lived here in those days almost half a century ago. Only just a very few do I find that I know are still alive. The great majority of the inhabitants of those days are now permanently located in the cemetery. I hope to meet a few of my acquaintances of those days during our Home Coming Week of next month, but am afraid it will be very few. I have looked the list all through and can find only three men who were in business here at that time and who are still alive—A. A. Abbott, L. D. Roberts and Ed. Carney. Theo. Trowbridge was clerking for Trowbridge & Hill, and must have gone into business for himself soon afterward.

CHANGES IN FIFTY YEARS

So far as the population is concerned the town has entirely changed in the 48 years, and is another town now. Some of the buildings are the same as they were in those days, but others have been torn down and replaced by new and better buildings, whilea great many residences—some very fine ones —have been built, and some of the Home-Comers next month, if they have been away fifty years or so, will find very little that they will recognize.

On Phelps street the Poore block and the Chadwick building are the same and some of the wooden buildings still remain. The building now occupied by Brooks and Sons, on the corner of Phelps and Delaware streets is the same but very much disguised. Some of the churches and residences are still standing as they did fifty years ago. But the Lake of the Woods, Mud Lake, the swamp and the general surroundings have changed out of all recognition, and so have almost all of the inhabitants. The Lake of the Woods used to be a beautiful place, and if it could have been left as it was fifty years ago it would have been worth a great deal to Decatur as a summer resort, but now it has been ditched and lowered until its beauty has all been destroyed—on the town side at least—the little island has been eliminated, and the banks are so muddy and weed-grown that it is almost impossible to get anywhere near the water without wearing high-topped rubber boots. The timber has all been cut away—on this side at least—and altogether instead of being a place of beauty as it once was, it is only an eye sore.

Mud Lake has also been lowered until it isn't half the size it once was, and no doubt in time it will entirely disappear, leaving only a cat hole. Who can guess what Decatur will look like in another fifty years

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE PAST IN DECATUR

Mrs. A. S. Hathaway Gives Republican Readers a Short Account of Her Husband's Twenty Years Here and of the Family's Present Life in Doster, Barry County.

Doster, Michigan, June 24, 1916.

Arba N. Moulton,

Dear Sir:

Here are some recollections:

In 1863, fifty three years ago, A. S. Hathaway bought of Ira Nash, his store and stock of goods. Besides Mr. Nash, Tucker and Chadwick were selling dry goods.

After selling goods for a year or two Mr. Hathaway took in Orville Abbott as a partner, but they did not agree so he soon traded his share to David Manly for a farm and saw mill over beyond the Lee District.

I think it was within a year or so that he sold these properties, returned to Decatur and bought a store just beyond the Tittle House. He did not like the location and soon sold out and bought the store on the corner across the street from the Nash store. After being alone several years he took in Delos Hill as a partner. A year later Mr. Hill sold his interest to Mr. Hathaway and went south.

One day several years later David Manly came into the store and wanted to trade his farm near Mr. Sutfin's for the stock. Mr. Hathaway was always ready for a trade. Mr. Manly said he had a nice new house. I said I did not want him to trade as I was sure he would not stay there long and told him I did not like to move so much, we lived over the store then, but they traded.

We stayed on the Manly farm a year and then sold to Dan Lee. We came back to Decatur and bought the house of Mr. Noble where Mr. Ed. Carney lives, and built a store north of S. N. Thomas' hardware store.

Mr. Manly traded a few years and failed and some man in Chicago sold the goods at half price to Mr. Hathaway. His health then began to fail and he wanted to get out of the store again but could not content himself long.

He had been talking with an agent about buying a store in Plainwell but one day Charlie Duncombe was in town and wanted to sell him his brick store opposite the depot. He bought it and traded there several years. I don't remember just how many. Was in business in Decatur about twenty years in all.

One day Mr L. Brigham came to Decatur and called on Mr. Hathaway and said he heard he wanted to sell his store. I was in California and Mr. Hathaway sent me a telegram that he had traded for a farm and for me to come home. Mr. Brigham had 240 acres and we have purchased enough more adjoining to make five hundred, making enough for Arthur, Ellrey and Alvin each a farm. Arthur is Professor of Mathematics in Rose Polytechnic, Terre Haute, Ind., and comes here vacations.

Back in Decatur where Mr. Manly sold goods we lived over the store and when the post office burned several came in to watch the fire and saw the Englishman jump to the sidewalk. They dragged him across the street, came in and got a thick quilt of me to wrap around him, and took him into Dr. Keables' office.

Mr. Hathaway sold that store building to E. P. Hill. I think they have it yet.

Mr. Hathaway helped to organize the bank and was one of its first directors. He and his son Alvin put five hundred dollars into the first measure factory and lost it.

Mr. Hathaway has worked very hard since we have been here until the last few years. He still works in the garden and gets the wood but suffers with his stomach. He is past eighty-four.

I expect Arthur and family to come from Terre Haute in their Hudson car. You will undoubtedly see him Home Coming Week. Alvin said he would like to go and maybe he can drive over one day in his Maxwell as there is a man here for his calves, so he will not have them to take care of. He sold eleven, some four months old and some three and got $22 a head for them.

Ellrey has a Maxwell, too, but he has his calves to feed and cows to milk. Alvin may come if he thinks his father can milk once, but I am afraid he will not be able to then. I would like to see the old friends there. I go with Alvin in the auto sometimes but would not dare go so far. He can never get his father to go riding.

Yours very respectfully,

Mrs. A. S. Hathaway.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

Lately, for the lack of something better to do, I have been looking over a lot of old Decatur papers, dated from 1865 to 1879—and the names of the advertisers of that day, and those given in the town locals, call back a crowd of memories.

These papers are the "Clarion and early copies of the "Republican". Some of the names, even of the merchants doing business here—I have forgotten all about, but most of them will be remembered by all the older inhabitants. Out of all the merchants doing business here then, there is not one left who is still in business, and I find only two names of those still living here, A. A. Abbott and L. D. Roberts.

Who remembers Geo. C. Colt & Co? I don't for one. They have a whole column advertisement in the "Clarion" and style themselves the Cash Store but do not say where they were located or what they sold.

THE FOURTH OF JULY, 1865

On the 4th of July, 1865, Decatur had a great celebration and a big time generally. The war had just closed and nearly everyone felt very patriotic on account of the successful ending of the great struggle. The few that were not pleased with the way that it had come out kept very quiet, because they had received a sharp warning not many months before that they must either be loyal or keep still.

No one who has grown up since those days can begin to realize the bitterness of the feeling that existed between the loyal and the disloyal citizens. I saw one of our prominent citizens and who was one of the most virulent and free talking copperheads in town taken from bed at midnight, made to kneel on the ground with nothing but his underclothing on and with a rope around his neck compelled to take the oath of allegiance, after which with a sharp warning to keep his mouth shut on political matters he was allowed to go back home. Notice of similar treatment to come was sent to a few others, if they didn't mend their ways, and this had a quieting effect.

I have just been reading over the account of this day—fifty years ago last 4th of July and with my own recollection of it, it was evidently a great day.

The town was full of returned soldiers in their blue uniforms. Whiskey was almost free—no one need go without a drink that wanted one.

The Clarion says that the day began by firing a salute of thirty-four guns at sunrise and raising the American Flag.

At ten o'clock a procession was formed on the railroad grounds under the direction of N. S. Thomas, Dr. C. T. Baker, D. C. Beach and J. M. Steele, followed by thirty-four young ladies representing states. Soldiers and citizens followed and marched to the grove at the school house. There the Glee Club sang patriotic songs, prayer was offered by the Rev. J. J. Ward, the Declaration of Independence was read by Prof. Bellows, the band played, and an address was given by Moses Hull. After this every one marched to the Bowery where all were served with a big dinner.

The day ended with a big display of fireworks in the evening, and the sending up of a large paper balloon that had been made by Fred Smith, the jeweler.

Does any one remember who any one of those thirty-four young ladies were that represented the states on that day?

The town at that time had for a Marshal a man by the name of Heath and he had long yellow whiskers, of which he was very proud. Of course, there were a number of fights during the day. You could see one going on almost any where. The marshal did the best he could to preserve order, but he got badly mussed up in the course of the day, and in the last fracas that he tried to stop an old woman jumped at him, grabbed into one side of his long yellow whiskers and pulled a whole handful of them out, leaving his face bleeding and looking very bad.

Every one made so much fun of him afterward—for he had to cut his beard all off and was scarcely recognizable—that in a short time he left town without bidding anyone goodbye, and so far as I know was never heard of again here. It was a glorious celebration.

RISE AND FALL OF WHEAT

I notice by the market reports in the old "Republican" that the prices for produce in July, 1867, were much the same as they are now, except that wheat sold for $2.75 per bushel and flour for from $16 to $18 per bbl. but in October, 1869, the price of wheat had dropped to $1 per bushel. That was the time that so many farmers got left, for those that could hold their wheat would not sell it for anything less than $4 per bushel and some of them held their crops for years and then had to sell at last for $1 or less.

THE FIRST BALL CLUB

Some of these old local items of bygone days are very interesting reading to me . The Republican of June 19, 1867, gives an account of the first regular Base Ball Club that Decatur ever had. Up to that time we used to play "two old cat", but this was a genuine ball club and the game was played nearly as it is played today.

This item gives the names of nineteen officers and members of the club and out of the whole nineteen, there is only one that is still living here.

At first they used to play on the railroad grounds, where the park is now, and they also used to play in Dowagiac and other nearby towns. After a short time another club was organized here called the "Clippers" and they worked up quite a reputation as ball players. Their grounds were on the "Little Prairie" at the east end of town

At one time they played a club from some other town and the Clippers whitewashed the opposing team through the whole nine innings. That was thought to be a wonderful performance then and the Clippers never got through bragging about it.

This was about the time that the base ball craze began to sweep over these United States and it has never subsided any since.

TEMPERANCE ADVOCATES SUFFER

Another item states that there was a large amount of new building going on in town and that there was a great scarcity of houses for renting purposes. Also that Henry Rogers had just completed three new houses in Rogersville, at the east end of Delaware street.

Other items state that some miscreant threw a big club in the night time through the bedroom window of Ben Tuttle on account of his temperance activities. But many worse things than that were done by the whiskey side—and that comprised nine-tenths of the whole town. One man had his cow's tail cut off; another had his shade trees cut down and a number of others received anonymous letters threatening them with the killing of themselves or their families or the burning of their homes.

Decatur was a nice quiet little place in those days. Also some one shot Dick Lyons' dog one day, and the Decatur Board of Trade met every morning at ten o'clock on the steps and inside of Northrup's saloon, next to the Chadwick store. The Republican of August 21, 1867, gives a list of the teachers in the Decatur High School to open September 2nd, as follows: Principal Prof. P. L. Green; grammar school, Miss Mary O'Dell, intermediate Miss F. Leavenworth, primary, Miss Emma Scotford, assistant, Miss Kate Folwell, five in all. How many remember any of these?

Oh, dear! There is no end to these old news items and reminiscences, when one begins to look them up and to go back in one's memory forty or fifty years. To me, it is very much like walking through Lakeside cemetery, where so many more of the names on the monuments are familiar to me than are the names of the living that I see on the streets.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN

In the Republican of October 27, 1869, is quite an extended notice of a lecture by George Francis Train, given in the Presbyterian church. Train was a very smart man, but eccentric to the last degree and his lectuhe, as I well remember, simply defied all description.

He would say things that were perfectly true in a way that would make many in the audience shiver and look around at their neighbors. But, at the conclusion, he was heartily invited to come here and lecture again, and he promised to do so, but, so far as I know he never did.

I must surely break this off and stop for the readers of the Republican will get tired of my scribbling, but some way when I get to thinking about "old times" there doesn't seem to be any possible place to stop and like the brook, "I go on forever."

DECATUR TWENTY-NINE YEARS AGO

WELL PRESERVED COPY OF THE DECATUR REPUBLICAN OF OCTOBER 19, 1887, FOUND IN COLLECTION OF OLD PAPERS.

Andy Johnson published the Decatur Republican in 1887. It was then a four page eight column paper and the subscription price was $1.50 per year.

The business directory contained the names of A. L. Moulton, Attorney, Dr. G. L. Rose, Dr. H. M. Broderick, Dr. N. E. Hooper and George Thompson and Gil. Sweet, city barbers. All are gone except Dr. Broderick, who has been a resident of Buchanan the past twenty years or more. Gil. Sweet advertised that he had bought the shop of Geo. Riley opposite the First National bank and secured the services of the famous Chicago artist, R. B. Laidlaw.

Among the advertisers were Schuster, dry goods and clothing; Ellis, boots and shoes; Cohn, clothing; Jennings and Warner, lumber; Van Duzer and Potts, groceries; Chadwick's, dry goods; Stewart, groceries, and Clark, furniture.

L. Brigham advertised a fine stock of millinery and Miss Shockley as one of the most capable milliners in the county.

Parkhurst and Rathbun advertise a long list of bargains in real estate.

A. M. Knights and Company are a new grocery firm that bids for patronage.

Some of the items may interest readers of the Republican today:

Homer Hungerford has returned and is again hammering the keys at the telegraph office here.

Chas. Schuster and John Bickhart are in Chicago looking up the electric light matter a little.

A Mr. Higbee, of Charlotte, an experienced dry goods clerk, has been engaged to take Willard Sweet's place in Chadwick's store.

There is likely to be another meat market in town and rumor says Ed. Arnold will be the proprietor. We already have three markets and best cuts are down to ten cents.

Dr. and Mrs. C. T. Baker left this morning for southern California to spend the coming winter. The doctor don't propose to let the loss of $500 prevent his pleasure trip.

John Bickhart evidently means business when he talks about electric lights. He has visited Kalamazoo and investigated the matter, and finds that with his present machinery he can furnish the lights at 25 cents each per evening. No definite action has yet been taken by our business men on the subject, but if enough of them will take hold of the improvement it can easily be secured.

Mr. and Mrs. Dr. C. T. Baker went to Marshall Saturday, returning Sunday evening. On their return they found that someone had entered their house and stolen a package of $530 in gold. An entrance was effected by cutting through a screen door and then opening the door with a skeleton key. The money was in a bureau drawer and it is likely that the thieves had some knowledge of it being in the house. It will perhaps be poor consolation to the doctor, but he was certainly very careless to keep such an amount in his house.

Mr. L. Brigham sold 80 acres of his swamp land last week to Mr. Jonathan Parsons of Kalamazoo, for $2,000. Mr. Parsons brought an old German, one of the most experienced celery growers in Kalamazoo, with him to examine the soil and he was perfectly delighted with it, remarking that it was much better than any in the vicinity of the celery city. Mr. Brigham purchased 160 acres of this land about three months ago for $1,000 and this deal makes him a clear thousand besides the 80 acres he has left, which is equally as good as that disposed of. Men are already at work on Mr. Parsons' purchase and we may expect soon to see it under thorough cultivation.

The paper also contains an account of the marriage to Miss Minnie McClung and Rev. P. S. Shoemaker and of Neal Rasmusson and Miss Mary Christensen, and an interesting writeup of the Hamilton fair.

We are indebted to Mrs. A. D. Adams for the copy.

THE OLD STAVE FACTORY

By: W.H. Tuttle

The old stave factory in Decatur was, for a time fifty-five or more years ago, a great institution. It furnished a market for logs and bolts drawn in by the farmers who were clearing their land and needed some extra money, and it provided work for the men and boys of the town.

There was scarcely a young man in town who did not, at some time, work in the stave factory, and many of them made large wages. A man who was a good stave cutter or an expert stave ager, made big pay period. But to the most of them it did very little good, the more they made the more they spent.

There was so much fun going on those days, and Decatur was such a very lively town, that it wasn't possible to keep any of the money that they had earned by hard work, and many ended with less than they began with.

As near as I can find out, the stave factory was built for a saw mill, by Uncle George Bennett, in 1854, but was changed into a stave factory a few years later, and was owned by Chapin of Chicago. At my first recollection of it about 1860, it was managed by Mr. E.P. Hill, and I think that he stayed with the company for a number of years. It finally burned down about 1883 or '84, and so passed away.

What a list it would make if we could have the names of the men and boys who had worked there in the thirty years of its existence. I can remember many but there must have been hundreds of others of whom I have no recollection. Marvin Hinckley and Tom Burke were always stave factory men and good ones.

When the Civil War began many of the boys enlisted and went South to fight for their country. Some of them came back home and worked in the factory again, and others did not get back. The boys who stayed at home put up a large pole in the factory with a big wooden musket on top of the pole, full cocked and pointing south to show their defiance of the Rebels. That pole and the wooden gun remained there for several years after the close of the war. How many remember seeing it?

The lot around the factory was covered with stave sheds, cooper shops, and other buildings, and the stories that were told fifty years ago about the goings on around the old factory, were innumerable but unfortunately, hardly any of them would bear repetition in print.

The stave factory was a great gathering place for the young men of the town, and the morals of the doings there were not above reproach. Some of the scrapes that the boys got into down there were ludicrous, but unprintable.

However, the old factory played its part in helping to clear up the country, by providing a market for the timber, and by giving employment to the men and boys of the town. During the thirty years of its existence, it produced innumerable carloads of heading staves and barrels. When it burned down, about thirty years ago, I think that almost everyone was sorry to see it go. It was never rebuilt, and is now only a memory, and a few bricks scattered about where the steam boiler stood.

If, some time all the old stave factory boys could get together here it would make a great reunion but so many, many of them are gone beyond recall, that I am afraid that there will be very few to get together. Forty and fifty years make great changes.

A Van Buren County Directory, published in 1880, says that the factory turned out yearly about three million staves, besides an equal amount of heading and made about ten thousand apple and five thousand packing barrels and employed from twenty-five to forty men.

MRS. JAMES HOWLAND

ONE OF DECATUR'S OLDEST AND MOST ESTEEMED RESIDENTS PASSED AWAY FEBRUARY SIXTH AT THE AGE OF 85 YEARS 10 MONTHS AND 22 DAYS.

Mrs. James Howland, whose death occurred Sunday, February 6th, was one of the oldest residents of the county.

Margaret Code was born in Wexford county, Ireland, March 15th, 1830, and came to Cleveland, Ohio, with her oldest brother, Patrick in 1850.

The brother and sister saved sufficient funds from their earnings to later bring another brother and sister to America. Then the two brothers and two sisters labored faithfully, always saving their money with the one object in view of bringing their father, mother, another sister and the remaining three brothers to this country and again unite a loving and happy family making a new home in a free land.

By their united efforts this was accomplished and the remittance which was forwarded to Dunormick Post Office, Ireland, to enable the last six members of the family to leave their native land was the largest amount of money ever received at that post office at that time.

January 12th, 1857 in Cleveland, Ohio, Margaret Code ... married to James Howland. Bishop Rapp performed the ceremony. Early in March of the same year she accompanied her husband to Michigan and they lived for three years in Decatur.

In 1860 they purchased a farm in East Decatur. A log cabin was erected after clearing a small space in the forest. Years passed and after the death of her husband on July 4th, 1905, the farm was sold and a home purchased on West Sherwood street in Decatur where she has since resided.

She was always a kind and gentle wife and mother and neighbor as well. She has always been a Catholic and has brought up a family of nine children, seven of whom are living, in this faith—a faith to which all have clung through the changing scenes of life. Before her death she received the last rites of her church and passed away to her eternal reward.

She leaves seven children to mourn her loss: William, George and Richard Howland of Jackson, Mrs. James Creagan of Hamilton, Mrs. Maggie McAndrews and Mrs. Anna Kelly of Decatur and Miss Nellie Howland of Decatur who has always remained at home to care for her parents. Two sons, James and John, preceded her to the grave. Besides her sons and daughters she leaves twenty-six grandchildren and seven great grand children. Six of her grandsons, John, Bernard, Carl, Harry, Herbert and Arthur acted as pall bearers.

The funeral was held at St. Mary's church in Paw Paw at 10:30 Wednesday morning. Requiem High Mass was celebrated by Father Clarson. Interment was in St. Mary's cemetery, Paw Paw.

List of out of town relatives and friends attending the funeral of Mrs. Howland: Mrs. John Howland, Chicago; Wm. Howland, George Howland, Richard Howland, Bernice Howland, Marguerite Howland, Clara Howland, and Frances Howland of Jackson; John R. Creagan and Carl Creagan of Grand Rapids; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Creagan, Calgary, Canada; Mrs. Michael Hackett, Mrs. Jake Sheline, Dowagiac; Mary Murphy, Kalamazoo; Mr. and Mrs. Mat. Murphy, Lawton; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Dillon, Waverly; Margaret McAndrews, Nazareth Academy, Kalamazoo.

EARLY DECATUR DAYS

Great Wheat Market---Destructive Fires---The Wreck at Lawton----Drilling for Mineral Waters,

Until about 1865 Decatur was a great wheat market. Then the Michigan Central and Michigan Southern were the only railroads in this part of Michigan and for twenty-five miles on either side of us wheat had to be drawn to some town on the Michigan Central for shipment. It made Decatur a lively place after threshing time.

The Michigan Central freight house was the only ware house where wheat could be taken in and it was slow work for each load had to be drawn up the long bridge to the upper part of the freight house and only one team could unload at a time. I have seen the space now occupied by our beautiful little park fairly covered with loads of wheat waiting their turn to unload.

My father used to come to town with a load and have to stay all night before he could get a chance to unload it. But now railroads pretty well cover the country and little towns have sprung up all around us and they have taken away a great portion of the grain shipping business.

EARLY DECATUR FIRES

About the year 1859 or 1860 the Michigan Central freight house burned down over night. I was going to school here at that time, but did not wake up to see the fire, but the next day I saw the great piles of burned and spoiled wheat where the bins had been. I think it must have burned in the fall for certainly there was a large amount of wheat in store, judging from the piles of burned grain. Maybe some of your readers will remember more correctly than I do about the date of this fire.

Decatur has had a good many fires in the past sixty years. The first one that I recall was a store building that stood about where the present Brooks' store building is located. I think this building was partly or entirely built of logs and it must have been burned not long after 1850. All that I know about it came from hearing the grown up folks talk about it. So far as I know this was Decatur's first fire.

The building now occupied by Brooks store at the same location was built about 1851, and was used as a store by A. H. Dixon & Co. It has only been a few years since you could still read on the Delaware street side, up near the eaves the words, "A. H. Dixon & Co." still showing through the successive coats of paint, and what a long list of men that old building has been occupied by. It would read like a directory, and I cannot begin to remember them all: Dixon & Co., John Tarbell, Stocking & Bro., Delos Hill, Manley & Son., are only a few of the early merchants doing business there.

Decatur's next big fire came in October, 1869, on the corner now occupied by W. A. Wood's hardware store, and it burned five buildings—the old Tucker store on the corner, the post office, Forsyth's shoe shop, and the old Galloway hotel next north on main street and one dwelling that stood on the site of the present Town Hall.

The fire broke out in a room over the post office, that was used by an old Englishman, as an office and living apartment. His name was Dr. Shepherd, and he was a veterinary Surgeon. It was supposed that the old gentleman was in bed and asleep when his room caught fire in some way and by the time he waked up the stairs were burned away. He either fell out or jumped out of the front windows and laid on the sidewalk and was so badly burned by the intense heat that he died in a short time.

He was pulled away as soon as possible but the heat was so great that it was almost impossible for any one to get near enough to him to rescue him. It was a horrible sight to see the old man lying there, slowly roasting and no one able to get near him.

We had another big fire not long after this one on the corner of Main and Sherwood streets, where the Duncombe House afterward stood. Moore's hardware store on the corner, John Rogers grocery, the postoffice again and some other buildings burned at that time.

After this fire the town built a big cistern at the intersection of Main and Delaware streets to furnish water in case of fire. I suppose that cistern is there yet, but is not used.

Other big fires of the past thirty years almost every one living here will remember about . Probably the Duncombe House fire about twenty years ago was the most expensive blaze Decatur ever had.

LAWTON RAILROAD WRECK

The great railroad wreck at Lawton happened in September, 1863, and many now living here will remember it. Possibly some were on the fated train, but I know of none that are left alive.

A State Fair special was bringing people home from Kalamazoo. In those days even passenger trains used the old link and pin couplings. Vestibules on the coaches were unknown.

The train was packed with people and many of the young men were chuck full of Kalamazoo fire water, and some smart alex went onto the platform and pulled the pin betweenthe last two cars and the cars ahead. This was done somewhere between Mattawan and Lawton.

It was a heavy down grade coming into Lawton from the east and the consequence was that the last two cars, that were uncoupled from the rest of the train followed, along going nearly, but not quite as fast as the forward section.

It was after dark and the engineer did not notice that anything was wrong and ran into Lawton and stopped. In a moment more the uncoupled cars chrashed into them, telescoping the coaches and crushing out the lives of many without an instant's warning. Many that were not killed outright were maimed and crippled for life—and all because some young fools were full of whiskey.

The R. R. Co. offered $500 reward for proof that would convict the guilty parties but I do not think they were ever found.

It was in this wreck that Miss Mary Case of Decatur and Mr. Dimick of Hamilton were so terribly injured. I have heard it stated that when Miss Case was taken from the wreck, that her body was so jammed into a dead body underneath her that they had to be pulled apart by main strength..

No one can imagine the tortures suffered by this lady during the next few years after she was injured but she finally partially recovered her health and lived nearly fifty years afterward —dying only a few years ago.

DECATUR'S MINERAL WELL

About the year 1868 or '69 some one told Decatur that if they would put a well down deep enough that they would get a flowing well of medicinal water, and that the town would undoubtedly become a great health resort, etc.

Some of the Citizens got together and found a co-operative stock company to bring about this desirable result. Some gave money and some agreed to give labor and they commenced to drill the well.

Jake Kissell, a wagon maker and blacksmith was at the head of it and furnished the drilling tools.

The well was located on the north edge of Sherwood street between the Paddock House and the Duncombe House corner. I do not remember how far they succeeded in drilling but it was a long way, but it was emphatically a "dry well." There was no medicinal water or any other kind.

The enthusiasm began to wane, and finally they lost the drill head in the bottom of the hole, and couldn't fish it out. Some were unkind enough to say that this was done purposely, but anyway the whole thing was finally abandoned and Decatur did not become a health resort.

I wonder how many are left in Decatur who were here at that time, and also during the gold excitement of 1864?

BABY RUTH

A Story of Pioneer Days by J. S. Draper

Near the close of a cold, disagreeable, wintry day in the spring of the year 1832, some 60 miles west of Detroit, in the then wilderness of Michigan, a covered wagon, drawn by two steaming, tired out horses, was slowly making its way over a wretched road. The driver of this outfit was a young man, one Nathan Hall, who with his young wife and year old baby, was seeking a home in the wilderness of Michigan.

They had left Detroit a few days before, in company with other immigrants who were looking for homes, and as suitable places were found along the line of march, one after another had fallen out of the ranks, until at last Nathan Hall found himself on this cold, stormy day, all alone, literally buried, as it were, in a wilderness that stretched away, seemingly, to the ends of the earth.

A fine sleet and rain was falling. The wagon was being coated over with ice, and the horses had to be stopped every few rods to rest. During one of these rests Nathan turned to his wife and said, "Polly, there is a spring over there near that bank, and as the horses are about played out, I guess I'll back the wagon close up to the bank for a windbreak and camp for the night."

"Get a fire started as soon as you can, for baby and I are cold and hungry," said Polly.

The wagon was drawn close up under the lea of the bank and horses unhitched, but getting a fire started was rather a difficult job, as everything was so wet. But at length it was done and as the flames leaped up, shedding their warmth around, Polly, with her baby closely wrapped in her arms descended from the wagon. It was such a relief to walk around after sitting so long cramped up in the vehicle.

The supper was prepared and eaten, and an ample supply of wood had been gathered and piled near the fire for use during the night. The storm had increased. T e wind howled through the treetops which lashed each other, and anon a great branch would be torn off and come crashing to the ground. Outside of the firelight the wall of darkness seemed inpenetrable. Was it any wonder, with such surroundings, that a feeling of homesickness came over Polly, who had been reared in a home of comfort?

As she folded little Ruth closely in her arms she could not keep back the tears, as her thoughts went back to the home and the friends she had left, perhaps forever.

Nathan, guessing something of the thoughts of his wife, said: "It can't be more than three or four days' drive until we get to brother Dave's house on the river. How glad he will be to see us. This storm will soon be over and tomorrow the sun will be shining again. Now you and Baby Ruth cuddle down in the blankets and I will fix this curtain to keep out the wind."

When this was done he kissed his wife tenderly, got out of the wagon and piled more wood on the fire, then returned and, wrapping himself in a blanket, was soon asleep.

But Polly was not so fortunate. She was nervous and fidgety. Her thoughts were continually going back to the old home, and as she listened to the storm as it roared and surged through the trees, it seemed as though the canvas covered wagon would be overturned. But at length tired nature gave way and Polly joined her husband in the land of nod.

For hours the storm raged. The fire burned down to a smouldering bed of coals enlivened now and then by a fitful blaze which was followed by a deeper darkness. Suddenly a cough, followed by a sharp cry from baby Ruth. Then in an excited voice Polly cried out, "Nathan, get up quick; baby has caught cold and I'm afraid she will have the croup."

Nathan sprang to the ground, stirred up the coals, piled on more fuel, and as the flames leaped up he returned to the wagon.

"Is she very bad, Polly," said he.

"Oh, I don't know. I wish mother was here," said Polly. "She seems to have great difficulty in breathing. It must be the croup. Oh, what shall we do, Nathan?" said the young wife, appealingly, as she pressed the little one closely to her breast.

Another hoarse cough was followed by that rasping, metallic sound which every mother dreads to hear. "For the love of God, Nathan, what shall we do?" said the excited mother.

"Mother was quite a doctor," said Nathan, and I remember hearing her say that baby's feet must be put in hot water and a teaspoonful of goose oil must be given every few minutes and greased cloths put on throat and breast."

The water was heated as soon as possible. The oil was given, which the baby had great difficulty in swallowing. More was applied to throat and chest, but all to no purpose. The little one's breathing was more difficult. The short, hoarse cough came oftener. Directly there was a struggle. The little hands beat the air convulsively. "Mamma," lisped the little voice. Then there was a slight tremor of the little body and the spirit of baby Ruth was with the angels.

When the mother realized that she held only the lifeless form of her darling baby, a great cry burst from her lips, "Oh, God, take me, too. I cant live without my baby," and she fell senseless, still clasping the baby in her arms.

Nathan brought water from the spring and with it he revived his wife. Then climbing into the wagon he sat down beside her, supporting her with one arm while with the other he held the blankets closely around her, and little Ruth was tightly held in her arms. Thus the night was passed.

Morning broke cold and cheerless. Nathan was aroused from the death-like stupor into which he had sank by the whinny of the horses. Glancing around at the still form of Polly, he thought at first that she was asleep. On looking more closely he saw her eyes were wide open and fixed with a stony stare upon the lifeless form of Little Ruth, which she still held tightly in her arms.

"Let me take baby for a little while, Polly. You must be tired," said he. Her only answer was a moan as she pressed the cold form of her babe more closely in her arms.

"Polly," said he, "We are Christians. Let us put our trust in Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for such is the Kingdom of Heaven." If we believe the words of Christ, we must know that our darling Ruth is safe with Him. Let this soften our grief for we know that with her all is well," and thus talking he at length succeeded in unsealing the fountain of grief, and the tears fell thick and fast.

After a time Polly became more calm and Nathan, taking the baby from her arms, laid it down tenderly, straightened out the little form and covered it.

Turning to his wife, he said: "Now, Polly, you must get out of the wagon and walk around a little, while I make you a cup of tea."

By the middle of the forenoon the clouds had broken away and the sun was shining. A few rods from the spring was quite an opening in the woods. Here the little grave was made, and a small chest which had contained baby's wardrobe was now the little one's casket, and Nathan Hall was to perform the duties of undertaker for his own child.

'Twas not until the morning of the next day that the last sad rites were performed and the body of baby Ruth was placed tenderly in the new-made grave.

As Nathan was about to fill it up, Polly covered her face with her hands and cried, "God's will be done, but oh, how hard to bear it." The little grave was soon filled and, taking a strip of board from the wagon, with his knife he cut the words:

"Baby Ruth—Age 1 year and 15 days Died March 22, 1832," and this was placed upon the little mound. He had noticed near the spring a little evergreen tree. This he took up carefully and placed it at the head of the little grave.

Then the horses were hurriedly hitched to the wagon and the journey resumed.

In the course of time they reached their destination. In after years more children came to bless their home, but the tears would always flow whenever their thoughts went back to the death and burial of their first born in the wilderness.

At a recent gathering of old pioneers I heard one of their number relate the incidents which I have woven into this story. It reveals some of the privations and hardships that the early settlers had to endure. These stories should be gathered and preserved as memorials, that the children and grandchildren of these old pioneers may know something of what it cost to subdue the wilderness and make it possible for this generation to enjoy the fruits of the labors of these stout hearted men and women.

It was a brother of Baby Ruth who related the incidents as here given.

THE OLD BROWN TAVERN

Famous Stopping Place on Old Territorial Road. Built for a Hotel in 1837 It Did Thriving Business Till the Coming of the Michigan Central. Scene of Many Mysteries

About the year 1836 the highway passing through the townships of Hamilton and Keeler and known as the "Territorial Road," was completed and from that time until the building of the Michigan Central Railway, it was a very busy thoroughfare. Stages running from Detroit and other points this side of there, were constantly passing over it—carrying people, who were looking for new homes in the west—to St. Joseph, from which place they were taken across Lake Michigan on vessels.

Also a great many traveled over the road in their own conveyances, either horse teams or with oxen and some trudged along afoot, with all their worldly goods slung over their shoulders and in their hands—looking for a new place to make a home.

The stages had to have regular stopping places to change and feed their teams and for the entertainment of the passengers and drivers. In the year 1837, Henry Coleman built a frame hotel on the line of the road at what is now known as Fritzburg and this hotel did a big business from the time of its completion until the Michigan Central Railroad was completed through west, and put the stage lines out of business.

POST OFFICE IN HAMILTON.

When Mr. Coleman first put up his building it was not only used as a hotel but he also put in a stock of goods, and had a general store as well. Then the government established a post office there, and Mr. Coleman was postmaster for a long time.

This Hamilton post office was continued until about 1860 or '61. The last postmaster was Mr. Lumbard, who had the office in his residence—the first building east of the old tavern—but it was finally discontinued about the time the war began.

I do not know what the old tavern was called at first, but from the time that John Brown took possession of it—somewhere, I think, about the year 1855—it always went by the name of the "Old Brown Tavern" and I really suppose that there was more deviltry to the square inch going on there than at any other place in Van Buren county.

OLD TAVERN WICKED PLACE

Of course, many of the stories that were told about the old tavern had to be taken with several grains of salt, but there were enough of them that were undoubtedly true to show that it was a perfect 'hell hole". Horse stealing, counterfeiting, concealing stolen horses and other property,, whiskey selling and passing bogus money were some of the lighter crimes that were carried on there.

Many a traveler is said to have stopped there for a night, and was never heard of again, and none of his property that he brought with him could ever be found.

It was told that somewhere in the old tavern, either in the building or in the cellar, was a secret room for concealing stolen property and so well was it hidden that it was not—at that time any way—found and much property that travelers had been robbed of was stored therein Also it was said that there was a tunnel through the ground leading from the cellar to the barn to provide a way of escape for criminals stopping there who were being sought for by the officers.

When I was about nine or ten years old I remember one Hamilton man, who committed a serious crime here in Decatur and the officers were after him, but he got away and left the state. After some years he came back and one of his children told me that all the time they were searching for the father he lay hidden in the old tavern, and finally got away from there in the night time.

Another story was that somewhere in the swamps nearby was another hiding place for the safe keeping of stolen horses. Much of that part of Hamilton was, in those days covered with dense huckleberry swamps, and it would have been easy to find places there that would have been very hard for outsiders to discover. Many of those swamps are now cleared and cultivated fields, and even ponds are now dried up, and turned into fields. Many lone travelers are supposed to be buried in unmarked graves in these same swamps, losing not only their lives, but all their money and other property that they had with them.

I do not ask any one to believe all these yarns about secret rooms, tunnels, stolen horses, murders, etc., for I do not know how much truth there was in any of them. I only repeat for the most part, the stories that I used to hear when I was a child. But where there is such a lot of very black smoke, there is reason to believe there must have been some fire. Everyone must believe as much of it as he thinks best.

Those old stories, if they were all told would fill a big book, and some of them would make red hot reading, too.

AN EXCITING TOWN MEETING

The town meetings were always held at the old tavern, and as almost everyone drank more or less whiskey in those days, some very bitter quarrels and fights resulted.

At one town meeting it was proposed to stop the running at large of cattle and hogs, and a vote was called for on the subject.

Almost every farmer owned more or less cattle and hogs. They were turned loose, and expected to get their own living in the woods and swamps, and if they wandered into a neighbor's corn or wheat field or garden to find an easier way to forage, why it was looked upon as something that you had to expect and submit to.

Some of the farmers got tired of it after having their crops partially destroyed a good many times and they brought the matter up at town meeting and tried to stop it, but there were too many hogs around there and the motion was badly defeated.

That one thing caused several quarrels and fights and left a bitter feeling that did not die out for many a year.

I have often wished that the "Old Brown Tavern" might have been left where it originally stood as a landmark, for it certainly must have seen a great many queer sights in its day, and if its walls could talk they undoubtedly could tell some thrilling stories. If any building ever had a reason for being haunted that ought to have been the one.

But the old building has been moved away, and I think it has been transformed into a quiet and unromantic farmer's barn.

FIRST RECOLLECTION OF OLD HOTEL

When I first remember anything about the old hotel it was owned by a man by the name of Hall. The stages had been put out of business by the railroad before this time, but it was still kept open as a hotel for the accommodation for the few travelers who came along and to provide a place where the thirsty farmers could wet their whistles.

It had a dancing hall and many parties were held there. I remember being taken by my parents to a ball there when I must have been about five years old, and while my mother was dancing a lady took me up in her lap and held me.

She had a chain that went around her neck with a small locket fastened to it, and she let me play with and open it to see the picture inside. She had on a dress that seemed to me to be very beautiful and must have been very costly, but mother told me afterward that it was "only calico."

I thought that this lady was very beautiful and I fell in love with her right then and there. I wonder who she was and what became of her.

After John Brown took possession of the old hotel its reputation for toughness was fully kept up. There was found to be considerable counterfeit money circulating in this part of Michigan and the officers finally traced it to the old tavern. A warrant for the arrest of Brown was issued but he gave them the slip and got away into the woods and there he eluded them for quite a long time, but he was finally run down and captured one day after he had been to the hotel for supplies.

After he was caught he was tried and sent to Jackson for one year. He never came back to the old tavern after his time was out, but went to St. Joe and lived the rest of his life—dying only a few years ago, very old and very wealthy.

There was another resident of Hamilton in those days who was said to have been even more guilty than Brown, and who ought to have gone to Jackson with him, but who managed to escape arrest, and went free.

The stories that were told about the old tavern in those days would fill a book and some of them would make mighty interesting reading—for some folks.

COUNTERFEIT COINS IN WELL

There is a well located near the site of the old tavern, and it was said that a large amount of very fine counterfeit gold coins were thrown into this well to keep the officers from finding them, and they are supposed to be there yet.

One of the oldest inhabitants of Hamilton told me lately, that a former resident of those days came to him some years ago with a proposition that they should clear that old well out and recover the coin, but Milo said he didn't care enough about counterfeit money to spend perfectly good money in trying to find it, and the speculation was given up. No doubt the coins are still there if any one cares to go after them.

The original builder of the old tavern was unfortunate in his after life, losing his reason, and finally taking his own life.

TRAGEDIES OF EARLY HAMILTON

I think that Hamilton must have held the record in those early days for murders, suicides, counterfeiting, accidents, etc. About 1847, a man and his wife lived at what is now called Foster's Corners, and one day the man was found in the bottom of his well—dead. Foul play by one of his own family was strongly suspected but I think nothing was ever proved, or anything done about it.

The next case was Simon Keeler, who with his wife lived alone in a log house just over the line in Keeler township, and across the road from the Rosevelt farms. Keeler killed his wife and himself.

I was a very small boy at that time, but I remember going to their funeral with my parents. My recollection of it is that Keeler shot and killed his wife and laid her on a bed down stairs, and then went upstairs and took poison and died.

Their neighbors noticed that there were no signs of life around the Keeler house and finally went over, forced an entrance and found them, both evidently having been dead for several days.

Then John Sherman, who lived at the "Old Red Mill" only a short distance from the Coleman residence, lost his mind and went out into the woods one day and hung himself. His wife and two children moved away not long afterward. The wife married again, and I do not know what became of them.

A few miles north there lived a family whose children as soon as they came to maturity were afflicted with St. Vitus dance and the older they grew the worse they became and it was said that two of the children when they realized the fate in store for them killed themselves—one drowning himself in a mud puddle, and another shooting himself.

I never knew but one member of this family and that was "old Billy". He certainly was an object to be pitied. He was so afflicted with St. Vitus dance that he seemed to have no control whatever of his muscles.

If he started to walk straight ahead he was more likely than not to go off sideways, or run backward and his arms, legs and head were in constant motion, jerking every way.

He was a kind of a tramp, wandering around, but never going very far away from where he was known. It was not possible for him to do anything in the way of work, even if he had wanted to.

Wherever he happened to be at meal time, or at night, he would stop, and nearly everyone would feed him and find a place for him to sleep, because they were sorry for him. But the school children when they saw him going by would chase him and call him names on purpose to make him mad, for then his muscles would become more uncontrollable than ever and he would make all kinds of outlandish motions, which was great fun for the little brats.

There is probably no one on earth who has so little pity or sympathy for misfortune or suffering, as a lot of children. There are exceptions to this rule, but it is the rule.

Old Billy grew worse as he grew older, but I do not know what became of him. He was still wandering around when my people moved away, and I never saw or heard of him again.

He used to say that he kept quiet when he was asleep, but he was never quiet when he was awake. It was something awful to see the motions he would make, when he tried to talk and that would tickle the school children almost to death.

I have seen old Billy walking along the road and while he was going ahead one rod, he would surely travel four rods in other directions. He would go sideways, backward and every other way—would fall down and get up and stand on one leg and make up such horrible faces. It was a great show for the school, but I don't believe that one of the youngsters ever even thought of trying to help him in any way. They were much more likely to snow ball and call him names to see him get mad. I was one of them and I know.

These things in connection with the doings at the old Brown tavern, seem to me to be quite a lot for one thinly settled township, and for a period of time covering only about ten or twelve years.

THE OLD RED MILL

Another of the institutions of Hamilton in the early days was the "Old Red Mill" near the Nesbitt school house. It was built by John Sherman, and run by him until he became insane and hung himself on a tree out in the woods nearby.

This mill had a large overshot water wheel and manufactured wooden pumps, broom handles and other things of that sort.

I used to think that the old Red Mill was an immense building, but I was there some fifteen years ago, while it was still standing and then it seemed to me about as large as a smallish barn.

Near the old mill was a spring of water and it used to be great fun for a couple of school children to get permission to go to the spring for a pail of water for the school. It generally took the two of us not less than an hour to go about forty rods to the spring and get back with the mater.

Permission for this trip was a kind of reward of merit for good behavior and Tommy Griffin, Emory Place, Jack Johnson and myself would do our best to be good for the sake of the coveted pleasure.

In the summer of 1907 about a dozen of the old scholars of the Nesbit school in 1860, with their teacher, Mrs. Nancy Collins Nesbitt had a reunion at the residence of Jacob Knolls and while we were there we all went to the old school house. We played pom pom pull away on the school grounds, visited the grist mill and the old Red Mill and went down to the creek where we used to wade and tried to find the spring where we used to go for water, but the spring seemed to have been moved.

We tried to act as we did forty-seven years before, but did not make much of a success of it, for the kids of nearly half a century past were all gray headed then, and not nearly as lively on their feet as they had been. At least three of those old scholars who were there at the reunion have since passed away.

But what a crowd of youngsters must have gone through that old school house since our day.

THE END OF THE WORLD

A great many tough yarns were told by the early settlers as to the strange things that happened when the township was first settled and when I was a child I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the stories told by the older people, but as these things happened before my day I cannot vouch for the truth of them.

One of the most fantastic of the occurrences related to the scare that was developed around this part of Michigan by the report that the world was to come to an end by burning up in a very peculiar way.

The winter of 1842-43 was a severe one and the snow was very deep all over this part of the country, and in some way, the belief arose that when this heavy snow melted in the spring that it would all turn to oil, take fire and the earth would be burned up. Strange to say, many people believed this absurd yarn, and were badly frightened, and their fears were only allayed by the coming of spring and the snow turning to water the same as usual.

Also at the time when the great meteor flew over the country in 1861 and at the appearance of the beautiful comet in 1862, a great many people were terribly frightened. Some thought they were warnings of the great Civil War then just beginning, and the calamaties that were to come from it while others were sure the comet would strike the earth and bring everything to an end with one grand smash. But the old world went on spinning around just the same as usual and paid no attention to either meteor or comet.

EARLY DAYS IN DECATUR

BURNED OUT IN '53
— FEVER AND AGUE —
THE OLD SCHOOL
4TH OF JULY 1860 — THE WAR

My earliest recollections of Decatur extend back dimly, to about five years before the beginning of the Civil War.

My parents had been amongst the early settlers in Hamilton Township moving there in 1850, my father and his brother William, building a water power saw mill on a branch of Brush Creek.

I have often heard my mother tell how they had to break their way for some miles through the woods and brush when they moved, as there were no roads. They came from Mendon, St. Joseph Co., where they lived for the first few years in Michigan.

Our first house was a log house, the big fire place was made of stone and the chimney of logs and all plastered over with clay. One bitter cold morning in February, 1853, the hired man got up at three o'clock and built a big fire in the fireplace and then went back to bed. In an hour or so the log chimney caught fire and by the time the folks woke up the whole upper part of the house was ablaze and my folks had to move out P.D.Q., losing almost everything that they had in the shape of furniture and bedding. I was picked up out of my warm bed and thrown out through a window into a snow bank.

I had a little dog that had been given to me by Willard Place. I called him Fido and thought a great deal of him. When the fire began Fido ran under a bed an refused to be caught or induced to go out and I can remember yet how poor Fido yelped and cried when the roof fell in and he was burned up. I cried for days over it, and I asked mother a hundred times why she supposed that God allowed Fido to be burned up, when he had not done anything wrong, and by the way, I haven't found the answer yet.

After the fire my people had to move into a house, that was only partly finished, for the rest of the winter. I do not remember much about it, but I expect that they had pretty hard times for the next few years, as almost everything that they had had been burned up.

Money was almost unknown then. Nearly everything was bought and sold by barter. Now, it is a very poor man indeed, who doesn't have at least some cash in his pocket, or in the bank. Then banks were unknown here, and up to the time the war began. I do not believe that my father ever had ten dollars in money at any one time. We always had enough to eat, because we raised it. At Christmas if Santa Claus brought us children a few stocks of striped candy and a tin whistle or tin trumpet we thought we were lucky. How the children of these days would turn up their noses at the presents that we were glad to get then. But I will venture to say that we got as much pleasure out of our simple presents, as the present-day children do with their abundance of complicated toys — maybe more.

Almost everyone in those days had the fever and ague, they would shake until their teeth would rattle like castenets; after an hour or so of shaking they would burn up with fever, and it was a continuous performance every other day. Quinine, whiskey and calomel were the staple medicines, and about all there were. My father used to say that he shook two years out of the first three that they lived in Michigan. Now, we very seldom hear of anyone's having the ague.

Coming To Town To School

Well, I started out to write about early days in Decatur, but got side-tracked to Hamilton, so I will have to back out and make a new start. About the year 1957 or '58, Miss Libbie Thomas came to Decatur and opened a millinery shop in the building now occupied by Frank Baker as a blacksmith's shop and after that I went to school here and lived with her.

We went to school in the old red school house that stood on the back part of the Greenman's lot. John Steele was my first teacher. How many of the boys and girls who attended school there I remember and a great many I have utterly forgotten, but out of all those I know anything about, there is only one besides myself, who is still living in Decatur. The rest are dead, or gone — I do not know where.

During the year 1864, part of the present High School building was completed and school began in November. I am not quite sure, but I believe it was the 25th of November. I was one of the first scholars. Professor Bellows and Miss Annie Abrams were our teachers upstairs.

What a crowd of young people I can see as I look back to that winter fifty-one years ago and so many of them are dead; Dick Lyon, Marve Hinckley, Miss Beuna Poor, Dora Hurd, Prof. Bellows all gone. As I look back and think over the familiar names and faces I cannot realize that over fifty years have passed by, and I do not like to think about it very often.

The next spring in April, we held the first school exhibition in the present High School. Not long ago I came across a programme of this exhibition. Each scholar had his piece or composition, and then came the play of "Blue Beard" and the tableaux of the "Soldiers' Dream" etc. The audience seemed to think that it was good and applauded everything. I remember they made me repeat "The Soldiers' Dream" several times.

Almost every family had some member of it that had or was still in the army, the war was just closing and every town was filled with returning soldiers and any man who wore a blue uniform "owned the town," and everything in it.

The Fourth Of July — 1860

There was a great celebration in Decatur on the 4th of July, 1860. "The Lafayette Light Guard" came from Paw Paw and brought with them a small brass cannon, and they went through with their drill on the street and fired the little cannon all day long. The town was packed with people from the surrounding country, and they all thought that it was a wonderful display and everyone seemed to think that the country was surely safe, as long as we had an army like that, and a cannon that could make as much noise as that one did.

Before another 4th came around the Lafayette Light Guard was down to Virignia where, they had some real fighting to do. I don't know whether the little cannon went to war or not. It is certain that the Light Guard go a great plenty by the time their three years were up and they were perfectly satisfied to come home.

During this celebration on the 4th, Ed Carney and Henry Teed sold pop corn and lemonade on the street, and Mr. Carney is the only one left that I know of, who was here on that day fifty-five years ago. I was quite a small boy then, and with my school mates from the Nesbitt school in Hamilton thought it was a most wonderful day, and we all enjoyed it thoroughly.

I remember asking my father at some time during the next year and after the war had commenced, if he thought that we would have another cannon on the next 4th and he replied, that it looked as though we might have a whole lot more cannon than we would care for, but fortunately we did not.

Great Comet and Great Meteor

In the fall of 1861 came the great meteor. It flew over the country from east to west and it made everything as light as day and finally exploded with a great crash and made all the houses shake and rattle. I was in bed at our home in Hamilton, but not asleep, but I saw the light and heard the explosion.

It aroused everyone and some declared that the Rebels were throwing shells at us. News did not travel so rapidly in those days as it does now and it was some time before the people really found out what it was.

Also about that time came the great comet and it was a beautiful sight off in the northwest. It had an immense tail and was very brilliant. I have never seen anything like it since Halley's comet five or six years ago, was nothing by comparison with the one in 1862.

In those early days Decatur claims to have two thousand or more population, but I think that they must have been counted several times over, for our last census only gave us about fourteen hundred inhabitants, and I am sure that there must be more people living here now than there were then. Because there are large spaces now filled up with dwellings that fifty years ago was either corn fields or solid woods.

But there was one thing that we had a great plenty of and that was saloons. In 1865 Decatur had thirteen very active saloons. Anyone who could buy a barrel of whiskey and a keg of beer and pay the government twenty-five dollars could start a saloon, and make lots of money too. Some of the best men in town "kept a bar." "The sun do move" surely.

KEEPING GREEN THE MEMORY OF VAN BUREN'S PIONEERS

Sketch of the Eventful Life of J. J. Woodman Written for the Republican by Rev. Olivia J. C. Woodman.

It seems to me to be a most excellent custom to call up the lives of men and women who have done so much to make Van Buren county such an excellent place in which to spend 'ones years. A deep sense of remembrance is always commendable and this county has contributed a large number whose lives the young may study with profit to themselves in this local history you are presenting. And I consider it a privilege to respond briefly, in memory of J. J. Woodman of Paw Paw.

He was born in Vermont, and inherited the sterling qualities of the typical New Englander, and it is not too much to say, that his long life fulfilled the measure of usefulness, and he maintained a high standard of excellence. He was the son of Elder Joseph Woodman and strictly speaking spent his life in Antwerp township rather than Paw Paw. Though all his business interests and mail office were in the latter place, however he always voted in Lawton.

He came with his parents when ten years of age and his home from that time was always on the farm, which was his father's in the early years.

He was literally the product of the log school house and always maintained a deep interest in the rural schools. In those days all common branches were taught in these schools and from them he succeeded in gaining sufficient education to become a teacher. And there are those yet living who were his pupils in the Paw Paw school and perhaps in other schools for he taught in several districts and in the Quaker settlements of St. Joseph county.

Those days were full of active interest, and to the end of his life he cherished a memory of those Quaker Christians, and was oft heard to say "they lived the religion they professed." A loyalty he greatly admired.

While engaged in teaching in the rural schools his pupils were many times young ladies and gentlemen as well as little children and the poetical effusions he sent to young ladies and received from them were sometimes very amusing reminisences and sometimes as he occasionally looked them over his eyes filled with tears. So loyal was his heart to those early comrades in life, so deep and tender for them.

Jonathan Woodman came from a long line of deeply religious ancestry of the old type who were very exact about religious observances in the family life and in church ceremonies. The child, in those generations, was not sent to Sunday school but was taken to it by its parents, and the rigid discipline of that period was carefully maintained.

"To break the Sabbath" was a serious offense, and yet, notwithstanding this careful training, the youth some times didn't feel quite well enough to attend service, and it is related that on one of these occasions Jonathan, being somewhat indisposed, was left at home while the others went to service and the lad began to feel better, and was impelled to take a walk along the banks of the Paw Paw river. As he strolled along, his keen eyes discovered a fine fish in the stream. The temptation was too great and making a rush for it he safely landed it on the other bank, and shortly afterward hung it over his shoulders and started for home.

As he was walking along the Territorial road, the Sunday worshippers chanced to be going home at the same hour and his parents were amazed to see their son, with a fish on his back, going so boldly along the way and passed him with out a recognition. Moral —they ate the fish next day, and no questions were asked, but the next Sunday he was taken to Sunday school.

Notwithstanding these influences he grew to manhood, holding in his heart a deep reverence for his Creator, an unfaltering faith in His goodness and justice, and yet, the old orthodoxy did not appeal to him, and as he grew to manhood he became acquainted with the Quakers and spent winters teaching among them. He lived in their houses where he saw the everyday side of their lives and all through his years he cherished the memories he experienced under these conditions, and, often expressed his conviction that they were close followers of their Master, and these "white souled" pioneers were truly named—Friends.

CALIFORNIA IN '49

After the period of teaching he became interested in the enthusiasm of the day, and became a "forty-niner" and joined a company of relatives and friends to journey across the Great Plains to seek his fortune in the gold fields of California.

This feat was not accomplished without many hardships and dangers. They were a brave people and so far as the writer knows Mr. George Longwell Sr., of Paw Paw, is the last survivor of that company.

Mr. Woodman was successful in getting the nucleus of his property in that effort. When he was not hunting for the yellow metal, he always found other lines of work.

He told of many experiences that were exciting even after long years had passed. One of these was an occasion when he and a comrade were rafting a large number of logs down the rapid St. Mary's river. While guiding the raft with their pike poles, they discovered a large cable across the stream just ahead of them. They had no time to plan, so he seized the axe and with one mighty blow severed the cable. Had he failed in the one stroke they would have been swept into the current and to death.

I fancy that many who will read this will in fancy see him making that great blow, which tells the story of success.

In one instance at least he was gone two years, and came home via Cape Horn.

A storm on the deep kept him (with all other passengers) "watched down" seventy-two consecutive hours. He always declared he enjoyed those two years, very greatly and when questioned why he didn't stay longer, he smilingly replied, "there was a magnet which drew him back."

It must have been the one great power in every life, for the next day after his arrival in Paw Paw, he spent with Miss Herly Hunt, and returned to his father's home with her as a promised wife. His characteristic energy made him begin at once to prepare for the home which was to be theirs. He erected the home where they both lived and died, and is known as Maple Avenue Farm.

HEAD OF NATIONAL GRANGE

He was not inclined to join secret societies and until the Order of Patrons of Husbandry came into existence fifty years ago, he had never joined any organization of the kind, but this appealed to him, for he had always felt that the farmers should stand together, to advance their own lives, and hence he became one of its most loyal and zealous members, which lasted until the end of life here came to him.

Early in its history he was elected master of Michigan State Grange and held the office for eight years. At the close of the eighth year, he was elected Master of the National Grange and held that office six years, during which time he traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, working for the Order in every state. He saw it grow in members, influence and power. He left the Master's Chair to continue to help the cause by accepting the Secretaryship of the National Executive Committee, and continued in that office until declining health caused him to resign.

IN POLITICS

His political career is well known to your readers. He held offices of public trust in his township, county and state. In 1860 he was elected to the Legislature and was re-elected for six successive terms, and in 1869, was made Speaker of the House, and held the Chair four years. It is often said of him now that he was efficient, considerate and a judicious presiding officer.

It was his pride that no decision was ever appealed from his, but once, and that cost the state many thousands of dollars.

He was a campaign speaker of power. A very earnest man in temperance work. He was a believer in equal suffrage, and in universal peace. He was one of the men who met beneath the historical oak at Jackson to organize the Republican party. His passing ,was as he always wished it might be "That he might wrap the drapery of his couch about him and lie down to pleasant dreams."

The first Mrs. Woodman passed away in 1894 and Mr. Woodman was united in Marriage with Rev. Olivia J. Carpenter of Lansing in 1896 who remained his faithful companion till the close of his life some ten years later. She has since resided in the old home but has in no sense retired. She is continually in demand for conducting church and funeral services and to officiate at weddings. She is not only a minister of more than ordinary ability but is posted on all of the leading issues of the day. For the Grange, for equal suffrage and for prohibition she is frequently called upon to speak and she never fails to deliver a strong argument for the right to her audiences.—Ed.

THE OLD SCHOOL HOUSE ON THE HILL

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

The Little Old Red School House on the Hill. How plainly I can still see it all, and all of its surroundings, although it has been over fifty-five years since I was inside of the building. It stood on quite a little hill, and the ground sloped away from it, but not a single tree was ever planted around it to furnish shade. In front ran the road down to Nesbitt's grist mill on one side, and to Brown's Tavern and Decatur, in the other direction. On the south side was another short road leading down to the Old Red Mill, and the spring where we used to go for water for the use of the school. It was considered a reward for good behavior when two of the scholars were allowed to take the pail and go to the spring for water, and the boys tried their very best to be good enough to earn this coveted pleasure. This old school house must have been built sometime during the year of 1858, and the first school was opened in the new building in the fall of the same year. John Steele was the first teacher, and my first attendance there was during that same winter of 1858-59. The teacher boarded at my fathers' house during that winter, and I remember that there was quite a piece of woods between our farm and the school, and the snow drifts were very deep in those days, and that winter John used to carry me on his back because my legs were too short to wade through them.

How many, many scholars must have passed through that old school house since those far away days. In the winter terms there were many large scholars who came, and many of the larger boys considered it the right and proper thing to make the teachers' all the trouble they dared to, but sometimes they got more than they bargained for, and a good licking besides. During the summer terms the scholars were generally much smaller, and I remember that during the last few years I attended, that four of us younger boys, Tommy Griffin, Jack Johnson, Emory Place and myself were the biggest boys in school and we were very proud of it.

Many scholars of those days I have utterly forgotten, even their names but many of them are fresh in my memory. Besides Tommy, Jack, and Emory, there were Emma and Addie Griffin, Emily, Ida and Helen Coleman, Inez, Marcia, Martha and Emily Place, Celia Maxwell, Louisa and Marie Johnson, Kitty Bradt, and Ella Davenport, Tiny Bently and her sister, and so many more that I cannot name them all. Kittie Bradt was my particular girl, and I used to carry her big red apples in my dinner pail, and if I got a chance to draw her up hill on my sled I felt pretty proud of it. Kittie and Ella were inseparable friends, and they were always jumping the rope. Poor Kittie, I understand that she died many years ago, and did not have a very pleasant life while she lived.

What awful good times us kids did use to have around that old school yard, and the mill dam, playing "Pom Pom Pull Away", sliding down Nesbitt's hill and on the mill pond in the winter time, going to the spring after water in the summertime, and playing "Two Old Cat" and "Who's Got the Handkerchief", and then the spelling schools that we had in the winter, and the one who was able to spell the School Down was a proud scholar. That was the life that was worth living. If we could only feel and enjoy it now as we did then what a pleasure life would be.

VISITING THE OLD SCHOOL

Nine years ago last summer about a dozen of us old scholars who attended the Nesbitt school in 1860, with our teacher of that time, Mrs. Nancy Collins Nesbitt, were invited to have a reunion on the old school grounds, and to make our headquarters with Mrs. Jacob Knolls at her beautiful home. We went and were royally entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Knolls, and after a fine dinner we all walked to the old school grounds, and then we had a great time trying to act like the kids that we had been nearly fifty years before, but it was hard work.

We played "Pull-Away" and chased each other around the yard, and went down to the old grist mill. Some wanted to wade in the creek, but we had to give that up for fear of getting our feet wet, and having to take off our shoes and stockings and exposing our pedal extremities. We went down to the Old Red Mill and to the spring where we used to go after water. The Old Red Mill was a ruin and very little left of it.

We did everything that we could think of that we used to do in our young days, but somehow it all lacked the jump and spring and the enjoyment that we got out of it 47 years before. Ella Davenport couldn't jump the rope by the hour as she used to do, and if any of us ran a few rods we were completely winded. But we had a good time just the same.

We were very much disappointed that we could not get inside of the school house, but it was all locked up tight, and we had to content ourselves with climbing up and looking through the windows. The view on the inside was not the same at all as it had been in our day, for everything had been changed to meet modern requirements, and it did not look natural a little bit. The outside and the yard were very much the same, and it was the very same ground where we, when we were kids, used to play and quarrel and sometimes fight, almost fifty years before, but what a difference between the children of 1860 and the old people of 1907.

I looked at the crowd and wondered if they could possibly be the same children that I used to know so many years ago. Many of the old time faces were missing, as was natural after a lapse of nearly half a century. Tommy, Jack and Kittie were gone, Dave Price and Lute Coleman were killed in the army during the Civil war, Darius Cook was killed by lightning forty years before, and others were scattered all over the world, and the ones who could be gotten together to attend the reunion were only a handful. But we had a rattling good time, what there were of us, just the same and for a few short hours we tried to imagine that we were all children again, and acted accordingly, but it was hard work, and the zest was not in it.

TEACHERS AND SPELLING SCHOOLS

This Old School House must have seen a great many teachers, as well as many scholars. The first teacher was John Steele, and after him I remember Mr. Jacobs, Mrs. George Nesbitt, Miss Amanda Haynes, Mrs. Munson and a man by the name of Bill Slater. This man had a nick-name that he was generally called by in private, but it is not printable. He was the teacher who thrashed one of the big boys until he nearly killed him. My, but that young fellow got a whaling that I'll bet he remembers to this day if he is alive yet. There was a big law-suit over it, but my remembrances of it is that it was about an even thing. The boy got just about what was coming to him, and the teacher got mad and thrashed him a good deal harder than he ought to. I know that the fracas scared me almost to death.

The school always ended for the day with the spelling class, and that was great fun to most of us. We all stood up in a long row on the floor, and then the teacher would give out words to be spelled beginning at the head of the class. If one or more missed spelling a word right then it passed on down until someone spelled it correctly, and that one went up above all those who had missed. The one who stood at the head of the class when the lesson was over for the day went down to the foot of the class on the next day, and began over again. It was quite an honor to the one that could "leave off head" the oftenest.

CHANGES WROUGHT BY TIME

The education the children got in those little old country school houses was not to be despised; they did not have the frills that are taught in the graded schools in town, there was no Latin, Algebra, Botany, Chemistry or Music taught to those who would never have the least use for such things, but we were taught spelling, writing, geography and good plain arithmetic from the bottom up, and those are the things the most of us have had use for in after life. We probably thought more of our play than we did of our studies, but in some way or other we got the "Three R's" pounded into our heads in such a way that they stuck.

The old School House and the hill and the roads are there yet, but all of the other landmarks are either gone or are changed out of all recognition. The Grist mill and the Pond are gone, the old Red Mill, the log house on the corner, the house across the road where Mr. Sipple lived, and the house that Mr. Nesbitt lived in in those days, all gone. Mr. Sipple was a German, he had fought in the European War against Napoleon in the early years of that century, and he used to show us boys the hole through his leg where he had been shot in some big battle.

To us kids, Mr. Sipple seemed almost as old as Methusala, but there isn't one of us who is living now but who is nearly as old as he was then. How very differently everything seems to the young and to the old. When I was along about 13 or 14 it appeared it me that any person who had reached the age of 30 or 40 was too old for any purpose, and that it couldn't be possible they could get any pleasure out of life, or have anything in the way of fun, and as for those who were 60 or 70, why they ought to he shut up by themselves somewhere so they could not interfere with the kids, and spoil their play.

I used to be as afraid of my old grandfather as I was of the old Fiend himself, and I kept out of his way as much as I possibly could. He never was unkind, or anything like that to the children, but he was old and peevish, and he didn't appreciate our pranks and sometimes he would yell at us in a way to make us jump and almost break our necks trying to get out of his sight.

INDIANS IN MICHIGAN

NELSON A. SWARTZ IN MARCELLUS NEWS GIVES INTERESTING DATA COMPILED FROM U.S. CENSUS RETURNS

According to complete census return, the Indians of our state are more than holding their own. The census of 1910 gives the Indian population at 7,519, a gain of 1,165 over the preceding census of 1900. The Upper Peninsula contains 2,785 and the Lower, 4,734.

Sixty-eight counties out of the eighty-three counties in the state contain Indian population, of which thirteen are in the Upper Peninsula and fifty-five in the Lower. Keweenaw and Iron counties are the only counties in the Upper Peninsula having no Indian population.

The counties of the Lower Peninsula having no Indian population are as follows: Barry, Clinton, Eaton, Hillsdale, Huron, Ingham, Midland, Monroe, Montmorency, Oakland, Oscoda, Otsego and Cadillac.

There are eighteen counties in the state which contain over one-hundred Indians each. Five are in the Upper Peninsula and thirteen in the Lower. The county having the largest Indian population in the state is Mackinac which contains nine hundred ninety. It gained seven hundred fifteen in ten years, or the largest gain of any county in the state. Emmet is second with eight-hundred ninety. Other counties containing considerable Indian population are as follows: Baroga 592, Isabella 502, Leelanaw 454, Charlevoix 334, Mason 308, Oceana 281, Delta 245, Cheboygan 199, Allegan 156, Saginaw 141, Benzie 140, Cass 132, Bay 119, Van Buren 112, Menominee 101, Chippewa 690.

There are five counties in the state which contain one Indian each, vis: Genesee, Lapeer, Livingston, Muskegon and St. Joseph.

The three principal tribes in Michigan are the Chippewas, Ottawas and Potawatomies who number three thousand seven hundred twenty five, two thousand two hundred fifty four and four sixty-one respectively.

Indians of other states have located in Michigan as follows: Menominees 34, Oneida 10, Mohawk 5, Cherokee 3, Brotherton 2, Miami 2, Iowa 2, Onondaga, Sauk, Fox, Sioux, Tuscarora each 1. There are also twenty-eight Creeks, probably from Canada. The tribal relations of seven hundred ninety were not reported.

THE GREAT FIRES OF '71

By W. H. Tuttle

Everyone now living whose memory goes back forty-five years, will surely recall the great fires that swept through this country in the fall of the year 1871. I believe that it was in the evening of October 9th, that Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked her lantern over in the stable in Chicago, and started the great conflagration that almost swept that city off the map.

For several days the fire raged, and when it finally burned itself out, there was very little left of Chicago except the outside fringes. The whole business part of the city was swept away, thousands were left homeless, and in many cases almost naked, and it was never known how many were burned to death.

After the fire was finally subdued a call was sent out to the outside world for help for the homeless, naked and starving people, and the call was responded to by almost every town and city in the United States, and also by foreign countries. Some gave clothing, others food, and everyone gave whatever they could collect in a hurry that was likely to be of any use to the people in the city.

M. C. RELIEF TRAIN

The Michigan Central railroad sent out a notice that on a certain day they would send a train of freight cars over the road from Detroit to Chicago, gathering up whatever the people felt like giving, and the Company would carry it to Chicago free, and there it would be turned over to the committee having charge of the work of distributing it to the suffering inhabitants, but they stated that everyone who wished to give anything must bring it to the depot and be prepared to load it into the cars themselves when the train came along.

Harvey Trowbridge was the telegraph operator here at that time, and he kept everyone posted as to where the train was and when it would likely arrive here, and such a lot of stuff as was brought to our old depot was never seen before, and probably never will be again. Some came with wagons, some with wheelbarrows, and some carrying things on their backs or in their arms. My father was alive then, and we consulted as to what we could send, and we went up town to see what we could buy that would be of any use, and the only thing that we could find that was within our means, was a barrel of crackers, so we bought that and rolled it down the sidewalk to the depot and was ready with it when the train came along.

When the train finally arrived, late in the afternoon, the cars doors were thrown open, and such a hustling of things into those cars was a sight to see. Everyone loaded their own stuff, and in a very few moments it was all into the cars, and the train was off to the next station. The whole of that train must have been loaded to the car roofs before it reached Chicago, if other towns gave as liberally as did Decatur.

FIRES IN OTHER TOWNS

But Chicago was not the only sufferer by fire during that awful month. In Wisconsin and Northern Michigan a number of towns were wholly or partly burned by fires that came into them from the woods, and many people were burned to death. Settlers living on farms, that were surrounded by timber, were cut off and lost everything that they had and in many cases their lives.

It was said that in many instances the fires would go through the timber faster than the people could run or their teams could travel, and after the fires were out many of them were found where they had fallen in the roads, overtaken by the flames.

Many families buried in the ground everything that they could, and some got into cisterns full of water or into rivers, and stayed there, with just their noses out of the water, until the fires burned out.

The town of Peshtigo, Wis., was entirely burned up at that time, and a great many people lost their lives there, and Manistee, Mich., was partly burned and many smaller towns went up in smoke at the same time. The stories that were told about these fires, after they were over, were innumerable, and a great many of them were very harrowing and terrible.

CLOSE CALL FOR DECATUR

How many now remember that Decatur came very near burning up at this same time? It is a fact that if a good many men had not stayed up for two nights and fought the fires back that this town would have suffered more or less also.

At that time our big swamp was all covered with timber, and the fire came up through it from the southwest, and was coming straight toward the town with a high wind blowing from that direction. The roaring of the flames in the swamp and the crashing of falling trees could be heard a long distance away.

There were very few houses south of the railroad at that time, the grubs and timber extended almost up to the town, and the people realized that if the fire once got across the new swamp road that it would probably reach the houses, and then it would all be up with Decatur.

For two days and nights, I with dozens of other men, watched that road and as fast as burning leaves and branches would blow across and start new fires on the east side of the road we would put them out by stamping or throwing water, any way to put them out, and by hard work we prevented the fire from crossing the dead line.

It was a fearful time and while I do not think that there were any losses around here, in other places thousands lost everything that they had in the world, and while it was never certainly known how many lost their lives, it probably ran into the thousands. Many were burned to death in the woods that were never found until months afterward.

It had been a very dry summer and everything was like tinder and ready to burn, but there was said to be some condition of the air that made everything break into a blaze at the least touch of fire, and sometimes fires would burst out spontaneously, and even the stones would burn, and in some cases articles that had been buried in the ground for safety were burned entirely up. Small rivers and streams became so hot that the fish in them were killed.

Chicago at that time was not what it is now, with skyscrapers built of steel and concrete, but it had many noble buildings made of solid stone, and some of them were supposed to be fire-proof, but it was said that when the fire reached these solid stone buildings they melted away like wax. The fire department in that city was almost entirely helpless, and many of the fire engines were burned in the streets, and in come cases the horses attached to them were also burned to leath.

MERRITT MANLEY'S ESCAPE

A friend of mine, Merritt Manley, happened to be in Chicago at that time buying goods for his father's store, and for some days the confusion was so great and the telegraph wires all down, so that he was lost track of, and no one knew whether he was alive or not, but he came home all right one evening on the accommodation train and his wife was a very happy woman when she saw him step off the car.

Merritt said that the evening the fire broke out he was staying at a hotel and when he got ready to go to bed they saw a large fire burning several miles away across the city, but no one supposed that it could come anywhere near where they were, and he went to bed, but by, or before morning, they all had to pile out and run for their lives. He told many interesting stories about his experiences there before he succeeded in getting away from the city, but I have forgotten most of them, it is such a long time ago.

All this happened forty-five years ago this month, more than an average lifetime, and probably the majority of the people now living have been born and have grown up since that time. But those who were living in those days, and especially those who lived in the places that were devastated by the fires, will not be likely to forget it, no matter how long their lives may be.

PASSING OF AUSTIN CHARLES

Austin Charles passed away at his home in this village February 13, 1916.

His passing removes from this community one of its oldest and most widely known citizens. He was the youngest child of Jacob and Elizabeth Charles who were among the most prominent of the first settlers of Cass County. The once busy village of Charleston was located on the homestead of this sturdy pioneer.

On the death of his parents Austin Charles came into possession of one of the finest farms in Cass County which has yielded him a substantial revenue and of which it has been his pride and pleasure to keep among the best.

He was united in marriage with Mathilda Lilley, daughter of the well-known pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. David Lilley, December 25, 1868, and they were the parents of two children Mrs. Gertrude Metzger and Pearl Charles. They moved from the farm to Decatur nearly forty years ago and with the exception of two years spent in Chicago, this village has since been their home.

Mr. Charles has passed through his share of the trials of this life but they never affected his good nature nor his generous disposition. Several times he ha lost valuable property by fire and at two different times he was seriously injured in railway accidents. He never fully recovered from injuries received in a street railway accident in Chicago some thrity years ago.

His hobby was to learn of the people of the community in need and to quietly help them and many a family today will testify to his kindness and generosity. He will be long remembered for this trait of his character.

A TRIP TO THE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION

During the summer of the year 1876 was held the great Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia commemmorating the birth of these United Stated as a nation.

It was the first real b'g show of this kind that had ever been held in this country and of course every one that could go went to see it. I was young then and as I had never seen anything of the kind larger than the county fair at Paw Paw, I was very anxious to take it in.

It so happened that shortly before this time I had had a disagreement with the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the company said that so far as they were concerned I could go where I pleased. I did not want to go alone and induced my friend Thompie to meet me in Chicago and go with me.

We started about the middle of September and were in Philadelphia about two weeks and we both worked hard every moment of that time seeing things. It is so long ago that I have forgotten very many of the different things that we saw at the Exposition, but to us "greenies" it was all very wonderful.

The great Corliss steam engine was very fascinating to me and I never got tired of watching it. It seemed to move without any exertion whatever, but it kept in motion all the machines in the huge machinery building.

But I think the most wonderful of all was the things that they did not have and which came into common use in such a short time afterward. For instance, they had no electric lights at all, no electric motors and no telephones, while only seventeen years later, at the World's Fair in Chicago the grounds were fairly covered with electric lights, telephones were everywhere and all kinds of machinery was run by electric motors.

At Philadelphia all of the street cars were run by horse and mule power. Now a horse car would be looked upon as a curiosity. The whole electric display at the Centennial was contained in a room about twenty feet square and consisted of telegraph instruments, Ocean cables and instruments to work them and a few electrical instruments such as galvanometers, rheostats, etc.

They had what they called an electrical candle, but as a light it didn't amount to much. It gave a light to be sure, but it hissed and sputtered, burned blue and threw off sparks and was quite a show.

The first type writer that I ever saw was there. For twenty-five cents you could write a short letter on a slate and they would take it and typewrite it, and mail it to your folks back home, as a curiosity. The first gas engine that I ever came across was there; they used it to run a printing press, and it was about as large as a small house. When the gas in it exploded it made a noise like a cannon and shook everything around it.

But of all the wonderful things that I saw there was something that I happened to find on the last day that we were there. Thompie wasn't with me just then, so I didn't have any one to back up my story, and when I got home and told about it my folks said they thought I was trying to tell the truth, but, never having had much practice, they thought that I had been deceived in some way.

It was simply a troupe of trained fleas—just common jumping fleas. A man was in charge of them, and he had a round table about four or five feet in diameter with a glass about six inches high around the edge of it; the top was not covered, and the fleas could easily have jumped out and got away if they wanted to, but they didn't try to, and it is a positive fact that those fleas did everything that their manager told them to do, that the best troupe of trained dogs or any other animals could do. There were some thirty or forty of them. How anyone could train such a thing as a flea to do what they did gets my goat.

I will not undertake to tell here the stunts they did, for it would take too much space, and no one would believe me unless they had seen it themselves. Fortunately for my reputation at home I found sometime afterward another person who was there and who saw the fleas and who told the same story about them that I did.

Thompie and I spent two days in the city. We visited Independence Hall, saw the Liberty bell and the original Declaration of Independence in its glass case. It looked nearly like a blank sheet to me, as the writing was almost faded out. We also visited the grave of Ben. Franklin and the original house built for William Penn in the city, the Zoological gardens and other interesting places, and came home well satisfied with our trip.

GYPSIES CAME TO TOWN

HURRIED ALONG BY MARSHAL PRICE—STOLE DAVID EICHLER'S POCKET BOOK.

The Gypsies came to town last Thursday, met Marshal Jame Price and continued on their way in a very short time.

They came from the west and were following the Dixie Highway. There were about fifty of them in ten wagon loads.

In Hamilton township they called on David Eichler and in negotiating with him for a few forks full of hay which she wanted to pay for in fortune telling, a Gypsy girl accidentally or otherwise stumbled against him and in recovering herself Mr. Eichler's pocket book became entangled in her fingers.

The young Gypsy apparently did not notice that she had the pocket book and the caravan came on to town. It was not long, however, after they had started before David noticed it and hitched up and followed.

He recovered the pocket book without trouble when they stopped in the village and the Gypsy begged him not to have her arrested which he didn't.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF A GOOD CITIZEN OF THE PAST

John B. Upton, A Citizen of Van Buren County from 1859 to 1875, One of Decatur's First Attorneys—Prosecuting Attorney Six Years.— A Splendid Soldier and a Loyal Friend.

As announced last week the Republican will soon receive for publication the war reminiscences of John B. Upton who went out from this county as Quartermaster of the Twenty-Eighth Michigan Infantry and served till after the close of the Civil War.

The name of John B. Upton is familiar to every pioneer resident of the county but for the benefit of those who have come later we present the following short sketch of his life:

John B. Upton, son of Daniel and Electa (Randall) Upton was born in Batavia, Genessee county, New York, July 2, 1829.

He was the fifth child in a family of thirteen children ,and his earlier years partook of experiences peculiar to thos pioneer days through which his parents were passing.

When quite a lad his fondness for reading was gratified by visits to the District library where he found Thatcher's Indian Trails, Swiss Family Robinson and other healthy books, dear to the boys and girls of that time. At the age of twelve years he swung his scythe and kept even in the swath with men. It was due to his inheritance of a strong constitution that this unreasonable task left no serious marks of harm done.

After a number of terms of Academic study, Mr. Upton entered Oberlin College in 1851. After a period of two years spent in the college he was obliged to leave on account of failing health and engage in agriculture.

Years later while living in Big Rapids, Oberlin College conferred an honor upon Mr. Upton by sending him a diploma.

He was married October 6, 1853, to Julia Ann Sherman of Bethany, New York, and purchased a farm in his native country, and with his young bride thought they were settled for life. But changes came and Mr. Upton abruptly decided to take up the study of law in '58.

He spent nearly one year as student in the office of Wakeman and Bryan of Batavia, New York, and removed to Van Buren county, Michigan, in the fall of 1859.

In the spring of '60 he applied for admission to the bar at Paw Paw. Political feeling of pronounced type, caused him to withdraw it and some months later he secured a horse and sulky and drove to Lansing, petitioned the Supreme Court and was admitted to the bar in July, 1860.

In the fall of 1864 he was commissioned Quartermaster of the 28th Michigan Infantry and served in that capacity until the close of the war. His regiment was held for reconstruction duty after hostilities ceased.

In the fall of '66 he was elected Prosecuting attorney for Van Buren County and served six consecutive years. He removed with his family to Big Rapids, Michigan, in the spring of 1875.

For more than twenty years he was a leading attorney of the city, serving one or two terms as Prosecuting attorney and a term or more as city attorney, and filled them with honor to himself and his constituency. He was a staunch Republican and took an active interest in the affairs of the day.

He was a noted political speaker and received many invitations to address gatherings especially those occurring on Decoration Day, and the Fourth of July. He was always identified with every movement calculated to advance the religious, moral or business interests of the city.

Mr. Upton was for a good many years a member of the Presbyterian church, being an elder in the church for a long time, and was also clerk of the session for several years, which office he held up to the time of his death. He was also active in Sunday school work.

Dr. George W. Green, his companion in arms, wrote to Mrs. Upton: "I have learned with profound sorrow of the serious illness of your husband, my beloved friend. There are some companions of our "other days" that we love to recall to mind often, the very memories of whom cheer us and tend to make us better. Of such is my brother John—always loyal, always true, always pure; a splendid soldier and an upright citizen, I think such men should live a century."

COLONIAL DAYS

The Republican has a relic of Colonial times, a foot-stove that was owned and used in church services by the grandmother of Mrs. L. D. Roberts and T. Trowbridge. Notice was made of it a few weeks ago and J. E. Goble has since brought in a book of stories of American History which gives an account of it in the following story entitled "Colonial Customs":

The new Englanders were very severe about keeping the Sabbath day. No kind of work was allowed; no playing and no visiting was permitted. It has even been said that one man was fined for kissing his wife on this day of rest.

Everybody attended church. The men sat by themselves on one side of the church, the women by themselves on the other, and the children by themselves in the front.

The churches were not warmed for the people had an idea that they were better Christians if they bore discomforts without complaining. After a time the people began carrying hot bricks and hot water bottles to keep their feet and hands from freezing; then later on they carried little foot stoves. These stoves consisted of little tin boxes, with handles to carry them. In these boxes were put live coals, and in this way the fire would last through the whole sermon.

There were no cushioned seats, no organ and no hymn books. The minister read off one line of the hymn which the people would sing to some old tune; then another line would be read and sung, then, another and another until the whole hymn was sung.

After church all would go solemnly homeward, scarcely daring to smile even. Such a dismal day as Sunday was in those times. What a strong contrast to ours of to-day, with our pretty music, our books and picture lessons.

OLD DECATUR

THE VAN BUREN COUNTY DIRECTORY PRINTED IN 1869 CELEBRATING ITS COMPLETION — THE OLD LANDMARKS

I have been putting in some of my spare time lately in going over the old Van Buren County directory, compiled and published by Delos Hill and Charley Leavens, in the summer and fall of the year 1868, forty-eight years ago. The book was printed in the Republican office which was then located in Poore's block, in the room over Ball's meat market.

I was a printer at that time and was one of the boys who did the work on the book, and of all the boys who worked in the office during that fall and winter that I know anything about, except two are dead. Bert Cole and myself are still alive but Delos Hill, Charley Leavens, Ed Blackman, Dick Lyon, George Sellick, George Voke, and Andy Johnson are all gone and the directory is almost unknown now, except by a few of older inhabitants. Bert Cole was quite a small boy then and was just starting in his career as a printer — in fact he was the Devil in the office. I wonder if he remembers the night Joe Pearson was killed and he was afraid to go home alone and I went with him!

Celebrating Completion of Directory

We had some great times in that office — especially the night that we finished the book. We had a banquet and invited in all of our friends to help celebrate the event. We had a long table in the press room, and it was covered with crackers, cheese and herring, pipes and tobacco, and in a prominent place was a keg of beer, and everyone was invited to help himself. We had speeches and funny stories galore. We kept up the fun until almost morning. I do not think that there is anyone left in Decatur who was there that night except myself — but if there is they will surely remember Bill Tucker's Side Board. That was something no one would be apt to forget.

But in reading over this old book what a lot of names are brought back to anyone who lived here in those days almost half a century ago. Only just a very few do I find that I know are still alive. The great majority of the inhabitants of those days are now permanently located in the cemetery. I hope to meet a few of my acquaintances of those days during our HOME COMING WEEK of next month, but am afraid it will be very few. I have looked the list all through and can find only three men who were in business here at that time and are still alive — A.A. Abbott, L.D. Roberts and Ed Carney. Theodore Trowbridge was clerking for Trowbridge & Hill, and must have gone into business for himself afterward.

Changes in Fifty Years

So far as the population is concerned the town has entirely changed in the forty-eight years, and is another town now. Some of the buildings are the same as they were in those days, but others have been torn down and replaced by new and better buildings, while a great many residences — some very fine ones — have been built, and some of the Home-Comers next time, if they have been away fifty years or so, will find very little that they will recognize.

On Phelps Street the poor block and the Chadwick building are the same and some of the wooden buildings still remain. The buildings now occupied by Brooks & Sons, on the corner of Phelps and Delaware streets is the same but very much disguised. Some of the churches and residences are still standing as they did fifty years ago. But the Lake of the Woods, Mud Lake, the swamp and general surroundings have changed out of all recognition, and so have almost all of the inhabitants. The Lake of the Woods used to be a beautiful place, and if it could have been left as it was fifty years ago it would have been worth a great deal to Decatur as a summer resort, but now it has been ditched and lowered until its beauty has all been destroyed — on the town side at least — the little island has been eliminated, and the banks are so muddy and weed grown that it is almost impossible to get anywhere near the water without wearing high-top rubber boots. The timber has all been cut away — on this side at least and altogether instead of being a place of beauty as it once was, it is only an eyesore.

Mud Lake has also been lowered until it isn't half the size it once was and no doubt in time it will entirely disappear, leaving only a cat hole. Who can guess what Decatur will look like in another fifty years!

CHARLES SCHUSTER — A GRAND OLD MAN

Estimate of a one-time honored resident of Decatur as published by his associates in Milwaukee

A few weeks ago the Republican received a kindly message from Charles Schuster from the mountains of Montana where he was taking a short rest from his active business life in Milwaukee. His mind was on Decatur, his old home town, on his friends here and the home coming they had planned. He had promised himself to attend this home coming but a vacation call elsewhere was preventing, and he wrote to tell us his heart was with us.

With the exception of a few years in Chicago his work since leaving Decatur some thirty years ago has been in helping to build up the Schuster stores founded by his brother in Milwaukee. He has also been and now is the editor of a delightful little store magazine entitled "Keeping In Touch." During his absence the magazine is being edited by the assistant editors who have taken the occasion to publish an appreciation of their chief which we take pleasure in reproducing herewith in the Republican:

A Grand Old Man

While anxious to run this magazine along the lines that Mr. Charles Schuster laid out for it and to avoid doing anything that we know he would not have done, there is one instance in which we are about to transgress.

While ever ready to give every member of the Schuster family an opportunity to express himself in the columns of the "Keeping In Touch," giving a boost here, friendly mention there and often indulgent praise, our modest editor abstains strictly from mention of himself.

So we, on behalf of all our readers, here try to express a few words of tribute to and recognition of the GRAND OLD MAN.

It seems strange to think of Mr. Charles Schuster as an old man; he is younger than most of us, scores of years his juniors. He is young in spirit, young in activity and accomplishment.

Yet a few days before he left for his vacation, he confessed that it was his seventieth birthday. Imagine it, seventy years old; an age in our mind usually associated with sere and yellow stage, the crabby disposition, the fading faculties.

Of all the young old men, mentioned in history, our Editor is surely the youngest. Full of the energies and enthusiasms of youth, blessed with an abundant sense of humor, and a cheerful love of his fellow men, Mr. Schuster is not an old man, except in years.

He himself will deny that he is old — he probably feels that he is seventy years young. We fear he will resent our calling him an old man, but we use it as a term of affection; he is a GRAND OLD MAN.

This is in no sense a biography. HIs activities and interests are still many and varied.

When he joined this organization, twenty-two years ago, he had already rounded out a successful mercantile career in a neighboring state, where he is remembered as a public spirited citizen, a moving spirit in the betterment of the community.

Of his work done in the upbuilding of the Schuster store success, others are more capable of writing than we. But of his management of "Keeping In Touch" everyone of us is capable of judging every month. The magazine is permeated with his personal spirit of good will, friendliness and benevolent interest. When a man can thus project his individuality into a paper, and make his readers sense the sympathy that impels him, he has more than literary ability. He has a real message, a message of cheer, and hope and faith.

Mr. Schuster, that you may long continue to deliver your message through "Keeping In Touch," is the sincere wish of us all.

KNICKERBOCKER'S GHOST

ANOTHER STORY OF THE MYSTERIOUS PIONEER OF HAMILTON SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN BURIED ON AN ISLAND IN THE LAKE WHICH BEARS HIS NAME

The story about Knickerbocker and his grave which appeared in the Republican a few weeks ago brought out another story which was published in the Dowagiac News last week.

This story was written by Charles Stewart, a life-long resident of Hamilton Township, who is known equally well by his neighbors and friends as Henry Teeter, Esq. The story is as follows:

A thousand times the story of "Ghost of Knickerbocker" has been told individually and collectively and last week we read the last one and the last one holds good until the next. Being a resident of Hamilton for nearly fifty years we surely have taken an inquisitive interest.

The ghost story first originated about 1868 when some girls went to the lake to take a boat and go over to the island to pick cranberries which were plentiful at that time around there.

It was known by nearly all at that time that Mr. Knickerbocker was buried upon one of the islands and it was easy to start a ghost story. The cranberries were quite an object and someone saw a way to protect the coveted patch.

First the girls saw an object moving around the island and then they heard a scream and a howl and this was enough. Each flew to her home and told the first ghost story.

We will always remember the first one. Men looked at each other and turned pale. There was a sand bar in every throat as they related the story which grew larger at every rehearsal and for several years a certain party had the whole crop of cranberries unmolested.

Tobias Byers — His Neighbor

Being a friend and neighbor of Tobias Byers, one of the first and best settlers of Keeler Township who came to Michigan about the year 1837, the writer has often heard him tell of the hardships which many of the pioneers of that time had to contend with.

Mr. Knickerbocker came here from the state of New York and settled on the south shore of what is now known as Knickerbocker Lake. He had a wife and one child and died the next year after locating his farm. Mr. Byers and two other neighbors buried the body on one of the islands at the wife's request and she returned to her friends in the East. The remains were buried on the island for fear the wolves would dig it up. The wife returned to her parents by the financial aid of Mr. Byers and two other neighbors. She left with the intention of sending for the body of her husband, but never did and today no one knows the resting place precisely enough to locate the grave.

Last Appearance of Ghost

This is the last story to date, and the very last ghost that was seen at this historical lake was about a dozen years ago when a party of fishermen went from Dowagiac to the lake one night spearing.

As they came ashore they saw a real ghost in the bright light of their torch. The dreaded spectre stood facing them; on his breast was a shining star. The boys rolled their eyes heavenward and fervently prayed mentally that no harm would befall them. Still the ghost advanced, and, pointing a game finger at them, it said, "You're pinched by the warden of Van Buren County." The boys promised to meet him the next day in Decatur and settle. All this they did as promised.

STORMY NIGHT IN A SWAMP

STORM OF LAST FRIDAY NIGHT RECALLS TO AN OLD VETERAN ONE OF HIS ROUGHEST EXPERIENCES DURING THE CIVIL WAR

Last Friday night was about as stormy a night as we often see in this part of Michigan and when Montgomery Vorce remarked next morning, that fifty-five years ago he spent just such a night and part of a day in a swamp without shelter, we knew that there was an interesting story of the Civil War back of the experience.

It was in the fall of '61. General Banks had set out to capture Richmond and end the war. The venture had already lost some of its lustre when the army came upon the big swamp on the bank of the Rappahannock. When night came on the rain was coming down in torrents and the army was literally stuck in the mud.

The Johnnies on the other side of the river were watching the troubles of the Yankees with great satisfaction and Mr. Vorce remembers hearing one of them shout, "Boys, we'll help lay the pontoon if you'll come over." A Yankee private in the rear ranks who had not lost his sense of humor was struggling to extricate himself from a bed of clay when he caught the eye of General Banks. "Gineral," he said, "The auspicious hour has arriven." But the Yankees did not execute their plans and Richmond remained untaken for many a day. The next day they fell back to Upton's Hill near the city of Washington and went into winter quarters.

Montgomery Vorce was a private in the 24th New York Infantry. He enlisted in April, 1861, and served two years, with the army of the Potomac.

He helped to cover the retreat of the Yankees in the battle of Bull Run, fought in the second battle of Bull Run, the three battles of Fredericksburg, and battles of Cedar Mountain, South Mountain, Antietum, Phancellorsville, the Battle of the Wilderness and many skirmishes. He was one of the fortunate ones to escape without injury, but at one time he was forced to go thirty-six hours without water.

His regiment went out with one-thousand men, six-hundred more were recruited and but four-hundred forty were left to muster out.

Mr. Henderson was born in Henderson County, New York in 1839 and came to Michigan about forty years ago. He has lived in Decatur seventeen years.

THE COMMERCIAL AND THERAPEUTIC VALUE OF PEPPERMINT OIL

Written for the Republican by Howard W. Wickett.

In a recent issue of the Republican, Mr. Dexter Brigham presented the readers with a discussion of the Historical development of the Peppermint Oil Industry in Decatur. Having gained from his treatise a fair conception of the growth of the industry it might be of additional interest to the growers to know the avenues of use which the oil has in the commercial and medical world.

The plant, called Mentha Piperita is a perennial herb bearing a root stock with long suckers. It belongs to a large family of plants called Peptines, having no botanical characteristics by which they may be differentiated. Only physical appearances and chemical and physical properties of the several products enable one to distinguish one member of the Peptine family from another.

As to habitat, the plant was originally found in Scotland and England in watery places It never grows truly wild and is less easily grown from the seed than spearmint and other members of the same family.

The oil is recognized by the peculiar aromatic agreeable odor and its warm burning bitterish taste which is followed by a sensation of cold when air enters the mouth. Pure peppermint oil should be colorless to a light yellow and its deeper color is due to impurities such as oils from closely allied plants, flebone or erigeron, Spearmint or mentha viridis, wormwood or rosemary.

Peppermint oil, if allowed to age will assume a red tinge on exposure to air. This is due to oxidation of the oil to a substance called "Menthone".

Oil of Peppermint contains two chemical substances, one liquid and one solid. The composition of the liquid has never been ascertained despite prolonged chemical pursuits directed to that end. The solid ingredient is known as menthol and to this substance the oil owes its therapeutic action. The Menthol constitutes approximately 50 per cent of the purified oil and is extracted by a process of crystalization at low temperatures and pressure. The oil is placed in a partial vacuum and subjected to a temperature of minus eight degrees centigrade. On long standing, the Menthol separates out in white needle like crystals with a shining lustre.

USES OF PEPPERMINT

Over three hundred years ago, English people used to bruise the partially dried stems and leaves of the plant, dip them in hot water and apply them externally for indigestional ailments. The real material value of the treatment is questionable in the modern medical world.

The oil is dispensed today in the following forms: Water of peppermint, oil of peppermint, solution of peppermint and spirits of peppermint. They differ from each other as regards kinds and amounts of dilutents with which they are mixed.

Oil of Peppermint is known in the medical profesion as carminative, a medicine which relieves flatulence and assuages pain. Other carminatives are pepper, ginger, cloves, cinnamon, cardomum, nutmeg, spearmint, sodium carbonate. Another very important use of the oil is to mask the taste of strong drugs in pills, extracts, tinctures, etc. This of course can only be done when no chemical reaction can take place between the drug and the menthol ingredient of the peppermint. Loeffler's well known diphtheria solution owes its aromatic property to menthol.

In the commercial world, the oil has even more extensive use. All the mentholated salves, ointments, etc., found on the market under patented rights, are dependent upon peppermint oil.

Wrigley's famous mint gums, most all cordials and sweetmeats, afterdinner mints, and stomachic lozenges or troches use menthol and peppermint oil in surprising amounts. Specially prepared antiseptic appliances use the oil in greater or less quantities.

Since menthol is used extensively and the oil itself but little less so, it is evident that the oil of peppermint is a necessary commodity, something the world needs and has to have with regular periodity.

Fifty per cent of the peppermint oil is menthol. Today peppermint oil is $1.65 per pound; menthol is $12.00 per pound. The isolation of menthol from the oil is a simple process and involves no complicated machinery. Permit me to prophesy that in the next decade, some scientific grower will triple his yield from peppermint by isolating and selling menthol rather than the oil.

Business Men of Early Decatur

Main Street Half a Century and More Ago---Joe Pearson and His Tragic Death --The Big Grist Mill—Recollections of the Post.

By W. H. Tuttle

EARLY POSTMASTERS

Col. T. E. Phelps, Ira Nash, W. C. Tucker, A. H. Dixon & Co., and E. Ingalls must have been the pioneer business men of Decatur and since their day there has been an unending procession of others.

Col. Phelps was appointed postmaster in 1861 after President Lincoln was inaugurated and he must have given up his store soon afterward and confined himself to the post office which was moved to the small building just west of the Kidman blacksmith shop and which has been torn down during the past year or two. Col. Phelps died in 1863 or 1864, while he was still postmaster and his wife filled out his unexpired term. She was then appointed for another full term. Her son, Seth Phelps was assistant postmaster and part of the time Charlie Cockett was clerk.

Capt. Beebe was the next postmaster and the postoffice was burned out twice while he had it.

EARLY STORE KEEPERS

Ira Nash continued in business until about 1868, W. C. Tucker until 1868, but Dixon & Co., must have quit long before the war began. They were followed by Trowbridge & Harris. John Tarbell was the next occupant of the Brooks corner and he had to quit somewhere about 1864.

I think that Geo. C. Colt and Co., had a dry goods store in that corner succeeded by Stocking Bros., Delos Hill, and W. Larzeleer, D. H. Manley & Son, and others later. What a lot of people that old building has housed in the sixty-five years of its existence.

Merritt Manley, the junior partner of Manley & Son, was in Chicago at the time of the great fire in 1871 with his pockets jam full of money buying goods for his firm. Everything was in a terrible confusion during and after the fire and for a few days Merritt was lost. His wife didn't hear anything from him and they didn't know whether he was alive or not. His wife was at the depot waiting to hear something and when the evening train came in Merritt stepped off all right. Mrs. Manley jumped a good six feet through the crowd, right onto his neck and a gladder woman no one ever saw.

E. Ingalls was located on the Fletcher lot and he must have gone out of business during the war. He kept everything, dry goods, beer, groceries, etc., as well as a meat market. Before he went into the army Ed. Carney used to work for him as a butcher and Ed. tells me that he used to sell the best beef steak for three cents a pound. Think of it.

Ed. says that at on time he went to the Haydon farm in Hamilton and brought home three steers for the market that weighed over a thousand pounds and only gave $18 for the whole lot.

THE NOBLE FAMILY

The first furniture store and factory that I remember of was established by L. Noble in 1861. His store and shop was located about where Rasmusson's blacksmith shop is now and consisted of a long large building in front with a shop for his men to work in back of it, the buildings were burned during the Duncombe house fire some twenty years ago.

Mr. Noble disposed of his furniture business about 1870 and for a short time afterward he kept a dry goods store in the Abbott Bros. building, where the Durkee store now stands.

After leaving there Mr. and Mrs. Noble went to Kansas and I believe they both died there. They had four sons who were all at some time in the army. One son came home in the summer of 1864 from the army hospital, a a perfect wreck and lived only a few weeks after getting here.

Another son, Peter Stryker of Stryke as we always called him, was one of my most particular boy friends.

Before Mr. Noble's time there had been a small furniture repair shop here operated by a Mr. Woodruff and located about where Geo. Roberts' hardware store stands, but it was a very small establishment.

THE TERRIBLE JOE PEARSON

Decatur at one time, just after the war had four hotels, the Duncombe House, the Gallowoy House, the Butler House and the Tittle house. Two of them were not much more than saloons, for I do not think that they ever tried to cater to the traveling publis.

Before these the old Decatur House stood on the Duncombe house lot and it burned down about 1859. About 1869 there was another Decatur House kept by R. J. Downs, on the Brigham store corner, and in the barroom of this hotel was where Joe Pearson was killed by nightwatch Aaron Sweet, another product of whiskey selling.

Pearson, it is said by those that knew him best, was a good man in every way when he was sober, but the moment that he got where there was a saloon, he must drink and then he was a perfect demon. As he was a giant in strength, every peaceable citizen dreaded to see him come into town and begin one of his orgies for someone was sure to get hurt.

The only time I knew of that he was ever arrested by force was one afternoon in 1868 when four of the best men in town, Wav. Botsford, John Steele, Aaron Sweet and Deharte Matteson, jumped onto him all together at the old Duncombe house at the corner of Phelps and St. Mary's streets, got him down and dragged him flat on his back on the ground to the calaboose, in the back of the present Kibbie phone building.

Pearson swore that he would break out before morning, and all four of the men watched the building all night. About midnight he made his threat good. He made a sudden lunge, after a spell of being quiet, and went plumb through the side of the building, tearing off and breaking boards almost as though they were paper. But as he went through he got tangled up in an old fence and a row of bushes on the outside, belonging to Dr. Rogers, and fell and before he could regain his feet, his captors were on him again and put him back and that time they shackled him and succeeded in keeping him until morning when he was taken before a Justice of the Peace and sent to jail at Paw Paw.

Pearson swore that he would never be taken to Paw Paw to jail, but he was by the same four men, carrying cocked revolvers, and informing him that if he made any breaks he would be shot and killed if necessary.

That was the kind of a man that Joe Pearson was, a good man if he would let his whiskey alone, but whiskey made a perfect devil of him, and a man to be dreaded by everyone when he came to town.

PEARSON'S DEATH

For Mr. Sweet's share in arresting and taking him to Paw Paw Pearson swore that he would kill Sweet the first chance he got and everyone knew that he meant it.

His chance came one evening later in the same year when he was in the barroom of the Decatur House carrying on in his usual way when in liquor and Night Watch Sweet went in to quiet him.

As soon as Sweet approached he struck at him with the heavy stove poker, missing Sweet but hitting the stove pipe and cutting a length of pipe almost entirely in two. He then grappled with Sweet and meant to crush him to death but the latter managed to draw his small revolver and placing it against the back side of Pearson's head he fired, killing him instantly.

A great many of Pearson's neighbors across the swamp blamed the night watch very much and called it murder and for a good while there was a bitter feeling over in that section of toward the townspeople.

Mr. Sweet was acquitted of blame by the coroner's jury and I never could see how he could have done anything else. Mr. Sweet was an officer doing his duty and it was a case of either kill or be killed. It is nearly half a century in the past now, but all the older citizens will remember it very distinctly.

ABBOTT & MANLEY

In 1864 D. H. Manley moved into town from the country and with Orville S. Abbott, established a dry goods store on the corner where Durkee's store is now located and did a large business for a few years. The store building they used is the one now used by Geo. Roberts as a hardware store and it must be one of the very oldest store buildings in town. It goes clear back beyond my recollection and Ira Nash had a store in it for years when I first remember anything about it.

About 1867 Abbott & Manley dissolved partnership and Albert Abbott came to town and took the place of Mr. Manley. They did a large business for some years as Abbott Bros.

Mr. Albert Abbott is one of the very few that are still living who were in business here almost fifty years ago. Mr. Manley with his son, Merritt, afterward run a dry goods store in the Brooks building. I think that Manley & Son bought out Delos Hill, who had been doing the same kind of business there, but I am not quite sure.

I believe that Delos Hill sold his store to go in with Charlie Leavens as compilers and publishers of the "Van Buren County Directory" in 1868 and after that was finished up he went to Atlanta, Ga., to go into business and died there some years later.

THE CHADWICK FAMILY

The Chadwick family were a large factor in Decatur business affairs for a good many years and there were a lot of them here at one time or another. There were John, Fred, Bill, Charley, E. E. and Theron that I remember.

John and Fred must have commenced business here about 1860 on the south side of Poor's brick building, now occupied by the Racket store and they remained there until they built the brick store now owned by L. G. Stewart, which I think was in 1864. After that they did business there until the dath of John in 1871 or '72, when E. E. Chadwick came here from Lawrence and continued the business until his death. Then his wife and son carried on the business for some time, finally selling out to George Baker.

And of all the numerous Chadwick family at one time residing here Marion is the only one left in Decatur.

THE LIVELY THREE

Tom Brownbridge was one of our early business men and generally had a meat market about where Frank White's barber shop is now. Tom was a great plunger in his day. He bought and sold stock or almost anything that came along. Some timse he was rich and sometimes he was poor, but that made no difference, he was always on the go and always ready to buy or sell almost anything. Tom also built the first brick residence in Decatur.

Grove Tarbell was another great trader, a street broker he called himself, Tom, Fred and Tarbell were great jokers and the tricks they used to play off on each other and on others, too, were sometimes very amusing, especially to themselves but many of them would not bear repeating in public.

The first that I remember seeing Tom must have been about 1860 and he and John Steele were having a fight on Main street. Tom was apparently getting the worst of it. He broke away and rushed into his meat market and out again with a heavy meat cleaver in his hand and went for John with that and chased him the whole length of the street and back trying his best to cut John's head off, but John managed to run the fastest and got away. No one interfered, it was only an every day scrap and the bystanders all looked on and enjoyed it.

OTHER OLD TIMERS

L. T. Rawson was another old time trader that helped to make business hum fifty years or more ago. He came here about 1855 and as long as he was able to do business he was always ready to buy or sell, or to do any kind of business that came his way. "Lyme" was a great character in his day, always ready for a joke and always able to hold his end up. Mostly he was a grain buyer but everything was grist that came to his mill.

Henry Canoll was one of our early business men, having, I believe, the first drug store in town, on the Mosier corner. Mr. Canoll was a very prominent member of the Masonic fraternity and was the first master of the Decatur lodge. He died about the close of the war.

Hinkley and Gerow were another firm of over fifty years ago. They had a general grocery and drug business in a wooden building where Criffield's store is now.

W. C. Tucker, on the corner where Wood's hardware store is located was one of the town's very early business men. He was very eccentric and boasted that he could furnish on demand anything that was ever kept in a store. To test this Ed. Farmer went there one day with a pail and called for a pailful of soft soap, which Tucker immediately went down cellar and brought up. Farmer had to acknowledge that the joke and the soap were on him. Tucker failed in business in 1868 and when his stock was cleared out it was said to have been a perfect museum, consisting of almost everything anyone could think of or imagine. The poor old man passed through very dark days days after his failure.

J. Teed was another war time merchant having a general store on what is now Burdock Park. Wm. E. Trowbridge must have come to Decatur as early as 1855 and when I first remember him he had a drug store in the Ingalls building where Fletcher's store now stands.

Chas. N. Poor was our pioneer hardware merchant and was postmaster during Buchanan's administration.

E. L. Hawks started another hardware store in a low wooden building located about where the Doctors' offices stand now. This was in 1863 and S. N. Thomas came here in the fall of 1864, from Iowa where he had been farming and went into partnership with Mr. Hawks. After a year or two Mr. Thomas bought out Hawks and continued the business for something like forty years.

THE BIG GRIST MILL

Perhaps the largest enterprise ever undertaken in Decatur was the building of the large three story grist mill by Abbott & Matthews. It was commenced in 1867 and finished and put to making flour in the fall of the same year. The mill was filled with the best flour making machinery of that time and was run by a very large powerful engine. The cost of the mill was $27,000, and it was to turn out 200 to 300 barrels of flour and use over one-thousand bushels of wheat per day. But for some reason it was not successful and passed out of the hands of Abbott & Matthews in 1872 to other parties.

While the legal complications were being threshed out a somewhat comical incident occurred. Mr. Abbott was still holding possession of the warehouse connected with the mill and was doing some business therein and Jim Haynes and Rashe Hendryx wanted to oust him.

Mr. Abbott went to Kalamazoo on business one day and they thought their chance had come, but Mr. Abbott before going away had left his former mill engineer, Henry McKenzie on guard to hold the fort. Then they had to cook up a scheme to get McKenzie out of the building. They sent a man who was an officer to talk with McKenzie who got him a little excited and he swore. The officer immediately arrested him for profanity under some old blue law of former years and dragged him off to court, giving Haynes and Hendryx a chance to enter and obtain possession of the warehouse.

No old time resident of this town will need to be told the name of the lawyer who played this trick, for no one but Bill Tucker could or would have done it. McKenzie at once sent a message to Mr. Abbott in Kalamazoo and before coming home he went before a Judge there and obtained an injunction forbidding Haynes and Hendryx interfering with the business until it could be tried out on its merits in court, and the Judge also appointed Mr. Abbott an officer so that he could serve the injunction himself, which he did as soon as he returned, turning out the other parties without any ceremony with a heavy hammer. Henry McKenzie was tried the next day, convicted of swearing and a small fine was imposed on him and he was set at liberty again.

Henry felt that he had been disgraced forever by being arrested and tried and he was terribly down hearted over it, but his friends saw to it that he got the worth of his money in full. Every one treated him to something, generally in a glass and there was a real old fashioned Decatur jollification.

The grist mill finally burned down some thirty-five or more years ago and now there is nothing left of it except the very fine brick smoke stack which is used by the measure factory.

PROFESSIONAL MEN AND OTHERS

Decatur had a great plenty of Lawyers fifty years ago. It must be that the citizens "lawed it", a great deal more then than they do now-a-days. There were J. G. Parkhurst, Newton Foster, William Tucker, John B. Upton, Oscar W. Field and Hiram Cole. And as for physicians we had Doctors J. T. Keables, C. T. Baker, H. M. Broderick, G. W. Rogers, W. Ross, H. M. Huntington, Delphane, M. T. Russell and a Doctor Clark. I believe that these were all here at the same time, about the close of the war. Dr. Dillon came here not long afterward. Doctors Maltby, King, Day and Crandall Bros., were dentists here about that time.

Fred Smith was the town jeweler, watch and clock maker and repairer. Fred was a very ingenious mechanic, and he could fix or make almost anything. There are several large clocks in Decatur yet that were built outright by him. He was always making some queer thing, an organ or a freak gun or a musical clock.

Wm. O. Bond was another war time groceryman, just north of the Brooks corner, and Jos. Rogers had a private bank near the same location.

It would read like a directory and probably be about as interesting if I should give all the names of business men that I can think of. I have given some, but by no means all, of the merchants here fifty years and more ago.

There were any number of other men here in those days, but it would be tiresome reading to go through so many names.

THE FIRST BICYCLES

The Van Buren County Directory published in 1868-69, says that Decatur had 2500 inhabitants and a Van Buren County History published in 1880 says that we had over 2300, but I guess that they must have stretched it a good deal for the U. C. Census of 1910 only gives 1100 or 1500 population and I am sure that there must be a good many more people here now than there were then.

The first bicycles that I ever saw was in the summer of 1868 and they would surely be curiosities now. A couple of young men came here from somewhere and brought with them about a carload of these machines, hired a hall in the third story of the Chadwick building and set out to learn the young people of Decatur how to ride them at so much an hour.

I wonder what the youngsters of today would think of riding such wheels. They had two wheels about the size of those that are used today, but they were made with wodden spokes and rims and the tires were iron, just like a small buggy wheel.

There wasn't a bit of rubber or a spring of any kind about the whole thing. The pedals were attached directly to the axle of the front wheel. I don't know how much the things weighed but it must have been a lot for they were all wood and iron. But cumbersome as they were they became quite the rage for a few years. They did very well on a smooth pavement, but were no good off it. They used to call them "bone shakers."

VAN BUREN COUNTY FAIR

The Van Buren County Fair at Hartford last week was crowded each day with people from all over southwestern Michigan. The space alloted to the parking of automobiles on the grounds was crowded to the limit. The traffic on the streets of Hartford was so heavy that traffic officers were placed at the three principle corners to enforce the regulations and prevent accidents.

This fair has taken a place among the best county fairs of Michigan. The exhibits were as good as have ever been displayed in Van Buren county, and consisted of every form of farm products and live stock.

Entertainment was furnished in variety and abundance by fake shows and hawkers, including the fat lady, the snake eater and and high class wild west vaudeville. These with the popcorn, ice cream and soft drink, stands did a thriving business and separated many from their pin money.

Fischer's orchestra of Kalamazoo was present and furnished music in the grand stand during intermissions in the racing afternoons and were assisted by the Paw Paw high school band on Tuesday; the Decatur band Thursday and the Lawrence band Friday.

Horse races the first three days of the fair were well attended, but the auto races on Friday proved an unusual attraction. Directors estimated that this was the biggest year for attendance the fair has had and that more automobiles were parked on the grounds, than ever before.

"THE YELLOW AND BLUE

Song of the U. of M.

Sing to the colors that float in the light;
Hurrah for the Yellow and Blue!
Yellow the stars as they ride thro' the night,
And reel in a rollicking crew,
Yellow the fields where ripens the grain,
And yellow the moon on the harvest wain;
Hail! Hail to the colors that float in the light,
Hurrah for the Yellow and Blue!

Blue are the billows that bow to the sun
When yellow-robed morning is due;
Blue are the curtains that evening has spun,
The slumbers of Phoebus to woo:
Blue are the blossoms to memoryy dear,
And blue is the sapphire, and gleams like a tear;
Hail! hail to the ribbons that nature has spun;
Hurrah for the Yellow and Blue!

Here's to the college whose colors we wear;
Here's to the hearts that are true;
Here's to the maid of the golden hair,
And eyes that are brimming with blue;
Garlands of blue-bells and maise intertwine;
And hearts that are true and voices combine;
Hail! hail to the college whose colors we wear;
Hurrah for the Yellow and Blue!

THE COMET —

Jan. 18, 1916

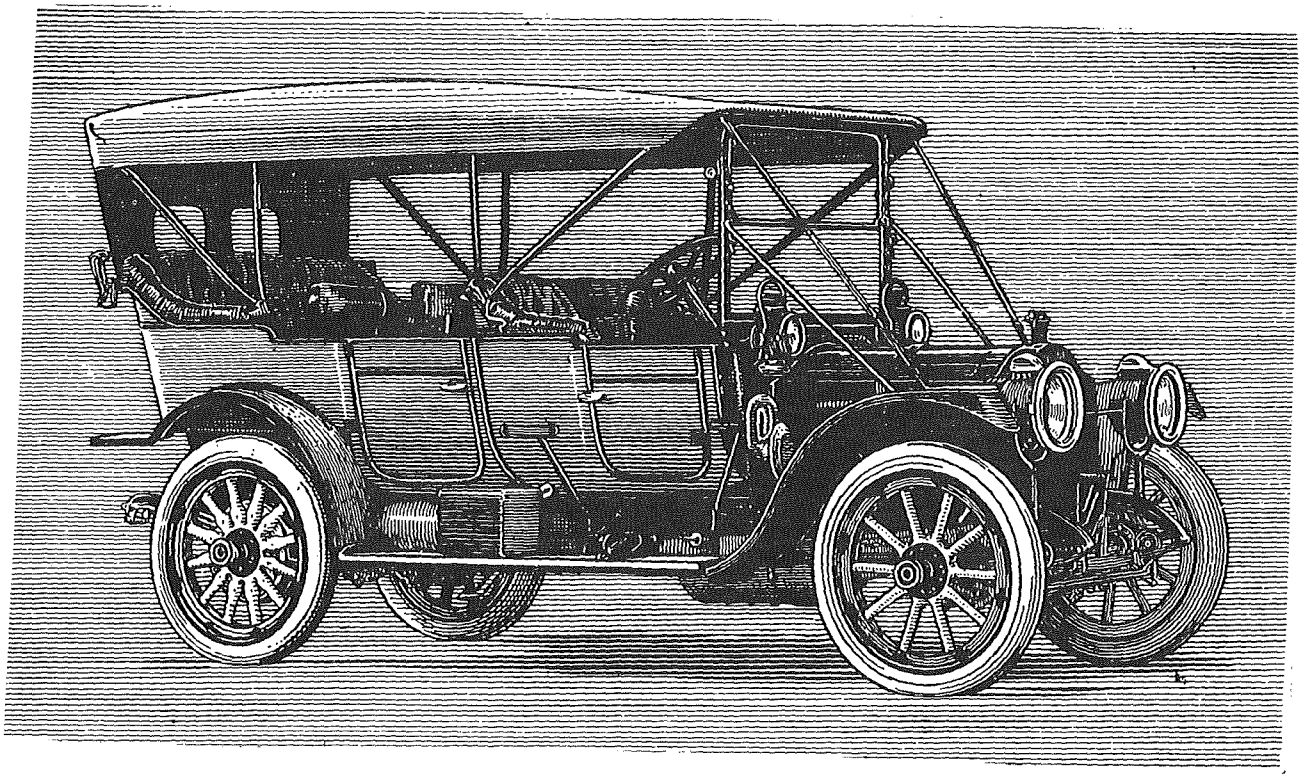
Editor Republican:

I have been moved to join in the controversy about that comet. I have very vivid recollections of some of the things that transpired in those early years in Decatur. We lived in a small house on the north side of east Delaware street near the outskirts of the village.

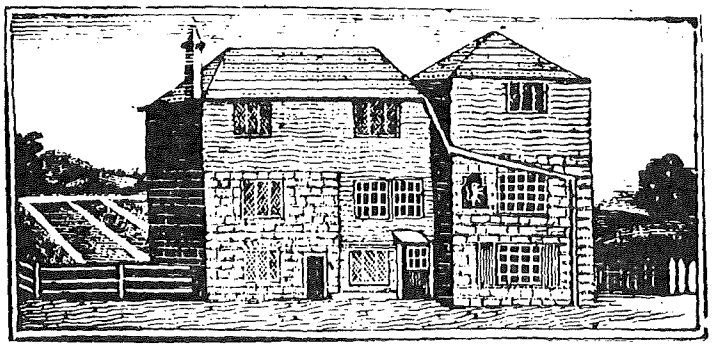
It must have been the summer of 1858 or '59 that the comet, I well remember, made its appearance in the northeast. It was visible all day, very bright with a long streamer pointing south west. I could see it from my back door any time of day.

There was much speculation about it, some thinking it would collide with the earth and there would be a great smash-up. The comet disappeared and the world remained intact. Everything was planned by a MASTER ARCHITECT, no collision or jumping the track, machinery running on smoothly, for ages without friction.

I don't remember how long it remained visible, but at least it was many days. I have no recollection of seeing any comet after the beginning of the war. There might have been one, however, I would not say there was not.



A Secret of the Old Brown Tavern



Told by "Chautauqua."

In the year 18— there lived in the western part of the state of New York a man by the name of Jackson. He owned a small farm there, and with his wife and two children, lived comfortably; but the farm was small, extremely hilly, and not very good soil, and do the best that they could, and live as frugally as possible, they could only just manage to make both ends meet and not get into debt. The children were growing up and required more and more every year, and Jackson and his wife were getting past their best days, and would soon be getting old and not able to work as they had done all of their lives. They could both plainly see that the time was coming when they would not be able to support themselves and the two children, and that they might be obliged to sell or mortgage their little home in order to live. Harry Jackson, the husband, was now about forty-five years of age, Sarah, his wife, about the same age, and the two children, Tommie was nearly fifteen, and his sister Annie, was ten or eleven.

Jackson and his wife had lived in this vicinity nearly all of their lives, they loved the hills and valleys of old Cattaraugus County, and disliked to leave their pleasant home and go into a new country to live. But they could see that they must make a change of some kind, or they would be left helples in their old age. Many of their neighbors had gone to the west to make new homes for themselves, and some of them had written back to their friends and relatives glowing accounts of the rich soil, and how cheaply land could be bought, and how much easier it was to make a living out of the rich soil of the new states of Illinois and Michigan than it was to dig it out of the stony hills of Cataraugus county in New York.

Harry Jackson and his wife discussed the matter many times pro and con, and they finally decided that they must make a move of some kind before they became any older, and while they still had their health and strength. At length they came to the conclusion that they would dispose of their farm and all of their stock except one horse and one cow, and after securing a place for Mrs. Jackson and the children to live in while the husband was gone, Harry would make a trip to the new west, pick out a suitable location—either in Illinois or Michigan—buy land for their new farm, and put up some kind of a house that would do for them to live in temporarily. Then he would return to the east and they would pack up all of the things that they had decided to keep, and all go to their new home somewhere in the west to begin life over again.

JACKSON SELLS OUT

Jackson succeeded in selling his farm for a fair price, and also all of his stock except one horse that he intended to use on his western trip, and one good cow that was to be left for the use of Mrs. Jackson and the children. Also he disposed of his farming tools and much of the furniture, only keeping the few things that they would need to begin housekeeping in the new home. It was not as easy to move such articles in those days as it is now, and when they moved they would have to begin all anew, and gradually accumulate the things needed in the house and on the farm.

After disposing of everything they thought best to let go Jackson found that he had a little over eleven hundred dollars in cash. He rented a small house in the village of Little Valley, not far from their old home, in Cataraugus county, installed his wife and children therein, and made ready for his western trip. The son, Tommie, was of course, very anxious to go with his father, but Harry took the boy out walking with him one day, sat down and talked to the boy as though he was an equal in years and discretion. He told the boy kindly that he should be very glad to have him go with him for company, but it was necessary that he should stay at home to look after his mother and little sister while the father was gone; he told Tommie that he depended on him to be the head of the house while he was away, and that he knew he would take good care of things at home, and as soon as he could find a place for their new home he would return and they would all go to the west together. In this way, by working on the boy's pride, and making him feel that he would fill a man's place by remaining at home, he became perfectly willing to stay until his father's return.

I think that it is a great mistake that parents do not talk to and reason with their children in this way much more than they do. Children are not fools by any means, and I believe that many of them would be glad to do almost anything that their parents ask of them if their pride was only aroused and they were shown that they were really doing something of account in the world, and that you have confidence in them. A great many times when children would be really glad to help if they could, they are thrust one side, and told to keep out of the way; and there is very little encouragement in that. Children have everything to learn in this world and the only way in which they can learn is by experience, and by obtaining knowledge from their elders, and if their interest and pride can be aroused generally they will be glad to do anything that they are asked to do. This does not apply to all children, because many seem to be born naturally wild and unmanageable, and with this class it must be a great problem as to the best course that should be taken. Above everything else I think that children should never be deceived or given wrong answers to their innumerable questions simply for the fun of fooling them or to get rid of them. The child of today is the man, or woman, of tomorrow, and if you have them it is worth while to try to make the best of them. Help the child and then let the child help you.

TOMMY JACKSON DOES HIS PART

Tommie Jackson was a good boy, as boys go, but he was full of mischief and all kinds of animal spirits that had to be worked off in some way, and it seemed to him that to go roaming around through the far west with his father would be the height of pleasure and he could hardly give it up; but after this quiet talk with his father he seemed to grow ten years older in an hour, and before they returned to the house he told his father that he would willingly stay at home and take care of his mother and small sister the very best he could, that he would help his mother with the work of taking care of the cow, and if it were possible he would work for the neighbors, and earn something in that way to help them to live, and that when the father returned he would be ready and willing to go with them and help to build up a new home in the west. That one talk was worth everything to the boy, and in reality transformed him from a young, heedless and mischievous child into almost a full grown man, and satisfied his father that he could safely leave his family in Tommie's charge, and not have to worry about them while he was gone.

When the time drew near for Jackson to make his start for the west, he found that after paying up everything, establishing his family in a house in the village and paying the rent a month in advance, he had about ten hundred and fifty dollars in his possession besides a good outfit for traveling and a good horse to ride, and the cow that he had left at home for the use of the family. Jackson had decided to make the on horseback as he wasa good rider and enjoyed riding, and it would save him many dollars that he would have to pay out for steamer and stage tickets. There were very few railroads in this country then, but there were many steamers on the lakes and many stages on the land routes, but their rates were very high, and by going on horseback he could stop at any place where he desired to look at the country, and he felt sure that the trip made in this way would be much more enjoyable and a great deal cheaper than it would be if he travelled by boat and stage.

Before leaving home he had his wife make him a money belt that he could fasten around his body, and in this belt he put five hundred dollars in gold coins which his wife sewed in securely; besides this he took with him in his pocket-book about fifty dollars with which to pay travelling expenses. He then deposited in a bank in a nearby town, in his wife's name, four hundred dollars, and then gave his wife all the money that he had left—about one hundred dollars—with which to pay their living expenses at home while he was gone, and he advised her to secrete it about the house where it would not be easily found by any outsider.

As soon as this was all arranged he was ready to start on his trip. He told his wife that he did not expect to be gone more than eight or ten weeks; that as soon as he found a location for their new home that suited him he would buy what land he could with about three hundred and fifty or four hundred dollars, make arrangements to have a small house put up, and as soon as that was done he would return east, and they would all move to their new home in the west. He promised his wife that he would write to them from every stopping place where he could send a letter; but letters did not travel as quickly in those days as they do now, and she must not be alarmed if she did not get one every week.

STARTED ON A LONG TRIP

One bright morning in June he took leave of his wife and children, reminded Tommie of his promises and then mounted his horse and rode away to the west and was never seen again by any of the loved ones that he left behind.

After the departure of the husband the wife and children settled down in their rented house to pass away the time as best they could until his return. Tommie fulfilled all the promises he had made to his father, and did everything he could to relieve his mother of work around the house. He fed and milked the cow and took good care of her, and when he could he worked for the neighbors to earn feed for her, and in that way saved many dollars for the mother. He also took good care of the few chickens they had kept and earned feed for them; and in fact, Tommie became so very good, and different from the heedless, mischievous boy he had been while his father was at home, that his mother was really worried; she was afraid that he was sick, but as he seemed to be in perfect health, ate three hearty meals every day and slept well every night, she soon became accustomed to his changed ways and helpfulness, and accepted it all in a spirit of thankfulness.

They passed away many pleasant evenings by talking of the new home that they were to have in the west, wondering where it would be and what it would be like, and how soon they would be able to go to it. Mrs. Jackson could not help but worry about her husband, travelling alone in that wild country, but Tommie and the little sister never had a doubt but that daddy would soon be back. Then they would all go together, and what fine times they would have on the road, and after arriving at their new home in the wilderness. All of this would have been realized without a doubt, but for one little slip made by Jackson while he was gone.

MRS. JACKSON HEARS FROM HARRY

Letters were few and far between in those days, but at the end of about ten days Mrs. Jackson received one from her husband written from Cleveland. He reported himself in good health and that he was progressing finely; he told her that his next stop would be at Toledo and that he would write again from there, which he did a week later. She next heard from him at the little settlement of Coldwater in Michigan, and then from Kalamazoo. There he struck the territorial road that ran through the territory from Detroit to St. Joseph on Lake Michigan, and he informed his wife in this letter that he should follow this road west, and if he did not find any location that suited him on the way he should cross the lake and go over into Illinois. But he had been told that there was some very good land to be had cheap between Kalamazoo and the lake, and that he would look it over carefully, and if he found the right place, he would buy somewhere along there and go no further, as he would rather settle in Michigan if possible than to go further west.

She next heard from him at Paw Paw, where he had stopped over night; that he had been having a few shakes of the ague—the curse of the western country at that time—and that he was not feeling very well, but hoped to go on the next morning. Almost every one in Michigan had the ague then, and while it was never fatal it made one feel extremely bad, and took away the ambition. The only known remedy for it was quinine and whiskey.

The next morning Jackson was still feeling badly, but said he would go on, and he might feel better after he got started. Henderson told him that some eight or ten miles west of Paw Paw there were two roadside taverns; that he had stopped at one of them once, and found it a very comfortable place to stay, and he proposed that they should ride as far as this place, and then if Jackson did not feel better he had better stop there for a few days and rest and doctor himself up, until he was better able to go on and look at the country, and this plan was agreed to. They left Paw Paw that morning, and before noon arrived at the place that Henderson had spoken of; had their horses put in the barn and taken care of, and then Jackson went to bed because he was shaking with the ague and feeling very badly. Henderson stayed with his friend the rest of that day and the night. The most of this account Mrs. Jackson learned later from Mr. Henderson himself, on his return to the east.

This place where they stopped was what was afterwards known as the "Old Brown Tavern".

There have been more stories told about what went on at this tavern in those days than of almost any other place in the state of Michigan. Many of the yarns were purely fanciful but it is said that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire and, goodness knows that there was smoke enough for any number of fires. It was impossible to say which stories were true, and which untrue, but there must have been some truth in the different things that were told about the place.

This history of the man Jackson and his fate I came across years ago, and I have every reason to think that his wife and friend believed this to be a true account of what befell him.

The next morning Jackson was still feeling very badly and was threatened with another shake of the ague, and he decided that he could not travel that day, but would have to keep quiet for a day or two. By this time the two men had become very well acquainted with and liked each other as well as though they had been old friends, and as they had come from the same part of the state of New York, they determined to stick together, and when they found a location for a new home that suited them they would buy adjoining land and build their houses so that they would be as close neighbors as possible. Henderson said that he also had a wife in the home back east, and they felt that their familes would like each other, and would be glad to have some one they knew to visit with.

JACKSON TOO ILL TO TRAVEL

As Jackson could not travel for a few days his friend told him that he would go on and keep looking for a suitable location, but that he would surely return in a few days, and then if Jackson was better they would go on together; and if he was not better he would stay with him until he was, but in no case would he leave for good until Jackson could go too. Before Henderson left he told Jackson he had heard lately that this tavern was, in some ways, a tough place, and that stories were going the rounds that many things went on there that were not right, and that Jackson better not let it be known that he was carrying money with him; this he promised to heed, but the sequel shows that he did not, and thereby he lost his life and his horse and money also. Jackson promised that he would remain at the tavern until Henderson returned, and that then they would go on together.

That afternoon Henderson rode away without letting the tavern people know that he expected to return and rejoin his friend. He bade Jackson good-by as though it were for good. Why he did this he was never able to explain. That afternoon Jackson kept to his bed shaking with the ague, but in the evening he felt some better, and went to the bar-room and talked with the crowd assembled there, and was complaining bitterly about his feeling so badly by having the ague so often; finally the bartender spoke up and told him that if he wanted to get rid of the shakes that he ought to take a big glass of gin and then go to bed and sleep it off, and that in the morning he would be better and probably the ague would not return. This was told to Henderson afterward by one of the men that were present in the bar-room that evening, and he said that Jackson determined to try it, as he was so anxious to get better. He ordered the glass of gin brought, and sat down to drink it. Now Jackson was a man that had never used liquor in any shape, and he had eaten very little that day, and by the time that he had swallowed half of the gin he was feeling fine and did not care to go to bed at all—he wanted to talk and have a good time; and by the time he had drank the rest of the gin he was helpless and had to be assisted upstairs to his room and put to bed; and he told the men that were helping him all about his business and that he had money with him to buy land, and in fact acted as foolishly as any other drunken man does.

The man that afterward told this to Henderson on a strict promise of secrecy, said that he felt sure that this was done on purpose to get Jackson drunk and induce him to tell his business, and whether he carried money or not. The tavern people knew that Jackson was not a drinking man, and that one good stiff drink in his condition would make him talk and tell every thing about himself, and it surely did.

HENDERSON RETURNS BUT HIS FRIEND IS GONE

At the end of three days Henderson returned, and at once inquired for his friend; the tavern people seemed very much surprised to see him come back, but they told him that the next morning after he had gone, Jackson said that he felt much better and had ordered his horse got ready, had paid his bill, and then had ridden away in the opposite direction from the way that Henderson had gone, and had told them that he did not expect to come back. Henderson noticed that some of the stories told him by different ones at the hotel did not agree, and they were not inclined to be explicit in their answers to his questions, and he also noticed that the hostler, a man named R--, seemed to try to keep out of his way all the time and would not talk to him if he could possibly avoid it and, taking it all together, Henderson finally began to feel that there was something wrong but he could not think what the trouble was; after all the talk had with each other and plans that they had agreed upon, he could not bring himself yet to believe that there was anything like foul play. The landlord intimated very strongly to others that Jackson wanted to get away from Henderson and leave him. This he had told the landlord under pledge of secrecy. The latter told that story to one whom he knew would repeat it to Henderson, and they did, but he did not believe a word of it, as it was so unnecessary.

Henderson said no more to the tavern people about it, but settled himself down to wait a few days and see if anything would turn up. To the landlord he expressed himself as satisfied that Jackson would return in a few days, and then that everything would be all right and they would go on about their business; but he improved his time while he was waiting by making some careful inquiries of outsiders who were not connected with the hotel and he found that Jackson had not been seen by anyone to leave the place, and one man told him that another man had told him, that he had seen Jackson's horse in the barn after the time when they claimed that he had ridden away. But everyone seemed to stand in such awe, and were so afraid, of the tavern crowd that they would not, or dared not talk, and he could not get hold of anything definite. He went to the man that had been in the bar-room that night when Jackson drank the gin and finally convinced him that he was Jackson's friend, and only wanted to know what had become of him so that he could let his family know about it, and after a while under a strict pledge of secrecy, he got the man to talk. This man's name was S---, and he lived about a mile from the tavern in an old mill. After he got to going he told Henderson innumerable stories about what was supposed to go on in the tavern, and then Henderson becamed alarmed for the safety of his friend. Mr. S-- told him that he was in the bar-room that night when Jackson drank the gin, and saw the hostler and another man help him off up-stairs to bed, but he did not know what had taken place after that, but he believed that was the last time he was seen by anyone outside of the hotel. S-- told Henderson to go to another prominent man in that neighborhood, Mr. N--, and to a Mr. T--, and they both told the same lot of yarns about the tavern and what a tough crowd made it their headquarters. He finally came to one man that told him, another pledge of secrecy, that he had been at a neighbor's on the night that Jackson was supposed to have disappeared, and that on his way home he had passed by the tavern, which set back a few rods from the road, and as he was going by he heard something that sounded as though some one was calling out, and he thought they said "Help, Help" several times in quick succession, and the sounds seemed to come from the upper part of the tavern; he stopped and listened, but he heard nothing more, but he was so curious about it that he stood around several moments, and just as he was starting to walk on, the back door of the hotel opened and three men came out and went to the barn and one of the men seemed to be either very drunk or else was hurt for the other two men were almost carrying him; they went into the barn and he heard nothing more, and concluding that some man was too drunk to sleep in bed, and the others had taken him to the barn to sleep it off, and that it was none of his business anyway, he went along home and thought no more about it until the inquiries began to be made about Jackson, but that now he believed that it was Jackson that he saw the other two men taking to the barn, but what happened after that he had no idea but did not think that he would be very apt to see his friend again. This man's name was B--, and he made Henderson solemnly swear that his name should not be mentioned if the matter was investigated. Every one seemed to stand in deadly fear of the tavern people and what they might do if they were opposed or interfered with by outsiders.

MANY STORIES BUT NO PROOF

Well, Henderson hardly knew what to do. He had no authority to take up Jackson's affairs, as he was almost a complete stranger to him, but he determined that he would try his best to find out what had became of him for the sake of his family, if nothing more. The tavern people all stuck to it that Jackson had paid his bill and called for his horse the next morning after Henderson had gone, and then had ridden away in an opposite direction, and they intimated that he had taken that course in order to get rid of Henderson's company, and the hostler at the barn said that when Jackson was getting his horse ready to go he told him that he was afraid of Henderson, and did not want to travel with him any further, because Henderson knew he had money, and he was afraid that he meant to try to steal it. The hostler told this story to others, but he would not admit to Henderson that he had ever made any such statement.

By this time Henderson was convinced that there was something very wrong and that his friend had met with some kind of foul play, but he could get no direct proof of it, and not only that but he was warned by some of the acquaintances that he had made that he had better look out for his own safety, for if he wasn't careful the same people would put him out of the way in some shape, if they became satisfied that he would have the matter publicly investigated. This was a wild country then and the law did not reach very far. But Henderson had liked Jackson so well on short acquaintance, and felt so sorry for his wife and children back in New York, waiting for the return of the husband and father, that he determined to drop his own business for awhile and devote himself to trying to find out the truth of what had became of Jackson. He rode back to Paw Paw, the county seat, and laid the whole matter before the officials there, but as he had no real proof to offer them they were inclined to think that he had found a mare's nest, and didn't know what he was talking about; but they did send a man down to the old tavern to see if he could find any corrobation of Mr. Henderson's story, but the inmates all told the same story, that Jackson had taken his horse the next morning after Henderson had gone away and had gone off in an opposite direction from that taken by his companion, and that they believed that he wanted to get away from Henderson, and that they knew nothing about where he went or where he was now; they treated this man to the limit, and convinced him that they were innocent of any knowledge of Jackson's whereabouts, or what had happened to him, and he returned to Paw Paw and so reported to the sheriff, and that there was nothing to Henderson's story, and they dropped the matter and would do no more. Henderson did not believe a word of it, and he became more and more convinced that Jackson had been made away with, and his money and horse stolen.

While Henderson was in Paw Paw he sat down and wrote to Mrs. Jackson a full account of everything that had taken place since he first met her husband on the road between Kalamazoo and the tavern, and he asked Mrs. Jackson if she thought that her husband would be likely to leave a friend in the way that he apparently had after making the promises that they had to each other. He told her that they had liked each other so well that they had exchanged addresses of their families back east at their old homes, and had promised each other that in case of any accident or severe sickness or either that the other would inform his family of the fact, and that Jackson had disappeared Henderson felt as though he had lost one of his own family and he felt sure that his friend had not run away and left him willingly. He told Mrs. Jackson in this letter that he should go back to the neighborhood of the tavern while he was waiting for a reply to his letter, and see if he could learn anything more about her husband, but that he would return to Paw Paw in ten days or two weeks to wait for an answer to his letter, and that he would do everything in his power to unravel the case. Letters did not travel as rapidly in those days as they do now, and it took some time for one to go to New York and return an answer.

The next day Henderson rode back west. He rode slowly, and everywhere he inquired for his friend and especially about his horse, but he found very little trace of either. One man a few miles west of Paw Paw told him that he felt sure that he had seen this horse going by east about the time that Jackson had disappeared, but his description of its rider did not agree at all with the looks of Jackson. This man said that the horse and its rider were going toward the east very fast, and as far as he knew they did not stop anywhere and the man did not speak to anyone. He gave Henderson such a good description of the horse that he felt sure that it was Jackson's horse being ridden away by someone else. In those early days the country was full of horse thieves—and worse—and this more than ever convinced Henderson that his friend had met with foul play and his horse stolen, and ridden away to some distant point where it could be disposed of safely.

Instead of going back to the tavern Henderson went to the home of Mr. S——, the man who had given him his first definite information, and asked permission to stay there a few days while he was looking around and trying to find out something more. This Mr. S—— was a very garrulous old fellow and was glad to have some one to talk to, and gave Henderson all the help that he could, and told him all the stories that were floating around about the old tavern, and what was supposed to be going on there, and he cautioned him to be careful when he came in contact with the hostler at the tavern. This hostler's name was R——, and he was a bad egg; R—— had a younger brother that was not employed at the tavern, but who had hung around there much of the time, and the two R—— brothers made a bad couple to meet if they had a grudge against one.

Mr. S—— said that about a year before this time a man by the name of A——, living a few miles to the west, had open trouble with the tavern about selling whiskey to one of the relatives of Mr. A——, after they had been asked not to, and A——had called them down in great shape, and threatened them with worse if they did it again, and thereby secured the enmity of the whole tavern crowd; and one night, a few weeks later, Mr. A——'s barn was burned to the ground and one of his cows was shot in the field on the same night. This had been laid to the R—— brothers, but there was no proof. All these things made every one deathly afraid of the tavern, because they could import men from outside, when necessary, to do their dirty work, and before daylight the men would be gone leaving no trace. But all this led Henderson no where. Everyone—if they could be induced to talk at all—were willing to admit that the tavern held a lot of tough citizens, and they told stories by the hour as to what they had heard went on there, but they would not come out openly and say it. The tavern was nearly in the center of the township, and for years the "town meetings" were held there, and it was the only place where whiskey was sold, and consequently they exercised considerable influence with a certain class of the citizens, and, generally, they could swing the elections which ever way they saw fit to do in their own interest. Some very good citizens stood up strongly for the tavern, and claimed that there was never anything wrong going on there.

At the end of about two weeks Henderson returned to Paw Paw, and there he found an answer to his letter to Mrs. Jackson. The poor woman was heart broken at the news received in his letter, and she did not know what to say, or what to do, if her husband was dead and his money gone; and she said that she felt sure that he must be dead, for, if living, he was not the man that would leave a friend in any such way as Henderson described, because she never knew him to break his word to anyone. She did not know what to do, for over half of all that they had received for the sale of their farm was now lost beyond recall, and she had only a few hundred dollars left with which to support herself and children, and that she and Tommie would now have to go to work in earnest to live and pay rent, for they could not expect to ever have a home of their own again, and she begged him that when he came beck to New York that if he possibly could, to visit her and tell her all the particulars. He answer her letter at once, and said that he was doing everything that he could to try to find some trace of her husband, but that so far he had not been successful. He told her that he felt so disappointed and worried over the whole affair that for the present anyway, he should give up buying a home in the west, but would go home to Chautauqua and consult with his wife; and promised her that when he got home he would go to Little Valley and see her, and if possible that he would bring his wife with him, and that he knew his own wife well enough to say that they would both help and befriend her all that they could.

By this time the tavern people had learned that Henderson was moving heaven and earth to find out what had become of his friend and property, and apparently, they became a little worried themselves for fear that he would trace him, and they set out to try and scare him off the trail. Late one evening while he was in Paw Paw, a man rode up to the hotel where he was stopping, inquired for him, and when Henderson presented himself, the man handed him a letter, and, jumping back onto his horse, he told him that he had better heed it unless he wanted trouble to overtake him and rode away again without giving Henderson a chance to ask any questions, or even to see his face. Henderson was no coward and he at once took this letter to the sheriff and showed it to him, telling him the way it was received, and what it undoubtedly referred to, but the sheriff said that while it was suspicious it was no proof of anything and he could do nothing about it; the fact of the business was that even the county officials stood in awe of the tavern influence because they controlled many votes in the county, and they needed those votes at the elections, and they would do nothing to alienate them.

Henderson was up against it badly, and he saw no way in which he could do anything more and he was forced to give it up. He took his horse and rode back to his home in New York. Arriving there he told his wife the whole story, and she advised him to go and see Mrs. Jackson, as it was not very far from Lake Chatauqua, and in the end they both went to her home in the village of Little Valley, and the whole matter was explained and talked over. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson had no children of their own, and fortunately were fairly well-to-do in the money way, and they promised Mrs. Jackson that they should not be allowed to suffer as long as they had anything themselves. They offered to take and adopt the little girl Annie, and bring her up as their own, but Mrs. Jackson felt that she could not lose her children as long as she could support them comfortably.

Mr. Henderson told them that he felt as though, in a measure, he was blameable for the misfortune that had befallen them all, but that it was done without a thought of anything evil coming from it. He said that he should not have left his friend there at the tavern alone while he was sick; he ought to have stayed with him until Jackson was able to travel, and then they would have gone on together and nothing could have happened to either of them; but that he had only thought of saving time for both of them while Jackson was sick, as they had agreed to buy adjoining land, and establish their new homes as closely together as possible. But now the Hendersons said that they should give up going west altogether, but would stay in their old home at Lake Chatauqua, and that if Mrs. Jackson wished it they would find her a home near them there, and see that she was moved into it where they could look after her more closely. Some time later this was done, and a place was found where Tommie could work steadily and help support his mother and sister; and the last that I ever knew of them they were all living near the village of Fluvanna at the lake. Their further lives the story does not relate.

As to poor Jackson it was never certainly known what really happened to him; but the supposition is that he was murdered and his horse and money taken and that his body lies in an unmarked grave somewhere in what was then the thick huckleberry swamps not far from the old tavern, that his horse was ridden to some distant point and disposed of by the gang, and that his money was divided amongst the crowd.

A story did drift back to this section after some years that a man in Kansas had confessed, on his death bed, that he and his brother were the men who had killed and robbed Mr. Jackson at the old tavern, but this story was never confirmed and to this day it is not known whether there was any truth in it or not, but I will give it here as it was told to me. For myself I believe that it was practically true, and that he met his death as described. The man that made the confession claimed to be the same R—— that was the hostler at the tavern at the time that Jackson and Henderson stopped there, and this is the story that he told.

On that last night that Jackson was known to have been alive, R— was in the bar room with the others, and when Jackson was induced to drink the gin to cure his ague, R— said that it was a put up job to get Jackson drunk because he was unused to liquor and they knew that if he could be got to take one good drink that it would make him drunken, and he would be apt to talk and tell his business and whether he carried any money or not, and that was what they mainly wanted to know. They suspected that he had much more money than he really did have, but much or little, they determined to get it and also his horse, which was a very good one. His friend Henderson had gone away, for good they supposed, and they thought that it would be an easy matter to rob Jackson, if they could get him thoroughly drunk, and then they could dispose of him in some way. When they finally got Jackson to go to bed he was so drunk that he was helpless, and R— and his younger brother helped him upstairs and put him into bed, thinking that after he was asleep they would search him and take what he had, and then one of them would ride the horse way, and in the morning when he came to and began to make a fuss about it they would all deny that anything had been taken from him, or that he had anything to take, and they would turn him out and scare him until he would be glad to leave with his life. But this trick did not work, because Jackson retained sense enough to try to not let them get his money belt, and he struggled with them and cried for help. This was what the man B— had heard when he was going by the tavern on his way home late in the evening on the night that Jackson had disappeared.

Jackson had struggled so hard and had made so much noise that they had to desist; but he wanted more gin, and asked them to give it to him, but they told him that the tavern people would not sell him anymore in the house, but that if he would go to the barn with them that they had some out there that they would let him have. Jackson was so befuddled that he was not responsible in any way, but he had an intense thirst for more liquor, and promised to go with them and make no noise if they would give him more to drink. They got him up and dressed him, and then took him out the back door to the barn; they had to almost carry him because he was so helpless, but they got him out there, and then plied him with liquor until he was in a complete stupor; they then searched him and found his money belt, which they appropriated, and then decided that the safest way to dispose of him would be to kill him and carry him into the swamp and bury him and then the younger brother could take the horse from the barn and ride it away, and when morning came the hostler could say that Jackson had called for his horse early in the morning and gone away for good. This plan was carried out; they struck poor Jackson on the head with a heavy hammer until he was dead, and then carried his body deep into the swamp and buried it and there he lies to this day in an unknown and unmarked grave. The younger R— took the horse and road away eastward, while the hostler went back to bed, and in the morning he told the story that had been agreed upon by the two brothers. The landlord did not believe a word of it but he agreed not to contradict it, and to back up their yarn if any inquiries were made, because he knew that he would get his share of the robbery in the end. The hostler further said that they had told everyone that inquired about Jackson that he had got up early that morning, had called for his horse, and had ridden away to the East, telling R— that he wanted to get away before Henderson returned, if he did return, because he was afraid of him, for he feared that Henderson meant to rob him of the money that he carried to buy land with; and he asked R—, the hostler, to tell Henderson, if he came back, that he had gone West, instead of East, for the same reason.

How much truth there was to the confession that was said to have been made by the elder R— out of Kansas, was never known, but certainly both of the brothers disappeared from this part of Hamilton not long after the disappearance of Jackson, and so far as I know, neither one of them were ever seen in this county again. They were both tough citizens; and Michigan could well spare them. But whether this confession was true or not there is very little doubt but that Jackson was made away with in some such manner as described in it, and his body undoubtedly lies somewhere in what was then the dense swamps of that region, where it was buried by the two rascals, and it will continue to lie there until the judgement day dawns, and the dead all come forth from their graves.

The Old Brown Tavern is now a thing of the past, and it has been moved away a mile or so on a side road and been converted into an unromantic farmer's barn; but, if it could talk, what stories it could tell; that is, if even one-tenth of the yarns that were told about it sixty years ago were anywhere near true. These yarns included every kind of thought that was ever thought of, and ran from simple whiskey selling and gambling up to murder, protecting horse thieves, counterfeiting, secret rooms for the hiding of stolen plunder, underground tunnel from the hotel to the barn to enable criminals to escape early from the officers who were after them, and, at last to a hidden refuge out somewhere in the dense swamp where stolen horses could be secreted until they could be run off out of the country. It would take a big book indeed to hold all of the thousand and one stories that were told about the old building in those wild and wooly days, and if they could all be gathered into a big book it would be a good seller, I'm sure, and it would make mighty interesting reading for the people of Hamilton, even at this late date.

Then nearly all of the land to the west, south and northwest of this place was one big, dense huckleberry swamp and ponds, and in many places was almost impenetrable, and looking for anything in those swamps would be like looking for the proverbial needle in a haystack.

I have always thought that the Old Tavern ought to have been left where it stood for so many years as a landmark of those early days. From the time that it was built, about 1837, until the completion of the Michigan Central Railroad through to Chicago in 1849 or '50, the Territorial Road running through this part of Michigan was one of the main highways to the west, and people in all kinds of conveyances, stages, horse teams, ox teams, and some on foot, were constantly passing back and forth by the Old Tavern. Many were going West to look for new homes, and some were going back East either discouraged or to bring their families West, and the Old Tavern was one of the chief stopping places outside of the villages. The Old Tavern was the dread of the decent people of that day, and the delight of the other kind.

The early settlers of Hamilton are all gone — I do not know of one single exception — but many of their descendants are still living there, and, even at this late day, some of them can tell some very interesting yarns about "The Old Brown Tavern."

Sequel to Great Indian Battle on Lake of The Woods

A year or more ago there was published in The Republican an account of a great Indian battle on the Lake of the Woods, which is supposed to have taken place some two hundred years ago; and this story goes on to say that the invading tribe of Indians undertook to drive out the Pottawatomies and the Chippeways, who were then living here, and take possession of their lands, but were uttrely defeated and exterminated, after a fierce battle lasting all of one day, and which was fought not only on the lake, but on the land all around the south and east shores, and upon the small island then existing in the lake.

About sixty years ago I was a small boy nearly ten years of age, and at that time there were quite a few of the noble red men still left in this part of the country, and I used to play with the Indian children, or papooses, and I heard many of the stories that were told by the Indians of the days long gone by, when they held the whole of this country. I listened to these stories with great interest, and many of them I remember to this day. Also I recall the account of this great battle that was printed in the Decatur paper of Civil war days—the old Tribune—and I have always been sorry that this article was not preserved. I do not know who the writer of it was, but it was a long and full account of the celebrated battle, and was very interesting. In the main it agreed perfectly with the stories that were told to us by the Indians of sixty years ago, and probably was obtained from the same source.

Besides this story of the battle on our little lake, the Indians told us many other tales of their life and adventures of their forefathers many years before this time, and dozens of these yarns are perfectly fresh in my memory even to this day, old as I am.

It seems that the Indians of that time were fond of living on the shores of the innumerable little lakes with which this part of Michigan is studded, and also the banks of small rivers and streams were their favorite abiding places, especially along the Paw Paw and the St. Joe rivers and the small streams running into them.

There they could obtain plenty of fish. All kinds of game was abundant, and they could raise their small crops of Indian corn. Some of these abiding places were much better situated than others, and consequently one tribe would very often try to drive out another tribe, that had a good location, and confiscate their land and crops, and that always led to trouble and probably war. Even civilized white nations, who ought to know better have been known to employ these same tactics.

Many small skirmishes and fights took place around Christie's lake in Lawrence, Magician lake in Keeler, and along the small rivers; but none of these were of the great importance, in the Indian mind at least, that the battle on the Lake of the Woods was, because in that case it was a stranger tribe about which nothing was known, that undertook to drive out and exterminate entirely the home Indians that possessed the land peaceably for a great many years. If they had succeeded in that piece of strategy they would undoubtedly have driven out, or made slaves of, all the other Indians who possessed the best living places in this section. Other stories of their life, fights, love-making and occasional elements — always leading to a fight—were fully as interesting to me as the story of the great battle.

Papooses for Playmates

The little papooses were funny playmates, but they were almost the only ones that I had to play with, for white neighbors were few and far between then, and there were only two children in our family. The small Indians were as grave and sober as judges, and I am sure that I never heard one laugh out loud as white children are always doing; and it was very seldom that one would even smile, and they seemed to be utterly subdued and discouraged. But if you could once make a friend of one or more of them they would do almost anything for you, and they were very loyal friends; but it was very hard to obtain their confidence and liking; they seemed to naturally distrust white people and it surely is no wonder that they did, for the whites cheated them in every way that they possibly could. The whites would buy their furs of them and pay them in little jim cracks that amounted to nothing and were almost worthless, by making the Indians believe that whatever it was would do them a lot of good; and, worse than that, they would often pay them with the poorest kind of rotten whiskey, that when taken would make perfect devils of them and cause them to commit all kinds of crimes; and it is no wonder that the Red Men became suspicious of all white people. But, as in every other community, there were good, honest people, and they tried to treat the Indians as well as they did those of their own race, and it did not take the Red Men long to find out who were their real friends and who were not. My folks always tried to be fair with them, and the consequence was that they would do almost anything for us and would tell me all the stories that they had heard from their forefathers, and in that way I had their account of the great battle on the lake, and whoever it was that wrote the article about it in the old Tribune undoubtedly heard it from one of these same Indians.

Several of these little papooses would sometimes come to our house and stay nearly all day, and mother would feed them, and, my sakes! how they would eat when they got a chance. After they had filled themselves up, then they were ready for what they called play. About all the play that they seemed to know anything about was to chase one another around — something like what we called "tag," and shooting with bow and arrows. They were clippers at that, for they were taught to use the bow as soon as they could sit up. The men had guns, and used them in hunting, but ammunition cost too much, so the small Indians had to content themselves with bows and arrows, and make their own arrows, too. A boy of ten or twelve years could do considerable execution with them, and kill more or less small game, such as birds, squirrels, chipmunks, etc. Everything was grist that came to their mill and it was all eaten—even the skunks.

I formed a very close friendship with one little red skin, whose name was Wa-ta-sa, and we played together by the hour. He seemed glad to do anything for me. He would make and bring to me small bows and arrows, and then show me how to use them, and under his instruction I became a pretty good shot, but I could never equal him. I wonder whatever became of little Wa-ta-sa; probably he is dead long ago, for if living he would be more than seventy now. After awhile he wandered away with his tribe, and it has been early sixty years since I have seen or heard of him; but I have never forgotten him.

Wa-ta-sa had a small sister, about seven years old at that time, and she was a real cute and good looking little thing—if she had only been clean. How their black eyes would sparkle and snap when they became excited in their play or saw something good to eat coming their way. Her name was Na-me-tah, but what either one of the names meant in English I do not know. We used to call them Wa-ty and Na-my. If they were not at play or engaged in doing something in particular, they would sit an hour or more and never move or say a word, just as still as though they were made of wood; but their little black eyes took in every last thing; nothing escaped their notice. Those two Indian children were all the playmates that I had for some time, although occasionaly another papoose or two would come with them to our house, but Wa-ta-sa and Na-me-tah were there almost every day; they understood and could speak broken English pretty well, and they taught me many of their Indian words.

Finds Beautiful Squaw After Battle

But go back to the big battle on the Lake of the Woods. The accounts of the battle said that all of the invading tribe from the west were exterminated —not one was left alive. Wherever the wounded were found in the woods or in the canoes, they were at once put to death without mercy. That is primitive war; but still, it is not so very far behind what is going on over in Europe now against the most highly civilized nations on the face of the earth. It seems, from the stories that were told to us by these Indians of seventy years ago, and which had been handed down to them from their forefathers, that this was not quite true. While the Chippewas and the Pottawatomies were searching the lake and the surrounding forest to find and kill the wounded, one of the biggest and best chiefs—one who had fought bravely and well all through that dreadful slaughter, and who had distinguished himself in many ways—ran across a girl who had followed her tribe to the battle, and who had been wounded. She was trying to hide herself in the thick brush, thinking that perhaps that she might make her way back to the west where she could find some of her friends that had not followed the tribe to the war. But the keen eyed chief discovered her, and he made a rush with the intention of braining her with his war club, and so put one more of the hated invaders out of the way. As he raised his club to strike she lifted her face and looked at him and held herself ready and bravely to receive the death stroke. The chief's arm wavered, and he could not strike; she was a beautiful young squaw, and as he looked at her he knew that he could not kill her in cold blood. It was a case of what we call love at first sight—on his part at least—and his club fell to the ground without injuring the stranger. She had been struck in the shoulder by an arrow causing a wound that bled freely but was not serious, and she was weak from the loss of blood.

The invaders did not speak the same language that the Chippeways and the Pottawatomies did, and the and the young squaw could not unde chief's words; but there is that is much used by all In and that is universally und all of them—the sign lan chief soon made her comp the use of signs that he wou her, neither would he allow ar to do so. This chief's name v taw, and the squaw's name ma, but what they would me English I was never able to fi soon as the young squaw that she was not to be kil spot, and came to believe chief would protect her she ways to express her gratitu and that she was willing t him to any place that he d that she would be his sla more. That seems to have Indian idea of gratitude and man was the master and t was his slave—and some wl haven't entirely gotten o primitive usages yet.

Ka-me-taw finally induced the young squaw to make an effort to go with him to his own camp, and she complied although evidently she was in deadly fear of what would happen to her there; and sure enough, when they arrived where the home Indians were encamped at once there was almost a riot. The Indians were just crazy over their victory, and the awful slaughter that they had inflicted upon their enemies, and they were not willing to leave even one of them alive. As soon as they saw one of the hated tribes coming with Ka-me-tah they were wild, and they made one grand rush to put her to death in some way—the quicker the better. They naturally thought that Ka-me-tah had found her and was bringing her in as a prisoner, so that the whole tribe could enjoy the fun of seeing her put to death. But Ka-me-tah stood in front of his captive and with his big war club swinging in dangerous circles in close proximity to nearest heads. He finally made them comprehend that he intended to have something to say about the matter himself and he informed them very plainly that the first one that injured the stranger squaw would get their head spattered all over the landscape. The chief had many loyal friends, and gradually they began to gather around him and to say that whatever Ka-me-tah wanted done they would back him up in it with their good right arms, and the others better take a second think about it before they tried to interfere with his property. That kind of talk from some of the best men and hardest fighters in the tribes soon cooled off the desire for the stranger's blood, and they expressed themselves as willing to listen to what he had to say about it. A council was called for that evening to settle the matter, and in the meantime the head chiefs guaranteed the safety of his captive until the whole thing was decided.

Ka-me-tah Pleads for Captive

That evening the council assembled, and when all were seated in their proper places and the pipe had been passed around, the discussion began. Ka-me-tah was the first to speak. He said that he had tried to do his duty in the big battle; that he had fought from the first opening of hostilities in the morning until the last canoe was sunk, and the last stranger had been killed, as they supposed; but in his searching through the woods to see if any others could be found that were hiding there, he discovered this stranger squaw who was wounded in the shoulder by an arrow as they could see, and who was too weak from loss of blood to make her escape; that he had raised his arm to dash her brains out but when she lifted up her face and stood ready to receive his stroke, and waited patiently for the death that she felt sure was coming, he could not strike, and his war club fell to the ground. He said that he was convinced that this squaw was the one he wanted for his wife, and he wanted no other; he told them that he had done his best for the tribe in repelling the invaders, and now claimed his reward by their giving him his captive as his wife. He told them that he would marry her according to the tribal customs, and that he would teach her to understand and speak their language, and he would guarantee that she would become as good a member of the tribe as though she had been born with them. He finished his speech by declaring that if they condemned her to death, they would have to kill him also, because whoever touched her in any way but kindness, would have to do it over his dead body, and he gave notice there and then that any harm or insult to her he should take up and punish with his own hands.

As Ka-me-tah was known to be a good scrapper and was nearly equal to any two other men in the tribe, and was always ready to use his bow and arrows and his war-club, there were very few that were eager to argue the matter with him. After some discussion among the older chiefs of the tribes it was soon decided that Ka-me-tah was entitled to keep his captive, and if he wished to take her for his wife he could, provided that he would guarantee her good behavior, and see to it that she did not send any word to their enemies or attempt to injure the tribes in any way, and the whole matter was settled on that basis, and the chiefs guaranteed the safety of Wa-le-ma. But she was strongly guarded for the present and warned that she must not try to run away, for if she did she would be killed at once. She made them understand—by the sign language—that she would neither try to escape or do anything to hurt them in any way, even if she had a chance to, and then she was left to herself with permission to go wherever she liked so long as she did not leave the camp.

The first thing that Ka-me-tah had to do was to teach her enough words of the Chippeway language so that they could converse with each other outside of the sign language, and this he soon did. Then he made her an offer of marriage — Indian marriage — and told her that he would take care of her, and that when his tribes became satisfied that she was loyal to them that he would let her communicate with her own tribe and her relatives, if they could be found, and that they would both try to prevent any more wars between the western tribe and themselves and all live in peace as they should. According to the legend that had been handed down from one to another for nearly one hundred and fifty years this Ka-me-tah seems to have been a great deal more humanized than the other wild Indians of that time, and while he was a good fighter, and in no way averse to a scrap now and then when it was a good cause, still he did not delight in bloodshed and cruelty as nearly all Indians did. He had much rather live at home quietly, fishing and hunting, and trying to make things comfortable, not only for himself, but for the rest of the tribe, and he tried to impress his ideas and way of living on others of his tribe by telling them how much they would be benefited if they only would live as he asked them to instead of looking for trouble all the time, and trying to pick a fight with some one. But he made small headway, because they could not even comprehend any other way to live except by pillage and robbery.

If they captured an enemy in battle they delighted in tying him to a stake set in the middle of the camp, and then building a fire around him and roasting him to death as slowly and as painfully as they possibly could, in the meantime shooting arrows into his flesh, but being very careful not to hit him in a vital spot until he finally died in lingering agony as long drawn out as they could make it. It was Indian nature to delight in cruelty, and such a thing as mercy never entered their heads. But Ka-me-tah was different; he was willing and eager to fight in defense of their home and families, and there was no braver or better warrior in battle than he, but after the fight was over he did not delight in torturing the prisoners or committing any kind of unnecessary cruelty, and many times he had saved captives that otherwise would have been put into a horrible and lingering death. He tried to humanize his tribe in every way that he could, but it was uphill work, because the other Indians could not understand what it meant to be merciful to the prisoners. At first they imagined that he was a kind of sissy boy, or was a coward, but after he had soundly thrashed a few of the young bucks for calling him names, and especially after seeing him in battle a few times wielding his immense war club, they concluded that they had better let him alone.

Ka-me-tah Third In Power

At the time of the big battle on the Lake of the Woods Ka-me-tah was the third chief in power and influence—or as we would say he was second lieutenant—with both tribes, and, if he lived, he was to become first chief. The Pottawatomies and Chippewas were virtually all one tribe, for they had lived in peace and harmony for many years; and they were allied against all outside aggression. Each tribe had its own camp, and its own chief and laws, but their camps were situated closely together on the southeast side of the lake, nearly where Cady's farm and the big vineyard is now located. At that time the lake must have been thick with all species of fish, and game of all kinds was very plentiful. The ground was covered with heavy oak timber that shaded them in the summer and protected them somewhat from the cold winds in the winter, and there they had lived in peace and plenty for a long time until they were attacked by the strange tribe from the west.

It had been an idyllic life that they had had there in the woods, but now the camps were full of mourning hardly a wigwam but had lost one or more members in the big battle. Many squaws were left without husbands, and many papooses were without fathers, the second chief had been killed and the first chief was very aged—too old for action and altogetherw they were in a bad way. It was a famous victory, but was bought with a large price and the tribes would be without many able bodied warriors for a number of years; that was one of the arguments that told in favor of sparing the life of Wa-le-ma, because if she married Ka-me-tah they would be apt to raise up a family of good warriors.

The two camps of the tribes were situated so closely together that they were almost like one; still they were kept under separate governments. The chilren played together without let or hindrance, and they were just one happy family when let alone by outsiders. Before this attack they had lived in peace for many years and had grown strong, but this war come near to annihilating all their warriors and they must rest and raise new warriors before they could expect to engage in any more wars. There had been three head chiefs over both tribes. Old Howde-kee was very old—too old to fight—he could only plan and give his help in the council, and he wished to lay down his chieftainship and let them elect a younger and more vigorous chief in his place; the second chief had been killed in the big battle, and Ka-me-tah was the third chief, and soon after the battle he was elected principal chief over both tribes, and was married to Wa-le-ma, the stranger squaw, in the Indian way.

Chief and Bride Make Home on Island

The Lake of the Woods was much larger in those days than it is now, and it had a beautiful little island on the south side of the lake and not far from the southern shore. This island was small, but it was high and dry and was covered with large trees, and it made an ideal camping place. Soon after they were married, Ka-me-tah, with his bride, took up their residence on this island, and there they lived for many years, raising up a large family of children who were an honor to the tribes. As soon as Wa-le-ma could talk Chippeway she told her husband that her tribe had come originally from across the big lake—Lake Michigan—that they had been driven away from their homes there by some other tribe, and had taken their canoes and crossed the lake, landing on the eastern shore at the mouth of a small river, about where South Haven now stands, where they remained for some time. Not liking the country they had attempted to find better hunting grounds and a more agreeable place to pitch their wigwams and had gone on east, until they had finally come in contact with the Chippeways and the Pottawatomies and had then undertaken to drive them away and possess their splendid location on the banks of the Lake of the Woods. That account of this battle, as told by another writer, agrees with the legend told to me by my Indian friends, and it is probably as truthful a narration of what happened at that time as could be made where it is handed down from father to son for so many years by word of mouth, for they had no written language.

As soon as Wa-le-ma was able to talk with her husband she told him that when the able bodied of their tribe started out to fight for the place that they had decided that they wanted they had left behind them all of the aged and infirm of their tribe to wait until they had driven away the other Indians whose place they had determined to have, and then they would be sent for to come to the new location, after the battle was over. Before coming to the lake to try to dispossess the Pottawatomies and the Chippeways, they had sent spies ahead to see what the prospect was and to learn if possible how strong the two tribes were. These spies returned and reported that the two tribes at the lake were nearly equal in number to their own fighting men, and that they would undoubtedly fight to the last man for their homes, but that they thought that by coming upon them suddenly that they could be whipped and driven away, so they decided to risk it, and they started out with every able-bodied warrior. Many of the young women went with them, as was the Indian custom. They had been defeated and the young of the tribe had been exterminated; and now she said that she supposed that the old and sick who had been left behind, some of whom were her relatives, would have to starve or be killed by other Indians who would soon discover how weak they were, because there were no young men left out of the whole tribe to defend them.

Strange to say this excited compassion in the heart of Ka-me-tah—who was now head chief of both tribes and he decided to try to see if he could not prevail upon the rest of the tribe to have mercy upon the old and sick of the strange tribe. He put the matter up to the other head men, but at first they would not hear to a word of it. Such a thing, they said, was contrary to all Indian custom, and they did not see why they should show mercy and help to feed those who had done all they could to rob them of them lands and kill their warriors. But Ka-me-tah and his wife kept at it until the others consented to allow himself and his wife to find the strangers and discover the condition they were in. So the two started and made their way as best they could to the place where Wa-le-ma said they started from and there they found the remnant of the tribe, and surely they were in a sad case; they knew not what had become of their warriors and the young women, because none had lived to return to them, and they must all die of starvation before long unless help came to them from some quarter.

Ka-me-tah and his wife set to work at once to relieve their wants; they had brought some provisions with them, and this was at once divided, and then they started out and soon killed enough to relieve their hunger. When that was satisfied and they had got back a little of their strength Wa-le ma told them the result of the battle and how her life had been saved.

Wa-le-ma told them the result of the battle and how her life had been saved, and that she and her husband had come to find them and relieve their wants, and to take them back with them; that their warriors had all been killed and they would starve if they remained there. Therefore, as soon as they could travel they were to get ready to go with Ka-me-tah and his wife to their camping ground, and they would be provided with enough to eat and have a place set aside for their camp where they could live. This was so utterly foreign to all Indian usages that they could not believe it. They thought that it must be some kind of a trap to get them to a place where they could all be killed easily and so disposed of. No Indian before had ever heard of an enemy taking all this trouble to save and do good to those who had tried to destroy him and if it had not been for Wa-le-ma, whom they knew to be one of their own tribe, they would not have gone a step, but would have remained where they were and starved to death. They thought that would be better than to lose their scalps to their enemies. Finally Wa-le-ma partially convinced them that no harm but only good was meant to them, and they got themselves ready and started on the journey to the Lake of the Woods. They must have traveled over what is now nearly the line of the territorial road through Keeler and Hamilton. Much of this route then was a dense swamp, and it was a hard trip for the old and sick. Some of them died while they were on the road and were buried where they fell, but finally the remnant arrived at the camp of the Chippewas and the Pottawatomies on the southeast side of the lake.

Reception Not Cordial

They were not very cordially received by the home tribes and many black looks were cast at them, and if it had not been for the great influence exerted by Ka-me-tah and his wife they would, without doubt, have been all murdered at once; but they were taken at once under the personal protection of the chief and he notified every one that any insult or injury offered to his wife's relatives and friends would be considered an insult to himself, and they all knew what that meant. So the new comers were allowed to settle in a camp by themselves, and the chief and his wife supplied them with provisions, and other matters to make them comfortable.

The new-comers never felt very sure about their hold on life, and they would not have been surprised at any time to wake up in the morning—like the army in Bible times—and find themselves all dead corpses. But time ran along and nothing happened to them, and they began to think that maybe it wasn't all a dream, and they could keep thir own scalps awhile. You may be sure that they were all devoted to Wa-le-ma, for they realized that it was all on account of her, and her influence over her husband, that they did not all die a lingering death by starvation and cold.

The camp that was assigned to the strangers must have been on the east side of Mud Lake, because it was said to have been on the banks of a small lake, near the other camps, and there is no other place that answers that description. Mud Lake at that time must have been larger than it is now, not such a complete mud-hole. In fact, only sixty years ago it was quite a pleasant little lake on the east and north shores. This strange tribe from the west were a branch of the Ojibway nation, whose home had been originally near Lake Superior, but for some unknown cause this section of the tribe had wandered away down through what is now Wisconsin and had finally crossed Lake Michigan as described. Their warriors and young women were all dead and Indian history says no more about them. Probably they died out or were absorbed by the other two tribes. Many nations in the centuries gone by, in both Europe and America, that once were numerous and powerful have disappeared in this same way, and are heard of no more.

The Chippewas and Pottawatamies lived around here for many, many years, and after this great battle Indian history makes no mention of their being disturbed again by any one until the white men came into their country, about one hundred years ago; but after the appearance of the whites they began to dwindle away rapidly, because the settlers brought with them whiskey and many kinds of diseases that had not been known among the tribes until after that time. Probably the very best Indian that ever lived, if they once get a taste of white man's whiskey, will sacrifice everything that he has for more. He will part with his wife, his children and all that he has, even his own life, if he can only obtain all the firewater that he craves. The consequence was that when the whites came here they soon possessed all the poor Indians had by supplying them with the wherewithal to get drunk, and when drunk the best of Indians became perfect devils, and committed all manner of crimes that they would never have thought of when they were sober.

With the whiskey the whites brought to them all kinds of diseases,—small pox, and other much worse—and it did not take long to obliterate the most peaceful tribes. It is said that the Pottawatomies and Chippeways were always friendly to the whites, and they refused several times to join other hostile tribes in their wars upon them. They refused to join the other Indians that attacked Gen. Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe in 1811, and they would not go to join the Indians with General Black Hawk when he put up such a gallant fight in Wisconsin and Minnesota in 1831-32. But the whites soon got possession of nearly all of their lands, and many of them were moved away by the government to Indian Territory, and now there are only a few left around here out of all those large tribes.

It was told to me that Ka-me-tah and his wife lived for many years in peace and quiet on the little island in the lake, and they raised up a large family of children who were a credit to the tribe. Ka-me-tah was elected head chief of both tribes and he held the position as long as he lived, and after his death his wife, Wa-le-ma, was chosen to take his place as head chief. She managed the affairs of the tribes, and did it well during the rest of her life.

The Indians never regretted the sparing of her life when she was captured after the big battle. After her death her eldest son was elected chief, and the chieftainship of the two tribes passed down from father to son in this family for many years. It is possible that some of their descendants are living around here yet, but that was either not told me or I have forgotten about it.

Indians Objects of Sharpers' Trickery

Now the Indians of Michigan are almost a thing of the past; a few are still living in different parts of the country; there is quite a settlement of them near Dowagiac, and they have homes and farms and their own church. At times the U. S. government has paid them quite large sums of money for the lands that were taken from them in years gone by, but whenever these payments have been made there has always been a gang of sharpers ready to induce them to buy all manner of things, at outlandish prices, that were of no use to them, and their money was fooled away for nothing.

The Indian always has, and always will, get it in the neck every time that he deals with a white man. For instance, when their money came from Washington, those who only just had shanties to live in, and not the least bit of musical ability, would be induced to buy pianos, lace dresses, and other such useless things, and in just no time their money would be all gone and they would have not a thing to show for it, and the white rascal would grow rich off their ignorance. The government is very strict about selling liquor to an Indian, and that saves the poor Indian some, and if they would see that they did not waste their money in the silly ways that they do, it would do them much more good, but they seem to pay no attention whatever to that.

All of the foregoing ancient history about the Indians of two hundred years ago I obtained by listening to the stories told me when I was a boy, and many of these yarns I remember as well as though I had heard them only yesterday instead of sixty years ago. I used to listen to these stories by the hour when the noble red men could be induced to talk, but sometimes they would not say a word for a whole day, and it was no use to try to make them talk, because if they took a notion that they wouldn't talk the only thing to do was to wait until they got ready. I know some white folks—men, not women—that are afflicted in this way.

Sometimes the little papooses would neither talk nor play for hours, but would sit like little blocks of wood, but their little snapping black eyes took in everything going on around them. There was one thing that they were always ready to do, and that was to eat. I do not believe that an Indian—little or big—ever had all that he could eat. No matter if they had eaten until they were ready to lie right down and sleep, because they were so full that they could scarcely move, if you offered them a plate of cake and pie they would eat it and want more. We used to make bets about it as to whether they could be filled up so completely that they couldn't eat any more if something good was offered them. Our folks always had a great plenty to eat because we raised it. The hogs and cattle ran loose in the woods until they were wanted, and we had plenty in the eating line, if it wasn't very fancy cooking. We had lots of maple sugar and corn and wheat, so sometimes when the little papooses used to come over to play mother would keep putting things to eat before them, just to see them enjoy it; and, my sakes, how they would put it away.

I do not think that we ever succeeded in filling them up so but that they were ready for more of mother's doughnuts and cookies in ten minutes. But we had to be very careful not let them know that we were experimenting on their appetites, or that we were fooling with them in any way. If they had found it out they would have been angry in a moment, and probably would never have come to the house again. They were all, big and little, inordinately proud, and if you offended one in any way they would stalk away as haughty as a king, and very likely you could never get them to forgive you. My, but they were proud. Their eyes would fairly blaze if you offended them, and you did not have to scratch very deep to find the original savage. But they were loyal friends when you could once get their liking and confidence; then they would do anything for you. They were good friends, but at the same time they could be awful good haters. I wish that I knew what became of little Wa-ty and Na-my that I played with so many days; dead, probably, long ago, for if alive they would be old now.

Braves Good Story Tellers

Some of these stories that the Indians told us purported to go back to the days of the flood, but I have an idea that were apocryphal, or else they made them up out of whole cloth for the delectation of us white folks. Still they said that they were the same stories that were told them by their forefathers and had ben handed down from father to son for unnumbered centuries. Some few of the Indian story tellers were extra good in repeating and telling the yarns, and one would hardly vary a word from another when telling the same story. I do not know how much truth there was in any of them. I only give them as they were told to me. But very many of their stories are as fresh in mind now almost as the day when I first heard them. I do think that there must have been a good deal of foundation for the story that they told us about the big battle on the Lake of the Woods, and events that followed it, because it came from so many different sources, but I do not guarantee any of it.

The poor Indians are nearly all gone now, and the few that are left are slim specimens, except in a few cases. I do not think that it is any wonder, because the whites, in nearly all cases, did all that they could to degrade and corrupt them. They were robbed of their lands and other property, and about all that they received in return was a taste for whiskey, and a class of filthy diseases that they would never have had if they had not come in contact with the whites, but it is too late now to mourn it, because the time has gone by when we might rectify it in any way, even if we had any disposition to do so.

All around the small lakes with which this country is so thickly studded, and in the country round-about, the remnants of their work in flint—broken arrow heads, spear heads, axes, etc.—are picked up in any quantity, showing that the land must have been settled by them in great numbers, but that is about all that is left of the poor Indian.

[THE END]

MUCK LAND CHANGES HANDS

MODEL FARM OF ECKENBERGER AND HUNT SOLD TO A. FEENSTRA AND FAMILY.

Last week Eckenberger and Hunt sold their fine muck land farm of forty acres south of the village on the New Swamp road to A. Feenstra and family, and in the exchange Eckenberger and Hunt took sixty acres in the Orange belt of Texas.

The Feenstra family came to Decatur four years ago and bought the Darst farm of 162 acres. The land had been laying wild for twenty years and there were no buildings on it except an old barn. They lived for a time in this barn while building a house.

Their first two years here were discouraging. Besides losing $600 worth of horses they lost practically all of their crops by the floods. When the second flood came in the spring of 1914 and took all they had saved and planted they made up their minds they would leave if they could not get the big drain through. Mr. Feenstra took the petition and spent a week securing signatures and did as much as any one man in getting the work started, and now it will be but a few weeks before the big drain is let.

Last year was a good year for the Feenstra family, even without the drain. It was not so wet. They sold 1¾ acres of Golden celery which netted them $500 and 1¼ acres of Easy Blanching celery which netted them $410. Another lot of Easy Blanching celery too short to crate netted them $465. Still another lot not quite so good brought them a fair price. They also raised cabbage, onions and mint.

They consider Decatur muck the very best they have worked and say that if a man goes to work and sticks to it he can win out on it. The land bought of Eckenberger and Hunt joins their other land and gives them two tenant houses, distillery and celery house. Eckenberger and Hunt owned it seven years. When they bought it it had not been plowed in twelve years and was more like a frog pond than a farm. They have made of it a model farm.

The Feenstra family will build a large cow barn and go into the dairy business. They are to be congratulated upon their enterprise.

WHAT CONSCRIPTION MEANS

Conscription or draft means that Uncle Sam shall have the right to call upon all citizens, of age, to do his share of military or naval or other public service, without waiting for volunteers. War today is conducted on such a vast scale that it must be made a matter of national business, not sentiment, alone.

We have as a nation, joined with European Allies in the great war, to accomplish a specific purpose—first to secure the freedom of the sea under international law, second to put down military autocracy and promote democracy.

If these purposes are worthy our effort, if this republic of ours, the leader among the democracies of the world, is worth preserving, we must act well our part and utilize every ounce of effort in the conduct of the war.

To accomplish this, there cannot be reliance only on volunteers, for volunteers are comparatively few, and it is unfair to have a few perform the work ALL should share.

American liberty will be our undoing unless with it comes universal obligation, universal service; and the only way to secure that is to draft and select all men to serve in some capacity for the common good.

There are many branches of service in Uncle Sam's household, and every citizen should be compelled to give his share of service, either in the army, the navy, the Red Cross, the farm or some other place.

The only way to get this universal service is to compel it, just as the federal or other authority compels the payment of taxes.

That is conscription or draft, and it is the only system worth trying.—Progressive Herald.

HOW TO USE THE FLAG!

Fly the flag on its own staff—not with another flag.

No not display it before sunrise or after dark.

Put it up higher than your head.

Never put it upside down. This is a sign of distress at sea.

Do not let children trail the flag in the dirt. It should never touch the ground.

Do not use paper napkins decorated with the flag.

Caution careless users of the flag. Report violations of the flag law.

Do not pile merchandise of any kind on the flag in your show window. Even when used as an altar cloth the Bible may be laid on it—nothing more.

See that your flag has forty-eight stars in even rows. The length should be one and nine-tenths times the width and the Union as wide as seven stripes

When other flags are displayed put the Stars and Stripes up first and highest of all. In a parade it should have the place of honor.

When hung as a banner, the stars should be in the upper left corner. If hung with the stripes perpendicular, the stars should be at the upper right hand corner.

A FIRST CLASS OPTIMIST

The prize for optimism must be awarded to a resident of one of the rural districts of Ireland. An old man was sitting on the roof of his house during a flood, watching the waters rise, when a neighbor who possessed a boat, rowed across to him.

"Hello, Mike," he said, "have all your fowls been washed away this morning?"

"Yes, but the ducks can swim?"

"Is your corn under the water?"

"Well, they said the crop would be a failure anyhow."

"I see the flood has reached above your windows"

"That's all right! Them winders needed washin'."

HALF CENTURY OF THE LIFE OF THE REPUBLICAN

THE FIRST ISSUE OF THIS PAPER WAS PRINTED JUNE 5, 1867—FIFTY YEARS AGO TUESDAY.

Written by W. H. Tuttle, who set the type for the first Republican.

Fifty years ago this week Tuesday, June 5th, 1867, the first number of the Republican was printed.

Fifty years is more than the ordinary lifetime for human beings, but the time does not seem long to me as I look back, and sometimes I wonder where the years have gone to.

E. A. Blackman came from Paw Paw in the month of May, 1867, and in company with Prof. Bellows secured a subscription list. They ordered an outfit suitable for printing a paper in a small town, and rented the second story of the middle store of what was then the Poore Block for the office. This is the room now occupied by the G. A. R. as their hall.

I was only a boy then, but I had learned to be a compositor in the old Tribune and Clarion, and I was anxious to work, so I got Prof. Bellows to introduce me to Mr. Blackman, and applied to him for a job in the new printing office. He hired me on the spot, mainly, I think, on the recommendation of the Professor who was always a good friend of mine.

When the material arrived Ed. and myself got it together and put it in shape for business. The type was all new, but the press was an old second hand affair, that required considerable muscle to operate. By the first of June we were ready and proceeded to set the type for the first issue.

Prof. Bellows knew nothing about the mechanical part of the business, but he could write and gather up the local news, and he was a great help. I set up the very first type for the new paper, while Blackman, who was more experienced in that way than I was, arranged the advertisements, and on the morning of Wednesday, June 5th, we proceeded to run off the first papers.

I cannot tell now how many subscribers we had, but I do know that the new paper was quite eagerly looked for, and many were so very anxious to see what was in it that they could not wait to get their copy through the post office. They flocked to the press room and grabbed them as fast as we could run them from the press, and most of the people seemed very well pleased with the new paper.

I have one of those old papers in front of me now, and as I look it over there doesn't seem to be much in it of local news, but the people were pleased to have a paper in town again, and I am sure that it would have been a good paying business from the start, if it had not been for some unfortunate things connected with it for which there seemed to be no remedy.

Of course the office had to have more than one man to do the mechanical part of the work, and very soon it was full of printers, who had been hired by Blackman.

Hanging on the wall, in the present Republican office, are two protographs showing the employes who were employed in the office during the first year. They include Dick Lyon, George Sellick, George Voke, Andy Johnson and myself, and of all those boys who worked there with me then, I am the only one left alive. Probably all of the older inhabitants will remember all of these boys.

Prof. Bellows stayed with the paper but a few months. He was offered a position as Professor of Mathematics in the Normal School at Ypsilanti, at a much larger salary than he could ever hope to make in Decatur; so he sold his interest in the paper to Blackman, and accepted the position. He remained there the rest of his life. I am sure that Professor Bellows was a good man, if there ever was one, and almost every one who knew him respected him thoroughly. But he had one great fault, that the world cannot overlook, he was poor, and he had no business ability to look out for the best interest of himself and family, and that led him into a lot of trouble in the end, and caused him to lose his home.

Well, from that time on the paper was firmly established, and it has been printed every week from that time since, except for a few years, some twenty years ago, when the name was changed to the "Independent", but it was always the same old paper.

How well I remember those boys who worked there in the office with me. It doesn't seem possible that they can all be dead, but it is so.

I have been reading over the local items in this first number of the Republican, and I am tempted to reprint some of them here; it may be that some of the older people will enjoy recalling the local news of fifty years ago:

THE DECATUR REPUBLICAN JUNE 5, 1867.

"Paw Paw and Lawton R. R.

The work on this road is being pushed forward with great activity and it is expected that the road bed will be completed and ready for the ties in four or five weeks."

Attention Ball Players

There will be a meeting of the Decatur B. B. Club at Parkhurst & Foster's office on Saturday evening, June 9th. Come one, come all.

J. M. French's Great Oriental Circus stopped here last Friday, camels and all. It was a very good show of the kind, and there were "several" people in town.

"The foundation for the buildings of the Michigan Central Iron Works, at Lawton, are being laid, and considerable progress has been made in the work."

"How pleasant it is at the schoolhouse, the front grounds smile as if in conscious joy for what has been done for them in making the rough places smooth, and in improving the untidy bushes and grubs, perilous to unwatched and unpracticed feet."

"We congratulate the American Express Co. on the beautiful and commodious office, which their enterprising agent, Mr. G. Tarbell, has just completed, in which to transact their business."

"We understand that Mr. Ed. Farmer of this place, our worthy sheriff, has been appointed Deputy United States Marshal for the Western district of Michigan. A good appointment."

"Children Wanting Homes:—S. H. Lancy, of the Children's Aid Society of New York City, will be at the Duncombe House, in this place, on Thursday afternoon, with a large number of children, in search of homes. All who are interested in this work of charity are invited to meet the agent as above. Mrs. Penfield, of the "Home of the Friendless" will also be here with six very interesting babies."

"Some cowardly wretch, in the darkness of last Saturday night, took occasion to vent his spite against Mr. Benj. Tuttle, of this place, by throwing a big club through his bedroom window, completely demolishing the glass and sash. It is understood that Mr. Tuttle's activity in prosecuting liquor suits was the cause of the cowardly deed. It is the nature of the beast.

"The M. C. R. R. is making arrangements to use coal engines on this division. We noticed the other day a new engine, 'Monitor No. 10' for burning either coal or wood. It is said to be a very powerful engine. The company have also been enlarging and repainting their passenger houses, both at this place and at Lawton. The new brick watering house in Decatur is nearly finished."

"In passing the farm of Homer B. Smith, one-half mile north of Foster's Corners, one cannot fail to observe the evidence of his industry and thrift. His farm, which one year ago was a dense forest of grubs, is now a most promising field of wheat, every grub rooted up and tidily piled away. His brother, J. H. Smith, on the other road, is building a barn, which, when finished, will be one of the best in the county."

"Our village is the scene of great activity the present season in building. Dwelling houses and barns are going up on every hand; others are being remodeled, enlarged and repainted. Newly laid out lots in our pleasant suburbs are rapidly secured, and with the fine residences which soon occupy them, move, as it were, into town. May enterprising activity and industry contribute to our growth, and good taste, give our budding promises to blossom as the rose."

"H. A. Rogers has just completed and has for rent three new houses at the east end of Delaware street, in the new suburb of "Rogersville". It is expected that the street cars will be running out this way by the end of the season, and the people can ride in from this new suburb very quickly and cheaply."

"New Stage Line to St. Joseph

Messrs. Selter and Vincent have put on a new tri-weekly line of stage coaches from this place to St. Joseph, going via Keeler and Millburgh, leaving here on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays and returning Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, arriving in St. Joseph at half past two o'clock and in this place at two o'clock, in time for the trains both ways. The road is good, the distance less than by other routes and the fare is only $2.25.

In those days the trains on the M. C. R. R. left here as follows: Going west at 1:20 and 5:40 a. m. and 2:10 p. m. Going east at 11:25 a. m. and 2:38 and 8:55 p. m.

The principal market quotations at that time were as follows: Wheat, $2.45@2.75 per bushel. Beans $2.50@2.75 per bushel. Corn $1.10; Tame hay $18 per ton; Oats, 85 cents per bushel; Eggs, 15 cents per dozen; Flour, $15.00@18.00 per barrel; Cheese 18 cents per pound; Potatoes, 80 cents per bushel; Butter 16 cents per pound; The most of things in those far away days cost nearly as much as they do now.

In looking over the names of the merchants who were doing business here in those days I find the following:

Chas. N. Poore, who had a hardware store where the Racket store is now located.

H. A. Seymour, Livery.

L. Noble, furniture store, on Sherwood street.

E. E. and J. L. Chadwick, dry goods, in the present Stewart building.

O. S. and A. A. Abbott, dry goods, on the Durkee corner.

W. C. Tucker, general store, located on the Wood's hardware corner.

Wm. O. Bond, groceries, about where the second hand store is now.

Nash and Keables, dry goods and groceries, in middle building of the Carney block.

Russell and Arnold, dry goods and groceries, located about where the First State Bank now stands.

Fred Smith, jewelry and all around mechanical genius, where Frank White's barber shop stands.

G. B. Boughton, photographer, in third story over the Racket store.

Rawson & Haynes, lumber dealers and grain buyers at the old warehouse near the depot.

L. D. Roberts, hats and caps, in building located where Crilfield's store stands.

Foley J. Taber, news dealer, in same store with L. D. Roberts.

S. N. Thomas, hardware dealer, located about where the doctors' offices are.

W. E. Trowbridge, drugs and groceries, located where Carney's drug store is now.

H. A. Rogers, grocery corner of Phelps and Sherwood streets.

D. H. Manley, dry goods and millinery, at the Brooks corner.

W. Larzelere & Co., dry goods and groceries, but I do not remember where they were located.

J. S. Dowd, groceries, store stood on what is now Burdock park.

Moore and Lisk, hardware, where the Racket store is now.

Leavens & Son, drug store, in wooden building where Shaad's store is now.

Among the business cards I find the following:

C. T. Baker, M. D.
J. T. Keables, M. D.
R. M. Huntington, M. D.
Dr. G. W. Dey, dentist.
Parkhurst & Foster, lawyers

These were not all of the Doctors and Lawyers by any means but is all that I find mentioned in this first paper. The town was spotted with them.

Aaron Burnett, barber.
C. H. Haskins, auctioneer.
S. Kurtz, painter.

The Duncombe House, at the corner of St. Mary's and Phelps streets, John Smith proprietor.

The Galloway House, H. Galloway, prop.

The Tittle House, Clate Tittle, prop.

The Butler House, "Whiskey" Butler, prop.

Of all these men in business here then not one is still in business here now, and only two that I know of, are still alive. Surely fifty years makes great changes.

Well, I think I have said enough about the beginning of the Republican, more, probably, than most of your readers will care to read, but, as one of the helpers in issuing this first number of the paper, I felt as though the fiftieth anniversary of that event ought to be noticed in some way.

FACTORY OPPORTUNITIES

Decatur had several narrow escapes from becoming an extensive manufacturing town many years ago, but it seems as though every last thing that promised to benefit Decatur in those days, in some way managed to fall down.

To say nothing about the gold mine that didn't mine, something like fifty years ago the Singer Sewing Machine Co. proposed to erect here a large branch for their factory. At that time there were large amounts of walnut and other kinds of timber suitable for making their wares, and they wished to put up a large factory here and make sewing machines.

The negotiations with the town were carried quite a ways and it was thought for a time it was a sure thing and that we would have a factory located here that would give employment to a great many people the year round.

It is so very long ago that I do not recollect what happened to break the affair off, but I think that the Singer Company asked the town to donate a parcel of ground of a few acres on which to put the factory, and also exempt them from taxation for a term of years and the town wouldn't do a thing for them.

The town said that if they wanted to come here and put up a factory they could, but they wouldn't give them a cent, and the factory replied that there were lots of towns that would treat them fairly and liberally and they would go somewhere else to put up their branch. The whole matter fell through, and Decatur lost the chance to get something that would have been an immense benefit to the town.

Then next, some Dowagiac men proposed to build a large foundry here, and they even bought the ground and commenced work on the foundation, and then all at once that was all thrown up and abandoned. I don't remember what the trouble was but all at once the whole thing went by the board, and Decatur lost another chance to gain a factory that would have furnished employment to a large number of men.

Forty-five years ago we had a fine, large grist mill here that made a market for much grain that was turned into flour and sold to outside towns and must have brought a great deal of outside money back here, but the mill failed like everything else and finally burned down and was never rebuilt. Decatur luck!

We once had a distillery here that turned a great deal of grain into alcohol, and also fed large numbers of cattle and hogs with the slops. That was abandoned a great, great many years ago and went to ruin, but happily that was one of the things that could be spared just as well as not.

EARLY OFFICIALS OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Read by Mrs. Carrie Nutting Carr at Meeting Held in 1898 on the 30th Anniversary of the Dedication of the Presbyterian Church of Decatur.

The first trustees of the Decatur Presbyterian Church were W. E. Trowbridge, Joseph McClintock and John Tarbell.

Subsequently the office was held by C. N. Poor, E. P. Hill, Drusus Hodges, Carlton Wheeler and Jerome Coleman.

There is little record of the woes and struggles of the first board of trustees, but we may be sure that in raising funds for the necessary expenses, they were frequently sorely taxed. It is no light duty to execute the office of trustee in a young and struggling church in a community during it's formative period. It is to be regretted that we do not have a fuller account of their labor of love that we might recall it and do them honor in their self-sacrifice in the work for the church and not for the church alone but also for the community.

A great historian has written, "Happy are the people whose annals are uninteresting." If this is a fact, then the annals of this church, so far as the board of trustees is concerned is uninteresting enough to lead to the conclusion that this is a very happy people. With this bit of honorable mention, we will dismiss the board of trustees.

The first elder elected at the organization of the church was Joseph McClintock. He was the only elder for four or five years. In 1852, G. A. VanSickle and Samuel White were elected and installed. In 1862 W. E. Trowbridge became a member of the session. In 1864 A. H. Williams and Drusus Hodges. In 1868 E. P. Hill and Jerome Coleman. The other men who were elected in later years and who still hold the office do not come within the scope of our record. The office is of such character that it demands high personal work and consecration as well as sanctified common sense.

A rare opportunity is given in the office of the eldership for a wide and deep and holy influence. The elders do more by their character to influence the younger men of the church than any other person in it. More even than the pastor, for pastors may come and pastors may go, but elders go on forever or until death.

JOSEPH McCLINTOCK

How many great opportunities for loving, kindly influence for good. Joseph McClintock, the first elder was a kindly quiet man whose influence was felt most in his own neighborhood. Never an aggressive man. He was so consistent. He was always known to be on the right side at all times and everywhere, placed as he was in the community and church in a formative period, he bore himself well and left behind a memory well worthy to be kindly recorded by the succeeding generations. He came to the church from a New York State church, identified himself with the infant Presbyterian church and from the time of his election until his death in 1881, was instant in his work as he had oportunity. For thirteen years he was in office as an elder. I find in the session book opposite his name this brief record, "A quiet, consistent Christian."

Though living nearly four miles from town, he was seldom absent from the church services. His wife still lives at a great age on the farm. They have wrought together to make a home. The sympathies of this people go out to her to-day in kindly remembrance of her devoted husband.

W. E. TROWBRIDGE

Mr. W. E. Trowbridge was another elder well worthy of office. He was born, reared and maried in Alleghany county, New York. He came to Kalamazoo in 1850 and to Decatur in 1854.

He engaged in mercantile and manufacturing pursuits and always maintained the highest reputation for integrity and probity. His praise is now heard in both the church and the community.

I find the following in his obituary notice in the Republican, "In furthering the higher interests of the town, he was a conspicious pioneer, whatever religious standing Decatur has is due to him and such as he who ever took and held a noble stand against the irreligious and immoral influences of western life. He was a life long and zealous Christian and for the remarkable term of seventy years was a consistent and active member of the Presbyterian church. For nearly thirty years he held the office of ruling elder and adorned the office with his kindly courtesy and firmness."

He aided by his prayers, his work and his means, every good work in the church and the town, one of his pastors has repeatedly remarked that he was the only man he ever knew to be too liberal with his money. The call of Christ was so near to his heart that it made a constant drain on his pocketbook. Happy in his married life and in his family relations, he was a model in church and in public life. He was permitted to celebrate his golden wedding anniversary with the wife of his youth, an event rather remarkable even in the longer settled communities.

Of his children, two died in their infancy, Mrs. Wheeler before his death, Mrs. W. H. White since, Mrs. W. H. Nearpass lives in San Diego, California. Mrs. Stewart and Miss Ida Trowbridge with Mrs. Trowbridge are with us today, useful, active and happy in their Christian work and life. Mr. Trowbridge lived to celebrate his eightieth birthday. His eighty-first was celebrated on High. The obituary notice above closes with these words. "A good man has gone from our midst, one whose familiar face will not soon be forgotten and whose cherished memory will not soon fade away."

Mrs. Trowbridge is now the oldest living member of the Decatur Presbyterian church. It is interesting to recall the fact that she has seen practically the whole history of the church as it has unfolded and it is a source of utmost gratitude to her to see how successfully its work has been carried on.

Of Mr. Samuel White some impressions have been given the writer which convey no idea of the man as he was physically, but a vague spiritual photograph flits before the mind's eye of one whose whole interest was in the spiritual welfare of the church. Mr. White was superintendent of the Sunday School.

JEROME COLEMAN

Mr. A. H. Williams who appears on the church record as an elder was elected but never ordained.

Mr. Drusus Hodges has left no written record of his life, but an enduring memorial that exists in the hearts of members still living. Testifying to his worth and devotion, one says, "Say everything good of Mr. Hodges, he was a most devoted Christian." Another, "Deacon Hodges nearly always had something to say about religious matters whenever you met him." Another, "Deacon Hodges was always at prayer meeting and should he be absent we knew that there was a good reason for it. Another to whom the writer mentioned his name responded with a pleasant smile chasing over the wrinkles of the face as the words, "Yes, Deacon Hodges was a good man." fell from his lips.

Jerome Coleman is another of the elders of this church who has left his impress on its history and is well remembered.

He with his wife Mrs. Fanny Coleman came into the membership of the church in 1866 and he died July 28, 1884.

He was born in Tinmount, Vermont, 1833. his father removed in 1836 to Hamilton. His childhood and youth were passed in this vicinity until he attained his 19th year. He then determined to go to California, then to Eldorado to find out if its golden sands would smile him into competence. He went by the way of Vermont and New York.

While at the home of his infancy he met a young girl of 13, Miss Fanny Frisbee, and four years later on his return from his adventure in California he found his way to the Frisbee homestead again, and in one year Miss Fanny Frisbee became Mrs. Jerome Coleman.

Decatur became their home in 1864. In 1866 they are found in the church membership and in 1868 Mr. Coleman was elected to the eldership in which he served until his death. In 1871 Mr. Coleman took the law course in Michigan University and thence forward practiced his chosen vocation in this community.

Mrs. Coleman is still with us, fit companion of Mrs. Trowbridge and Mrs. Ann Toof, widow of pastor, Rev. E. M. Toof. She is an inspiration to her pastor who rejoices to see her in the sanctuary and who when he looks into her face and the faces of these others of whom mention is made above recalls the pleasant memories of past years of labor, self-sacrifice and honorable Christian endeavor.

Mr. E. P. Hill is the sole survivor of this group of figures which adorn the early history of the eldership of the church. With his wife, Miss Harriet Hatch, he has lived for 55 years, having celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1893.

E. P. HILL

Born in Waterville, New York, he lived in that village until early manhood, married in Leitchfield, Conn., in 1843, and removed to Davenport, Iowa, thence to Decatur in 1858, where he engaged in the manufacture of stoves. His home has been here ever since.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill united with the struggling church in 1859 by letter and with Mrs. Trowbridge, Mrs. Keables and Mrs. Baker form a quintette of noble and self-denying Christians, who have prayed and worked and given of their means with rare devotion.

From the time of uniting with the church until now, Mr. Hill's name is prominently mentioned in the records of the congregation, and from 1868 onward he is written up in the sessional records. He will soon close 30 years of service in the eldership of this church, the longest in point of service of any one who has ever held the office in this church.

Mr. Hill's assistance in the church work has always been conscientious and faithful. He has given largely of this means and has always encouraged the pastors in their work.

Three children of this worthy couple have grown to maturity. One son has gone to his reward and his family, a wife and two sons, reside in Atlanta, Ga. Another son, Dana, now resides in Mulvane, Kansas. A daughter, Alice, is the wife of Rev. J. A. Gordon of Van Wert, Ohio. Full of years and honors they abide in a happy old age among friends who love them for themselves as well as for the good work they have done in the church and community.

Humanly speaking, but for E. P. Hill and W. E. Trowbridge this edifice never would have been erected.

THE WOMEN'S SOCIETIES

It is to be regretted that there is no record within my reach to enable me to chronicle something of the personality of the officers of the Women's Societies in connection with the erection of this building. In the building of every church of this country women have borne a conspicuous and self-denying part and we may be sure that this can be said of the women of this church in its erection.

Though there are no records, there are some recollections of their work. The women met in a sewing circle, held suppers, made fancy work, carpets, etc., for the purpose of raising money to furnish the church when completed.

After the church was enclosed and plastered a fair was held within the walls and a handsome amount was netted for the treasury of the society. When the church was ready for occupancy by this means and other like agencies the women had raised eight hundred dollars for the furnishing. Mrs. Carlton Wheeler and Mrs. Dr. Baker went to Detroit and personally inspected the furniture which it was desired to secure.

And now with gratitude for the past for its record of Godly lives and patient labor, with hope for the future, let us for the time bid adieu to this group of honored figures summoned from the canvas of history and thank God. Take courage and say as God has watched over this church in years gone by we devoutly hope He will guide it in the years to come. For we devoutly believe that the younger men who are called to take the places of the fathers of blessed memory, will, with the blessing of God, come fully up to the high measure of faith and devotion with which these lives adorn the history of the church.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH DESTROYED BY FIRE

GALBREATH BARN BURNED AT SIX AND SPARKS SET FIRE TO CHURCH SHED AND CADY BARN LATER IN THE EVENING. LOSS IS HEAVY.

The beautiful Presbyterian church is in ashes. It was built in 1868 and was one of the most imposing structures in the village. Last Friday evening it was destroyed by fire.

Jakie Schneider is but five years old but in his short rise from the cradle he has made his name a household word in the community and has a fair start toward notoariety if not fame.

Jakie and Alice Barnes were playing in the hay in the Galbreath barn last Friday afternoon. Jakie had a box of matches with him and lit one. It blazed up and began to burn his fingers and he dropped it. Then he and Alice had to hurry to get out which they did. This seemed to be the most likely story, although Jakie tells that Alice dropped a lighted match down the hay chute. The little folks did not report the situation and the barn was a mass of flames before the fire was discovered.

The alarm was quickly sounded but the barn and contents were destroyed and the firemen had to do active work to save the nearby buildings.

The barn belonged to the home of Mrs. I.B. Galbreath, the property fronting on East St. Mary's Street. It was built by the late Mr. Galbreath five years ago and was a substantial buiilding. It was filled with hay and grain and some pieces of furniture and a flock of chickens. The Schneider cow was just being led from pasture and was saved in spite of her efforts to enter the burning building.

Mrs. Galbreath is with her daughter, Mrs. Dana Sherrod, in Bloomington, Illinois and Isaac Schneider and family have resided in her home here the past year.

The burning embers of the fire had died down and the firemen and spectators had left the scene. At 9:30 in the evening, Mat Cady went out and inspected his barn which was close to the fire, but found no indication of further trouble.

Soon after ten o'clock young men going home from the show discovered the Presbyterian sheds adjoining the Cady barn to be in flames. The alarm was sounded and the firemen promptly responded but the sheds and barn were past saving before water could be gotten to them. The fire carried to the church building and it was so hot firemen could not stop it. The big building was doomed and the flames spread so quickly that not all of the furniture was saved.

The homes of mesdames Burlingham and Rogers on the west and Mr. Cady on the east were in great danger and all of the furniture of both houses was removed. Fortunately there was no breeze stirring and both places escaped without much damage.

The Cady farm was filled with hay and grain. The loss is estimated at from fifteen hundred to two-thousand dollars with five-hundred dollars worth of insurance on the building and two-hundred on the contents, in one of Mrs. Haynes' companies. The church was insured for four thousand on the building and contents in companies — represented by Mrs. Haynes and J.F. Brigham. One thousand of the insurance on the church covered the pipe organ which was installed a few years ago at an expense of nearly twice that amount.

The loss falls heavily on the Presbyterian church society. The members have kept their handsome edifice in perfect repair and within the past ten years they have spent thousands of dollars in improvements upon it. They feel keenly the loss but they are not a society that will falter nor lose courage. Already they are considering the problem of rebuilding, and although it is not likely that definite action will be taken this year, it is practically certain that within the near future a handsome modern church will take the place of the building which served its purpose well for nearly a half century.

For the time being the Presbyterian services will be held in the Town Hall.

When it became evident that the church would go it seemed to many impossible that the adjoining houses could be saved. Calls for help were phoned to Paw Paw and Dowagiac and both companies promptly responded. The Dowagiac company drove their fire truck here in forty minutes. Before either company arrived the home boys had the fire under control. Membrs of the Home Guard remained on watch duty all night.

THE RAWSON HOUSE IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

LIKE AN ANCIENT CASTLE IT TOWERED ABOVE THE TREES IN THE DISTANCE AND WAS THE MOST IMPOSING LANDMARK ABOUT DECATUR

The home of A. Vandermolen was destroyed by fire Tuesday evening. The fire was discovered in the second story about nine o'clock and probably caught from the stove pipe. The house was outside of the corporation and just beyond reach of the nearest hydrant. The fire whistle sounded the alarm and the boys took out the chemical engine but the flames had spread so quickly that they could not be checked and a large crowd assembled to watch the beautiful building burn to the ground.

A part of the furniture was saved and Mr. and Mrs. Vandermolen and their five little ones found refuge in the home of Neil King across the road. The building was insured for two thousand and the furniture for five hundred dollars with a Dowagiac company.

This house was located just out of the village on the old swamp road on an elevation of land well back from the highway. It was one of the land marks of the town and made an imposing picture towering above the handsome grove in front.

It was built by the late Lyman T. Rawson at a cost of over eight thousand dollars. The lumber used was white wood and would take a small fortune to buy it now. He was two years completing the house and the family moved into it in 1862. For more than twenty-five years it was the home of this excellent family. From it the three children grew up and went out into the world to other homes of their own and their mother died there.

Since the Rawson family left it the place has had many tenants and owners, and the Vandermolens came into possession of it four years ago.

Nicholsville Once Called Volinia

In connection with the account of the rebuilding of the Nicholsville Dam published in the Cassopolis Democrat last week, was the following history of the Village of Nicholsville:

One of the very first waterpowers built in Cass county was on a stream in Volinia township connecting Finch and Bunker Lakes. The dam was built by Alexander Copley, and to utilize the power developed, a saw-mill and grist mill were built, and with them as a nucleus quite a flourishing little village grew up, with postoffice and stores.

The mills were a great boon to the early settlers, and people came from a great distance bringing grain to be ground and logs to be made into lumber.

As the country settled up and other waterpowers were developed, and especially after railroads were built, the importance of Nicholsville diminished, but the mills have been kept running as occasion demanded through all these years, with several changes of ownership, until this spring during the freshet, the washout occurred in the dam, and the waterpower which had turned the wheels there so many years was destroyed.

There seems to be some discrepancy in statements by early settlers of this locality who should know, and some of the printed histories. The latter say that there is nothing on the records to show that there was ever such a village as Nicholsville laid out, but that a village containing 33 lots, called Volinia, was platted, covering the ground now called Nicholsville, and that the postoffice located there was called "Little Prairie Ronde."

County Surveyor, W. W. Reynolds, who in conjunction with surveyor Fred E. Smith of Penn, and surveyor Chas. J. Bradt of Marcellus, has been surveying the land bared by the recession of the water caused by the washout in the dam, says that he has seen the field notes of the survey of "Nicholsville," in the S. E. corner of Sec. 11, and the S. W. corner of Sec. 12, made by John C. Bradt, surveyor in 1851.

The latest atlas of Cass locates Nicholsville as above described, everybody calls it that, so we think it is Nicholsville, maugre the county history.

The first sawmill in Volinia township was built in the summer of 1835 by Alexander Copley, where Nicholsville now stands, and was started up on its first work December 20, the same year. It is supposed that the power was obtained by an overshot wheel. The iron work was obtained at Mishawaka, of the St. Joseph Iron Works, where was located the first furnace for the smelting or reduction of iron ore west of the Alleghanies. The ore from which the iron was smelted was what is known as "bog iron ore," and was obtained from a tract of low, marsh land, some of which is now a part of the farm attached to the Notre Dame College, where there was a considerable deposit. This ore and the St. Joseph Iron works, which reduced it to metallic iron, and got it into shape so it could be used for the manufacture of plows and other tools of iron, was of very great help to the early settlers of this part of the country. To its occurrence may be attributed the location of the Bennett Axe works, and the plow foundry, in which a young Scotchman, who was a moulder, called in those days "Jimmy" Oliver, discovered a method of suddenly chilling and consequently hardening the molten iron when it was poured into the mould, and which resulted in his removal to South Bend where the manufacture of the "Oliver Chilled Plow," made the name famous the world over and the inventor many times a millionaire. Specimens of the ore may be seen in the rooms of the historical society, in the old court house at South Bend, and pieces of it are occasionally plowed up on the farms in the vicinity of that city. Some of the ore is also occasionally found in Cass county. It is usually porous and resembles a piece of rusty sponge, and has a very high content of metallic iron. We have a piece in the Democrat office, a good typical specimen, that was picked up in Howard township.

A grist mill was built on this dam in 1851 by Harry George, and he soon sold it to Jonathan Nichols and his brother, who were keeping a hotel there, and it is probable that from time to time the place became Nicholsville instead of Volinia, as it was platted, or Little Prairie Ronde, as the postoffice was called.

Nicholsville, as late as 1875 had a population of 100, two stores, blacksmit shop, cooper shop, wagon shop, shoe shop, veneer and basket factory, tannery, grist mill, sawmill, hotel, two physicians, a lawyer and a carpenter.

A PETITION

The following statement, defining the attitude of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination on the point of bearing arms in times of war, was prepared by the North American Division Conference Committee, in its recent meeting, and has since been filed with the assistant Secretary of War at Washington, D. C. It will be noticed that the petition requests that the religious convictions of Seventh-day Adventists against "participation in acts of war and bloodshed" be recognized by those in authority, but that it does not ask that Seventh-day Adventist young men be exempted from non-combatant duties, such as relief work, Red Cross, and many other lines of work in which they can serve the Government if drafted:

To the Assistant Secretary of War—

In behalf of the Seventh-day Adventists of the United States of America, the Executive Committee of the North American Conference of Seventh-day Adventists respectfully submits the following statement:

We believe that civil government is ordained of God, and that in the exercise of its legitimate functions it should receive the support of its citizens. We believe in the principles upon which this government was founded. We are loyal to its constitution, which is based upon the principles of democracy and guarantees civil and religious liberty to all its citizens.

We deplore that our nation has been drawn into the horrors of war, and shall continually pray that the God of Heaven may speedily bring peace to our country.

We have been non-combatants throughout our history. During the Civil War our people officially declared:

"That we recognize civil government as ordained of God, that order, justice and quiet may be maintained in the land, and that the people of God may lead quiet and peacable lives in all godliness and honesty.

"In accordance with this fact, we acknowledge the justice of rendering tribute, custom, honor and reverence to the civil power, as enjoined in the New Testament. While we thus cheerfully render to Caesar the things which the Scriptures show to be his, we are compelled to decline all participation in acts of war and bloodshed as being inconsistent with the duties enjoined upon us by our divine Master toward our enemies and toward all mankind."

We hereby affirm the foregoing declaration. We petition that our religious convictions be recognized by those in authority, and that we be required to serve our country only in such capacity as will not violate our conscientious obedience to the law of God as contained in the decalogue, interpreted in the teachings of Christ, and exemplified in His life.

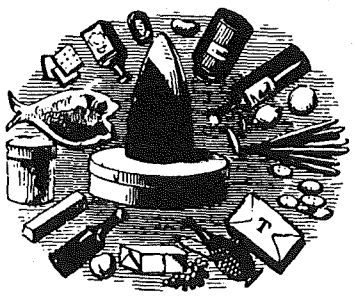
PIONEERS OF EAST DECATUR

It's strange the change that the short period of forty-seven years will make in a community. Thomas W. Roberts of East Decatur dropped into the Republican office last Saturday afternoon and in the course of a pleasant visit with him, he remarked that of all the families who resided in East Decatur, School District No. 5, when he located there in 1870 the only ones left are himself and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Carpenter and Mrs. John Graham.

Then he named over the families who comprised the district in 1870 and it may be of interest to the old timers to go over the list. They were as follows:

Ed Campbell
Ploper
Myron Newkirk
William Powers
Frank Carpenter
Orval Sweetland
Jonah Thurston
Soloman Waters
Net. Thurston
John Graham
Dennis Murphy
Edward Ray
William Ray
William Graham
James Howland
Stephen Pepper
James Caldwell
Alfred Doolittle
Oscar Caldwell
Paulina Durkee
William McAdams
Zachariah Lewis
William Stone
Lyman Eastman
Thomas Roberts
Johnson
C.W. Gardner
Dillon Turner
Robert McCann
William Newkirk
Daniel Carney
Thomas Blades
Sherman
Ransford
Mrs. Campbell
Seth Cary
Lathrop
Wesby
Elder Ormsby
Clark Green
Andrew Cross
Merrils
Charles Love
Sam Sweet
M. Gates
Frank Lewis
John Lewis
Hinckley

The parents in most of these pioneer families are now numbered with the great, silent majority. The children who are still among the living are scattered throughout the Union. If any of them will drop a line to the Republican recalling the pleasant times of the past and sending greetings to those left of their childhood friends, we shall be glad to pass it on to them.



GROCER.

FORTY YEARS IN BUSINESS IN DECATUR

L. G. STEWART BEGAN HERE IN 1877 AND IS THE OLDEST MERCHANT NOW IN BUSINESS ON THE STREET.

Forty years in the grocery business in Decatur is the record of our esteemed merchant and citizen, Lewis G. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart completes his fortieth year in business this year and is the oldest merchant on the street. Only three now living here, L. D. Roberts, W. H. Clark and T. Trowbridge, were in business when he began.

In 1877 L. D. Roberts bought the grocery business of Al. Stephenson located in a frame building where F. L. Mosier now sells dry goods. Mr. Stewart went with him as clerk.

Three years later Mr. Stewart and his father in law, W. E. Trowbridge, bought out David Squier, then located on the burnt district south of Shaad's store, and Mr. Roberts went into the E. P. Hill building, now the Ellis building where the second hand store is located. Thomas Browning became the owner of the Stephenson building, converted it into a brick building and leased it to Chas. Schuster for five years at $400 a year.

In a few months Mr. Trowbridge sold his interest to Mr. Roberts and the new firm of Roberts and Stewart built the handsome brick building now occupied by B. K. Durkee the following year. The frame building on this lot was moved across the street and is now George Roberts' hardware store.

This partnership was dissolved in 1886, Mr. Roberts taking the building and Mr. Stewart the stock. Mr. Stewart continued in business on this corner eight years. In 1894 he became the owner of the Chadwick building where for the past twenty-two years he has sold groceries and enjoyed a good patronage and a comfortable income.

L G Stewart has not only been a capable and reliable business man, but he has always been interested in the welfare of the community and public spirited in all matters that appealed to him as possessing real merit. In the years past he has given much of his time to the village without thought of remuneration. He has been a valuable member of the Council and it was through his personal effort that our beautiful railroad park was established. He also served for many years as a member of the Board of Education of the Decatur public schools with credit to the District, and his activities in the church with which he has long been associated are well known to his fellow members.

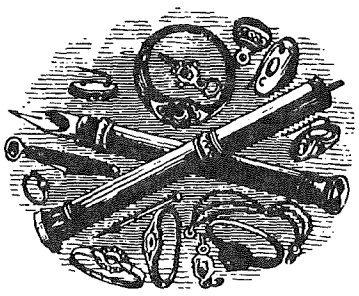
The Republican voices the sentiment of many friends in wishing Mr. Stewart many more years of active life in Decatur.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS AT THE BENCH

UNUSUAL RECORD MADE BY DECATUR'S VETERAN JEWELER AND REPAIRER OF WATCHES AND CLOCKS — 38 YEARS IN THIS VILLAGE



JEWELLER.

April 4, 1917, completed forty-five years at the bench for our Decatur jeweler, G.B. McOmber. Thirty-eight of these years he has spent at watch work in Decatur.

Mr. McOmber commenced as a boy repairing watches and clocks. At the age of seventeen he began as an apprentice with H.B. Enos of St. Joseph, Michigan, working for no wages and his father paying his board. Later, because his father objected to his working unless he could earn his board, Mr. Enos, rather than have him quit, agreed to board him if he would help Mrs. Enos with the family washing each week.

After something over a year with Mr. Enos and one summer on his father's farm, he was married at the age of nineteen years. He then worked one winter in a shop at Marcellus, Michigan, going from there to Devall's Bluff, Arkansas where he worked on Grand Prairie three months.

Becoming acquainted with a Mr. Goss, a Swiss watch maker, located at Devall's Bluff, he began work under his instruction staying with him a year and a half, and then opening a shop for himself — he arrived in Arkansas in 1873, and left there in 1876 three and a half years later.

From there he went to St. Louis, Missouri, running a repair shop there a short time and also doing repair work for Jacard and Mermod who were wholesalers.

From St. Louis he went to Troy, Illinois where he had a shop for one year. Then he returned to Michigan, and worked his father's farm, working winters at the bench.

After one winter at Coral, Michigan he came to Decatur in April, 1879, where he has since remained, completing the thirty-eight years this week as mentioned above.

In the forty-five years he has repaired over seventy thousand watches. Fifteen thousand clocks, thousands of spectacles, jewelry, and many other kinds of work, including sewing machines, knitting machines, barometers, and one threshing machine, one threshing-machine engine, one merry-go-round, many kodaks and lately delicate parts of automobiles.

In the long ago, he has repaired many English and Swiss watches, striking watches, horse-timers, etc. He has seen the Swiss, German, and English key-wind, cylinder, berge, patent, and detached levers subplanted by the modern stem-winding, pendant setting and adjusted high-grade watches of today.

Watch repairing requires delicate tools, many of which Mr. McOmber has made as occasion required.

RECALLING OLD TIMES ON THE PRAIRIE

SUNDAY SCHOOL STARTED AT HUYCKTOWN SCHOOLHOUSE — CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MEETING ALSO ANNOUNCED AND PREACHING TO FOLLOW SOON.

During the past summer has occurred a revival of "Ye Old Time" religious interest in the community once known as "Little Prairie Ronde."

There are not a few who can recall the earlier days when the Sabbath school at the brick schoolhouse in the Huycktown district could hold its own with the best county Sunday schools in the neighborhood, even though perhaps in Will Carleton's phraseology, "Neighborhoods meant counties in those days"

It will be good news to the vicinity to learn that the Sunday school as an institution has been revived on the Prairie and that the gatherings there are again a most prominent feature from Sunday to Sunday.

The Sunday school is a live one, led by an able corps of earnest Christian workers who mean business.

A noteworthy fact is that, while in the earlier days mentioned, the work of the Sunday school was left mainly to the ladies, several representative men of the community have now interested themselves in it, and by their presence are lending the energy and virility that the masculine element always brings into such work.

Nor is this all. The greatest surprise awaiting a former resident returning to the Prairie on a summer vacation is to find a thriving Young People's Christian Endeavor Society, recently organized by Mr. Glenn Hobbs, a young student from the Michigan Agricultural College, who is spending his summer vacation on the farm of Mr. L. L. Lawrence. Mr. Hobbs has had experience in this line, as he was prominently identified with the Young Men's Christian Association at the M. A. C.

It is refreshing indeed to see a young man who comes into a community as a stranger and remains but a brief time, and yet makes himself so thoroughly one of the people as to take such a helpful part in Christian activity. Such a forward movement, started with so worthy a motive, deserves not only the commendation, but the ready response of every member of the community.

The Christian Endeavor Society, which convenes Sunday evening at 7:30 is intended to arouse interest and engage everyone if possible, in co-operating with the great work for which the "field is ripe unto the harvest." This is but the prelude to the holding of regular services each Sunday evening. The first of these meetings is to be held on September fifth, when Rev. Raber of Porter, will come to address the people and commence a work, which, it is hoped, will continue indefinitely. Everyone who is sufficiently interested in this movement to lend the encouragement of his presence, will find a cordial welcome awaiting him.

MRS. RYAN'S DEATH RECALLS LOCAL HISTORY

Had been a resident of Decatur or Hamilton for sixty-one years — Edward Carney, her brother, is last of family of ten children

Mrs. Mary Ryan died February 6, 1917 at the age of eighty-two years. Mary Jame Carney was one of ten children of James and Mary McLain Carney. She was born in Thomiston, Maine in 1835. Ten years later the family came to Michigan and located in Kalamazoo.

In the summer of 1856 the parents both fell ill of cholera and died within two days of each other. That same year Mary Carney came to Decatur and was united in marriage with Michael Ryan. They were married by the priest in the home of Owen O'Neil and it was a wedding long to be remembered by those present. The O'Neil house has long since been torn down. It was located near the present site of the Lewis Carpenter house on north Phelps Street.

Michael Ryan was a native of Tipperary, Ireland. He had drifted to Decatur and was working on the Michigan Central. He built the upright of the Galbreath house on East St. Mary's Street and they began housekeeping there. Some years later Mr. Ryan bought a farm in Hamilton where he lived until he died fifteen years ago.

Of the family of ten children Mrs. Ryan's brother, Edward Carney, is the only survivor.

Edward Carney came to Decatur in 1857 and he is probably the only continuous living resident of the village.

When he came, Charles Poor, was building the three-story store building known as the Poor block. Eli Rich, who lived in the house now occupied by Pearl E. Pritchard, known in later years as the Browning home, was the mason. He was the father-in-law of John Rogers. The family moved from here to Dowagiac where some of them still reside.

In those days every store keeper had a barrel of whiskey in the cellar and customers went down and helped themselves.

Mr. Carney went to work for Edmund Ingalls who sold beer, whiskey, meat, pies, cakes, sugar and flour. Whiskey was three cents a glass and the best cuts of sirloin seteak were three cents a pound. He says Decatur was livelier then than it is now.

DECATUR---

OLD AND NEW

by W. H. Tuttle

From a few years before until a few years after the breaking out of the Civil war, Decatur was quite a thriving little village, and, apparently, there was much more business going on here then than there is at the present time.

Outside of the Michigan Central there was no other railroad within forty or fifty miles of us, and all the farmers who had anything to sell, especially things which had to be shipped away, had to draw them to some place on the line of this road.

At that time Decatur had the reputation of being a first class wheat and live stock market, and those commodities were drawn here from as far away as twenty-five and thirty miles. All the loads of wheat had to be drawn up the long bridge to the top of the freight house and unloaded, and as only one load could go up at a time it was rather slow work.

What is now our pleasant little park was during the fall fairly covered with teams waiting their turn to drive up and unload, and many times farmers would have to stay in town over night because they could not get a chance to unload the same day they came in.

There are very few people left who were here fifty-five years ago, or at the beginning of the Civil war in 1861, and as to business men of the town not one of that time is still in business.

There are very few buildings left that were standing then. Of the stores on Main street I think that there is only one brick building occupied by the Racket Store and three wooden buildings that had been put up before that time, and if one were to try to give the names of the early merchants of that day, the present generation would scarcely recognize one of them.

There are some few residences still standing that were in existence then, but most of those have been altered and built onto so that if the original inhabitants could return they would hardly know their own homes.

I do not think that Decatur could possibly have had more than 600 or 700 inhabitants at that time, for the last census in 1910 found only 1400 people here, and surely the town must be at least twice as large as it was in the sixties.

There were hardly any buildings south of the railroad tracks, except the old tannery, and the ground was mostly covered with oak grubs.

In 1860 the children went to school in the Old Red School House, located on the back part of what is now Walt. Greenman's lot, and so far as I can remember, there was not another building north of there, no street in that direction, and heavy timber covered the ground where the Water Works and the present High School building are now located.

At the west end of town there was hardly anythig west of Williams street. I was too young to remember much about it but I know that we didn't have to go but a very short distance in any direction to get out into the country.

DECATUR'S BOOM

About 1866-67 Decatur had quite a boom and there was a large amount of building done for this small town.

A good many families moved here from Ohio, Indiana, and other states, and houses had to be built for them to live in. What it was that drew these outsiders here no one seemed to know, for there was no swamp land here to furnish people work then, but they came here for some reason.

Henry Rogers built the three square houses at the east end of Delaware street at that time, but they were pretty well out in the country then.

For a few years Decatur grew at a great rate, but the boom didn't last long. New railroads were built all around us, new villages and shipping points were established along their lines, they took away a good share of the wheat and stock shipments from Decatur, and our village settled back into a state of quietude.

We have never had any factories here to furnish employment for large number of men, and until the swamp land began to be improved we seemed to be going backward. But now the swamp makes work for a great many men, women and children, and brings a large amount of money into the town, and while it will neer grow to any great extent, it is probably as thriving and as well off as many towns that are much larger, and certainly it is a pleasant town to live in.

FINDING GOLD

During the summer of 1864 we had quite an excitement for a short time over the finding of gold in the swamp. A man by the name of Tucker lived at that time on what is now the Lewis farm on the New Swamp Road. This Tucker spread the report that he was finding gold in the swamp, and, as may be imagined it didn't take long to send a lot of men down there prospecting, for, if there was any gold to be dug out of the swamp there was a whole lot of folks here who would be glad to get hold of some of it.

I remember going with my father and a lot of other men down there to see what could be found; Tucker had dug a big hole in the ground, about ten or twelve feet deep. This hole must have been located nearly where the little grove and buildings are now just south of the Lewis home. It was partly filled with water, but with long-handled scoops they could bring up the black mud from the bottom, and then with a milk pan they would wash away the mud and in the bottom of the pan would be left a residue of a heavy black sand in which there were little specks of something that shone and sparkled, and was claimed to be gold.

But if it was gold—and I believe that point was never settled to a certainty—it was in such very minute quantities that one would have to work a long time to obtain a dollars worth.

There was a merchant here at that time by the name of Wiggins, and he was very much interested in the matter, and he exhibited a small chunk of what he claimed was gold. It was tested and weighed by Fred Smith, the jeweler, and he said that it was gold and weighed about a dollar's worth.

On the strength of this small nugget Wiggins tried to get up a company and sell stock, to lease land and explore for the precious metal. But the more that the little nugget was examined the more it looked like a gold coin melted and allowed to run into nugget shape on the ground, and the company fell through. But they certainly did wash out small specks of something that sparkled and glittered in the sunlight, for I washed out several panfulls myself, and father washed out some.

It looked like gold but if it was the specks were so very small that one would have to work hard all day to get enough to make twenty-five cents worth. Gradually people became convinced that it didn't amount to anything and the excitement died away, and now there is scarcely a person left in Decatur who remembers anything about it. There are very few persons left here who were here at that time.

THE ARTESIAN WELL

Another disappointment for Decatur came about fifty years ago. We had been promised an artesian well of medicinal water, if the town would bore a well deep enough, that would make Decatur a great health resort, and would bring many people and much money into the village and probably make every last one of us rich without any doubt about it.

I do not remember who it was that told us all this, but whoever it was he talked so convincingly that he made a number of men here believe it, and a company was formed here at once to bore the well. Jake Kissel, a blacksmith and wagon maker here at that time, was at the head of the company and also furnished the tools to do the boring. Some paid in money for their stock in the new enterprise and others gave work for their stock.

The well was begun and was located between the street line and the sidewalk a few rods east of the Duncombe House corner on Sherwood street and for awhile the town had high hopes of getting at least an artesian well, if it wasn't medicinal water. I don't remember how deep they succeeded in getting the well down—it was a good ways—but they didn't find water of any kind, and finally the hopes of obtaining an artesian well began to fade away and the stockholders became discouraged. About this time the borers lost the drill head in the well and couldn't get it out. Some were unkind enough to say that this was done purposely, to stop work and save their faces. However this effectually put a quietus on going any farther with the work, and it was given up.

As for electric railroads that were to connect us with surrounding towns and give us rapid and frequent service to nearby cities, gracious only knows how many right-of-ways have been granted to different roads, and every one of them has promised to have their cars running before snow flew again, and one company even went so far as to haul two wagon loads of dirt on their right of way near here, but no one has seen a single car running yet, and no prospects of any.

We did one time get a canning factory built here and it was run for a few years—at a loss all the time—then it burned up. After that we had a smaller canning factory for a while but now that has been abandoned and we have no place at all where people can dispose of their surplus fruit.

Our small grist mill burned down a few years ago, and now there is no place where people can get their own flour ground. The measure factory and the hoop factory are the only place sthe town can furnish indoor work for men, and there is nothing for women to do except a few jobs of picking over beans in the winter, and picking grapes in the summer.

Decatur has been extremely unfortunate in this way, and whenever a chance has been offered that would give employment to workers, something or someone would kick it all over, and if it wasn't for the swamp and the work it gives, it is hard to see what would become of the people who are obliged to work for wages.

The swamp makes a great deal of work for men, women and children in the summer time, and brings a great deal of outside money here out of the celery and peppermint oil crops, but during the winter time nearly every one has to lay off and wait for the spring to come, getting through the cold months as best they can.

Decatur is a nice little town to live in a factory or two would make it a good town to work in.

A BOY SOLDIER OF - THE CIVIL WAR

How Danny Got Into The Soldiers' Home at Chattanooga and Back to His Regiment at Atlanta

January 1, 1917

After spilling and spoiling the beans and while digesting that pie costing a dollar, a big sign above the selling booth reading "Like Mother's Pies",(?) which caused many pangs in hungry stomachs, Danny had plenty of time that hazy October afternoon to wonder and worry about supper, lodging, etc.

Accosting the old soldier with kindly eyes and corporal's stripes, I told him the whole story of my recent escapade, truthfully holding back nothing.

Learning that he was staying at the Soldiers' Home nearby and the head surgeon a relative of his, I had a friend in need on the spot. He said:, "Danny, you look pretty young and frail to be so far from your mother, trying to be a soldier. I'll take you to the surgeon and tell him you are from one of those temporary companies out on the hill and in the bustle, excitement and mixup out there they have no sick call and that you need help. After a minute's pause, he said "After that you must do the rest, but you better feel as bad as you can when Cap, that's the Surgeon, looks you over. Maybe he'll send you to the Soldier's home."

I then faced the Captain, giving him my regiment, company, where located and why I was in Chattanooga. "Well, son, how do you feel, tell us all about it", That was just about the cue Danny wanted.

"Well, I feel bad all over, no appetite, can't eat anything, (I'd just done a two hour's job on that pie) and they ain't got anything fit to eat up there, no cooks, they burn the beans (?), and scorch the beef and the hard tack is wormy and its two miles to lug wood every day, and, and I've had quite a fever today—(?)

"Let me see your tongue. Yes, your pulse is up. Jim, write this kid an order to the Soldier's Home."

ENTERS SOLDIERS' HOME

Danny had made out a good case. I took a prescription he handed me to another clerk and got a couple of bottles of medicine and some pills. I never took any of it, but I did take the home.

Dear Reader, did you ever leave the sunlit atmosphere of home, and all the multiple things that cherished word includes? Cutting all the thousand strings that bound you to it, tiny silken threads to be sure, but vibrating with love, joy, happiness, and then plunge out into the cold, careless world of greed and selfishness in a strange uncongenial environment with insufficient, nauseating food, scoffs and jeers for sacred things, with oaths and ribald stories vibrating in your ears and searing your heart? And if you did, do you remember the ceaseless yearning for home and home scenes and something clean and sweet and how dispirited and lonely you were, no one to confide in? Even the moon and stars were wrong and looked down with a cynical leer and you felt that goneness, nothingness, and utter despondency, one step from despair.

Well, that's how Danny felt when entering that Soldier's home. But what a revulsion, I never expect to be so near Heaven in this world as I was then. Courteous attendants, good food, well cooked, even Irish potatoes. What a contrast to that dollar dried apple pie! My cot had the same homey odor when I turned down the cover that the sheets and pillow slips had when mother was ironing at home and everything was clean. My sleep was refreshing with pleasant dreams of far away Michigan scenes and faces.

WHY DANNY ENLISTED

I had time those hazy October days to read and write and think. A new and different world had opened to the backwoods boy. Its impress was deep and vivid but disappointing. My ideals were shattered. I pondered on the motives which actuated my going into the army, the primal moving force. It was sudden, but why sudden? True I had a heart concussion that summer, that, well it stunned me and left a scorched and blistered heart. Her eyes were the deepest blue with a riot of shimmering golden hair, full pouting lips touched with nature's richest carmine, pink cheeks and velvety skin, O, why enumerate. She was wonderful to me. She wore a 25c "shaker" on her head and a shilling a yard calico dress with few frills, and furbelows, because it was made by hand, and that dress had a row of smoked pearl buttons up the back, so long and close together I could never count them.

Her name was Mattie and she was "the hired girl." She was two or three years older than I and more than ten years wiser. I took her to my first circus (but that is another story), that summer of 1864 and she was pretty sweet on Danny till Jeff Shafer came onto the scene with a ten dollar a day livery rig, and then he had his innings, and Danny was up in the air and went to war. A hankering to see the world and the spirit of adventure also lured me and further I was patriotic and loved the dear old flag under whose folds my grandfather and great grand father had fought.

Well, anyone reading this can easily see it was pure patriotism that prompted me to enlist (?), and its very uncommon now, after more than fifty years, when the old boys in blue tell how they saved the country, to give any reason, save unselfish patriotism, their country's need, why they joined the army.

In a few days trains were running to Atlanta. I got on top of a freight car one afternoon when the soldiers were climbing on top of each car to guard the train from guerillas. No one said anything to me, they were all strange. I had no particular right there, but I rode into Atlanta the next day after. Our train was wrecked near Big Shanty, but I made my way to my regiment.

The boys not having heard from me for a month thought the Johnnies had "gobbled me up."

VISITING MY BIRTHPLACE

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle

A short time ago I took it into my head that I would like to visit the scenes of my early childhood and the town where I entered into this world of trouble. The little town of Mendon, lying on the St. Joe. River and about twenty miles south of Kalamazoo, happened to be that fortunate—or unfortunate—locality, so one morning I jumped the train and wended my way thither. My last previous visit to Mendon was when I was seven years of age, and that figures out about sixty-two summers in the past.

Arriving there I found a small town of some 800 inhabitants, that last year had its business section almost entirely destroyed by fire. I was told that the town owned a fire engine but no water works, and when the big fire got nicely going in some unexplainable way their fire engine got away from the people and started on a journey of its own, running down the steep bank and clear out into the middle of the St. Joe. River where it stuck and refused to come out again. The population had to stand by and see their town burn up until they could send to Kalamazoo and Three Rivers and obtain help to extinguish the remnants of the fire. Now the town has commenced to build a water works plant to prevent a repetition of this disaster.

They are also rebuilding their stores on the main street, and possibly in time the village may be much better off than it was before the great fire. It certainly made a clean sweep of nearly every building on the main street.

Before I went to Mendon I had thought that Decatur was an extremely quiet place to live in; I do not believe that any one will accuse us of having a noisy or an exciting place of residence but I really never knew what quiet was until I struck Mendon. Decatur is a raging, roaring, volcano, or a fierce battle "Somewhere in France" compared to that town. They have a good hotel and I had a nice room looking out upon the river, but when I woke up sometime in the night actually I was frightened; I thought that perhaps I was dead and buried, it was so infernally still, and I had to get up and kick a chair over to make a little noise to compose my nerves enough so that I could go to sleep again. It was so still that it seemed unnatural; and it is almost as bad in the daytime.

I took a walk around the residence part of the town, and I walked for a good thirty minutes along the cement walks and never saw a single person or heard a sound except one lonesome bird that was trying to sing in a tree, and making a bad job of it. No children playing, nothing but a dead silence. And it was almost as bad down on Main street where they are rebuilding the burned blocks. There I could see a few men at work, carrying lumber, laying bricks, etc., but hardly a sound was to be heard—no singing, laughing, talking or banging things around, as men generally do when putting up a building. I'm sure I don't know how they did it.

Well, I succeeded in finding two ladies that I used to know when I was a kid; one of them was a playmate of mine in those far off days; neither one of them knew me, and could hardly be made to understand who I was when I told them my name and where I came from. Certainly I should not have known them. One of them—my former playmate—I had heard was dead years ago, and it was something like seeing a ghost to find her alive and in the flesh. After visiting these two ladies—and it didn't take long to satisfy both them and myself that we had visited a great plenty, I started out to see if I could find the place where my parents and grand parents had lived when they first came to Michigan, and where I was "borned" into this world. Fortunately one of the ladies that I called on, and who had lived there all her life, could tell me where it was, and I started out to find it. It was only a short distance outside of the village, good walks all the way, and well shaded, so it was a nice little walk. On the way out I passed a house where a lady sat under the trees picking over string beans, and I stopped and talked with her. She told me a lot about the old place—which was only a short distance further on—and she also said that there was a very old lady that lived near her that had resided there all of her life, and if I would stop on my way back that she would have her come over and talk with me, and that no doubt she would remember back to the time when my people lived there seventy years ago. I promised to stop, of course, and went on. I found the place where my folks had lived so long ago, but the house that they had lived in burned down many, many years ago. The burning of that house is one of my earliest recollections. Another house had been built in the same spot where the one that burned had stood, and it was surrounded by large trees that must have been there in our day.

Rafts on St. Joe River

The St. Joe River runs just a few rods in front of it, and my first remembrance of the place is that I used to see rafts float down the river loaded with all kinds of stuff going to St. Joseph to be shipped across the lake to Chicago; there were no railroads any where near there in those days, and everything had to go down the river on rafts, or else be hauled by team to Kalamazoo. I used to sit on the banks of the river and watch the rafts go by, and wish that I could go with them. The rafting business has been done away with for many years now; the country is cut up by railroads in every direction, and also the river has been dammed at various points to furnish electrical power which is sold to the towns in that vicinity for light and motors.. Mendon is lighted with current from a dam lower down the river, and now they are building a water works plant there which, I was told, was to be operated by electrical power from the same plant. Electricity is, or soon will be, king, and is one of the things that the world could hardly get along without; and what a very short time it has taken to bring it into such general use.

Well, I found the old place where my parents and my grandparents lived seventy years ago and where I was born, and I poked around there awhile but of course there was nothing there that I could remember except the river; the house was vacant and locked up, and it looked as though it was just ready to fall to pieces from old age; it was surrounded with very large trees that must have stood there more than seventy years, so I suppose that I must have played under them in my babyhood. While I was there looking around a man came along in a buggy —a buggy, mind you, not an auto— and he stopped and asked me what I was looking for, and I told him. He told me that he was the son of the man who owned the place and who had built the present house, and this gentleman told me much about the old place. As nearly as we could study it out his father must have bought the farm of my grandparents when they sold it and moved to Iowa, and had owned it ever since. He told me all that he knew about it, but that wasn't very much.

I soon got enough of it and started back to town. On my way back I stopped where I saw the lady under the trees, and sure enough she had the old lady there that she had spoken to me about. She told me that she was seventy-seven years old, and had lived there ever since she was three, and that she remembered my parents and grandparents when they lived on the old place and she was a child. She said she wasn't quite sure, but she felt pretty sure that she had seen and played with me when I was a baby. I had a good time visiting and looking around anyway, but I have no desire to ever go again.

I feel sure that if anyone wishes to take the rest cure that there is no better place on earth to get it than Mendon. Certainly nothing would disturb or excite one there. Mendon is a nice looking little town, with handsome residences, and I judge that the people are all, or nearly all, well-to-do in a money way, and it seems to be a very nice country all around there, and everything looks prosperous. In all my walks around the town and out in the country I saw nothing that looked like a cemetery, and I do not believe that they ever bury anyone there. When the inhabitants die I think that they blow away like thistle down.

Big Mill Not Wanted

Since coming back home I have heard a story about this town of Mendon, which, judging from what I saw, I have no doubt is strictly true. It is said that some time ago a large paper mill, employing a great many men, wished to put up a big dam in the river there to furnish power, and then they would erect a large mill that would furnish employment for a great many men, who would receive good wages and steady work. It was talked over, pro and con, by the inhabitants, but the business men of the town finally came to the conclusion that they did not want the big mill to come there and they were able to block the whole scheme. They reasoned in this way, "Now if this mill comes here of course it will bring many new men here and they will have their families with them as permanent residents; that will mean much more trading in our town and will bring in new business houses to supply the demand and cause competition, and that is just what we do not want. We want to remain as we are." —and they did. Another objection was that the mill might make a noise. So the big mill was built in some other town that wasn't afraid of competition and noise.

Well, I had a good time anyway, and I enjoyed my visit there, but a part of two days and one night were a great plenty to satisfy me, and I do not care to ever go again.

THE DECATUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS OPEN TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

Our schools offer opportunity to the young men and women of Decatur and vicinity to get a good fundamental education.

Our high school is on the "Approved List" of the U. of M. and our recommended graduates enter that institution and the several Normal and Denominational Colleges of Michigan without examination.

Our School Board is composed of the following members:
Isaac S. Dewey, President.
J. G. Hirst, Secretary.
Mrs. P. E. Pritchard, Treasurer
Dexter E. Brigham, Trustee
John Brigham, Trustee

The corps of teachers numbers fourteen, as follows:
E. R. Washburn, Superintendent, Science.
Edith M. Hewitt, B. A., Principal, Mathematics and Science.
Madeline McCrodan, Music and History
Helen A. Mills, B. A., B. Pd., English
Lucille Owen, B. A., Languages.
Ruth F. Rogers, B. A., Eighth Grade.
Ethel Ray, Seventh Grade.
Myrtle Knoll, Sixth Grade.
Ella M. Eckenberger, Fifth Grade.
Irene E. Durner, Fourth Grade.
Dorothy Criffield, Third Grade.
Ailsie B. Hall, Second Grade.
Ida M. Trowbridge, First Grade.
Anita Youell, Beginners.

Mr. Geo. B. McDole has been retained for another year as janitor, which insures our buildings being kept in a sanitary and wholesome condition.

Our community as a whole is very loyal to its schools, and the Patrons, Pupils and Teachers working together will make the year of 1915-1916 one of the very best in the history of Decatur.

THE ADVENTURES OF L. A. ROBERTS

by W. H. Tuttle.

When I sold my house I came across a whole trunkful of old letters, and among them was a bundle of old letters written by Lanson Roberts while he was in the army. The past winter I have been reading them over, and it seems to me that some of them are worth preserving.

CHANGING COURSE OF THE MISSISSIPPI

In one written while the siege of Vicksburg was going on he speaks of the canal that the Northern troops dug across the bend of the Mississippi river, in an effort to make the river dig itself out a new channel and thereby isolate Vicksburg by throwing it some three or four miles inland, and rendering it useless to the rebels as a fortification. The letter in part follows:

March 14, 1863
Camp above Vicksburg,

Well Jack, you say that you want me to write about this great raging canal we are building, that, if successful, will make Vicksburg an inland town, and render it useless to the rebels as a fortification, so here goes.

General Butler commenced the thing, you know, but he did but very little to it, in fact almost nothing. They cut a narrow ditch across the point, but it was begun too low down where there was an eddy in the upper end, and the water had no force to dig its own channel. We have commenced a new ditch a little higher up, where the river rushes against the Louisiana shore with great force, and I think that will be a big help in digging out the new channel.

Butler's ditch was a very crooked concern, through heavy timber and a cypress swamp, but we have made a straight cut, digging and blasting out the trees and stumps, and throwing out the dirt sixty feet wide, and as deep as we can work in the swampy soil; and now we have two dredging machines at work making it still deeper.

The water rushes through with great force at present, and I think that in time it will wear out a commodious channel for the passage of boats through, and thereby avoiding Vicksburg altogether. It has cost a great deal of labor to get this thing through, and at the same time our forces have been building another canal from Lake Providence. This lake is connected with Red River by Bayou Macon, and I am told that it will make a cut of about thirty miles nearer to Port Hudson than by our canal, and be much safer for the rebels have a heavy battery that commands the foot of our canal.

I have been thinking lately that perhaps our canal was just a bluff to attract the attention of the rebs, while Gen. Grant was pushing through the work at lake Providence. Every night or two our boys fit up an empty coal barge so that it looks like an iron clad, and set the thing adrift down past Vicksburg. This is good fun for us, for the rebels make a pretty hullabaloo with every thing that they can shoot at it, and I tell you they make things jingle. It costs them about $4,000 worth of ammunition every time we send down an old barge, so you see they are well sold.

In another place Mr. Roberts speaks about the health of our soldiers as follows:

"As to the sickness in the army here, there has been a great deal, and it could not well be otherwise. When we left Helena, so many were crowded onto the boats, the bad water and continual rains, and fighting our way through to Arkansas Post, of course our men suffered very much, both with sickness and wounds. Our boys were unused to the continual rain, fogs and damps, and now the small pox has helped to do the deadly work, and has carried off many men."

Soon after this the 9th Iowa was transferred back to Vicksburg again, and he writes about it as follows:

"The siege of this place is likely to take some time yet, perhaps three or four months longer, but if you could see the hills round about it, and the fortifications you would not think it any very easy job. How, or in what manner, the place will be taken I can't tell you, but we will fetch them after awhile in some way if we have to dig a tunnel under the town and then blow them up.

We have a strong fleet of gunboats and rams here, and some of them would make you laugh, for they are certainly the oddest looking things that I, or anyone else ever saw. The only description that I can give you of them is that they are the homeliest things on earth, but they carry some very heavy guns, and I think they will make their mark when called on."

In speaking about the copperheads in the North, and what they were doing, Mr. Roberts says:

"I got hold of a copperhead New York paper a few days ago that had an account of the battle at this place, and it stated that we lost ten thousand men killed in the fight and had six thousand more men drowned.

I wish that Old Abe would arrest and exterminate the whole disloyal crew. We keep having reports that they are resisting the draft in some states, and we hear that they have been having a big riot in Detroit about the draft. If this is true you had better go to work up there and kill off those infernal copperheads, for that is what they need, and it will have to be done sooner or later. When you write let me know if the new draft law will hit you. I don't see how you could possibly leave home."

Mr. Roberts had been promised promotion, for some service that he had rendered, but someone else who had more influence than he did beat him out of it, and he was disappointed. He writes:

"Our Colonel tells us that our regiment will be mustered out next June, and I am glad of it on account of my family who need me at home so badly. I know now that I shall not get the place that I was promised when I got back. I suppose that I might have had my shoulder straps if I had stooped to wire working, and had promised something to someone else, but I want a clean record when I go out of the army and return home.

"The troops have about all left here except the 15th army corps, so I suppose that we will have to hold Vicksburg and vicinity this winter, but that will be better than marching around the country in the mud".

The following extract was written soon after Mr. Roberts joined the army and while he was stationed at Helena, Ark.:

Helena, Ark., Nov. 30, 1862.

"I wish that you could see our drill here; it looks like soldiering in earnest. Yesterday the batteries, forts and gunboats were all firing for a long time. Today the flying artillery came out and kicked up a devil of a dust. We only have to drill about three hours a day and guard duty is light. We only have to stand guard 4 hours in the twenty-four, two hours in day time and two hours at night.

"Our fare is better here than it was in Davenport. We get hard bread and flour, and the contrabands bake us excellent bread. We have fresh beef and bacon and beautiful sweet potatoes, as fine as any that I ever saw in California. We miss the milk and butter the most of anything. All the butter that we get is shipped here from the north and costs 25 cents per pound, and we cannot afford to buy much at that. Salt costs twenty-five dollars per barrel and whiskey is three dollars per pint.

There have been reports of an attack on this place for a long time, but if the rebs ever expected to take this city they have waited too long, for the city is now strongly fortified at every point. General Carr is in command here and is called an able officer. He has constructed a strong fort in the city mounted with heavy guns, and for miles above and below the city it is one vast encampment of troops and batteries without number.

There is no hope of the rebels ever attacking us here, for besides the fortifications and army there is a perfect hornet's nest of gunboats anchored in the river, which alone could whip any force that the enemy has. The country here is far different from what I expected to see. It is the best timbered country that I ever saw, and the land is excellent.

"If it was not for the cursed influence of slavery this would be one of the finest countries in the world, but everything here has a shiftless, tumble down appearance that you do not see on the farms of the north. If the Yankees had hold of the land for a few years it would look very different.

"Our army is stripping the plantations of everything available on them; our soldiers are burning the fences as fast as they need them for fuel in camp. There are several thousand acres of cotton in sight of our camp, with not a rail left around it, and the crop is all being wasted. It looks bad to see so much wasted when it is wanted so badly; but such things are the terrible effects of war, and I tell you the rebs are beginning to feel it in this state, and I think that our officers mean to make them feel it with a vengeance unless they surrender and come back under the old flag.

"Well, Jack, about this arming of the slaves, it is all humbug. The camp and country is full of them, but they don't know enough to fight, and you couldn't beat the drill into their heads in a thousand years. They make splendid hands to work on the fortifications and do the camp drudgery and we employ them largely in this work. They work for us willingly and at a small price, and it relieves the soldiers of a great many burdens.

It seems to be the general impression that the war will end in the spring, because our force is now large enough to whip the rebs and when they see that they are to be overpowered they will sue for peace and so try to save their lives, for they know that if the President's proclamation is enforced their slaves are gone forever. It is a hard question and I wish that it was settled."

The above was written in November, 1862, but it took several more springs and much hard fighting to settle the war.

Another letter from him dated "Near Helena, Ark., November 4, 1862.", says:

"I tell you Jack, the Confederates did Uncle Sam a great favor when they passed their act that every citizen should plant an extra crop of corn, and but three acres of cotton to the hand, for that corn we have got now, and our army is subsisting off it this winter, without money and without price; so good luck, I say, for their bold stroke of policy. It is saving the government many a dollar, in the way of transportation and buying the grain. There are thousands of bushels of corn standing in the fields here now; and our army is gathering and storing it for their own use. Until last year there was no corn planted here, it was all cotton, because that paid the best, and they bought their corn and bread stuffs in the north.

"Well, Jack, as to my opinion about General McClellan's being superceded, I think it was all right; it will not hurt him any more than it did General Frèmont. I believe that both of them were sacrificed by political intrigue, and that both of them were true patriots, all reports to the contrary, notwithstanding."

These old letters are quite a bit more than fifty years old, and every one named in them is dead, and some of the letters are so faded and torn that they are almost illegible, and it is hard to make them out. To the present generation who have been born and have grown up, since those far-away days, it must seem almost impossible that this country was ever fighting amongst themselves in this way. But at that time it was a very bitter fact, and we passed through some very hard times. I am sure that those who remember those days never want to see another war here if it can possibly be avoided.

All of the older inhabitants of Decatur will remember L. A. Roberts, who lived here from about 1867 until his death in 1891.

"Lant" as he was familiarly called, lived rather a checkered life in his younger days. At the time of his death he was postmaster here, and was succeeded in the office by Miss May Nicholson.

Mr. Roberts was a younger brother of my mother, and naturally, I heard much about him, even when I was too young to remember him myself. The great ambition of his younger days was to go to West Point and become an officer in the regular army, but that was impossible, as the family were poor and had no influence to get him appointed as a cadet. In those days, even more than now, such things went by favor.

But there was a roving streak running through the Roberts family that would not allow him to settle down quietly at home. So when he was about eighteen years old he hired out to drive horses through to California, overland, in the early days of the gold excitement, and in that way he earned his way to the El Dorado of those times. He arrived in San Francisco, or Yerba Buena, as it was called then, with nothing in his pockets, but full of youth, health and ambition.

On the way across the plains he met with many adventures, fighting off Indians, horse thieves and wild animals, but I do not remember the particulars of many of them.

HORSES STOLEN BY INDIANS

I remember hearing him tell how on one very dark and stormy night, the Indians managed to stampede their drove of horses and tried to get away with them. Lant and another man of the company were ordered to go after them, and recover them if possible. There were only two horses left that the Indians had not succeeded in running off, so only two men could go.

They mounted the two nags and started, not knowing whether or not they would return alive. The night was pitch dark and it was storming terribly; they could not see even a rod ahead of their horses heads, and they knew that at any moments the horses might step into some hole and throw their riders over their heads, probably breaking the horse's and rider's necks.

They followed those Indians all night long, guided mostly by the noise made by the drove ahead of them. The Indians had no idea that anyone would try to follow them in the darkness and storm, so they were not as careful as they would have been under other circumstances.

Just after daylight they came upon the Indians and immediately charged into their camp where they were lying around at ease and in fancied security. The Indians at once prepared to defend themselves, but not knowing how many white men had attacked them, and having only bows and arrows to defend themselves against the two Colt's revolvers and a rifle carried by each white man, they were soon put to flight. Lant and his companion gathered up the horses and returned to their own camp in triumph. This was only one of the adventures that befell them on their way across the plains, but they finally reached San Francisco in good shape.

BOUND FOR AUSTRALIA

After resting awhile Lanson started for the mines with the intention of digging enough gold to carry him back home and make the old folks comfortable for the rest of their lives. He worked in the mines about a year, and by that time had accumulated what he considered to be a competence, and was making arrangements to start for home in a few days, when one night it was all stolen from him.

In the mining camps there was no place where the miners could keep their gold dust and nuggets in safety, so every man was obliged to keep his treasure on his person or in his tent and one night some thief cut through the back side of their tent and stole every last cent that he and his partner had.

Alanson was so discouraged by this misfortune that he immediately threw up his claim and worked his way back to San Francisco, went down to the docks and shipped on a vessel as a sailor to work his way to Australia, another place where gold had just been discovered.

He left San Francisco so down hearted over his loss that he never wrote home a word about it or where he was going, and for some years all of his relatives supposed that he must be dead, and had no expectation of ever seeing him again.

One of the very first things that I can remember, when I was about four years old, was that my mother had a letter from him, while he was still working in the mines and in it were a few flakes of gold, just as it was washed out of the dirt, and also he enclosed several little instruments on a ring that he said the Chinese used to clear out their ears and nostrils. I have often wished that these things might have been saved, but I suppose that they must have been burned up when our log house burned.

RETURNED AFTER FIVE YEARS

After that nothing more was heard of him for years and we supposed that he was dead, just as thousands of other men disappeared and were never heard of again in those days. I can remember yet how my mother used to mourn and cry because Alanson was gone, and she could never see him again. He was her favorite, and as he was so much younger than she was, he was more like a son to her than a brother.

After an absence of about five years he reappeared as suddenly as he had disappeared, and his story was that when he left San Francisco he had shipped on a sailing vessel for Australia, touching on the way at the Sandwich Islands and other islands in the south Pacific, finally landing at the city of Sidney. From there he went to the gold mines, but his ill-luck pursued him and he did not stay very long.

Returning to Sidney, he shipped again on a sailing vessel bound for the Isthmus of Panama. Crossing the Isthmus to the Atlantic side he worked his way back to New York on a steamer. He used to tell many interesting stories about his experiences while crossing the Pacific back and forth, but it would take up too much space to repeat them. He said for one thing, that in the Sandwich Islands in those days, one could buy all the fruit, bananas, pine-apples, cocoanuts, and all other kinds, that could be piled into a boat, for an empty glass bottle, and if the bottle happened to be full of whiskey one could buy half of the whole islands.

Once they were chased by the natives in their canoes, and if they had been caught would undoubtedly have been all murdered, but a storm came up in the nick of time and the canoes had to put back to land and they got away.

The captain of the vessel that he came across the Pacific on was very brutal to his men, and liked nothing better than to get an excuse to knock them down and then confine them in the ship's calaboose. One day he called Mr. Roberts, with one or two other sailors, up onto the quarter deck and offered them glasses of wine, which of course they were glad to get, and they swallowed it at once. Lant said they managed to get the stuff down but it proved to be the strongest and sourest vinegar that could be imagined. They all realized that if they made any fuss about drinking it, or if they spat it out, or made up a face over drinking it, that they would get batted over the head with the first thing that came handy, and then be confined in the ship's prison for a week or two. In those days, and it is so now more or less, a captain of a vessel was absolute master of life and death while on the sea, and the law would uphold him in anything that he saw fit to do.

JOINING THE ARMY

A short time after returning home Mr. Roberts married and removed to Iowa, where he remained on a farm until the breaking out of the Civil War then, of course, he was crazy to be "in it". He raised a company in his own county, and was commissioned captain of it in '61 and they were appointed as a part of the 9th Iowa Volunteers. Before they left the state his wife was taken very sick, his business affairs were in a very tangled condition, he had three small children to be taken care of, and he decided that his duty lay at home, for the time being He resigned his commission, rented his farm, and came back to Michigan He always said that he could not bear to stay there and see the boys go of while he remained behind.

He came to Hamilton, where my people lived, in the fall of '61, and went into a sawmill. He stood it until the summer of '62, and then it became too much for him to remain at home while all that lovely fighting was going on down south. He threw up the sawmill, arranged to have his family taken care of, and went back to Iowa and enlisted in his old company as a private, serving through the war as a private in the same company of which he had been captain.

He was present at the siege and surrender of Vicksburg, and also at the siege and capture of Atlanta, and at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain where his regiment experienced some hard fighting. He followed Sherman on his "March to the Sea" and went with this same general on his victorious advance through South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Washington, and took part, as one of Sherman's bummers, in the grand parade in that city in the month of May, 1865, that ended the war.

After his discharge from the army he returned to Decatur for a short time and then went back to Iowa and remained a year or two, finally coming to Decatur again. He built the house south of the railroad that is now owned by the McOmber family, and lived here until his death in 1891.

Mr. Roberts suffered much in his later years from the effects of his army life, as probably every old soldier has who saw much active service; but now, after an adventuresome and lively life in his youth, he sleeps quietly in our cemetery, where all the rest of us will, sooner or later, join him.

Greenville, Miss., April 24, 1863.

I have not very much news to write you at present. We are foraging some and gathering up the blacks for the service and to work on the plantations.

An order was read to our regiment on dress parade last evening that no more cotton gins were to be burned, as it is the policy of the government now to put all of the blacks to work on the plantations raising cotton for the benefit of the government. I like this and think it a wise step.

Yesterday Gen. Steele called the regiments together and made us a long speech, in which he stated that the policy of the government now was to protect every black that came within our lines, and all who are capable of making good soldiers will be armed as soon as formed into regiments, and properly drilled; the balance of them to be put to work on the deserted plantations of the rebels.

Good for Gen. Steele. He was followed by several others, amongst whom was our own brigadier, of whom we are so proud for his gentlemanly conduct, both as a soldier and as a good man. May God bless him. Gen. Theyer always had time to stop and speak a kind word to a soldier, and doesn't think it a disgrace either. I know a good many lieutenants who would not think of stooping so low as to converse with a private soldier, but we know who our friends are and so does Gen. Steele.

Gen. Thayer called upon every officer and private to do all that they could to protect and encourage the blacks. These things were all well received by the troops, for they begin to see that if black regiments can be raised that will be effective, that it will relieve them of a great deal of hard work and lots of hard fighting, and I think that every man is willing to do his best in the matter.

I suppose that some of these things will make some of the copperhead brethren howl louder than ever, and yell "unconstitutional" to beat all. When some of the old regiments get home they will either shut up or get their wind pinched off. Such men as old————will have to skeedaddle. I wish that Jack had broken his d—d old head.

Lieut. Jones came up from Vicksburg yesterday, and he informs us that the report that the gun boats and transports were running past the Vicksburg batteries is true. Only one boat—the Henry Clay—was lost. She was the oldest and poorest transport on the river and her loss is nothing. He says that six more boats are about ready to run past the batteries; they are packing them around the boilers and the guards so they could not be cut up with shot. They are best and the fastest boats on the river and they will go past the batteries or else go to the bottom of the river tonight. They are manned by volunteers from the different regiments.

Well, Jack I like your letters about slavery and the war, and we wish more felt just as you do about it. We like to get such letters—for you may be sure that all of the boys in our company read them—they are good and new to us, even if it is an old question, and they do much to encourage the boys to know that the folks at home home believe that we are fighting for the right.

The boys in our regiment caught another spy day before yesterday; he was sneaking around in the underbrush near camp, trying to find out what he could about us, and he boasted that he had been inside of our camp at two different times, but he will never come again for he was shot this morning. Love to all the folks and to my own family.

RECOLLECTIONS OF SIXTY YEARS AGO

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

My memory goes back to a little more than sixty-five years, and how many things have happened in that time, not only to myself personally, but to everyone and the world at large.

At that time, and in this part of the country, many people lived in log houses, and they had almost none of the things that we consider necessaries of life.

To be sure we had railroads in a rough way, and could get to some places quicker by using them than we could by going with horse or ox team in the old fashioned way. But the railroads then built were short, and the equipment was very different from the luxurious and high speed trains now in common use. Changes and waits at the terminals of these short roads were very numerous and frequent, and if one had to go any distance, even a railway journey was no joke, but long and tiresome.

THE TELEGRAPH

The telegraph had just come into use, but it was very seldom used except for business purposes, and then only in case of extreme urgency. Very few ever thought of sending personal messages, not even in cases of death, and if some family did by chance have a message sent to them, they were too frightened to open it, and it was a nine days wonder to the whole neighborhood.

The telegraph in those days was a very crude affair, compared with the highly developed system of the present. Then in every small office and many of the largest ones, messages were all received on a paper tape, printed out in dots and dashes, instead of by sound as now.

At first the telegraph companies positively forbade their operators to receive messages by sound, even when they could, claiming that it was not safe to do so. Now it seems safe to say, that sooner or later, the telegraph itself will be entirely superceeded by the telephone, and telegrams and telegraph operators will be a thing of the past.

It requires only that the telephone be made perfect—which it is not yet by a good deal—and then it is good night for the telegraph operators. It requires considerable time and study to become an expert telegrapher, but anyone can listen at a telephone receiver.

Many other things in common use today, and that we think we could not even exist without, had not been even dreamed of in the wildest flights of fancy by the most advanced scientists and inventors of those days.

OTHER INVENTIONS

About forty-five years ago Jules Verne, a great writer of highly improbable stories, wrote "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea", and while nearly everyone read it they all, without exception, ridiculed and made sport of it. The advanced scientists refused to believe that such a boat could by any possible means be made to navigate under water in the way described by this book. It is probable that Jules Verne himself did not believe that it could ever be accomplished, but now such boats are in common every day use by the hundred, both waging war and carrying merchandise across the ocean; and not only are they a perfect success, but in many ways the submarines of today are built very much as the one described by Verne.

Who would have believed even twenty years ago that men would fly in the air like birds, but today thousands of flying machines are in constant use and they carry cannon and fight desperate battles in the air. It was said that no heavier-than-air machine could ever raise and sustain itself in the air.

It is very unsafe to make predictions as to what will or will not come to pass in the future. At the Centennial Exposition held in Philadelphia only forty years ago last summer, they had no electric lights, no telephones, no electric motors of any kind, and all the street cars were drawn by horses and mules.

They had no airships, no submarine boats, no automobiles, no wireless telegraphy for more than twenty years after that time, and as we try to look into the future we cannot possibly conceive how many new inventions may be brought forth into everyday use in the same length of time in the future.

EARLIEST RECOLLECTIONS

My personal recollections began when I was about four years old, and the first thing that I distinctly remember was that my folks had an out door cellar for the keeping of potatoes and other such produce. This cellar had a board roof over it that slanted both ways down to the ground, and I took it into my head that it would be great fun to climb to the top of it and then slide down to the ground, which I proceeded to do, but it so happened that there was a short end of a nail sticking up through one of the boards, and as I took a slide downward I went over this nail and it took a pretty good strip of skin and flesh from my leg, and caused me to howl right lustily. Mother rushed to the rescue of course and it was bound up and doctored as well as she could do it with very little to do with, for people did not have all the remedies at hand then that they do now-a-days. I was a pretty lame boy for some time, and I carry the scar of the adventure to this day.

The next thing that comes to my mind with any clearness was Christmas of the same year. I remember hanging my stocking up under the mantle of the big stone fireplace. I implicitly believed that Santa Claus came down the chimney and filled the stocking with presents, but at the same time I had an idea that father and mother knew what he was going to bring me, and when father was putting me into bed that evening I asked him all manner of questions about old Santa and what he was likely to leave for me. Father told me that if I didn't get into bed and go to sleep before Santa got there that he would be likely to go away and not leave me anything. That sent me off in a hurry, for I always thoroughly believed everything that father told me.

As soon as it was the least bit light in the morning I was awake and out of bed to get that stocking and see what was in it, and I found a little tin horse that rolled on wheels, a tin trumpet and several chunks of rock candy. Well, I can tell the children of the present day who get so many presents at Chistmas time that are both beautiful and complicated, that those few little things of mine were considered to be an elaborate lot of presents, and were far more than most children got for Christmas in those days. Anyway they suited me to a T, and I made that little tin trumpet squawk for a good many days, no doubt to the great delight of the grown ups who had to hear it. As for the rock candy, why, that was delicious and lasting because it was so hard that it couldn't be eaten. I could only lick it and of course it lasted a long time: as for the little tin horse, he was a joy without end and I drew him around on his wheels until there wasn't anything left of him.

BURNED OUT

The next thing I remember happened in February of that same winter, that was being awakened out of a sound sleep on a very cold winter's morning about four o'clock, by being pitched out through a window into a snowbank, because the old log house was all in flames while the folks were asleep. I had a little dog that had been given to me, which I called Fido. I thought a great deal of him, and when the house was all in flames they tried to get Fido out but he ran under the bed and wouldn't come out, so he was burned alive.

I can remember plainly yet, after sixty-five years, hearing poor Fido yelp and cry when the roof fell in on him and the fire touched him. For weeks afterward I pestered father and mother with the question "Why did God let Fido be burned up, when he hadn't done anything wrong?" but I never got any answer to that query. Even yet I can't understand how my folks lived through the rest of that winter. Almost everything they had in the way of furniture, clothing and bedding was burned, and they had to move into a house that was only partly finished. They had to lay down loose boards for a floor, and to cap the climax, it was an extremely cold winter and nearly everyone was sick.

THE HOME MADE CASKET

My father had a good farm and a saw mill, and after they got to going again they were fully as well off as anyone living in that neighborhood. We always had plenty to eat, because we raised it, and we had comfortable things to wear, but up to the time the civil war broke out I don't believe that father ever had ten dollars at any one time that he could call his own.

There was hardly any money in circulation at that time and business was carried on by barter—trading one thing for another. One man in a neighborhood owned a plow and all the neighbors borrowed it; another would have a drag, and that would go the rounds; and so it was with all the tools. Everyone had to help everyone else or they could not have gotten along at all.

All this part of Michigan was then solid woods, with just a patch cut out here and there for a house; timber was worth nothing and the only question was how to get rid of it the easiest way. I have heard my father say that after the logs were sawed into lumber it wasn't worth drawing to Decatur, and I have seen enough timber burned up in the logging fallows to make the owner rich if it had been allowed to stand until now.

The next thing that stands out prominently in my memory shows how easy it is for children to receive the wrong impressions by having their questions answered wrongly by the grown ups, either through a misunderstanding or intentionally, because the older ones think that it is smart to give the child a wrong answer just for the fun of it.

I must have been about six years old when Mrs. Sterns, an aged lady who lived near us, died. You could not come to town in those days and buy a casket any time it was needed, as you can now, but when someone died you had to go find a carpenter and get him to make one. When Mrs. Storns passed away they asked my uncle, Will Tuttle, to make a casket for her, and he did the work in an upstairs room to our house.

While he was engaged in the task, I of course, was hanging around and asking all manner of questions about it; finally I picked up a plane that lay on the work bench and asked uncle Will what it was, and he, either not understanding what I meant or not thinking about it told me that it was a "coffin." I thoroughly believed all that he told me, and from that time on a plane was a coffin to me, and to this day it seems to me that a plane ought to be called a coffin.

The men around the mill and the farm were always giving me wrong answers to my innumerable questions, but I think that it is a very bad practice. Children ought to always be told the truth, or if you do not know the proper answer they ought to be told plainly that you do not know.

THE LITTLE SISTER

I know that I received some very queer ideas concerning things because the men misled me in answering my questions. Of course, a child can ask questions that the smartest men can not answer, but in that case they ought to be told that no one knows why nor how, instead of being fooled.

The next thing that impressed itself on my memory happened when I was six years old. This was the birth of my little sister and it mystified me much. Mother was sick and I was not allowed to see her, something that had never happened before, and I did not know what to make of it. I kept asking my father why I couldn't go where ma was and he told me that she was very sick but would soon be well again and then I could see her; and then one afternoon they took me into the room where mother was and showed me a tiny baby, and mother called me to her and told me that the baby was my sister and that I must love her and always take good care of her.

I did not care nearly so much about the baby as I did getting my ma back, but my curiosity was a good deal excited as to where they got the baby and they told me that one of our old neighbors, old Mrs. Sterns, had found it in her garden under a currant bush, and as she was too old to take care of a baby she had brought it over for my mother to take care of. That satisfied me for the time being but for a good many days afterward I went around looking under all the currant bushes to see if I couldn't find a baby myself.

And how the time has flown away; that baby grew up to womanhood, married and had a child of her own, grew old, was a helpless cripple for a long time and now has been dead over ten years, and her child has grown to womanhood, married and has a large family of her own.

FIRST DAYS IN SCHOOL

The next thing that struck me with force enough to make a lasting impression on my mind, was being pitched into school head over heels. Mother told me to keep quiet and induced me to learn something at home, I supposed that it was only bad boys who wouldn't try to learn anything at home who had to go to school, and I got it in my head that going to school was about the next thing to going to jail. One morning father hitched up the horses and he and mother took me and got into the wagon. Of course I wanted to know where we were going and when they told me they were taking me to school, I put up a good deal of protest and kicked my hardest. I promised that if they wouldn't take me to school I would study at home and be an extra good boy all the time from then on, but it was no use, I had to go and make the best of t.

The first forenoon mother had to stay there with me to keep me from utterly collapsing or breaking out and running away and they had to promise that father would come after me when school was out. What a silly little coward I must have been, but there was some excuse for it because I had never had any children to play with and did not know how to make friends with the other scholars. Besides that it was two miles through the thick woods most of the way to the Haydon School House. As soon as I got acquainted with the other scholars and became interested in my studies, nothing could keep me at home, and I would go even if it rained pitchforks.

I not only liked to go to school but I liked to play "Hi-Spy" around the trees in the yard and the corner of the building. I went to school there during the summers of 1856 and 57, then the Nesbitt schoolhouse was built and I went there afterward as it was much nearer my home. How many of the scholars that I played with in those two schools are dead now, and those who are still alive are old, old men and women—I am old, too, but it is still fresh in my memory.

One other thing made a great impression on my mind, young as I was, and that was politics. Up to the time that Fremont was nominated for President in 1856, my father had always voted the Democratic ticket, but at that time he changed his views and voted and talked for Fremont, and it made a good deal of a stir.

His father, my grandfather, was a stiff, old-fashioned Democrat, and he quarreled with father about it and wouldn't stay with us any more.

He called my father a "turn coat" and a "black abolitionist," and went off in a huff and it was a long time before the family quarrel was healed. How silly such political quarrels seem to us now, but then they were very real, and they broke up many families, especially when the Civil War began. It took real grit to stand up for your principles in those days.

Of course I remember many other things that happened in those days but this is a great plenty of it.

BOYHOOD AMBITIONS

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

When Cousin Jimmy and I were anywhere from twelve to fifteen years old, it seemed to us that the height of earthly bliss would be to lead the lives of trappers and hunters somewhere out in the unknown and unsettled west. At that time the west was almost an unknown wilderness, and was only peopled by Indians and a few hunters and trappers, and we fully decided that we would make that our business as soon as we became old enough to go away from home. We read and studied everything that we could get hold of on the subject.

Probably there never were two boys less fitted to go away from home and mother, and into the woods to live, than we were, but we didn't think of that part of the story. We got our knowledge out of Beadle's Dime Novels, and in those interesting books the hunters' life was pictured as being all fun and enjoyment, and nothing was said about the hardships of such a life.

Jimmy never came to the farm to visit me but that he brought a lot of the classics of that day, Beadles Dime Novels, and vice a versa, when I visited him in Dowagiac, and how we did enjoy those Indian and hunting stories. We implicitly believed every word in them.

But, in the meantime, until we became old enough to go away from home, we must do something to pass away the time, when we were not in school, and we spent whole days shooting at a mark to perfect ourselves in the use of the rifle and doing other such stunts.

PARENTS ENCOURAGED THEM

Our folks knew all about our plans, and they were wise enough not to try to frustrate them by force, because they knew us two boys too well to think that we would ever go out into the woods to live away from the comforts of home.

In later years I learned that the two families held a council over this very matter, and my father told the rest that there wasn't the least danger that we would even try to go anywhere where we wouldn't be sure of having a good bed at night and plenty of good things to eat through the daytime, and where we wouldn't have father and mothe rto run to when we got into any kind of trouble.

He thought that the wisest plan was to let us entirely alone and not to try to oppose us, and the coming years would cure our foolish notions, and it was settled on that basis. He was a good old father, I never realized how good until after he was gone. After that they let us entirely alone on that subject; they didn't oppose us in any way, let us hunt and fish to our heart's content, and read all the Indian stories, and talk and plan about it all that we saw fit, and the end proved that father was right, for by the time that we got large enough to think of doing anything for ourselves, why, we had other fish to fry, and the hunting and trapping life died a natural death. We never even thought of it after we got to be old enough to go to work.

PLANNING FOR THE ROCKIES

I really think if parents would try to guide, and not force, children more than they do that they would have better success with them. I know that if our parents had opposed us in this matter, and had said positively that we must give it all up and not think of it any more, and that we must quit reading Dime Novels entirely, then we would have done those things on the sly just the same, and at the same time we should have thought that we were terribly misused and oppressed; but as it was we were allowed to read anything that we liked and planned openly and without restriction, and the consequence was that the whole thing went a glimmering in a short time and left no hard feelings.

Of course we should never have gone off to the Rocky mountains to hunt and fish, under any circumstances, for we were both too fond of the comforts of home, but we thought that we wanted to go awful bad, and we took a great deal of pleasure in talking about it, but all that foolishness passed away after a short time.

My mother even helped us plan as to what we had better take with us and told us what we would be likely to need out there in the mountains and I really think that one thing made us think and realize more about what we were fixing to go into than anything else that they did, and it began to open our eyes a little too.

Mother explained to us that when we got out there in the mountains we wouldn't be apt to find good houses to sleep in every night and that much of the time we would have to lie out in the rain and snow and cold, and that we must prepare ourselves accordingly to endure it. That was a new side of the question to us, and it didn't look quite as nice as Beadle's Dime Novels made it out to be, but it only discouraged us for a few moments, and then we forgot all about the hardships and went on with our planning.

SURVEY AND WRITING A BOOK

Amongst other things that Jimmy and I calculated to do was to become great explorers and discoverers, and, to get our hand in and practice up we went at it to explore and map out our mill-pond and the creeks round our mill and the farm.

I do surely wish that I had kept that map we made so that I could see what it looked like. We followed the pond and creek for miles up and down, and every little bay in the pond and turn in the creek were faithfully marked on our map, and we named them all.

I can forget now things that have happened only a week or two ago completely, but all that we two boys did then is still fresh in my mind, and I remember every name that we gave those little creeks and the bays in the old mill-pond and the woods round about them. My, but it was great fun.

Then Jimmy and I, to utilize our evenings, decided that we would write a novel, in imitation of Mr. Beadle, and we used to spend an hour or two every evening writing our story. Of course it was to be an Indian story of adventure in the far west, and it was to be all about hunting and trapping, and the scene of it was laid in the Rocky mountains. When we finished it we expected to send it to Mr. Beadle, and we had no doubt whatever but that he would be glad to publish it, and that it would make us both rich.

But other things happened, and we never got the book done. I would give quite a bit to see now that book that Jimmy and I partially wrote, but with many other things it is gone beyond recall.

Those boyhood days, gone forever, and everyone and every thing connected with them, are all gone. The old mill and the pond, the houses and the woods, gone. The creek is there yet, but no one would recognize it as it used to be. That was the life that was worth living, and I am only sorry that I cannot go back to it.

SOME OLD PAPERS

by W. H. Tuttle

A short time ago I had a box full of old papers given to me, and some of them are quite curiosities. One was a copy of the "Van Buren County Tribune," published in Decatur by C. P. Sweet, and the date of it is July 23, 1863, right in the middle of the civil war. One would naturally expect some very interesting news in a paper of that time, when the war was in full blast, big battles being fought often, and many of the boys and men from our own town in the army and exposed to all the dangers of army life. But not one single word of local news, or anything about the Decatur boys that were away fighting their country's battles. It is no wonder that the paper failed; the only strange thing about it is that it ever existed at all.

In this copy I find an oration delivered here in Decatur on the Fourth of July 1863, by Hon. Thomas M. Cooley of Ann Arbor, making about six columns, about half a column of poetry and a few little anecdotes and a couple of orders from the war department, and that is every bit of reading matter. Then there are about four and a half columns of Decatur and Paw Paw advertisements and business cards by the merchants, two columns from Kalamazoo, and a few foreign ads. The main thing seemed to be medical advertisements, of which there are over six columns from different physicians and patent medicine ads, all guaranteeing to cure every ill that the flesh is heir to. And what horrible looking things these ads. are—in some of them part of the type is entirely gone, some are twisted in all kinds of shapes and mixed up until they looked like printer's "pi" and it is almost impossible to read many of them. In the whole paper I do not find a single name of a person who is still living here that I know of, and most of them are utterly forgotten by the present generation.

DECATUR BUSINESS MEN—1863

Among the business cards I find the names of Cole & Shier, Lawyers; Dr. G. W. Rogers and Dr. C. T. Baker; T. E. Phelps, Postmaster and Grain Buyer; E. Rich, Brick and Stone Mason; Orrin T. Welch, Claim Agent; T. H. Jordan, Tailor; T. P. Bashford, Blacksmith; M. Woodruff, Furniture Repairer and coffins made to order; Thos. O'Leary, Drayman; Baker's Hotel, J. C. Baker, Proprietor; Planing Mill, J. Fortain, Prop.; Dr. Rowley, Dentist. Among the merchants I find the names of Ira Nash, General Store; Chas. N. Poore, Hardware; J. Wright, Cooper Shop; E. L. Beach, Groceries; E. L. Hawks, New Tin Shop; H. A. Bray, Carpenter and Joiner; J. P. Parker, Painter; Benj. W. Simmons, Jeweler; Henry A. Rogers, Groceries; and that is all. Col. Phelps was Postmaste, and the mails went east at 9:20 a. m. and 12:40 p. m. Mail for South Haven left on Mondays and Fridays, for Three Rivers on Wednesdays and for Millburg every Thursday. The Church Directory included the Presbyterian Church, Rev. W. T. Bartle, Pastor; Methodist, J. W. Miler, Pastor. Trains on the M. C. R. R. left here going east at 9:50 and 11:50 a. m., going west at 2:35 a. m. and 11:50 p. m.

And then there is a solitary mortgage sale.

I find in this paper one quotation said to have been taken from an editorial printed in the Richmond Enquirer of July 18th. Richmond at that time was capital of the Southern Confederacy, and we were in the middle of our big war:

"Riot, murder, and conflagration have begun in New York city. It is a world's wonder that the good work did not start long ago. And this outbreak may be the opening scene of the inevitable revolution which is to tear to pieces that most rotten government, and leave the northern half of the old American Union a desert of blood soaked ashes. We bid it God speed." A cheerful wish certainly. And right now other nations are wishing the same thing for us.

LOCAL ITEMS

Another old paper that I found in this box was a still earlier copy of this same Decatur sheet; but in this one there were a few local items, and I am tempted to give them here. Very few will recognize any of the names, but it will show what was going on in Decatur fifty-five years ago:

"A new plank walk has been laid the entire length of Sherwood street between Phelps and Williams streets.

"E. I. Beach is building an addition to his grocery in the rear, in which a brick oven is to be placed, and a bakery established.

"H. A. Rogers has built an addition to his grocery on the east side, for a store room.

T. Brownbridge has fitted up his new meat market in splendid style, and is now occupying it.

"W. T. Gerow, of this place, departed last week for Louisville, Ky., to engage in the sutler business with J. H. Wallace and Wm. Hodges. Mr. Hodges has been spending a few days at home.

"The postoffice has been moved around onto Sherwood street, first door north of Roger's grocery.

"G. H. Green has removed his meat market to the room heretofore occupied by the postoffice.

"The cabinet shop of L. Noble & Son has been removed to the building recently occupied by J. Simmins on Sherwood street.

"Cole & Shier are about to remove teir law office to rooms over Nash's store.

How many can tell where these places were situated? Raise your hands and speak up.

This paper also gives the Decatur markets as follows: Wheat, $1 bu.; Oats, 18 to 20 cents bu.; Pork, dressed, $2.50 per 100; potatoes, 20 cents bu.; Apples, 50 to 75c bu.; Beef, dressed, $2.50 per 100; Butter, 10 to 12 cents pound; Eggs, 8 cents per dozen. Beech and maple wood, $1.50 cord. The meat market advertises to sell the best steak at 6 cents a pound.

There is also a very interesting "Sea Serpent" story in this issue, but it is too long to repeat here.

Mr. Sweet informs his readers that he must have the money that people are owing him for the paper, or else he will have to shut up shop, because the wind will not carry it any longer.

Also there is a list furnished by the Draft commissioner stating how many men are to be drafted from each township. Decatur is called upon for 5, Hamilton for 20, Keeler 24, Paw Paw 27, and so on.

There is some interesting war news—fifty-fie years old—in this paper, but the other reading matter is nothing but the silliest kind of silliness.

PAW PAW FREE PRESS

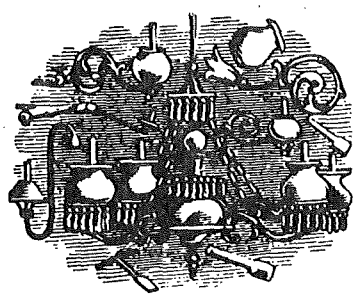
Next in this box I came across a copy of the Paw Paw Free Press, dated Nov. 20, 1852, S. T. Canway, publisher. It is only a five column paper of four pages, and the most of it is taken up by medical advertisements. There is one political editorial nearly a column long; Franklin Pierce had just been elected President that fall, and the democrats were patting themselves on the back for saving the country, and giving the Whigs particular fits for trying to ruin it. How silly such arguments seem now, still, they led up to great events ten years later.

Then there is a letter of five columns, written by a man named J. L. Marvin, to another man named E. J. House, that is a corker. Evidently both of these men lived in Paw Paw, or in the county and were political rivals, and Mr. Marvin tells Mr. House plainly "that if you say I said so and so you are a liar and you know it, for I never said so and so, so there." It would be laughable, if anyone could understand what it was about, or what he was trying to get at. Marvin calls Mr. House "Fustianna Furioso" and the way that he wades into Mr. House's character is a caution, but what it is all about I can't find out, only that he calls him a liar, and takes five columns to say it. I suppose likely that these two men were big political guns of their day, and this matter was of great importance then, but who knows anything about it or the men now?

There is not a word of local news in this paper. There are a number of legal notices, and two men advertise everyone not to trust their wives on their account. Evidently there were some domestic troubles in those days as now. Paw Paw always has lived and will live on legal matters.

In digging deeper into this box I came across two papers printed in Warren, O., in 1824 but there is not much of anything interesting in either of them, except ads. of runaway slaves, and a whole column of lottery ads. especially of the Dismal Swamp lottery. The main prize was to be $10.000 in cash and 1,000 acres of land in the Dismal Swamp.

Included in the contents of this box are old Decatur and Paw Paw papers all the way from forty to fifty years back. Also I find old election tickets that were used in the days of the open ballot, when voters were bought like sheep at so much per head. Some of the ballots were used in Decatur and Hamilton, and almost every man named on them is dead, although I find a very few whom I know to be alive. One of these old tickets goes clear back to the second election of Abraham Lincoln, and one is for Grant's first term, and many of them are for State, County and Township elections of those far away days. There are many other curious and interesting things in this box, but I have told enough about them.



OLD WAR NEWS

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

A few days ago I was given a copy of the Vicksburg Daily Citizen, printed in Vicksburg, Miss., July 2, 1863, only two days before the city was surrendered to General Grant, during our terrible Civil war.

I well remember that day, July 4, 1863, when the news came over the wires that "Vicksburg has surrendered and the rebels have been defeated at Gettysburg" and what a wave of joy and enthusiasm passed over the northern states when the wires brought the good news.

Generals Grant and Sherman and Commodore Foote with the gunboat and mortar fleet had been pounding away at Vicksburg for more than six months, trying to capture the city, but until then without success.

Vicksburg was the last place held by the rebels on the Mississippi, and it was necessary that the National Government should capture it before they could control the free use of that important river. On the other hand it was just as necessary for the rebels that they should hold it, for if they lost control of the Mississippi River they could not get supplies from the large western states, and it would cut off a great amount of their food supplies. It would also cut the Southern Confederacy right square in the middle, for their armies.

So it had been a titanic struggle on both sides as to which should have Vicksburg. It had cost the Union forces thousands of men and much hard labor, but they finally accomplished their object, and fought and starved the rebels until they were obliged to surrender on the glorious Fourth.

And then the battle of Gettysburg was a great victory for the Union. General Lee, the Confederate commander, had collected all of his best soldiers and had made a dash up through Maryland and Pennsylvania driving the scattered Union forces before him. His intention was to crush the Northern armies separately before they could unite, and then march on and capture Baltimore and Washington and that would virtually end the war in their favor. He came awful near doing it too; it seems like a miracle almost, as we look back at it, that he did not do it.

His forces were all well united and were all veterans, and they knew that they must conquer then or they never could; while the Union forces were badly scattered and it was a big job to unite them into an effective army.

General Hooker had just been superceded in the command of the army of the Potomac by General Meade, and there was a good deal of dissatisfaction over it. It is a bad thing to have to trade horses in the middle of a turbulent river, and so General Meade found it to be. By almost superhuman exertions he succeeded in reuniting his scattered forces, the two armies met at the little town of Gettysburg in southern Pennsylvania, and there one of the decisive battles of the world was fought to a finish.

If the rebels had driven the Union army from the field in disorder there is no kind of doubt but that they would have captured our capital, Washington, and Baltimore, Philadelphia and perhaps New York, and probably the Union would have been broken up into two separate nations, and slavery would have been perpetuated in the South.

The present powerful United States would have been divided into two comparatively weak countries, and the result would have been deplorable in every way.

Gettysburg was high water mark for the rebels, and, as I see it, the only thing that prevented their complete success was because they were too cock sure of success, and they became reckless and were not careful enough.

They were so sure that they could crush Meade's army that they dashed themselves to pieces against the strongly posted Union forces.

The rebel General Pickett told General Lee that if he would allow him to charge the Union line with his subdivision he would guarantee to go through them like the wind, and then Lee could follow up with the rest of his army and complete the job, and Lee finally consented to the charge.

General Pickett, with his division of about twenty thousand veteran soldiers, charged the whole Union army, backed by two hundred pieces of artillery, across a level field of a half a mile, and the consequence was that his subdivision was almost entirely annihilated. A few rebels reached the stone wall, behind which the Union line was posted, but they were either killed to a man or else surrendered.

It was a bloody fight truly on both sides, and both sides fought well, but the odds against the rebels was too big and they had to lie down. That charge was the end of the battle, and the only thing that General Lee could do was to retreat in as good order as he could, and get back into Virginia as quickly as he could.

The Union army was too exhausted, and had lost too many men to follow him and capture his army, but the rebels were whipped to a standstill, and they never took the offensive again.

Vicksburg and Gettysburg broke the back of the Confederacy, and while there was lots of hard fighting afterward the end was never in doubt. The news of the two victories came on the same day, the North was greatly encouraged, and that 4th was probably the greatest one in our history.

It seems strange that such scenes were transpiring in our own country, within the lifetime of some of us. We are at war again, but so far the fighting is in a foreign country, and we have not felt the effects of the war as we did then; we hope that the suffering and misery that always follows where armies go may not reach our own country, but sometimes I feel fearful as to what the outcome may be.

Well, to get back to the Vicksburg paper. This paper was printed on the back of a sheet of wall paper, and consisted of four columns of print. The Johnnies were certainly good braggers, for only two days before the final surrender they say that General Grant and Commodore Foote may as well give up hope of ever capturing the city, for they cannot do it.

Some of the news in this paper is almost comical, knowing history as we do, and it is strange that they should try to deceive themselves in any such way.

In an editorial, giving a resume of the war news, the editor states as a fact that "Old Abe Lincoln has run away from Washington, and has hid himself where he cannot be found, terror reigns in all the northern cities, and that it is daily expected that General Lee will capture the whole Northern army. Today Maryland is ours, tomorrow Pennsylvania will be, the next day Ohio will fall. Success and Glory to our arms; God and the right are with us," and a whole lot more of just such "authentic news".

In one place this sheet speaks of a certain man in Vicksburg who, during the siege, found that he had more corn than he was likely to need for his own family, so he doled it out to the poor people who had no corn, free of charge. This man's name was Kiser, and he certainly was an exceptional person, and one who ought to be remembered.

In another place the paper tells of other men, who, on the contrary, were hoarding supplies, and selling them at exhorbitant prices.

It says that there are several persons in the city who are selling flour at five dollars per pound, molasses at ten dollars per gallon, and corn at ten dollars per bushel, and who will not give an ounce away, even to the children who are starving, and it says, "let the brand be not only placed upon their brow, but let it be seared into their very brain, that humanity may scorn and shun them as they would the portals of hell itself." There are such men in al communities, even here in the north.

In one place this paper has the following paragraph:

"ON DIT—That the great Ulysses, the Yankee Generalissimo, surnamed Grant—has expressed his intention of dining in Vicksburg Saturday next, and celebrating the 4th by a grand dinner and so forth. Ulysses must get into the city before he dines in it. The way to cook a rabbit is "first catch the rabbit, etc."

In the very last corner of the paper, evidently put there by some union printer, after surrender, is inserted the following: "July 4th, 1863. Two days bring about great changes. The banner of the Union floats over Vicksburg. General Grant has caught the rabbit; he did dine in Vicksburg on the 4th, and he brought his dinner with him. The "Daily Citizen" lives to see it, and for the last time it appears printed on "Wall Paper." No more will it eulogize the luxury of mule meat and fricassed kitten, or urge southern warriors to such diet. This is the last wall paper edition, and is, excepting this note, from the types as we found them. It will be valuable hereafter as a curiosity."

There is much more in this old paper that, to me, is very interesting, but it would require too much space to reprint it here. Reading old papers is one of my amusements, as it brings back to my mind the scenes of long ago so vividly. Those were great and glorious days, fifty-five years ago.

Uncle Sam came out of the struggle all right, and was stronger and richer in every way than he was before it began, and now we are a powerful and united country that we are all proud of.

The war destroyed slavery forever in this country; but if the war had not happened it is likely that the "peculiar institution" would have existed for a great many years more. Desperate diseases require desperate medicines many times, and it was so in this case.

The South were determined that they would not give up slavery under any circumstances, They said that without slave labor, cotton and sugar without slave labor, cotton sugar were were their life, and they would hold on to them regardless of everything.

It took four years war, the killing and maiming of hundreds of thousands of human beings, and the destruction of billions of property to settle the matter and destroy the cursed institution for good. But it was worth it; it was a devil that had to be fought and killed sometime, and it was better that it should be done then than to wait fifty or sixty years more and then do it. Even the south is glad now that slavery has been done away with.

War is a terrible and horrible thing. No one can form any conception of how terrible and devilish it is unless he has lived in the midst of the struggling armies.

Now we are entering another great war, and no human being can give even a guess as to what the outcome will be.

It is a righteous war, if such a thing as a righteous war can be, and it must be fought out to a finish. One side or the other must be utterly crushed and almost annihilated, just as the South was over fifty years ago, before the end will come; it is the meeting of two great principles in a death grapple, and neither will submit as long as they can even wiggle a finger, or pull a trigger.

At the end of the Napoleonic wars in Europe one hundred years ago, which came after the battle of Waterloo had been fought, and the power of Napoleon and France had been utterly crushed, then arose the question as to what was to be done with Napoleon personally.

The Allies, England, Prussia, Austria, Russia and some others, knew that as long as Napoleon lived and was at liberty, there was no certainty of peace, because just as soon as France recovered from her downfall, and Napoleon could get another army together again, he would attack some of these countries and try to regain his absolute power over Europe.

If they wished peace to last they must make some disposition of the great warrior so that he could do no more mischief, and it was a puzzling question. The great Prussian soldier and marshal Blucher was asked what he thought ought to be done with him, and he replied very decidedly, "Shoot him at once, and see that he is buried deep." If Napoleon had surrendered to the Prussians instead of to the English, that is just what would have been done with him in less than ten minutes.

But the English would not agree to any such blood-thirsty way of disposing with him, and they only confined him for life on the island of St. Helena.

It would seem that the most highly civilized and intelligent nations on the face of the earth, nations that claim to be founded on Christianity, could settle their disputes in some other way than by killing millions of men, destroying hundreds of billions of property that has taken hundreds of years to build up, killing children and outraging women, and causing untold misery.

Europe cannot recover from this war in seventy-five years even if it ends this year, and that doesn't seem very likely, and I do not see how they can ever pay even the interest on their money debt. It is to be devoutly hoped that the actual fighting will not reach our own country, but no one can say. It will surely be bad enough if we only have to furnish the men and the money to carry it on, but how much worse it will be if we have to be overrun by foreign armies, battles fought on our own ground, our cities captured and destroyed, and at the end perhaps an immense war indemnity running up into the billions to be paid to some foreign power.

It is enough to make one shudder even to think about it; and the quicker we give the President power, money and men to crush this terrible thing the better it will be for everyone—even for Germany.

I do not believe in war if it can possibly be avoided, but now that it has come to us, I say, strike hard, and knock the other fellow out before he can hurt us.

We have congratulated ourselves that we are highly civilized, and that the world was growing better every year, but really men are very little different from what they were five hundred years ago, except that we have much better and quicker ways of killing folks than we had then.

It is very interestig to read history and learn of the weapons that armies used in ancient times, and to then compare them with the arms that are now in use. It is no exaggeration to say that one company of one hundred men armed as they are now with quick firing rifles, machine guns, deadly gases, hand grenades and air planes could wipe out and destroy a regiment of one thousand soldiers, armed as they were even fifty-six years ago at the opening of our civil war.

They managed to kill a lot of men then when they were all armed alike, but they would stand no show now if sent against modern weapons, and almost every week new ways of killing are discovered. What will the harvest be?

IN THE DAYS

THAT ARE GONE

The Logging Bees

—Barn Raisings—

-Breaking Teams of the Michigan Pioneers.

by W. H. Tuttle.

How many of the present generation have ever seen, or have any conception of these three things, a logging bee, a barn raising or a breaking team? They were all common enough fifty and sixty years ago, but now any one of them would be a curiosity indeed, that would draw a crowd very quickly, to look on, but not to take part in.

THE LOGGING BEE

When a man, in those days, decided he wanted to clear up a piece of new ground of ten acres or thereabouts, he first cut, the beautiful trees all down, trimmed up all the brush and burned it, leaving the big logs lying on the ground. Then he sent word to all of his neighbors for miles around that on a certain day he proposed to have a logging bee, and he would be glad of the said neighbors' presence with their teams to help do the work, and promising that everyone should have plenty to eat, and that there would be several good fat jugs on the spot that would be free to everyone.

If the advertised day happened to be pleasant there was sure to be a big crowd present; the men brought their wives, teams, dogs and children, and came prepared to stay all day. They were pretty sure to get a good dinner, but the desire to help a neighbor, and to be helped in return, was the great attraction, supplemented by the aforesaid jugs.

While the wives visited, and helped to get things ready for the big dinner, the men were soon at work, hauling the big logs together into piles and setting fire to them, and soon big fires were blazing all over the field, and the log heaps were rapidly disappearing while new ones took their places.

At noon the men were called to dinner, the teams were put up and fed, men washed themselves at the pump and removed the charcoal marks as much as possible, but if some of them had black streaks on their faces it didn't matter; it was clean dirt.

Generally long tables were built up of boards out of doors, and they were loaded with good things to eat. There wasn't apt to be any ice cream, pies or cake, but there was plenty of bread, boiled ham and other meats, potatoes and all kinds of nourishing food. How those men would eat; the provisions would disappear like magic, and be replaced until everyone was satisfied and they could eat no more. After that the men rested and smoked for awhile, swapping yarns, etc., and while that was going on the wives and children took places at the tables and had their dinner.

Then after their rest the men went at it again and pitched into the log heaps and by night they were well cleared up and the field was about ready to plow. But sometime along in the afternoon the jugs were sure to be brought out from their hiding places and circulated amongst the men, and soon tongues were loosened, and things began to get lively. Then old quarrels were pretty sure to be renewed, and if there weren't any old ones they would make some new ones. Sometimes fights would result, but generally the quarrels ended in wind, all the combatants taking a fresh drink or two and shaking hands. Bitter quarrels have started at such times that lasted for years.

THE FAMOUS HARRIS BEE

When I was about twelve years old Will Harris, who lived about one quarter of a mile from my father's mill, advertised a big logging bee, to take place at his farm on a certain day, and everyone for miles around was invited to come with their teams and bring the whole family.

It was well known that Will always had lots of good things to eat, and generally something to drink, although he himself never drank anything. All the farmers in that neighborhood were on hand bright and early, and the way that they made the logs fly together and burn up was a caution. Will was a man who was well liked by everyone, a hard worker himself and one who never shirked his share of anything, and the neighbors did their best to clear up his field of new ground that day.

At noon a bountiful dinner was provided for everyone on long tables built up out of doors, and they all, men, women and children, dogs and teams were filled up to repletion.

After dinner they completed the job of logging, and then the little brown jugs began to go around freely, and very soon everyone was talking all at once. Two of the young laddie bucks got to feeling so good that they had to work it off someway, and they proceeded to pick a quarrel with each other, and finally they went out into the road to have it out.

The two combatants were Dave and Sammy. They faced each other in the middle of the road and proceeded to lambaste each other with their fists in great shape. Finally Dave got an opening, hit Sammy in the face a stunning blow, and down he went flat as a pancake, and took the count. After a bit Dave helped him to his feet and brushed off his clothes, and everybody went home satisfied that they had had a bully good show and had got their money's worth.

I was only a small boy then, but of course I was there to see everything that was going on. When the fight began I was pretty nearly scared to death, for I was sure that they were going to kill each other. When Dave knocked Sammy down, and he laid so still, I was sure that he was dead, and ran home and told the folks that Dave had killed Sammy, for I saw him do it." But it did not prove to be as bad as I thought it was.

THE BARN RAISING

A barn raising in those days was nearly a duplicate of the logging bees, only that they did a different kind of work. When a man wanted to build a good sized barn the carpenters came first and got the timbers all cut and ready to put together, and then the neighbors were called in on a certain day to "raise" it.

Buildings were not made as they are nowadays with two by fours or two by eights for the plates, studs and sills, but they used large square timbers, hewed out of the logs with a broad axe, and these were mortised and got ready by the carpenter before the raising. It required some strength to raise those heavy frames to their proper places, and the men used long pike poles to do it, each one with a man at the end of it to push it up to its place and then hold it there until the carpenter could fasten it.

In laying out the timbers for the frame there was almost sure to be some slight mistake made by the carpenters, so that there would be more or less trouble and delay in putting the frame together. In every such gathering of men there would be a rural poet, who would make it his business to notice all such errors; by working his brains a little overtime he could evolve a verse or two to fit the case, and produce more or less mirth at the expense of the unfortunate carpenter. If there was no other way to get the carpenter's goat the rustic cut-up would sneak around after dark some night, cut half an inch off the end of the ten foot pole which the carpenters were using to measure with in laying out the frame, thereby making it come skew-haw when it was put together giving the country "poick" his chance to exercise his genius. It was generally all done in good humor, unless the little brown jug had circulated too freely; then, there was apt to be trouble. That jug was sure to be on hand at all such occasions where men were gathered together, and if there was trouble the jug was at the bottom of it. Barn raisings are now a thing of the past; if any such work has to be done now it is accomplished by ropes and pulleys.

THE BREAKING TEAM

The next thing that has utterly disappeared in this country is the breaking team, for the plowing of new ground filled with oak grubs.

If a man had a field covered with second growth grubs, he first cut the small trees down as close to the ground as possible, piled and burned them, and then hired a man who owned a breaking team and did such work, to break it up.

The man who had a breaking outfit brought a plow about as large as a small house, with a heavy pair of wagon wheels hitched in front of it, and with a very large sharp coulter in front of the plow, for the motive power there were all the way from ten to twenty yoke of oxen hitched in front and they started in, cutting off oak roots as large as a man's leg and tearing the grubs and small stumps out bodily.

Oxen are slow, but when fifteen yoke or so settle down to a pull something must come. I will not undertake to say how large a root they will cut off and pull out, but some of them were immense. It is at least fifty years since I have seen a breaking team in action, and my memory of it is somewhat dim, but I know that they would rip things up in great shape in their slow way.

Fifteen or eighteen yoke of cattle hitched to a plow that was twelve or fifteen feet long made quite a string. It wasn't the easiest thing in the world to handle them, and required considerable skill and cases were known where in turning around a dead tree or tall stump that the ox next to the tree would not be able to stand the strain that the ones ahead put upon him. The consequence was that the unfortunate ox would have his neck broken, and the team would be shy an ox. It was hard work for both teams and the drivers and plow handlers, but much land was cleared up in that way.

After the big plow had gone over the land and broken it up and pulled the grubs out, then they hitched several yoke of oxen to a heavy drag and went over it, pulling out the loose grubs and roots, and drawing them roughly together. The roots and grubs were picked up and thrown into piles and burned, and the ground was ready for planting.

Where my folks lived in Hamilton we did not have grubs or breaking teams, but in a field that was newly cleared the stumps would stand so thick that it was impossible to plow a straight furrow one rod long for the first planting. The stumps gradually rotted and were pulled out, and now there isn't a stump to be seen and has n't been for years.

I do not suppose that there is a breaking team left in the State of Michigan now, and even a single yoke of oxen would be almost a curiosity if seen on our streets. Old "Buck and Bright" have passed away forever in this country. They did their work well in the early days, but they are too slow for this age of autos and tractors. Even the horses seem to be losing caste, and are becoming scarce. In a few years they with the mules and other draft animals will be a thing of the past.

PIONEERS OF THE PLOPPER DISTRICT

Written for the Republican by R. F. Greene.

STEPHEN PLOPPER

The Plopper District is located in Lawrence township near the Paw Paw line and about six miles north of Decatur village.

The district was named for Stephen Plopper, a cooper by trade, who came from Monroe, Michigan, in 1852. He exchanged a house and lot in Monroe for the original Plopper homestead which was then wild land covered with timber such as he wanted for continuing his trade.

The farm consisted of 120 acres. He cut the timber, rived his own staves and made barrels which he sold in Paw Paw, then known as the village of LaFayette.

Stephen Plopper was born in Lowville, Lewis county, New York, in the year 1820. He married Phoebe Palmer in 1841, who died in 1857. They were parents of four children of whom Madison, Riley and Milton are living. Irwin passed away five years ago.

Stephen Plopper married Lucy Hayes in Paw Paw in 1858, and they were the parents of four children, Mrs. Hattie Smith of Loveland, Colo., Mrs. Flora Loveland of Paw Paw, Edwin and George who reside on the old homestead.

The old log schoolhouse was built on the original Stebbins farm now owned by Barney O'Dell of Paw Paw. Mr. Plopper was one of the school officers for over forty years. The old building was removed and the present school house built in 1865.

In the year 1854 Plopper sold twenty acres on the north to Nathan Benedict for one hundred dollars, and later he sold thirteen acres off the west side to William Irwin for $100. The balance of his farm was left to Edwin and George. George sold 43½ acres to Judge Pinney. Edwin resides on the balance of the homestead which he farms and also conducts a blacksmith shop.

AVERY B. MULLINEX

Avery B. Mullinex came from Akron, Ohio, and purchased a farm of Burr Jennings in the same district in the year 1852.

Mr. Mullinex was also a cooper by trade and for a time worked with Stephen Plopper. They rived their own staves, made them into barrels and sold them in LaFayette, now Paw Paw.

After a short time their cooper shop caught fire and burned to the ground. Then each built a shop on his own place and the shop built by Mr. Mullinex is still standing on the farm and has been used for many years as a carpenter shop.

The recent sale of the Mullinex farm was made to Burr Beals, a grandson of Burr Jennings, the original owner. It is interesting to note that there never has been a mortgage or a claim against this large farm since it was bought from the Government. This fact was commented upon at the abstract office in Paw Paw when the transfer to Mr. Beals was being made.

Avery's first venture here was the purchase of eighty acres of wild land which now is known as the Simmons farm. He told his father of his purchase and that if he would go to Michigan and locate it he would make him a present of it. The father came and located the land and cut a slashing of ten acres in the southwest corner. He then heard there were tax titles against it and became nervous and sold it for three hundred dollars to the first man who came along.

For many years this same farm had the reputation of being the best all around farm of its size in Van Buren county.

CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

JOHN VANDERPLOUGH HAS BIG DAY LAST SATURDAY—TWO YEARS IN BUSINESS.

Two years ago the sixth of January John Vanderplough opened a fish market in the Charles building that had previously been occupied by Miss Bartoo's millinery. His total capital consisted of $21 and his stock was accordingly small.

There was no limit to his ambition, however, and from the first day the business began to grow. After three months he added a stock of groceries and from that time on his success as a business man has been assured.

Last Saturday was the little store's second anniversary. It was made a special sale day and music and refreshments were served. Three hundred cups of coffee and 180 daughnuts were consumed and 454 sales were recorded. The place was crowded from morning till evening.

THE OLD CHURCH BELL

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

In passing by the ruins of the burned Presbyterian church a short time ago, I walked around behind the basement to see—probably for the last time—the old bell that had done such good service for the last sixty years. I stood and watched the bell on the night of the fire, and at last, when the belfry had burned away, the old bell went down into the basement with a great crash and flying sparks; and I almost felt as though I had lost an old friend. I presume that many of our older people had hoped, as I did, that the bell might pass through the fire trial without serious damage, and that it might be rehung in the new church when it is built, and do duty again, but one glance convinced me that as a bell its work was done, and it could never ring again.

This bell was one of the oldest residents of Decatur, and for about sixty years it had called the residents to the services on the Sabbath. It had awakened them in the night by giving the alarm of fires, and it had tolled for the passing away of many of our citizens. Fifty years or so ago it was the custom to always toll the church bell when any one died, giving the age and sex by the number of strokes. This custom has fallen into disuse of late years, to a great extent, and now it is only tolled for those whose funerals are held in the church.

Each Subscriber Rang the Bell

The old bell was bought by subscription about year 1857 or '58 and for ten years it was the only church bell in the village. My recollection is not very perfect as to the price that was paid for it, but I believe that it cost one dollar per pound, and that it weighed about five hundred pounds. At that time I was going to school here, in the "old red school house," and when the new bell arrived and was hung in the old church—now the Catholic church—each person who had helped to pay for it was entitled to ring it a certain length of time according to the amount that they had contributed toward buying it, and after it was hung it was kept going almost constantly for several days. When one man had rung out his allotted time another took hold, and so it was kept going. Of course many of the school boys were over there to see and hear the new bell, and as many of the men did not care to exert themselves very long at a time they allowed us boys to pull the rope for them, and we thought that it was great fun.

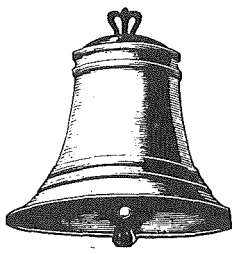
Three or four of us would get hold of the rope at the same time, and by pulling together we could ring it very well, while the men sat around telling stories and joking, and praising and encouraging the boys to keep at it by saying what fine work we were doing and how nicely we made it ring. What a difference there is—to a child—between work and so-called play. I am the only one left of those three boys that I remember helped to ring the old bell. Jehiel Rogers was killed by the cars fifty-five years ago, and Eugene Woodmancy, I do not know what became of him. So far as I know there is not a single person left here who helped to buy the old bell, and I can only think of two others, besides myself who are still living who were here at that time.

How many, many times the old bell has drung out its call to the different services on Sunday and other days, and how many times it has tolled for the passing away of some poor soul who has laid down this life's burdens. For ten years this was the only church bell in the village, but about 1867 the Methodists bought their bell. For a good many years Mr. G. A. Van Sickle was the janitor in the Presbyterian church, and there was considerable rivalry between the two janitors as to which should ring his bell first on Sunday morning. Of course neither could commence until a certain time, but if one could begin even a few seconds ahead of the other it did him a lot of good and kept him feeling fine the whole day. It used to be told that Mr. Van Sickle would get up every Sunday morning before daylight so that he would surely be on time to ring his bell first. I do not guarantee the truth of this story, but it was told as a fact.

On the night the news was received here that Richmond had surrendered—fifty-three years ago this month—the old bell was kept going almost constantly, ringing out the good news. When one set of men would tire out another lot would take hold, and so it was kept up. At that time it was the only bell in the village, except the small bell at the school house, and everything was used that night that would make a noise. What a night that was—one never to be forgotten. And then in just a short time came the telegrams saying that President Lincoln had been assassinated, and then the bell was tolled all the day long. Those two events coming so closely together plunged the people from almost insane joy to the deepest grief and horror in a moment's time. No one who has been born and has grown up since that time can even faintly realize the revulsion of feeling that took place in those few hours.

But the old bell will never ring again. It is cracked in innumerable places, and is badly dented on one side, and the only thing that can be done is to recast it, or buy a new bell, and sell the old one for junk. As a bell it is dead. It did its duty faithfully for sixty years, but now it must give way to another. How very like our own lives the fate of such inanimate things are. We come into the world, we live our allotted time, and the most of us try to do the best that we know how to do while we are here, and then, either through natural decay, or by accident, we pass away, and our places are taken by another, and in a very short time it is utterly forgotten that we ever exister. What is the use of it all?

Good-bye, old bell; for fifteen years I lived almost directly under your ringing, and you seemed like an old friend. I saw you raised to your place in the old church building when you were new, and I saw you transferred to the new building when it was built, and I was one of the first to help to ring you sixty years ago, and I saw your fall and death on the night of the fire. Good-bye.



More About Old Times

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

When I was a kid of some six or eight years, we all lived in the thick heavy woods in Hamilton, and it seemed to be the desire of every man to cut down as many of the finest trees as he could. In many cases it was work, pure and simple, to either clear the land so that they could raise crops to live upon or it was done to get out the logs and haul them to the saw-mill for the lumber that they would make; but in many other cases it was just sport to go out and cut down a few trees for exercise.

Every man had his pet axe that was always kept as sharp as a razor, and in every neighborhood there was sure to be a few crack choppers, and often two or more would take their axes and go into the woods, select trees as nearly of a size as possible, and see which could cut his tree down the quickest, and fall them the nearest to a designated spot; then the trees would be left to decay where they fell. In our community Will Harris was conceded to be the best chopper by all odds, and he engaged in many such contests.

Well, all this excited my childish emulation, and I listened to all the talk about axes, helves, and the best way to hang an axe and the way in which to make a tree fall just where you wanted it, and when an axe needed to be sharpened I was generally willing to be the motor for the grindstone, if the job didn't last too long; but when I saw a man coming up from the woods with a large chunk broken out of his axe blade I took particular pains to be out of sight while he was grinding out the break. Some times such a job would last half a day, and I never had any desire for long sustained effort—especially on a grindstone.

Along about this time some one gave me a new hatchet, with helve and all complete. I do not know who the misguided person was that made me this dangerous present, but I got it from some one, and then I went around hacking into every tree that came handy, and doing lots of mischief with it. When any of the men wished me to assist them in doing circular work on the grindstone, I would first stipulate that they must grind my hatchet too, and it was not long before the little implement had a razor edge, and was about as dangerous a plaything as a boy could possibly have.

Hatchet Proves Dangerous Plaything

One day my mother went to visit Mrs. Briggs, who lived about half a mile from our house, and I went with her, and, of course, I took my hatchet with me. Dave Briggs was quite a chunk of a boy, a few years older than I, and soon we out to play, and of course I showed him my hatchet, and and explained how easy it was to cut down the small trees with it that we came across. At once Dave was eager to try it, and I let him take it, and he started in to cut down a small tree, but almost the vehy first stroke that he made the hatchet went into his knee instead of the tree, and then there was a great howl immediately. The blood spurted out in a stream, Dave yelled with all his might, and I was so scared that I ran to the house and told my mother that Dave had cut his leg clear off, It proved to be not as bad as that, but it was plenty bad enough, for he had sunk the sharp blade right into his knee, and for awhile it was thought that he would always be lame, but he wasn't.

His mother had to sew it up as best she could with a large needle and strong thread, and it required a number of stitches to hold the cut together. My! how Dave did howl while they were sewing it. I can hear him yet. Then they bandaged it, and after a time it got well all right, but it is a great wonder that he did not lame himself for life. But after that whenever we went away visiting my folks saw to it that the hatchet was left at home. I took a great deal of comfort with that hatchet, but it was a dangerous plaything for a young boy to have. I do not remember how long I had it or what became of it in the end. I wish that I did.

Dave lives in Nebraska now, and is an old man. Some ten years ago he was back here, and I happened to meet him one day in a store, and while I was talking to him I asked him if he remembered cutting himself with my hatchet when we were boys, and he replied that he remembered it very distinctly, and that he carried the scar yet, and always would.

Fell Into the Pond

How many such scrapes children do get into, and the wonder to me is that they live through childhood and manage to grow up. Our old mill-pond was not very large or extremely deep, but it was plenty large and deep enough to drown a child, and cousin Jimmy and myself used to fall into it on an average of once a week or so, and I could never understand why one or both of us were not drowned there. We would go down to the pond fishing, crawl out on a log to get nearer to deep water, and then sooner or later, one of us would tumble off into the water, and then there would be a great scrambling around to get out, and get some dry clothes at the house.

I remember going skating with Jack Johnson on the pond once. The ice was not very thick, and we thought that it was great fun to jump on the ice with our skates and cut through it and see the water come bubbling up. Finally I stood in one spot and cut a circle around myself, and when I got clear round of course down went the piece of ice with it went into the ice cold water. Well, Jack helped me to get out, and we hustled to the house, but it so happened on that day my folks had all gone to town, and the fires had all gone out and the house was nearly as cold as I was, and I had to stand there while Jack fussed around to get a fire going in the stove, all the time dripping water from every square inch of me. I didn't know where to find any dry clothing, because mother always attended to my clothes, and I didn't know where to look for them. So I had to stand there and shiver until the fire warmed things up and finally dried my clothes on me.

It is a great wonder that I didn't catch a cold hard enough to kill me, but I came out all right, and so far as I remember I do not think that any one else but Jack and I ever knew anything about it.

Another time Jack and I were playing around the saw mill, and I fell clear down through about ten or fifteen feet, landing in the water and striking my head on one of the sills under the water hard enough to knock me senseless, and there I lay in the water until Jack could scramble down and pull me out. Probably if I had been alone I should have drowned in two feet of water, but I was a sight when I got so that I could go to the house, all covered with mud and water and with a lump on the back of my head as big as a goose egg.

Cousin Jimmy and I always had guns to hunt with, even when we were so small that every time that we fired them off we would have to go back to the mill to get some of the men to reload them for us, and it was a great mercy that we didn't either shoot ourselves or some innocent bystander by our fooling around with the firearms. It must be that there is a providence that looks after children, drunken men and fools, or we would surely have killed our selves or some one else.

Used Tree for Cannon

Every time that Jimmy and I got together on the 4th of July we were sure to have a big supply of fire-crackers, a toy cannon very likely, and a lot of powder, rockets, etc., and why we did not get blown up has always been a great mystery to me. We had no cannon fire-crackers in those days, and when we wanted to make a big noise we had to use loose powder in some way. A favorite scheme was to bore an auger hole in a tree, fill it with powder, put in a fire-cracker fuse, plug it up tight and set fire to the fuse and split the tree wide open, at the same time making a terrible bang.

We were both perfectly enamored with anything in the shape of a gun, or pistol, and we always had them. We had revolvers in those days, but they were very crude affairs compared with the ones that are in use now. Cartridges were unknown, and they had to be loaded like a rifle. You had to pour into each of the six chambers of the cylinder the proper amount of powder from a flask, and then ram in six balls on top of the powder, then place a cap on each of the six nipples, and it was a good ten or fifteen minutes' work to reload one. You had to carry a powder flask, loose bullets and a cap box, and when one was shot off it made a noise like a young cannon and kicked like blazes.

Everything is so different now from what it sixty years ago, and we have so many things now that had not even been dreamed of then, and the probabilities are that in another sixty years the things that we have in use now will be as much out of date and as antiquated as the sixty years old things are now. Who would have dreamed sixty years ago of such things as electric lights, motors, flying machines, automobiles, submarines, and many other inventions, that are now in daily use, and most of which we feel that we could not possibly exist without?

In our neighborhood every one used candles for lighting purposes, and we thought that if we had two or more candles burning at the same time it was a wonderful illumination, and only to be indulged in if we had visitors of importance.

Just before the Civil war we got to using what was called benzine, or burning fluid. It was a white liquid that looked much like water, and was burned in lamps. I have yet one of those old benzine lamps that was used then. The lamp had two small tubes, about the size of a lead pencil, sticking up out of the burner, and in these were two round wicks. This lamp probably made about as much light as three or four candles, and it was thought to be a wonderful thing. Then about 1860 or '61 kerosene came into general use, and held its own until we began to get electricity in the small towns. But kerosene is in common use yet wherever electricity or gas cannot be had, and will probably hold its own for many years to come.

Dipping Candles

Sixty-five years ago I can remember seeing my mother "dip candles." How many of the present day ever saw such performance? Afterward she had candle molds that would make a dozen candles at a time and was a great labor saver, but then they had to all be dipped. For some reason that I never understood, mother always dipped her candles at night after every one else had gone to bed, and all of her other work had been done up, but why she did it in this way I couldn't understand. To dip them she took a large tub, or other vessel that would sit on the floor, partly filled it with water, and then laid two sticks across from side to side, then she cut candle wicking as long as the candle was to be, twisted two lengths together, and hung them upon the sticks, as many as she wanted to make, and from a kettle of melted tallow she poured it down over the wicks, and of course, some of it would stick upon them and harden, the rest of the tallow falling into the water in the tub to be melted and used again; and she kept repeating this process until they became of the proper size, and then they were set away to cool until morning, and then she had a supply of candles. How would like to make your lighting apparatus in this way now?

In some cases people had even a more primitive way than this to make their lights. They took a shallow dish, like a saucer, filled it partly with melted lard, and placed a short wick along the side of the dish reaching down into the lard at the bottom and sticking up above the saucer at the top. After a time the wick would become saturated with the lard, and produce more or less of a light, and at the same time, a good, strong, healthy smell and plenty of smoke. How do you think you would enjoy reading or studying by that kind of a light? Surely the world is progressing in material things if it isn't growing any better morally—which is a disputed point.

We had to put up with many primitive contrivances in those days that wouldn't even be looked at now, but the people seemed to get along and enjoy life fully as well as they do now—perhaps more. They had plenty to eat and enough to wear, because nearly every one raised all that they required, and did not have to depend upon the stores as they do now—with the exception of a few articles that could not be produced here, and mostly they went without those. There were scarcely any rich men—none that we would call even well to do, but at the same time there were no poverty sticken families as we have now. It was the universal custom then to lend and borrow, and no one was ever refused. One man would own a plow, and that plow went the rounds of the neighborhood and did all the plowing. Another would have a drag and it was the same way with that and all other tools, teams, etc.

The people had less cares and were not so eager to become wealthy. Of real money there was scarcely a dollar in a whole neighborhood. Everything was bought and sold by barter. A man would come to town with a load of lumber or hogs and trade it to the merchants for dry-goods or other necessities, but got very little money. If one man owed another he paid him in some kind of produce that he needed. My father was, perhaps, as well off as his neighbors, but up to the time that the war broke out and greenbacks became plentiful, I do not believe that he ever had ten dollars in real money at any one time.

But the people were care free. They would work hard all day, and then after supper they would hitch up the team and go off to some of the neighbors and dance or visit half or more of the night, go home, get a few hours' sleep, and get up in the morning and go at it again and repeat the performance. I am inclined to think that we were better off then than we are now, notwithstanding that we had no automobiles or fine clothing or any of the present day luxuries. I would much like to be able to look ahead to about 1975 and see how the people were living and what they had to live upon, and whether they were any better off than they are now, but I have no hope of being able to do this. There is only one thing that I feel sure about for our posterity of fifty years hence, and that is they will still be paying the debts—principal and interest—that this generation has piled up for them to struggle with. I consider that a sure thing, and how they will bless us for it.

DECATUR'S FIRST WEDDING

The following copy of a marriage certificate was received by the Republican office a short time ago from Florence S. Babbitt of Ypsilanti, Mich., and reads as below:

"I do hereby certify that on the second day of May, 1850, Miss Mary Elliott was married to Mr. Levi T. Olds by me. Decatur, Michigan, May 26th, 1850.

"Witnesses present—
Thadaeous Gardiner,
Sarah Ann Elliott,
Charles A. Stuart.
(Signed) George B. Sherwood,
Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Van Buren, State of Michigan."

Well, there's nothing very remarkable about that, you may say. Men and women will get married; they are doing it all the time, so why do you bring forward these old residents to expose their weakness? But there is one little difference about this marriag from the countless others that have taken place in our village.

It so happened that about two years ago I had occasion to dig up the early history of Decatur, and in doing so I discovered that this was the very first marriage that was solemnized in our village. There have been a great many others since, but this was the only genuine first wedding, and therefore is somewhat different from the others.

All of the older residents of forty-five or fifty years ago will remember Mr. Olds. He was a nice, gentle old man, who, so far as I know, never injured any one or had an enemy. In his younger days he had been a soldier during the Mexican war, and marched with Gen. Scott from Vera Cruz to Mexico City, and fought in many of the battles during that campaign.

Mr. Olds must have been one of the very early settlers of Decatur, but I could find nothing to show when he arrived here. The first notice of his name seems to have been his marriage. While he lived here he was a carpenter and builder. I think that he had only one child—Miss Frankie Olds—who married while living here, but I do not know what became of her.

Mr. Olds moved away from Decatur many years ago, but about twenty years since he visited here and I saw him. I believe that I afterward heard he had died. He was very old when I saw him last. He was a good man, but like most good men, he never accumulated very much wordly wealth.

W. H. Tuttle.

The three names given as witnesses to this marriage are all strange to me. I do not think that I ever knew any of them. Perhaps some of the other very old residents will remember them. Mr. George B. Sherwood was the first Justice of the Peace in our village and this wedding was one of his very first official acts. He was also our first postmaster. The postoffice was established in 1852. He must have left Decatur before my time.

The dates given in Mr. Sherwood's certificate differ somewhat from those that I found in an old Decatur history, but they are all included in the month of May, 1850.

THE MESSENGER

When he came into the village
All the warriors gazed in wonder,
As they listened to the message,
From the Great Breath who had sent him
Told them of a pale-faced people,
Of the coming of the white man
In his great canoe with white wings,
Coming with his sticks of thunder,
Coming with the pitted fever,
And his drink of firey water.
"They shall drive you to the westward westward to the Land of Darkness to the land of Uh-Shun-Hi-Yi."
Then the warriors in their anger
Chased him far beyond the village
There he stopped and spoke in sadness
"You shall journey to the westward, /OWN A TRAIL OF TEARS AND SORROW.
To a land of trial and hunger.
'Cross the blue and bitter water
From the mists beyond the sunset
Then shall come the slant-eyed strangers
Riding on their winged war birds
Dropping fire and death below them,
Bringing sorrow to the people,
Terror to the white invador."
Thus, Thus, he spoke and then he vanished
Deep into the Smoky Mountains
And their eyes no more beheld him
He had gone from them forever.

OLD PIONEER

By Will Carelton, Michigan Poet

When the spring-time touch is lightest,
When the summer-eyes are brightest,
On the Autumn sings most drear;
When the winter's hair is whitest,
Sleep, Old Pioneer!
Safe beneath the sheltering sail
Late enough you crept,
Well you paid for every blessing
Bought with grief each day of cheer.
Nature's arms around you pressing,
Nature's lips your-brow caressing,
Sleep, Old Pioneer!

When the of trail was steepest,
When the forest-brown was deepest,
Poor, but young, you hastened here;
Come when solid hope was cheapest —
Come — A Pioneer!
Made the western junglers view
Civilization's charms;
Snatched a home for yours and you,
From the lean tree-arms.
Toil had never cause to doubt you —
Progress! path you helped to clear;
But today forgets about you and the world rises on without you —
Sleep, Old Pioneer!

Careless Crowds go daily past you,
Where their future fate has cast you,
Leaving not a sign or tear;
and your wonder works outlast you —
Brave Old Pioneer!
Little care the selfish throng
Where your head is hid,
Through they thrine upon the strong
Resolute work you did.

1918?

BUT few are permitted to enjoy the privilege and joy that came to Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Roberts on January 1, 1918. On that day these two highly esteemed and much beloved citizens and neighbors of our community celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. About them were gathered as on that day of fond recollection, a group of well wishing friends who assembled to join with them in the happiness of their celebration.

Fifty years are meaningless and of little significance in themselves, but when they are filled with service and usefulness and the spirit of altruism, then they take on new significance. Such indeed have been the years that have come to Mr. and Mrs. Roberts. This was the testimony of all who wished them well that day and it was the consensus of opinion that this spirit had kept them going and made the years rest so highly upon them.

After a bountiful dinner Mrs. Hooper read the following poem which expressed most sincerely the sentiment of all their friends.

This is a rhyme of that olden time,
When these two folks were wed;
Since that blissful day so far away
Just fifty years have sped.

I wish I could set in a song
Their journey along life's road,
Meeting with sunshine and storm
Bearing, together each load.

Many a word of kindness,
Many a deed of love,
Is written to their credit
In the book kept up above.

So in our hearts we wish them,
Best of neighbors and friends,
Health and comfort and peace
On to the journey's end.

There may the gates of light
On their hinges swing so wide,
That these two who have lived as one
May enter side by side.

In the evening the members of the local order of the Eastern Star, of which the "bride" and "groom" are old and faithful members, went in a body to the Roberts home to extend to them their congratulations and best wishes. After a brief informal program Supt. Washburn presented the congratulations of the Order in the form of an appropriate gift, and so ended a day of brightness and good cheer.

Besides a number of their friends from Decatur, there were present Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Rogers and son, Frederick, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Vickery and son, Roger, and Mrs. M. L. Vickery of Kalamazoo and Miss Helen Peterson of Battle Creek.

The following account of the silver wedding anniversary held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts in this village was taken from the Decatur Republican of the issue dated December 31, 1892:

SILVER WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Roberts Entertain Most Delightfully

A very delightful social event occurred on Saturday evening, December 31, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Roberts of this village. The occasion was one of peculiar interest, being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. Their well known hospitality and good cheer were extended to their many friends with the cordiality that has always characterized this pleasant home.

About seventy guests sat down to the abundantly supplied tables. A few who were guests at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts were present last Saturday evening and greatly enjoyed the reunion of friends and revival of pleasant memories. Among them was Mrs. M. M. Manley of Grand Rapids, who was Mrs. Robert's bridesmaid, and who contributed an original poem referring to the early acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, and giving a hopeful and prophetic glance at the future. Her daughter read a humorous selection. Music was furnished by Misses Hattie Roberts, Leila Harlow and Eva Trowbridge. The evening was thus enlivened and rendered pleasant by cheerful interchange of greetings and by the expression of good wishes for this worthy couple, that another quarter of a century may find them both in the enjoyment of life and its blessings. They were the recipients of many appropriate and valuable gifts.

Excepting a residence of about two years in Atlanta, Ga., Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have spent their entire married life in Decatur, and are held in very high esteem by the entire community.

THE OLD MUSICIAN & HIS HARP

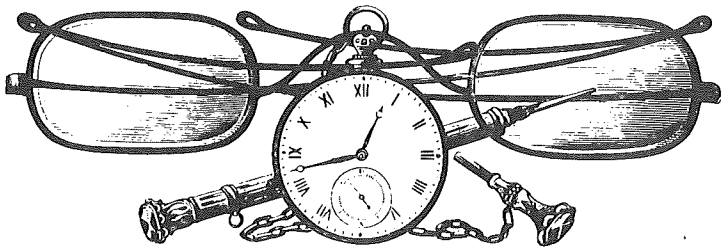
Years have come and passed away,
Golden locks have turned to gray,
Golden ringlets once so fair
Time has changed to silvery hair.
Yes, I've reached the riverside,
Soon I'll launch upon its tide,
Soon my bark with noiseless oar
Safe will pass to yon bright shore.

Chorus:
Bring my harp to me again;
Let me hear its gentle strain,
Let me hear its chords once more
E'er I pass to that bright shore.

Oh! those chords of magic power,
Take me back to childhood's hour,
To the cot beside the sea
Where I knelt at Mother's knee.
But that mother she has gone,
Calm she sleeps beneath a stone,
While I wander here alone,
Sighing for a brighter home.

Chorus:

Soon I'll be among the blest,
Where the weary are at rest.
Soon I'll tread the golden shore
Singing praises evermore.
Now my bark is on the stream,
I can see its waters gleam,
Soon I'll be where angels roam,
Dear old harp, I'm going home.



THE CHANGES OF SIXTY-FIVE YEARS

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

My own personal recollections of passing events go back more or less distinctly, about sixty-five years, and during that time what wonderful changes have taken place in this world of ours. Some of them have been way beyond the wildest dreams of even the smartest scientists that lived fifty years ago, while others have been terrible and awful beyond all conceptions. In this last class falls our present European war. Who would have believed even five years ago that it was possible for such a world calamity to take place. We all know the history and the consequences of the deadly struggle, but no living person can see the changes among the nations of the earth that will result from it.

To go back to earlier days; my first clear remembrance of public events was the presidential campaign between Buchanan and Fremont in the fall of 1856. Up to that time my father had always been a Democrat, but when Fremont was nominated by the new Republican party he "turned his coat" and became a Black Republican; and at the same time he became a bitter opponent of slavery, and therefore he was called a "Black Abolitionist." It took real grit in those days to come out boldly and fight slavery even here in the north. Slavery was considered by the great majority of the people to be a divine institution, sanctioned by the Bible, and that must be preserved at all hazards and for all time, and it was thought to be almost a crime to oppose it in any way. Well, Fremont was defeated and the southern Democrats held power for another four years while they were perfecting their plans to secede and set up a separate government with slavery for its corner-stone.

When Russia Befriended Us

Then in 1860 came the struggle between the same parties again over the same question; but this time, owing to a division in the Democratic party, Lincoln was elected to the presidency. The southern states immediately seceded and declared war on the government, and there followed four years of bitter strife between North and South. As I look back to the history of those days it seems almost a miracle that that south did not win and divide our country into two parts, because they had the active aid and sympathy of all the governments of Europe except Russia. Russia stood our firm friend during the whole period of the war, and she was an immense help in standing off the other European powers who would have been glad to see the south succeed and break up our union. But Russia stood by us faithfully and we have always felt very grateful to her as a nation ever since.

The spring of 1865 came peace once more. The south was completely subdued, her armies broken up and captured, and the Union was saved. Slavery was abolished forever in our country, that source of trouble to us during the past fifty years was removed for all time, and now we are a united country once more, something that we could never have been as long as slavery existed. The colored race is slowly but surely being brought up to a level with other citizens, and in our recent conflict their regiments did gallant service.

Railroads and the Telegraph

Farther back than I can remember we had railroads and telegraph lines, but they were both very crude affairs compared with those of the present day. The railroads were made up of short lines, and each one was run on its own hook without paying much attention to its connection with other roads. A railroad journey of any distance in those early days was a long and tiresome affair because one had to change roads so many times. The engines, cars, road-beds and rails were all light affairs; many of the roads used old strap rails, and trains could not safely run at the fast rate that they do now-a-days. The first railroad train that I ever remember seeing must have been when I was about five years old. My mother took me to the old depot one day when she went there to meet a sister who was coming in from the east.

I stood at the depot window as the train pulled in, and as the engine came past it seemed to me as though it was a great roaring fiery monster that was going to run right over us. To cap the climax the engineer blew the whistle fiercely just then and that scared the little wits that I had left clear out of me. My, but I was frightened, and I yelled bloody murder, because I felt sure that the engine was going to eat us all up alive. How well I remember my sensations of that first sight of a locomotive close by; mother said that I trembled and shook all the rest of that day, and that night every time that I fell asleep I would dream about it and wake myself up screaming. I couldn't have been more than five or six years old, and I always was a good deal of a little and big coward. I have seen quite a number of locomotives since that day, and have had some bad scares, but never anything that frightened me as that did.

The very first that I remember anything about a telegraph office must have been when I was about eleven years old. I was going to school here in Decatur and boarding with Miss Libbie Thomas who kept a millinery store in what is now the milk factory, and one day I wandered down to the old depot. The window in the old telegraph office stood open showing the instruments on the table. There was a lady in the office, and as I stood there looking at things very wistfully the lady kindly asked me if I would like to come inside and have her explain it as well as she could to a small boy. You may be sure that I jumped at the chance, because my curiosity was very much excited by the sight of so many strange looking things. I was too bashful to ever have asked her to show me, but when she asked me to come in why that was different and I accepted the invitation gladly. This lady—I do not know who she was—showed me where the wires came into the office from the poles on the outside, and where they were connected with the instruments. I was too young to understand it, but it all seemed very wonderful to me, and right then and there I decided that I would become a telegraph operator, as soon as I was old enough, if it was a possible thing. The lady told me to come back when I was three or four years older and that she thought that then I might become one and I never lost sight of that half promise, and at the end of another four years I realized my ambition. This lady showed me the old fashioned register used by almost all operators, because a sound operator was nearly unheard of then. She informed me that the machine was run like a clock with a heavy weight.

Then she wound it up with the big key and started it running while messages were passing over the wire, and showed me how it printed the messages on the narrow paper tape in raised letters. She gave me the telegraph alphabet and taught me how to pick out the letters and words. I could not understand the use of the relay, but the sending key was plain to me. She even tore off a piece of the paper tape, with the dots and dashes printed on it for me to take home.

My, but I was a proud boy that day, for I surely thought that I had almost learned the whole business. This lady gave me a cordial invitation to come again when I could and I promised to do so, and it was not many days before I was there again, but to my great grief and disappointment I found that the lady was gone, and that a young man had taken her place, and this young man had no great desire to be bothered with answering my innumerable questions, and he turned me down cold. That ended my connection with a telegraph office for the time being; but three or four years afterward I made application again to be taken as a regular student and was accepted and became a full-fledged operator in time. But how crude the instruments of those days were compared with those of the present time. Reading by sound was almost unknown and only a very few of the largest offices had sound operators. How many times I have wished that I had kept that piece of paper tape.

Then along about 1870 came another great improvement in telegraphy. Some electrician said that it was possible to use one wire for two, four or more circuits at the same time, or duplex and quadruplex telegraphy, thus saving the use of that many additional wires. Others said that it was utterly impossible to do any such thing, but the impossible was done, and for years it has been in common everyday use on all wires that do a heavy business.

Even telegraphy is doomed to become a back number and be done away with entirely. Telephones are taking the place of the telegraph all the time, and it is only a question of time when telephones become perfect, which they are not yet by a good deal—that they will entirely take the place of the telegraph and telegraphy will become a lost art, and the poor operators will be obliged to go to work.

Along about 1875-6 it began to be said that it would be possible to talk over a wire. That idea was well laughed at, even by electricians, but it was done, and we all know how common a thing the telephone is now. Next came the electric motor and the transmission of power over long distances through wires, and that now is a very common way everywhere of obtaining power, and the use of electric motors is extending rapidly in all directions, and it seems to be only a question of time when all of the numerous rivers and waterfalls of the world will be employed to furnish nearly all the power necessary to carry on the activities of the earth.

Wireless

Next came the report that it was not necessary to have a wire to carry an electric current—that it could be carried through the air without wires just as well. This propossition was not only laughed at, but it was utterly disbelieved by almost every one, and was called foolish. But we all know that wireless telegraphy is in common everyday use, even across the Atlantic ocean and longer distances. Wireless telephony is being worked out, and I can see no reason to doubt that we shall have, sooner or later, wireless power transmission for electric motors. In fact it is no longer service in the navy, and was on of the safe to predict what we are to have in the way of new inventions. The impossible things of only a few years ago are now too common to excite surprise or comment.

Aeroplanes

Less than twenty years ago it was declared by scientists that any machine heavier than air could not possibly rise and support itself off the ground—that the only way to fly was to have a large receptacle filled with "lighter than air" gas to rise into the atmosphere and remain there for any length of time. But now we have air-ships that not only arise themselves into the air and travel long distances, but they carry many men, small cannon, and hundreds of pounds weight of bombs to drop on the heads of those below them; and they fight regular battles in the air and fly in formation equalling the best managed ships. They are called the "eyes of the armies" now, and the side that has the best and most air-ships is almost certain to win the victory. In this country they are beginning to be used to carry the mails between cities, and no one can say what the air service will develop to in a few more years. But it is fully expected that the ships of the air will be crossing the Atlantic ocean carrying passengers and the mails in a very short time.

During my school days Alaska and northern Canada were considered to be almost as far away as the moon itself. No one tried to live there except a few Esquimaux, Indians and trappers. But now what a change. Alaska is producing many millions in value every year in gold and furs. The country is being settled by white people, cities are building—even within the arctic circle—and railrods are pushing through the country in all directions to tap the gold, copper and coal mines. Alaska was a very fortunate acquisition for the United States. Russia sold it to us for almost a song, and it has paid for itself an hundred times over, and will keep adding untold wealth to our country for ages to come.

As to northern Canada it has become one of the principal granaries of the world, and produces many, many millions of bushels of wheat every year to help to feed the inhabitants of the earth. In fact, some of us would have to go without bread if it were not for the northern Canada wheat fields. Lines of railroads cross the continent several times there, and large cities exist now where fifty years ago it was an unbroken wilderness and was thought that it must always remain so. Then northern Canada was thought to be fit for only one thing, and that was to raise fur bearing animals.

North and South Poles Discovered

Within the last fifteen years both the north and the south poles of the earth have been visited by explorers, and there is hardly a spot left on the face of old mother Earth that has not been visited and mapped out. Africa has been explored in nearly all of its dark corners, and is being settled and civilized by the white people, and it does really seem as though there was nothing new left for the traveller to find unless he can rig up an air-ship in which he can visit the moon or Mars and find out the truth about the famous canals on Mars. And who will be brave enough to say that this will not be done eventually?

Some forty-five or fifty years ago the French author, Jules Vern, wrote a book describing a voyage in a wonderful sub-marine vessel: It was called "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," and while nearly every one read the story because it was very entertainingly written, almost every one laughed at it as being an utter impossibility. But now during our present war with Germany hundreds of submarines are in constant use by the Germans, and they have done immense damage to English and American shipping by sinking uncounted vessels loaded not only with a great amount of supplies but also with men, women and children, causing great damage and loss of life.

The Automobile

It would require almost a whole book to even mention the inventions and improvements of the past fifty or sixty years. Many of them, ordinary people know nothing about, because so many of them are only used by experts and specialists. Twenty-five years ago automobiles were unknown, but now the roads and streets are literally filled with them. It is astonishing to go into the large cities like Chicago and see the number of autos that are in everyday use. In some places it is almost impossible to cross the street without getting run over by them, and then the auto trucks for the hauling of all kinds of goods, and in the war zone in Europe for delivering supplies and hauling heavy cannon and carrying men to the front they have nearly displaced horses; and there isn't much doubt but that horses will become obsolete in a few more years, which will be a God-send to the poor brutes. Tractors are doing the heavy work on our farms, and more and more of them are coming into use every year.

It is perfectly bewildering when one tries to think of the things that are in everyday use now, but which no one had even dreamed of sixty years ago.

We had railroads and telegraphs before my time, but they have both been improved and enlarged since those days until they bear no relation whatever to the originals. Then the best of the roads were only single tracked, the engines, rails and cars were all small and light. Now the main roads are double and quadruple tracked, and all of the equipment is at least four times as heavy, and draw loads in proportion. Sleeping cars were unknown then, the roads were short and disconnected, and passengers were required to change cars and roads often, but they have been combined and consolidated until now one can enter his sleeper in New York City and never leave it until he arrives in San Francisco, and most wonderful of all we can send messages through the air, without wires, between the same two places or across the oceans.

Nothing Impossible

It is not possible to say where all this is to end, if there be any end, or that the human mind will achieve in the way of material things. It is thought by some that we will be able to extract our food directly from the atmosphere, instead of growing it in the vegetable or animal way as we always have done. Experiments are being made along that line ,and who will be brave enough to say that it will not be accomplished. Also scientists expect to be able to derive our heat and power from the sun and the tides. We know that an unlimited amount of both have been going to waste from both sources for thousands and millions of years, and why should they not be harnessed for the use of the people. It is said that the volcanoes all over the world have been and are pouring forth millions of tons every year of materials that would be valuable to the human race if we can only find a way to save and conserve them. Why should it not be done. Our coal and oil will give out after about so many years, and then we must find some other source of heat and power. The vegetable world is being changed and forced to bear better and more produce by Mr. Burbank, and no one is wise enough to say what can be accomplished in that line. I for one, am not sure but that in a few years we may be able to go into the garden and pick our beef-steak, or the pies and cakes for dinner off the squash vines, or that we shall not draw our milk, cream, cheese and butter directly from the air, instead of having to keep and feed a cow for that purpose.

Then from material things that we know have been accomplished because we see and use them every day of our lives we can pass on to other matters that scientists claim to have discovered, but ordinary people cannot know as to whether they are true or not. We can only take their word for it, but they seem satisfied with the truth of We know that the chemists have made wonderful discoveries in late years, but we do not understand them no one can unless they make a life study of that branch of science. The medical profession—especially the surgical part of it—has done many wonderful things in the later years, and some of the diseases that were so common and so deadly a few years ago are almost obliterated now. Yellow fever, that used to rage almost every year in Cuba and other southern countries, and many times in the southern part of our own country, has been nearly done away with by a stict system of cleaning up and the destruction of the insect pests that propagated and carried it from one to another person. Typhoid fever also, that was so deadly in our soldier camps during the Spanish war of twenty years ago, has been very much ameliorated; it has not been entirely conquered, but its terrors have been very much dispelled by a system of vaccination and a thorough system of sanitation.

Surgery Greatly Improved

Surgery has indeed made wonderful strides during the past fifty years. During our Civil war of fifty odd years ago, if a man was wounded and gangrene set in the case was hopeless at once. Now we call it blood poison. but I think that it is the same old gangrene that we heard so much about then. So many of our soldiers died then from slight wounds that now would hardly keep a man from active duty more than a few days, but then if gangrene developed from a wound it was almost surely fatal. But now the surgeons have many antispetics that enable them not only to prevent infection, but also those that will cure after infection has begun. The antiseptics that have been discovered within the past thirty or forty years enable surgeons to perform wonderful operations that would not have been even attempted then. Thousands of our soldiers died from gangrene and lock-jaw that might have been saved if the doctors had had the curative agents that are in common use now.

Fifty years ago no one, so far as I know, had ever heard of appendicitis, or thought that the appendix could be removed. Then it was called "inflamation of the bowels" and nature either cured or killed the patient, but now the removal of the appendix is a common everyday operation, and is nearly always successful if the disease has not gone too long; and the queer thing about it is that the person gets along just as well without that organ as he did with it, and there are other seemingly important organs that can be taken away from the body apparently without doing any harm to the patient in his after life; and so the query arises as to why they were ever put into the human anatomy if they are necessary to the welfare of the body. It is supposed that these unnecessary organs were of real use at same far distant day in the past when our ancestors wore tails and were living and climbing around in the tree tops, but now since we have become civilized and have adopted an entirely different way of living, they have become useles and can be dispensed with just as well as not, and when these parts become diseased they are easily removed and no harm follows to the patient.

Sewing Machines

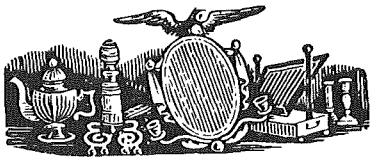
Before closing this list of recent inventions I would like to mention a few others. Many of them are so very common now that we almost forget that people have not always had them to use, but, comparatively, they are of very recent origin. The invention of sewing machines goes back beyond my day, but at first they were extremely crude affairs and not many people owned one until within the last fifty years. But now there is hardly a house but that the wife has her machine, and they have been simplified and perfected until they seem nearly human in their operation, and where electricity is in use nearly all have small motors attached to run them, thereby relieving the lady from the drudgery of pedalling it. A good machine can be bought so cheaply now that there is no excuse for any house to be without one. A machine can be bought now—even in the extremely high prices for everything—for $20 or $25, that fifty years ago would have cost at least $90 or $100, and so much better machine that there is hardly any comparison between them.

Typewriters

Now we have type-writers, and scarcely a person that has any writing to do but has a writing machine. The first typewriter that I ever saw was at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, and it was thought to be a wonderful invention. Some one had a booth in one of the buildings with counters around a small square, and inside were a number of girls operating typewriters. On the counters were placed a lot of old fashioned slates with pencils attached. You paid in 25 cents and then wrote out a short letter on a slate to some one back at your home, and then a girl typed it on a machine while you watched her do it, put it into a stamped envelope and mailed it for you, and the folks at home thought that it was a great curiosity to get a letter from you written by a machine in plain print that could be read easily—which was not always the case with handwriting. A typewriter is as far ahead of a pen for writing purposes as the sewing-machine is superior to the old needle for sewing.

Phonographs

About this time came the phonographs or talking machines, but now they are everywhere and in constant use. They have been perfected until it is now possible for almost every family to have the music of the greatest artists in their own homes, and not only that but the records of these same artists can be preserved and reproduced hundreds of years in the future. Great speeches can be recorded in this way and reproduced in later years in the very voice of the original speaker. What would we not give if President Lincoln's Gettysburg speech, or Patrick Henry's defiance to the English king could have been saved for us in this way and repeated now? But talking machine records had not even been dreamed of at the time they were spoken.



Gas Engines

The first gas motor that I ever saw was also at the Centennial. This engine instead of being the small and compact piece of machinery that gas motors are now was about as large as a small chicken house, and every time it exploded it made a noise like a cannon and fairly shook the building. They had it attached to a printing press and it seemed to be a very complicated piece of machinery. Now gas motors are in use everywhere and in all kinds of places—on farms and in shops—and they are so small and compact that they can be used in places where it would be impossible to put a steam engine. They do not need water or fire to run them and are only a fraction of the weight of the old style engine. Flying machines could never fly without some such motor for their power. Farm tractors are coming more and more into use every year and taking the place of horses, and nearly all of them depend entirely upon gas motors to operate them, while nearly all autos use them.

Warships

In the spring of 1862 occurred the first battle that was ever fought between iron vessels of war. This was the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac near Fortress Monroe, Va., and it demonstrated the fact that all war vessels constructed by all the nations of the whole world up to that time were perfectly worthless and would be thrown away and rebuilt on different principles. Either the Monitor or the Merrimac alone could have destroyed the greatest navy that sailed the oceans then. But now all the nations that possess navies have dreadnaughts beside which the Monitor and the Merrimac were only toys. We have machine guns that throw a perfect hail storm of bullets. Immense cannon that throw shells of half a ton in weight from twenty to fifty miles and destroy almost a whole city at one shot. Our recent war in Europe is said to have employed on both sides twenty million of armed soldiers. Armies are counted by the million now instead of by the thousand.

But where is this all to end, for surely we cannot go on forever as we have been doing the past fifty or sixty years. Every year more and more new inventions are perfected and put into common use, and no one can say what will be the next new thing to be brought forward, but how far can the human mind go along this road? No one can say. The impossibility of today is in common use tomorrow, but will this always be so?

There are a few things that not even the smartest of men have been able to penetrate even the outskirts of, and principal of these are Life and Death. No one has been able to produce life artificially. Nature has just one way for that and one only, and man cannot produce it in any other way. We can cause death but no one can bring life back to a body that has once died. No one can say what becomes of the life and inteligence after it leaves the body. Does it go out like the flame of a candle, or does it live again in some other form. We have many theories and beliefs about this but no certainty. What becomes of the intelligence or soul when death takes possession of the physical body and brain and leaves it only fit to be buried in the ground? The life that we are born with surely comes from nothing, and that being the case why should it not go back to the same place, when the body dies? Everything that we know has to be acquired after birth, and where do we get it from? It has to be learned from the experience of those who have lived before us. The human mind is incapable of comprehending anything that has neither beginning or end. All life and intelligence, even of the very lowest animals, surely has a beginning. We can see that plainly without any chance for dispute about it, and if it begins why should it not end? But where or what the end may be is very uncertain.

There are many theories and beliefs about it, but no one can really know the truth yet. Some believe the human mind or soul lives on through all eternity in some unknown condition. Others think that it dies with the death of the physical body, while many more believe that our life passes on to inhabit another body—either human or animal—when the present body dies, but the smartest men that have ever lived really know nothing more about it than a child does.

Perhaps in the ages to come the human mind may advance in knowledge to a point where they will be able to know and demonstrate that fate that awaits us at the death of the body, but we are a long way from that state of knowledge yet. No one will dare to say, after seeing the many wonderful things that have been accomplished during the past fifty or sixty years, that anything is impossible to do. We may yet travel to the moon, or the sun and stars. The thought of being able to make such trips seems no more strange to me than of the utterly impossible things that have been done. It is an accepted fact that we have progressed farther in knowledge during the past seventy-five years than we did in all the years of human history before that time; and we are still going on at a more and more rapid pace all the time, and who can say where it will stop.

What of the Future?

I have seen such wonderful changes in my life of seventy years that I would like very much to see what the world will become in another seventy years, but I have not much hope of being here then, and where I will be or whether I will be able to see and know anything about what comes to pass at the end of that time is extremely doubtful. One thing is very sure—we will either live after the death of the body or we will not. There can be no half way place. If our mind or intelligence does still live after our bodies are buried in the ground then possibly we may be able to know what goes on here on the earth the same or better than we do now. But if we die all over when the body passes away, why then that will be the end of it, and we shall neither know nor care about whatever takes place after that. The subsequent proceedings will interest us no more. The people left on earth may fight and kill each other, and destroy property that has taken hundreds of years to build up, to their heart's content, but we shall sleep quietly on until the Judgment Day dawns—if there be such a day—and we all come forth from our graves to be judged and punished for our sins, or rewarded for our virtues and good deeds.

(The end.)

WAS DRUMMER IN CIVIL WAR

"BILLIE" BULLARD, WELL KNOWN IN DECATUR, AND BROTHER OF STEPHEN BULLARD OF HAMILTON, PASSED AWAY AT NILES JUNE 27.

"Billie" Bullard passed to the Unknown Beyond at his home in Niles, Friday morning, June 27th, 1919, of a cancer of the ear. He was born in Auburn, New York, April 23rd, 1842, and came to Paw Paw, Mich., with his parents in 1855.

He was a resident of that village, learning the trade of wood turner later on, until the war of the rebellion, when he enlisted the first day of May, 1861, in the Lafayette Guards in company with his old friend "Dell" Cumings of Paw Paw, he as a drummer and "Dell" as fifer.

The company went to Staten Island, New York, to join the 70th N. Y. Infantry, Sickles' Brigade. These two comrades stuck together during those four years of fighting, and were bosom friends since that time. They have played together on every Decoration day but two since they were mustered out of the Civil War service. Mr. Bullard is a citizen of Niles, honored by the entire community in which he lived.

He leaves besides a devoted wife, two sisters, Elizabeth Farnsworth of Hamilton, Mrs. Sarah Barages of St. Cloud, Florida, and two brothers, Stephen of Hamilton and James F. of St. Cloud, Florida, besides numerous distant relatives. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor of the Presbyterian church of Niles, of which Mr. and Mrs. Bullard were members.

Mr. Bullard was well known in Decatur, having visited here on different occasions. He was a comrade of the late Edward Carney, and attended a reunion of the Lafayette Light Guards here several years ago, on which occasion he and Mr. Cumings furnished the music.

FRANK TUCKER

BORN AT DECATUR 1859—DIED AT ST. JOSEPH, MO., 1919.

Frank Tucker, son of William Henry and Cornelia Foster Tucker, passed away at St. Joseph, Mo., following an operation, the last week in March. He was born at Decatur, Mich., in 1859, and his youth was spent in this village.

Early in life he developed talent as an actor, and chose the stage as his life's work. After appearing in amateur theatricals successfully for a few years, he organized a troupe of his own, and since that time has been constantly employed on the stage, traveling over different parts of the country, until his name at the head of a bill guaranteed the success of the entertainment.

In 1881 he was united in marriage with Miss Ella Carpenter of this village at Morris, Ill., and for a number of years she traveled with him as a member of his company. After the death of her father, the late Lewis Carpenter, it was necessary for her to come home and care for the aged mother, who passed away just last fall.

Mr. Tucker is survived by his wife, two uncles, Frederick Tucker of Battle Creek and Charley Tucker of Grand Rapids, and two aunts, Maud and Anna Tucker of Chicago. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Tucker, passed away many years ago at Newfield, New Jersey, and a brother Clyde died in South America a number of years ago.

The past few years Mr Tucker has traveled much in the south and west. When stricken with the final ailment, he had started for the north, and would have come to Decatur, had not his illness made necessary the operation at St. Joseph, which resulted fatally. He was a member of the Actor's Society of New York, and of the Elks and Woodman's lodges. Mrs. Tucker has the sympathy of many Decatur friends in her bereavement, which followed so closely the death of her mother, and an aged aunt, the last of her mother's family.

HISTORY OF THE CORNER STORE

WAS ONE OF FIRST STORE BUILDINGS BUILT IN DECATUR—REPLACED LOG STRUCTURE THAT BURNED

The old store building on the northwest corner of Phelps and Delaware streets was almost completely destroyed by fire Thursday night, January 2. This building must have been one of the very oldest in our village, and there has been more or less speculation as to when and by whom it was erected. To the best of my knowledge and belief there is not a single person now living in Decatur who was here when its timbers were hewed out of the solid trees with a broad-axe, unless it may be Mr. George Nesbitt, who was a boy living in Hamilton at that time.

Mr. Albert Abbott seems to think that it was the old Tucker building that had been moved from the corner across the street, but that is a mistake because I watched the Tucker building—with several other buildings—burn to the ground one night in 1869. I have an old Decatur Republican giving a full account of that fire. That was the time when the old English Veterinary surgeon jumped or fell out of the front window of his room above the post-office next door to the Tucker building, and fell on the sidewalk and slowly roasted to death because it was so hot that no one could get near enough to help him. It was an awful sight .

My own recollection of the burned building goes back to about 1856. It was certainly standing on the corner then. I think that Mr. Abbott must be mistaken as to his first remembrances of Decatur. He says that he first came here sixty years ago last summer. That would go back to 1858. At that time I was a boy of ten years, and was living here with Miss Libbie Thomas in her millinery store and going to school in the "old red school house" and surely there were many more than two stores here at that time. C. N. Poore had a hardware store in a low one-story building about where Van Antwerp's harness store stands now.

Decatur's Main Street in 1856

Mr. Ingalls kept a store in a wooden building where the Fletcher building is located. The Dixon building on the corner—just burned—was there, but I do not remember who occupied it at that time. Ira Nash had a general store in the building now used by George Roberts as a hardware store, but then standing on the Durkee corner. Col. Phelps had a store near the Brigham corner. Henry Canoll had a drug store on the Mosier corner, and C. T. Tucker occupied a long wooden building on the Wood corner; while the old Decatur house stood on the Duncombe House corner. There were other small buildings on Phelps street, but I cannot recall them all. Bob. Willis kept a saloon and was supposed to be the richest man in the town, but he lost his money and died in poverty. I am quite sure about the date but I believe that the Duncombe House was built about this time on the corner of St. Mary and Phelps steets—not later than 1859, anyway. Decatur was a lively village in 1858 and lots of business was done here because there was no other railroad except the Michigan Central where they could market their produce. The farmers in those days drew their wheat to Decatur from 25 miles away, both north and south of us. C. N. Poor was appointed postmaster in 1857, and the postoffice was in the hardware store that I have spoken of.

I have a large Van Buren county history published about forty years ago, and this book, in its account of the beginning of Decatur, says that 1851 the Main street of the village consisted of the store buildings of A. H. Dixon & Co.—the building just burned—Theodore Phelps, E. Ingalls and Willis bar-room; and in 1854 there were Canoll's drug store, two general stores, and the Decatur House on the Duncombe House corner. When it was built the Dixon store was said to be altogether a large and finer building than Decatur would ever need. Not many years ago one could still see through the overlying coats of paint, close up under the eaves on the Delaware street side, the sign, "A. H. Dixon & Co.," that had been painted there so long ago.

True Story of the Building

Now I am going to give the history of this building as I have heard it some time or other in the past. I cannot give any authority for the same because I do not know when, where or how I learned it, but I believe that it is nearly a correct statement. The story went that the very first store in our village was located on this corner in a building constructed partly of logs and partly of boards, and the very first fire that Decatur ever had burned it up one night in 1849, and then Dixon & Co. at once put up the building that has just gone up in smoke. When the water mains were laid in our streets about twenty-five years ago, it was said that the workmen came upon some of the half burned logs that had belonged to Decatur's first store, and that had lain there in the ground for so many years. I have no way to actually prove it but I believe this to be a true history of the burned building. Men almost without number have occupied the old building, but now it has gone the way of all earthly things and is no more.

Ira Nash did have a store near the railroad in 1862-63, but it did not stand on the livery barn lot. It was on the west end of what is now the R. R. park at the foot of Phelps street and south of Sherwood street. Many years before that he had a general store in what is now the Roberts' hardware then located on the Durkee corner. Mr. Nash was one of Decatur's first merchants. There was an old fashioned gallery in the rooms above this building. This must have been about 1854-55. The Roberts' building is surely one of the oldest left in Decatur.

The old "History of Van Buren Co." that I have spoken of gives many interesting incidents connected with early Decatur and the old time residents. It was published about forty years ago, and everything relating to those early days had not then been so nearly forgotten as they have now. A few years more and all of the original inhabitants of this vicinity will be gone and forgotten, and there will then be no one left to know—or care—anything about those far away days when our village was struggling into existence. So be it.

RAWSON WAREHOUSE HAS INTERESTING HISTORY

BUILT IN .EARLY .DAY .BY L. T. RAWSON, WHO MADE DECATUR LEADING GRAIN MARKETAFTER CIVIL WAR.

The old Rawson warehouses standing so many years across from the depot west are moved back from their long home to give place to a spacious storage plant built by the enterprising Sol Schpok, costing around $25,00, a building much needed for many years in the interest of the muck farmers of Decatur.

History.

The memory of no one now living in Decatur goes back to the building of the first of the two warehouses. The records show that Lyman T. Rawson acquired the lots in the spring of 1859, and other evidence indicates the first building was erected that summer. Several, though, remember the building of the second and larger warehouse but cannot fix the year. It was built likely between 1864 and 1867. The old buildings have done duty continuously for sixty years—for about forty years personally conducted by L. T. Rawson. Several parties doing business there in the last twenty-years among whom was the son of the elder Rawson, E. J. Rawson, who owned the property since the passing of his father and sold it to Mr. Schpok recently. Mr. Schpok has carried on his business in them for the last ten years succeeding Ed. Rawson.

Personal and Reminiscent.

Looking back over the 60 years we cannot think, talk or write about those warehouses and the activities emanating therefrom without according their founder a larger place in our thoughts. Lyman T. Rawson was a compelling force in the history and progress of Decatur—a man of tireless energy, and pre-eminently a man of action and above all a man of vision.

He put Decatur not only on the map, but in the limelight as the best wheat market on the line of the M. C. R. R. From the small beginning in the little first warehouse the business grew by leaps and bounds until every product of the soil found a ready market at the Rawson corner. All the cereal grains, lumber and shingles and the planing mill furnished everything in wood for building. From field and forest a constant stream of products poured into Decatur for nearly twenty miles each way north and south and for many miles east and west.

This large area tributary to Decatur was more than cut in two in the early 70's by two railroads, one twelve miles south and one about sixteen miles north.

Mr. Rawson built the first mint still in Decatur back of his warehouse and on his swamp the first mint was grown. He also raised the first celery and made the first real development of the Decatur muck. He promoted the first draining of the swamp. His vision of the possibilities of the old Decatur swamp was not realized in his lifetime but today his judgment is doubly vindicated and the vast tonnage of product from that same old swamp of ooze and mire and pestilential odor is why the old warehouses lost their home for the erection of the storage plant on their site, with a storing capacity of 125 cars—or to visualize it better, a line of cars a mile and a quarter long.

If the old warehouse could talk would it not tell an interesting story? How they paid out more money and did more business than anyone else in town. How they were doing business long before Joseph Rogers started his private bank in the middle of the sixties. That ox-teams were a common sight on the streets, and people went to the circus in lumber wagons with boards across the box for spring seats. How even the Deacon took his family—just to see the parade of course—educational feature for the children to see the animals. When once in the sixties the lady to buy clover seed could not get through the wide doorway—her hoops were so big. And what is now the park would be closely packed with wagons to unload wheat and thousands of pounds of wool came in on hay racks and men all wore boots with pantlegs tucked in the top. And in the winter great loads of pine lumber, shingles and tanbark came on sleighs from Breedsville big as loads of hay, and when wheat was $3.00 per bushel in '65 they said it would never go down to a dollar and long years after in Cleveland's time when it sold for 50c, then they said it would never go up to a dollar. Men, we think, are funny animals. They have shoved us off in the back ground, but they have not junked us as we are yet well-preserved. But sad for our prestige they use us for a junk and rag shop.

In putting L. T. Rawson in the forefront in the development and progress of Decatur we detract nothing from many others whose names and activities are familiar, as Lyscom Brigham, Thos. Brownbridge and Hon. A. B. Copley.

WILLIAM H. TUTTLE

BORN AT MENDON 1848—PASSED AWAY IN DECATUR THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1919

William H. Tuttle, one of Decatur's oldest and best known residents, passed away at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Roberts Thursday, November 6, aged 71 years, two months and 29 days.

Mr. Tuttle was born the son of Jack and Elizabeth Tuttle, at Mendon, Michigan, August 7, 1848. At the age of six years, with his parents, he came to Hamilton township, where the family made a home in the then wilderness, and the father engaged in the lumber business, being the proprietor for several years of a saw mill located in the Nesbitt district.

It was there Mr. Tuttle received his early education, which was later supplemented by a course in the Decatur high school. After attending the local school for a year or so he entered the office of the Decatur Republican and learned the printing trade which he followed for several years, serving for a short time as foreman of the office. He later entered the telegraph office and learned to be an operator. This was his life's work, and for twenty-five years he followed that calling, here and at other stations.

In 1877 he was united in marriage to Miss Anna Sutton of Battle Creek, who preceded him in death in June, 1915, leaving no children. A niece living in California, the daughter of an only sister of M. Tuttle, is the only survivor of the family.

Completing twenty-five years in the service of the telegraph company; Mr. Tuttle retired from that work, and spent his time at the pleasant home on the south side, which was his residence for thirty-eight years. After Mrs. Tuttle's death he went to the home of his nephew, George Roberts, where he was made comfortable and cared for in his declining years.

Mr. Tuttle was a student and spent many of his leisure hours in reading. He had an excellent memory; could recite incidents that occurred in this vicinity during his childhood and youth, and derived much pleasure during his last years in writing historical sketches for publication.

Mr. Tuttle was a public spirited citizen, and interested in things that made for the betterment of the community and country. He had many close friends who cherish his memory.

Funeral services were held at the Roberts' home Saturday afternoon at two o'clock. Geo. B. Rogers of Kalamazoo read the funeral sermon. Interment was in the family lot at Lakeside.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our appreciation of the many kind acts and assistance of friends and neighbors at the time of Mr. Tuttle's death and burial. Especially do we thank the owners of the autos and those who sent flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Roberts.

RESIDENT OF EAST DECATUR FIFTY YEARS

MRS. ORPHA JANE LEWIS PASSED AWAY SATURDAY AT THE AGE OF NINETY YEARS.

Mrs. Orpha Jane Lewis passed away at the home of Mrs. Addie Michels at South Haven Saturday, May 10, at the age of 90 years, 11 months and 11 days. The remains were brought to the home of her son, John L. Lewis in East Decatur, Monday, and funeral services were held there Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, Rev. Wm. A. Taylor, officiating. Interment was in the family lot at Prospect Hill cemetery near Paw Paw.

Mrs. Lewis was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Truman Edward Lyman and was born in Oneida county, New York. At the age of 23 she was united in marriage to John Lewis, with whom she lived in comfort and happiness until his death in 1910. They were the parents of three sons, Millard E. of Boston, Mass.; Henry P. of Bridgeport, Conn., and John L. of East Decatur, all of whom survive. She is also mourned by three granddaughters and one great-granddaughter.

In 1868 the family moved to Michigan and established a home in East Decatur where she continued to live until a few months ago when she went to South Haven to make her home with Mrs. Michels, an old neighbor and friend.

Mrs. Lewis was a direct descendant of one of New England's oldest families. An ancestor, Richard Lyman, landed in this country in 1632, and built for himself a home in the heart of the present city of Hartford, where he passed away in 1640. The Lyman family was one of the 200 oldest American families represented at the St. Louis fair, and a printed record of the family was produced from an official New England history at that time.

Mrs. Lewis was converted when 19 years of age and joined the Methodist church in Oneida county, New York. She joined the Decatur M. E. church by certificate in September, 1866, and was an active worker as long as health permitted.

VILLAGE INSTALLS NEW ELECTRIC WATER PUMP

A new electrically driven water pump, received and put into operation last week, is the latest improvement at the light and water plant. The machine is one of the best of its kind, and demonstrates one of the uses to which electricity has been put in recent years.

It is a small machine, considering its capacity and a great improvement over the steam pump. The motor develops 25 h. p. and runs at a speed of 1750 revolutions per minute. The pump is directly connected to the motor as can be seen by the picture above, runs at the same speed and pumps 300 gallons of water per minute against 63 pounds pressure, which is the pressure at the bottom of the pump pit when the stand pipe is full. Should the stand-pipe become empty the pump could handle 450 gallons per minute and the tank could be filled in about 2½ hours.

The old steam pump which was taken out had been in use about 16 years and was worn out. The pump that was put in at the time the water works was built is still in working condition, and while it is wasteful of steam it will be kept for emergency use.

The new pump fully complies with the contract specifications and pumps the water with about one-half the coal required by the steam pumps.

The installation is in line with the policy that is being followed, to operate the power plant more economically and help it pay its way for the good service it gives.

Later, when the efficiency of the pump has been demonstrated a slightly larger one may be bought. The two pumps connected with the two new 10-inch wells drilled last summer will furnish all the water Decatur will need for years to come.

As the power house belongs to the people they should take an interest in its welfare and are invited to call and see the new pump in operation.

HINKLEY MILL BUYS BIG LOG

The Hinkley Measure Factory has bought one of the largest elm trees that was left in this part of the country of Jesse Kelsey. It was cut in the woods of the late Hobart Millard. The tree measured five feet at the stump, but it was old and the first log had decayed. The logs scaled over 4,500 feet and there were ten cords of wood. The three largest logs were drawn to market by Frank Lanning. The largest one was brought in Tuesday afternoon on two wagons chained together and drawn by four horses. It attracted a great deal of attention by all who saw it. Several pictures were taken of the load.

FIFTY YEARS SERVICE WITH DECATUR BAND

RECORD OF BIG DRUM COVERS HALF CENTURY OF PLAYING WITH LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS.

The Decatur band has found the big bass drum that was reported as lost last week. It was stored in the rooms over the Carney drug store, having been placed there by some one at the time the G. A. R. changed the location of their hall.

The big drum has an interesting history covering a half century of service with the local band organizations. It was bought by the Decatur band in 1876 or '77 and the first man to play it was Harry Russell. The band was composed of young fellows at that time and they were a lively bunch. The only members of that organization who still reside here are J. I. Huff and Charlie Pritchard. Mr. Huff is still a member of the band and enjoys his part as well as he did in former years.

When Mr. Russell left Decatur, the drum was turned over to Holly Keables, and from him it went to Neal Rasmusson, who played it several years. Will Clark was the next to preside at the beat end of the band, and he was followed by Charlie Tase, the genial proprietor of the Duncombe House.

When the K. of P. lodge was organized here the Decatur band was hired to play a concert and meet the Kalamazoo delegation that was coming to install officers of the Decatur order. Tase developed a sudden dislike for the drum part and secured Willard Van Antwerp, then a new comer here, to play the drum.

That was Willard's first experience as a band man, but he bluffed it through and developed into a good player. From that time on he played the drum for twenty-five years, resigning his position to Fred Rafter the present drummer, only when ill health compelled him to give it up.

But few instruments have a record comparable to that of the big drum and although it is at present out of repair, and cannot be used owing to a broken head, it will be placed in condition as soon as possible, and will doubtless continue its service with the Decatur band for another half century.

FIRE DESTROYED THE BIG HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING TUESDAY NIGHT

TWO STORY BRICK STRUCTURE THAT HAS SERVED DECATUR FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES SINCE 1864 IS COMPLETE LOSS

ORIGIN OF FIRE UNKNOWN—INSURANCE $12,000

PUPILS OF HIGH SCHOOL AND SEVENTH AND EIGHTH GRADES LOSE ALL BOOKS AND EQUIPMENT

A midnight fire of unknown origin destroyed the big brick Decatur high school building last Tuesday night and the structure now lies in complete ruins.

The blaze was discovered by Bert Smith at about 12 o'clock, when he was passing the building on his way to his home on the north side. It had gained some headway and was breaking out of the basement on the north side when Mr. Smith noticed it and turned in an alarm.

Fire Chief Elmer Woolfe was one of the first to reach the scene, and forcing an entrance at the south door, he crossed the main hall to the rear of the building, and located the fire in the rooms directly underneath. Smoke and flames forced him to beat a hasty retreat, and after that time no one was able to gain an entrance.

Within a very few minutes after the alarm sounded a stream from the chemical engine was playing upon the flames, but they had gained such headway that the effect was not telling, and that effort was abandoned for the more effective water hose.

Three streams of water were brought to play on the fire, but its location in the basement made the fighting difficult and hazardous. After the flames broke through the first floor it was impossible to keep them in check, and all soon realized that the building was doomed.

Origin of the Fire Unknown

Mystery surrounds the origin of the fire, and no one is able to offer an explanation of its cause. The building was closed at about 6:30 o'clock by G. H. McDole, the janitor, who left everything in its usual order.

Superintendent E. R. Washburn went into the basement at 4:30 to secure a plane from the janitor's work bench, which is located in his work room, the place where the fire was first seen, and states that everything was in good order there then. He is positive that a smouldering blaze could not have existed without detection, and will not accept the theory that the fire might have been burning for some time.

Defective electric wiring and spontaneous combustion are also mentioned as possible causes, and of course the nature of these admits of no definite denial. Smoking about the building has been been prohibited, and it is not thought that the careless handling of matches may have been a cause of the fire. L. A. Olmstead, manual training instructor, left his rooms in the west portion of the basement soon after the closing of school, and is sure that everything in his part of the building was in a safe condition.

Loss Estimated at $40,000

The building destroyed was estimated worth $30,000. The equipment which it contained had an estimated value of $10,000. Among the things that contributed to the loss were—

Well equipped chemical and physical laboratories, with the expensive apparatus necessary for study of these subjects.

A manual training outfit that cost to install four years ago over $600.

A large library containing 1437 catalogued volumes.

All of the books and equipment.. that was the personal property of students of the school, and contained in their desks.

Many pictures and valuable works of art, as well as a piano and victrola owned by the school.

The above are replaceable, and their loss will be felt but temporarily. Items that are not replaceable, and the loss of which will be felt for years to come, are the records of the school, none of which were saved. The grade records, and class records of the teachers as well as the records of the whole school, kept by the superintendent, giving the standings of pupils of the school for years past, and those of the present year.

Mr. Washburn had felt the necessity of preparing a duplicate of the records and at spare times the past months has been working on the second set, which he proposed to place in a bank vault for safe keeping. The fire came too soon, and the records are lost for all time.

The building and contents were insured for $12,000 which is a much as has ever been carried and more than was carried up to a year or so ago, when the amount was increased. The smaller building on the school grounds, which was not touched by the fire, is well insured, the Board of Education say.

School Will be Held in Other Buildings

A meeting of the School Board was held Wednesday morning to determine upon a course of action in keeping up the school work. Mr. Washburn was directed to secure other buildings in which to hold classes, and later in the day he reported that the 7th and 8th grades would meet in one of the vacant rooms of the primary school, while the Chas. Upfield house, formerly the home of Theo. Trowbridge on school street, will be used by the high school students.

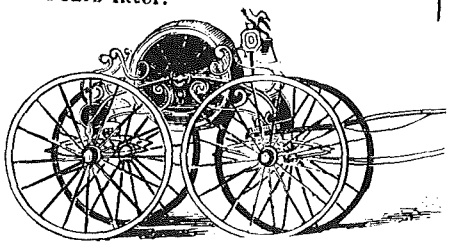
Decatur book dealers very kindly agreed to secure books to replace those lost. A meeting of the scholars was held in the town hall Thursday morning at which a list was made of all books needed and orders were sent into Chicago at once. It is expected that they will be here at least by the first of next week.

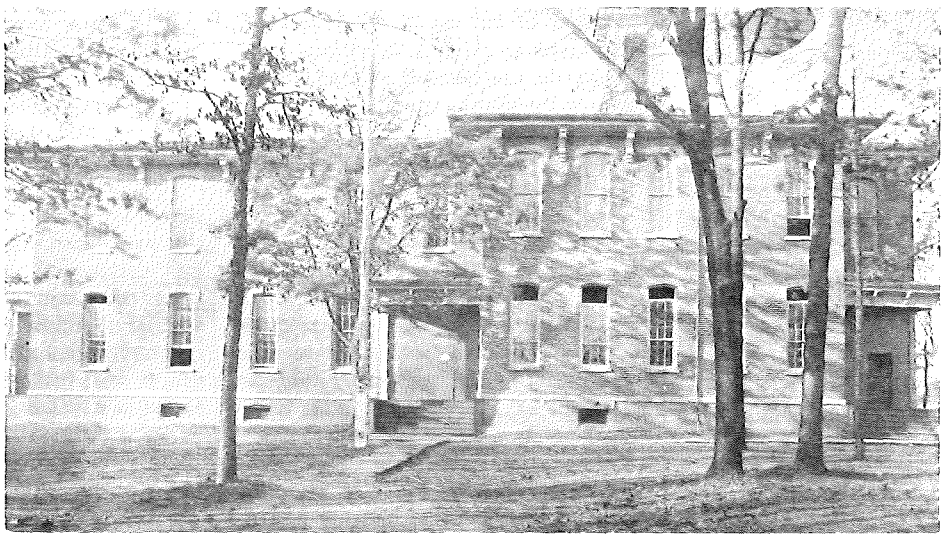
Building Was Built in 1864

The history of Van Buren county published in 1880, gives the following account of the Decatur union school:

"The school in school District No. 4 (embracing Decatur village) was organized in 1862 as a graded school. In 1863 work on the new school building was begun and in Sept., 1864, sessions were held in the edifice. It is of brick, of handsome and substantial appearance, cost $12,000, employs seven teachers, has an average attendance of 400 and requires for its annual support about $4300."

The east half of the building was built in 1864, but the addition on the west was not constructed until about 20 years later.





ANOTHER LANDMARK GONE

Written for the Republican by W. H. Tuttle.

Decatur seems destined to lose all of its ancient buildings at the rate they are being destroyed by fire lately. First the old Presbyterian church was burned something over a year ago. That place of worship was completed just fifty years ago last summer. Next went the old store building on the north-west corner of Phelps and Delaware streets. This building was erected about the year 1850 by the Dixon family, and since those faraway days it had been occupied by almost unnumbered business men below and by families living above. I think that was the very first business building of any size in Decatur, but it passed away in flames and smoke just after New Year's day this winter, and is now only a memory.

Now our school house has gone in the same way, and is only a ruin. When it was built in 1864 my father moved into the village almost purposely to send his children to this school because it was supposed that it would be much better than any other school around here. I was one of the first scholars when it opened on November 6, 1864. I take this date from an old algebra of mine where I wrote it down so many years ago. I remember that my seat was near the north-east corner of the upper room, and of all those boys who sat near to me there I do not know of one that is left in Decatur except myself; all of the others that I know anything about—Dick Lyon, Thompie Riddle, Walter Arnold, Marvin Hinkley, Morris and Riley Foster, Stryker Noble, Ad. Noble, Merritt Manley, and many others—are dead. Many of them I have utterly forgotten, and some have gone to other places and I do not know whether they are still living or not.

Some of the young ladies that were in my classes I know to be still living, but only three that I am sure of are still living in Decatur—Mrs. Emma Dodge Parkhurst, Mrs. Ella Dodge Sanborn and Mrs. Fannie Trowbridge Stewart. I take these names from the circular of our first school exhibition given in the spring of 1865. Other names of the ten young ladies I know to be still living, but many I know to be dead. Fifty-four years make great changes. Those who were alive then and full of hopes and expectations are now either old grey-headed grand mothers, or else they have passed away from the earth.

Our first principal was Prof. Bellows, a good and a smart man. He was always just to the scholars, and was ayways just to the scholars, and was well liked by all. He was an excellent mathematician, and wrote several text books on that subject that were used in schools fifty years ago. Our immediate instructor in nearly all the classes was Miss Annie Abrams, and she was an excellent teacher. I do not know whether she is alive yet or not, but think it unlikely, as the last time that I ever saw or heard of her, more than twenty years ago, she was an old, old woman with a thousand wrinkles on her face, and her mind seemed to be badly unhinged, but fifty-four years ago she was the perfect picture of health and full of life, although she was then past her first youth.

I believe that at first the school had only four teachers—two upstairs and two in the lower rooms—but it would be hard to tell how many it has been considered necessary to employ of late years to do almost the same work. I believe that I only remained in the school about one year and then I considered it necessary that I should go to work and earn some money to pay my own way in the world. So I never graduted. But I have been brought into close contact with many of the graduates, and had a chance to find out just about how much they really know.

How many scholars and teachers must have passed through this old building since it was first opened for use. The scholars, without doubt, would number thousands, and the teachers hundreds. But, to me, the queer thing about it is that so very few of the scholars ever graduate. While several hundred attend the school every year the graduating clases contain only less than a dozen so far as I have noticed. Why is this? Can any one explain? The school certainly costs enough money to produce more than that number of graduates each year.

Well, the old building has gone the way of all earthly things, and like the others will now become only a memory. Which will be the next landmark to disappear?

CARPENTERS UNEARTH RECORD OF DEPOT

GLASS JAR TAKEN FROM WALL OF DEPOT, FILLED WITH PAPERS GIVING HISTORY OF BUILDING — WILL BE PRESERVED.

From the wall of the depot building under which they are placing a new foundation, carpenters found last week a jar containing papers that give the history of the structure from the time it was built up to the last time the wall was opened.

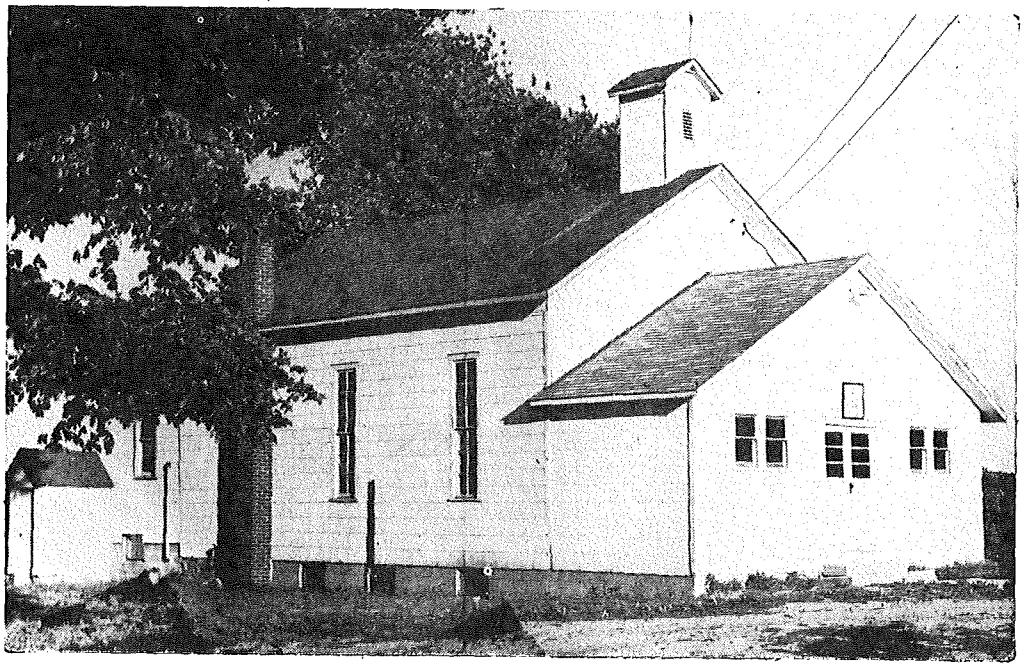
The jar was placed in the wall when the building was built in 1886 by W. H. Tuttle, then manager of the telegraph office and day operator. Among the things that were then placed in the jar were train orders, time card then in use, telegraph blanks, a piece of ground wire, used 15 years in the old building, an office pencil and train tickets.

All later records placed in the jar have been written with the office pencil, and it will again be used to make note of the present improvements to the building before the jar resumes its resting place within the wall.

At the time the depot was built, N. B. McKinney was the station agent. Telegraphy was used entirely for train orders, and Decatur had orperators on duty all of the twenty-four hours. A few years ago the system of train dispatching was changed, and the operators done away with, the telephone being adopted for the transmission of train orders.

May 11, 1894, a new floor was laid in the depot building, and those who signed the record at that time were W. H. Tuttle, telegrapher and manager of that office, J. E. Foster, night operator, Chas. Dine, student ojerator, M. V. Barron, station agent, S. O. Van Hise, freight clerk, A. L. Pickard of Niles, foreman carpenter gang.

Other improvements that have been made since that time are a new foundation in 1898, and the installation of a double arm signal block in 1907. The depot building which was replaced by the present structure, was moved across the street, and is now being remodeled into a storage house by the owner, Sol Schpok.



RALLY DAY AT BAPTIST CHURCH

SPECIAL SERVICES SUNDAY JUNE 8TH AT CHURCH THREE MILES NORTH OF DECATUR—KALAMAZOO PASTORS TO SPEAK.

A big rally will be held at the First Missionary Baptist church three and one-half miles north of Decatur, on Sunday, June 8th, for the purpose of raising funds to pay for repairing the church building. Some of the repairing has already been accomplished, but there is still some left to do, and funds must be raised for this purpose.

The Rally begins at eleven o'clock with a song service by the home choir and preaching by Rev. J. Burden of Kalamazoo. The afternoon service opened at three o'clock with singing by a Kalamazoo choir and preaching by Elder J. Hunter of that city. Evening service at 8 o'clock, with singing by combined choirs, and followed by preaching by Rev. J. W. Sanderd, pastor of the A. M. P. church of Kalamazoo.

M. U. Bradley and Robert Lennox are the deacons of the Decatur church and Mrs. Gertrude Hamilton the clerk. R. Sutton of Kalamazoo, is the pastor, and for the past few months has been coming to Decatur every Sunday to conduct services at the church. It is the only church owned and controlled by colored people in Van Buren county.

MENDING THE OLD FLAG
By Wil Carlton

In the silent gloom of a garret room,
With the cobwebs round it creeping,
From day to day the old flag lay —
A veteran worn and sleeping,
Dingily old, each wrinkled fold
By dust of years was shaded;
Wounds of the storm were upon its form,
The crimson stripes were faded.

'Twas a mournful sight in the day twilight
This thing of humble seeming,
That once so proud o'er the cheering crowd,
Had carried its colors gleaming;
Stained with mold were the braids of gold,
That had flashed in the sun's rays kissing
Of faded hue was of faded blue,
And some of the stars were missing.

Three northern maids and three from glades
Where dreams the southland weather
With glances kind and their arms entwined,
Came up the stair together.
They gazed awhile with a thoughtful smile
At the crouching form before them
With clinging holds they grasped its folds,
And out of the darkness bore them.

They healed its scars, they found its stars,
And brought them all together
Three northern maids and three from glades
Where smiles the Southland weather;
They mended away through the summer day,
Made glad by an inspiration
To fling it high at the smiling sky
On the birthday of our nation

In the brilliant glare of the summer air,
With a brisk breeze round it creeping,
Newly bright through the glistening light,
Gleaming and bold were its braids of gold,
And flashed in the sun ray's kissing;
Red, White and Blue were of deepest hue
And none of the stars were missing.

1919

NEWS ITEMS

The tax rolls for 1919 show that the state, county, school and local taxes spread upon the township of Decatur was the sum of $66,829.73. This was an unusually high tax on account of the excessive school tax caused by the Decatur high school building having been destroyed by fire and the consequent necessity of replacing it with a new and modern structure. The amount of taxes above stated is by the village authorities.

The taxes in the township of Porter for the year 1919 was the sum of $24,381.75, making a total taxes for the two townships of $91,211.48 as against $263.60 for the same territory in 1837, or a trifle more than four cents per acre; had the entire tax of 1919 been levied on real estate it would have been at the rate of about two dollars per acre for the 46,080 acres included within the boundaries of the 2 townships. There are but three townships in the county, Bangor, Hartford and Paw Paw, that are assessed at a greater figure than Decatur.

According to the census of 1910, the latest figures we have, Decatur had a population of 2,106, being fifth among the townships of the county, exceeded only by Antwerp, Bangor, Hartford and Paw Paw. It is probable that the 1920 census figures will show an increase in the number of its inhabitants, but it is doubtful if its relative position among the townships will show any change.

Agricultural

The township was originally largely covered with what was called "oak openings," interspersed with other valuable timber, such as walnut, whitewood, basswood etc., but a considerable area in the southwestern part of the township consisted of low and swampy ground, but which has been effectually drained and is now its most valuable land, growing large quantities of vegetables, especially celery, which rivals in quality the famous Kalamazoo product. Mint growing on these low lands is also a large and profitable industry, while the uplands of the township have been converted into profitable farms producing all kinds of grain and other crops, such as are usually grown throughout our state. Instead of the primeval forests we see elegant farm houses whose occupants possess all the comforts, even the luxuries, of life. The timber that was originally standing and growing on these farms was largely destroyed by logging and burning in the process of clearing and preparing the land for cultivation. There are now some of the finest and most valuable lands upon which the standing timber had it been left in a state of nature, would be worth more than the land with all its modern improvements and fine buildings, but there was no other way by which the pioneers and their successors could convert the wilderness into the rich and prosperous country which their descendants now occupy and enjoy.

[My next story will relate to the village of Decatur.]

If

If any little word of mine
May make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
May make a heart the lighter —
God help me speak the little word,
And take my bit of singing,
And drop it in some lonely vale
To set the echoes ringing!

If any little love of mine
May make a life the sweeter,
If any little care of mine
May make a friend's the fleeter,
If any lift of mine may ease
The burden of another,
God give me love and care and strength
To help my toiling brother.

[illegible]ship Supervisor

George S. Freeze was the first supervisor of the township, having been chosen to that office at the first town meeting held on the first Monday of April, 1837. The records do not disclose the names of the supervisor for the years, 1838 and 1841. John McKinney was elected supervisor in 1840. With the exception of the two years noted, the following is a complete list of the names of persons who have filled that office: George S. Freeze, John McKinney, Joseph Van Hise, Lyman Sanford, N. Le Fere, William O. Van Hise, Jeremiah Teed, George Bennett, O. T. Welch, E. Parker Hill, C. Hollister, Erl Beebe, Ransom Nutting, Marvin Hinkley, William K. Van Hise, David A. Squier and Emory H. Squier, the present incumbent. Of the above named officials Lyman Sanford held the office seven years, possibly longer; E. Parker Hill served seven years; William K. Van Hise, ten years; Ransom Nutting, fifteen years; David A. Squier was elected nine times in succession and died in 1902 while still holding the office. His son, Emory H. Squier, was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by his father's death, and has ever since been continued in the office.

Lakes and Streams

There are several small lakes in the township, the principal one being Lake of the Woods (the woods have pretty much all disappeared). This lake is within sight of the village of Decatur and lies partly in the township of Decatur and partly in Hamilton. It was originally a beautiful sheet of water, but its beauty has been materially marred by its having been partially drained in order to obtain a few acres of tillable land around its shores. This lake was formerly a fisherman's paradise, and judging from the number of fish houses the writer recently observed on the ice as he was passing by there must be enough fish still remaining to furnish sport for the local disciples of Izaak Walton. A small lake just south of the corporation line of the village is dignified by the uneuphonious name of Mud Lake. Pickerel Lake, a short distance southeast of the village, was originally well stocked with that variety of fish from which it takes its name. Swift's Lake on section thirty-six, in the southeast corner of the township, covers about one quarter of the section.

Several small streams have their source in the northern and western part of the township uniting to form the west branch of the Paw Paw river, and in the southern part of the township other similar streams, the principal one being the outlet of Pickerel Lake, form the Dowagiac creek, which flows southeasterly into Cass county.

Statistics

The total amount of taxes levied in Decatur in 1837, and this included the present township of Porter, was $263.60. No assessment of personal property appears on the tax roll and the tax on real estate was uniformly four cents per acre. In 1919 the township of Decatur was assessed as follows: Real estate, $1,855,226; personal, $170,866; total, $2,026,100. This sum was reduced on equalization by the board of supervisors to $1,870,000. The township of Porter, which was included in the assessment for 1837, was equalized at $1,153,000, a total for the two townships of $3,023,000, a marvelous increase in wealth in a little more than eighty years.

Civil and Political History of Decatur Township

Written for the Republican by O. W. Rowland.

Michigan was admitted to the sisterhood of states, being in number 26th, by act of Congress in 1837, and in the same year, the township of Decatur was organized embracing within its limits the present townships of Decatur and Porter, the latter having been set off and organized into a separate township in 1845.

The first township meeting was held at the school house near Little Prairie Ronde. At this election George S. Freeze was elected supervisor, John D. Compton township clerk and Joseph Van Hise, John D. Compton, George S. Freeze and Tinker R. Smith justices of the peace. The official records of the county do not disclose the names of the other officers, if any, who were chosen at this election.

At the first general state election, held on the fourth and fifth days of November, 1839, (the statute at that time provided that general elections should continue two days) forty ballots were cast, twenty-four of these being for William Woodbridge, Whig, and sixteen for Elon Farnsworth, Democrat. Woodbridge was elected governor and was the only Whig that ever occupied the chief executive office of the state. The election board of the township must have had a couple of hard (?) days work receiving, recording and canvassing those forty votes.

To show the difference between then and now, there were 533 gubernatorial votes cast in the township at the general election held in November, 1916, 319 being for Sleeper, Republican, 200 for Smith, Democrat, and fourteen divided among the Prohibition, socialist and labor parties. This being a presidential year called out a comparatively larger number of voters. At the general election held in November, 1918, that being what is commonly called an off year, there were but 346 votes cast for governor, 245 being for Sleeper, Republican, 98 for Bailey, Democrat, and three scattering. This does not include a decrease in the voting population, but simply a lack of interest in what was a foregone conclusion. According to the census figures of 1910, the latest we have, Decatur ranked fifth among the townships of the county in point of population.

Decatur Township's First Settlers

WRITTEN FOR THE REPUBLICAN BY O. W. ROWLAND.

The township of Decatur was so named in honor of Commodore Stephen Decatur, one of our country's naval heroes, in the war of 1812. By government survey it is officially designated as township number four south, of range number fourteen west. Originally it comprised not only its present territory, but also that now embraced by the township of Porter, which, by the way, was named in honor of another noted naval officer of the same war, Commodore David Porter.

The western boundry of the township was what was then known as Covington, consisting of the present townships of Hamilton and Keeler, and on the north it was bounded by the townships of Lafayette (now Paw Paw) and Antwerp, which latter township is the only one in Van Buren county that has never had a change, either of name or boundary.

To Decatur belongs the distinction of having the first white settlers within the borders of Van Buren county, Dolphin Morris and wife. Mr. Morris was born in the state of Virginia, where on the 29th day of March, 1825, he was married to Miss Nancy Beaver. In the fall of 1828 he started with his wife and all his personal effects in a lumber wagon for Sumnerville, Cass county. After a long and tedious journey through dense forests, fording many streams and overcoming obstacles, they eventually arrived at their destination and there they spent the winter with Joseph Gardner, a cousin of Mr. Morris. During the winter he filed a claim on the south half of section thirty-five, of the present township of Decatur, and early in the spring of 1829 he erected the first white man's residence in the county and made the first improvements.

First White Man's Home

His home was a typical pioneer cabin, built of logs, notched together at the corners to hold them in place, the crevices were chinked with split basswood and daubed with clay as a protection from the elements and to make the cabin warm and comfortable; the roof was of oak stakes held in place by heavy poles; the floor was of split basswood puncheons several inches in thickness, slightly smoothed on the upper side with an adze or axe. There were three windows below and one in the gable, the chimney was made of sticks, thickly plastered inside with clay, the fireplace was capacious and wide, admitting huge logs in front of which the cooking was done; the chamber was reached by a ladder. The door was put together with wooden pins, hung on wooden hinges and provided with a wooden latch with a latch string on the outside. It was truly a case of "pull on the bobbin, 'twill open the door." An axe, a saw, an auger and froe were all the tools required in building this pioneer residence.

We wonder how many of the rising generation have ever seen a froe or know what kind of an implement it is? Or how many of them have ever seen a dwelling like this pioneer residence? The writer still retains a vivid recollection of having lived in his boyhood days in just such a cabin as the one above described.

The log cabins of the pioneers were built without regard to section lines; in fact, such lines were not run when the first settlers arrived and their claims were located by guess or "stepped off." The field notes of the township say that its boundaries were first surveyed in 1827, by William Brookfield, and the section lines by E. H. Lytle in 1830. Roads were laid from one settler to another as nearly in a direct line as the conformation of the ground permitted, continually changing as new settlers arrived as as farmer desired to extend his domain. Very few of those primitive roads remain and but few of the original building sites are now occupied as such.

The first white child born in Van Buren county was Lewis Creighton Morris, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dolphin Morris. He was born August 4, 1830, but lived only a few months, dying on the 20th day of the next December. This babe was the first person buried in what is known as the Morris-Anderson cemetery.

First Religious Services and Schools

The first gospel sermon preached in the county was delivered in the Morris cabin by Rev. William Sprague, a young Methodist clergyman who afterward became a presiding elder and later a congressman, winning that office over Charles E. Stewart of Kalamazoo. Not long after that first sermon came the ubiquitous Methodist "circuit rider," preaching wherever a place could be found, either in the Morris barn or elsewhere. Buggies and carriages were not then in use among the hardy pioneers and people would come to these services for miles on horseback, sometimes riding double and sometimes "riding and tieing." This latter method of travel was as follows: One person would ride for a certain prescribed distance, then halt and tie his horse and go forward on foot. He was followed by another person on foot, who, when he came to the horse, would ride forward on the journey, passing the footman, and reaching a prescribed distance ahead would, himself, dismount and walk, and so on alternating each would ride half the distance and walk the other half. This was known as "riding and tieing." It would hardly be practicable in these days of rapid transit.

Preaching at these meetings was extemporaneous, the singing was congregational and consisted mostly in making a "joyful noise" with little regard for time and melody. Hymn books were scarce and the preacher would "line out" the hymns a couple of lines at a time and when the people had sung them the process could be repeated. It is needless to say that they had no instrumental music to accompany the singing. Indeed, it is quite likely that such music would have been considered a sacrilege.

The first school in the county was taught by one William Alexander, in this same pioneer cabin. This cabin in which the first birth and death occurred, and where the germ of our present magnificent school system was planted; this cabin that served for both school house and church and in which the first family altar was erected, surely ought to be kept in remembrance and a suitable monument should be erected on its site to commemorate the beginning of civilization in this beautiful and prosperous county of ours.

Writing concerning those primitive days the late Alexander B. Copley said: "My father left Dayton on horseback to make a trip to that part of Michigan called the St. Joseph country, the home of Dolphin Morris, September 4, 1832. Up to that time there had been entered sixteen eighty acre lots in the township of Decatur. There were then six families in Van Buren county, Dolphin Morris, Samuel H. Morris, H. D. Swift, George Tittle, David Curry and Le Grand Anderson, but for nearly two years Mr. Morris and his wife were the only settlers in the county. In the cabin erected by Mr. Morris, Daniel Alexander and Margaret Little, the second couple married in the county, began housekeeping here. Elias Morris, the second son of Dolphin Morris, was born and who, up to the time of his death was the oldest person born in the county."

Six Pioneer Families

The six pioneer families mentioned by Mr. Copley located lands as follows: H. D. Swift, who came to Michigan with Mr. Morris, located a claim on section thirty-six, which he sold to LeGrand Anderson in 1831. George Tittle, a brother-in-law of Mr. Morris, came from Ohio in 1831, and settled on section thirty-five, where he lived until his death in 1866. Samuel Morris, Dolphin's brother, came to Cass county in 1829, where he resided for a couple of years when he settled on section thirty-five, near his brother, and where he spent the remainder of his days. LeGrand Anderson, also from Ohio, came to Michigan in 1831, and purchased a tract of 400 acres on sections twenty-six and thirty-six. He brought his family to their new home in the summer of 1832 and they became permanent residents of the then wilderness. Mr. Anderson remained on his Decatur farm until his death which occurred October 14, 1909. David Curry came from Indiana in 1830 to Cass county. A couple of years later he entered a quarter section adjoining the Morris land and built thereon a log cabin eighteen by twenty feet, quite a sumptuous residence for those early days, although it was without floor, door or window. His young wife would not have a "puncheon" floor preferring to tread on "mother earth" until she could have something better. The next winter her husband procured some upland boards from Cass county with which he laid the floor of his primitive residence and Mrs. Curry enjoyed the distinction of having the only "sawed" floor in the settlement and that she lived in the best house on the "prairie." Mr. Curry died in 1846, while in the prime of life, killed by falling from a wagon. Joseph Van Hise, John Eckenberger and Thomas Scott were among those who settled in Decatur during the later thirties.

The Indians

The Indians who inhabited the county in those pioneer days were as a rule, friendly; some of the squaws were exceptionally kind. There was, however, an occasional exception. One Indian, known as Old Shavehead, who was somewhat of a terror to the community, was looked upon with suspicion and regarded as a treacherous red-skin. It was generally believed that he was shot by some white man, as he suddenly disappeared and was never heard of afterward. His name is borne by a lake in the southern part of Cass county, Shavehead Lake. The pioneers, however, found that all good Indians were not dead Indians. Treated with kindliness and friendliness, they were found ready to respond in a similar manner and quite generally the whites lived peaceably and amicably with their red neighbors.

At the time Mr. Morris settled in Decatur there were Indian traders at Bronson (now Kalamazoo), at Grand Rapids, (now the second city in the state), and a trading post at St. Joseph; nothing else except the aborigines, east, west or north. To the south was the Carey mission, near the location of the present city of Niles. This was established in 1820, and was instrumental in opening the valley of the St. Joseph river to permanent settlement.

THE VILLAGE OF DECATUR

Written for the Republican by O W. Rowland.

The original plat of the village of Decatur was surveyed in the spring of 1850. Samuel Sherwood and Joseph D. Beers of New York had become owners of a large tract of government land in which was included the present village. These gentlemen donated the sight of the depot buildings, which were erected in 1848, the same year in which the railroad was completed as far as the present city of Niles.

When the Michigan Central Company began to extend its line westward from Kalamazoo Messrs. Sherwood and Beers conceived the plan of laying out and platting a village which plan they carried out, naming the town Decatur, after the township in which it was situated. Since the date of the original plat of 1850 there have been numerous additions thereto, the last one being the Hastings addition, which was made and recorded ten years ago. These several additions had rendered the descriptions of village property somewhat uncertain and complicated and in 1905 the Common Council caused a resurvey and a new plat to be made covering the original plat and the greater portion of its various additions. This is commonly designated as the supervisors' plat.

As at present constituted the village embraces portions of sections seventeen, eighteen, nineteen and twenty, and according to the census of 1910, contained a population of 1286, being exceeded by no village in the county except Paw Paw.

There had been some indications of a future town before it was actually platted. Hiram Lee purchased the first village lot in 1848. A highway was completed across the swamp south of the village in 1849. This opened up communication with a considerable tract of country that had theretofore been practically inaccessible, thus giving to the prospective village a decided impetus. During the same year C. S. Lucker opened a boarding house and stores were established by A. H. Dixon, Goss & Dixon and Theodore Phelps. Prior to the opening of these places, people did their trading either at Paw Paw or Kalamazoo.

In 1851 there were three general stores in the village, kept by A. H. Dixon, Theodore Phelps and E. Ingalls. Henry Carroll had a drug store and the boarding house started by Mr. Lucker had been converted into a hotel which later was called the Decatur House and was operated by L. R. Barker.

Forests on All Sides in '51

At that time Decatur was literally "in the woods," being enveloped by the forest on all sides, in which various kinds of wild game was to be found in great abundance. A steam saw mill was erected by Messrs. Sherwood and Beers in 1850, near the town. A distillery subsequently took its place, but it was short lived.

During the first five years after its beginning the village increased in growth moderately and at the expiration of that period there were about seventy-five buildings within its boundaries.

The first wedding solemnized in the new town was that of U. T. Olds and Miss Mary Elliott, who were married on the 18th day of May, 1850, by George Sherwood, a justice of the peace.

Mr. Olds, who settled in the village in 1849 was its first carpenter and joiner. The first village physician was Dr. Geo. Bartholomew, who erected a small building in 1848 and occupied it as an office and drug store. He afterward removed to Keeler, where he died September 20, 1887. Dr. John T. Keables located in Decatur in 1851, where he continued the practice of his profession until his death about forty years thereafter, November 1, 1891. A postoffice was established a couple of years after the platting of the village, George Sherwood being the first postmaster.

The village was first incorporated on the 11th day of October, 1859, by action of the board of supervisors. It was reincorporated by the state legislature in 1861 and again in 1883. This last act of incorporation has since been twice amended, the last amendment being in 1905 (Local acts of 1905, p. 297). The first village officials were E. Parker Hill, president; Charles Shier, recorder; Hiram Cole, father of H. A. Cole, Paw Paw's present postmaster; Myron Hinkley, J. H. Wallace, Charles N. Poor, Carlton Wheeler and John Tarbell, trustees.

The first school house in the village was built in 1848 and the first school was taught therein in the winter of 1848-9 by Miss Sarah Cook, whose pupils were twenty in number. The M. E. church was organized in 1860. Their house of worship was built in 1861. The Universalist church was organized in 1868 and their first church building was erected in 1881. It was afterward destroyed by fire and rebuilt in 1895.

The Christian church was organized in 1885. Many of the leading citizens of the place have been members of this church. Its house of worship was built in 1887. The Presbyterian church was organized in 1852 by Rev. Marcus Harrison. It consisted of three members, Lydia Harrison, Mrs. Eli Rich Rich and Joseph McClintock. Their church house was dedicated in 1856, the dedicatory service being conducted by Rev. A. C. Tuttle of Paw Paw. This building was recently burned and been replaced by a modern structure.

The Catholic church, known as the Church of the Holy Family, began about 1885, when Rev. Father Koopman of Marshall visited the place and arranged to meet his parishoners once in three months. Services were held in private houses or public halls for twenty years or more, when the society purchased the building formerly occupied by the Universalists.

Of secret orders the town has its full quota, Masons, Eastern Star, Grand Army of the Republic, Relief Corps, Odd Fellows, Rebekahs, Maccabees, Lady Maccabees, Gleaners and others.

A prosperous ladies' literary club, known as the Every Tuesday Club, is one of the institutions of the town.

The village has the usual quota of mercantile places, stores, shops, banks, factories, garages, etc. It owns and operates a municipal system of electric lights and water works. It also has a commodious town hall.

The village maintains one of the best high schools in the county, although at the present time it labors under some disadvantages by reason of its principal school building having been destroyed by fire, but, nothing daunted, the tax-payers of the district promptly voted the necessary means for the erection of a new building, which will probably be ready for occupancy some time during the coming summer. It is to cost the sum of $93,000 and when completed the town can boast of having the finest school building in the county, complete, modern and up-to-date in every respect, a building that will be a credit to the place and an honor to its patriotic, liberal-minded citizens.

Retrospect

Four score and ten years have elapsed since Dolphin Morris, the first white man to seek a home in Van Buren county, erected that first pioneer log cabin in the township of Decatur, near its southern boundary, but what wonderful, antonishing changes have taken place since that early day. Had Jean Nicolet, the first white man to set foot within the limits of the peninsular state returned to earth after the lapse of one hundred and ninety years and had he visited Van Buren county, he would have found no change; the land would still have been covered with the primeval forest, tenanted by untutored red man and wild beasts, just as it had been for ages upon ages, and for aught he could have seen, just as it would remain for ages to come.

But should he again have visited Michigan, only ninety years later, he would not have recognized it; he would have thought himself in a different world, on some other planet. Not the most vivid imagination could have kept pace with the reality of the marvelous changes that have been wrought within that period of time. Uncivilized and warlike Indian tribes have given way to modern civilization, those once wild and uncultivated forests have been transformed into a beautiful, prosperous country, into vineyards, farms and orchards such as no man had ever even dreamed of at that date. Telegraphs and telephones both with and without wires, those marvels of the modern world, have been invented and have become necessities of every day life, thriving cities and villages almost within a stone's throw of each other; school houses on every hand; churches with their spires pointing heavenward in recognition of the Great Giver of all good; automobiles instead of the ox team; the country gridironed with tracks for the iron horse; factories without number; flocks and herds dotting the hills and valleys; the vision of Darius Green, an accomplished fact, flying machines a factor both in peace and war; both time and distance almost annihilated; the plow, the sickle and the cradle succeeded by the farm tractor; the howl of the wolf and the scream of the panther given place to the click of the reaper, the hum of the thresher, the whir of machinery, the screech of the locomotive; and the rude wagwam of the red man supplanted by the palatial residence of his white brother.

Today, instead of the wilderness he first visited, Nicolet would have found a state of more than 3,000,000 inhabitants, its metropolis, the City of the Straits, where Cadillac, in the summer of 1701, with a company of fifty soldiers and fifty civilians made the first settlement, now a city of a million souls, the fourth city of the American continent and one of the greatest manufacturing centers of the world.

The people of the British Empire take just pride in the great things accomplished by their ancestors from the reign of William, the Conqueror to the reign of the kindly Queen Victoria, but here in our own Van Buren, to say nothing of our wonderful Michigan, we have a county redeemed from a savage wilderness, transformed into ideal perfection, rich in the means of happiness and enjoyment, and abounding in advantages and privileges of which, less than a century ago, the world had no knowledge. Improvements have been boundless, progress limitless, and yet no man can foresee or even imagine what lies beyond in the marvelous years of this wonderful 20th century, which has just closed its second decade.

Every true American will set his face like flint against every effort to undermine or weaken our free institutions, resolved under all circumstances and at all hazards to maintain them and to uphold our beautiful banner, the stripes and stars, OLD GLORY.

HISTORY OF HAMILTON CEMETERY

Hamilton cemetery is a small country cemetery, located on the Decatur and Keeler road about half way between the two towns. There is between six and seven acres of ground in the cemetery and it is enclosed with a heavy woven wire fence, all No. 9 wire, and steel posts.

The line posts were bought in Hartford and Jake Fritz drew them all at one load. There were 100 of them. They are about 7½ ft. long with about two feet of cement on the bottom of them. The corner posts and fence were bought of Frank Cole and were erected by Frank Cole and Henry Richmond in 1910.

According to history the cemetery was laid out in 1840. At this time there was about 2½ acres of ground and William Bartlett says that he can remember being there when his father was clearing the ground. The writer can remember when there was a nice board fence around the cemetery and there were two flights of stairs that led to a platform at top of fence. This platform was about 4x6 feet. One flight of stairs led from the west and one from the east to the platform and one led from there down into the cemetery. These flights of stairs and platform were located between the two trees that stand near the cement platform that is there now, that is, as near as the writer can remember. There are between 400 and 500 lots in the cemetery, the size of each lot is 24x9½ feet and contains from four to six graves and monument.

There are about 740 monuments and markers of several different shapes, sizes, materials and colors. There are about 127 graves without any sign of a mark on them. There are 43 soldiers buried in this cemetery. These soldiers were in the Civil war, Spanish-American and the late World war.

In these grounds there are several nice pine and evergreen trees, also a fair-sized white oak. There used to be a sasafrass tree that stood just south and west of the white oak. This tree was struck by lightning in the top and split clear to the roots. There are a lot of good monuments in this cemetery for a country place. Some of the best are as follows: In the gray granite is the Nesbitt, which is the largest. It stands about 21 or 22 ft. high. Others not so large are the Barney, Langley, Durkee, Knoll, Corwin, Stover, Geer, Cady, Maxon, Millard, White, R. Sloan, Bowen, Hager, J. Neville. Red granites—Conway, Comley, Hill, G. Sloan, Phelps, Byers, Disbrow, two Stenrs and Packard, Parmater.

There are several other granite that cannot mentiond on account of space.

The oldest date observed is 1842 on an old fashioned white marble slab.

There have been several improvements in the cemetery in the last few years and there is a chance for more.

A WILD NIGHT IN DECATUR

(When Richmond Surrendered)

By W. L. Tuttle

One evening in April 1865, nearly all of the scholars in the Decatur high school were at the school house rehearsing for the first exhibition that was ever given in the present school building. How many were there that I remember well, and some I have utterly forgotten their names. There were Dick, Libbie and Alice Lyon, Morris and Riley Foster, Wesley Critenden, Thompie Riddle, Etta Van, Beuna Poor and so many others that it would take too much space to name them all.

We were all busy going over our parts for the "big show" when we were startled by hearing the old Stove Factory whistle begin to blow and all the church bells ringing out. We thought the town was burning up and all started for Main Street as fast as we could. On the way we met several men running for their lives and yelling at the tops of their voices, "Richmond has surrendered! Richmond has surrendered!"

When we reached town we found the news had just been received by wire, everyone was simply going crazy. I will guarantee that men and women who have been born and have grown up since that time never saw such a night as that was. Everyone knew that it was virtually the end of the war. And what a dreary sorrow filled the four years it had been, especially to those who had near relatives or friends in the Army!

Men had been going away constantly to join the troops at the front. Other men had been coming home, either all shot to pieces or just ready to die from sickness in the camps and hospitals. And there were many more who never came home at all. But the most pitiable of all were the men who reached home from the southern prisons. Such wrecks as they were! And the women at home, waiting and dreading to hear from the front. But we knew now that all this was over, except the finishing up.

The town was full of soldiers and in those days any man that wore a blue uniform was a privileged character and did whatever he saw fit to do, so long as he didn't actually commit some serious crime.

Oh, my, what a night that was! Everyone was simply delirious with joy. I do not believe that a person in town slept a wink that night. I know that I didn't. The young people went about the streets in crowds singing war songs. S. N. Thomas had in his hardware store a great pile of cow bells and tin horns and every kid, and some older ones, got a bell and a horn and all were kept going.

The factory whistle was tied open and steam kept up to blow it all night. The two church bells and school bell were rung hour after hour.

The town was filled with saloons in those days and it was a crime not to drink that night. I saw some of the best men in town, on horseback, ride their horses into the old Duncombe House bar room, drink themselves and then pry open the horses' mouths and pour whiskey down the poor beasts' throats. Then out they would go and into the next saloon they could get the horse into and repeat the performance until the horses were as drunk as the men.

And so it went all night. It is a great wonder that some one wasn't killed, but no one was — here. It was said that in the larger places, Kalamazoo, Jackson, Detroit, etc., the saturnalia was worse than it was here but I do not see how it could have been. I have never seen anything to begin to compare with it since and never expect to. It is all very fresh in my memory and always will be.

Then a few mornings later came the news that President Lincoln had been shot. I well remember the remark my father made when I went to the house and told him about it. He burst out, "The d - - - fool had no business to be in a theatre at such a time." And I have always had some such feeling about it. And what a change then. From delirious joy, everyone fell to the deepest mourning in an instant. In a few hours the streets were hung with mourning and everyone went about with sad faces.

But this is only history now.

Popular Songs Of Long Ago

The following two songs were sent in by Mrs. Nellie Sibley. She wrote them down from memory, but she sang them many times when a young girl and probably has them correct:

THE TRAMP

I long for a place by the fireside,
The nights are so cold and so damp;
Many places I see, but there's no room for me,
For they call me a poor old tramp.

Chorus:
Only a poor old wanderer,
With no place to call my own;
No one to pity me, no one to love me,
As friendless and sadly I roam.

Long ago I was peaceful and happy,
With dear loving friends ever near,
But now they are gone, and I'm left all alone,
With no one my pathway to cheer.

I tramp, tramp along tho' I'm weary,
No rest through the long, long day;
Through the rain and the snow I must tramp to and fro,
For I've no place to go or to stay.

MOTHER'S GRAVE

In that dear old village churchyard,
There I see a grassy mound;
There is where my Mother's sleeping,
In the cold and silent ground.
Looking at the stars above me,
Mourning one so tender, true,
Wondering if some day I'll meet her,
With our Lord, beyond the blue.

I was young but I remember
Well the night my mother died;
How I saw her spirit fading,
As she called me to her side.
Saying, darling, I must leave you,
Angels guard your little bed,
Don't forget the words I tell you,
When I'm numbered with the dead.

May you e'er be pure and honest,
Ever to your friends be true;
May you never be ashamed, dear,
Of the deeds that you will do.
I have always tried to follow,
The advice my mother gave;
Words she said still gently haunt me,
As I stand by Mother's grave.

DECATUR'S EARLY DAY RESIDENTS

Fred Stern was 83 years old the first of last July and enjoys good health for his years.

He has been a resident of the United States 58 years, coming from Germany to the village of Lawton in 1873. He lived there 10 years with his Uncle Levi Stern and family and worked in the general store of L. Stern and Company.

He went from Lawton to Juanita, Nebraska, and was there 3 years. He then went into partnership with Ben Desenberg in a drygoods store in Dowagiac. In 1888 they sold out the firm of Desenberg and Stern and bought the well established drygoods store of Charles Schuster. Fred Stern bought out his partner in 1892 and continued the business until 1912 when he sold to Fred L. Mosier and retired.

Mr. Stern has a copy of the Van Buren County Gazetteer and Business Directory, published in Decatur in 1869. One day he sat down the names of Decatur people listed in the directory who were still living in the village when he came here twenty years later. They are now all gone, but our older residents well remember the most of them and it may interest them to recall acquaintances and friends of the past. Following is the list:

Henry Brown	George McKay
A. A. Abbott	Eugene Nicholson
Edward Arnold	Wm. North
Chas. T. Baker	Ranson Nutting
Orange Beach	John O'Leary
Thos. Brownbridge	Thomas O'Leary
Thomas Browning	Peter Pardonette
Edward Carney	J. G. Parkhurst
Wm. DeBolt	John Parsons
Joseph Dodge	Jacob Prieste
A. E. Dwight	Judson Rawson
John Eckenberger	Lyman T. Rawson
James Ellis	Reuben Rawson
Charles Galligan	L. D. Roberts
Fred Gantz, Sr.	Lyman A. Robert
Geo. H. Greenman	Joseph Rogers
Theodore Harlan	Henry Rogers
E. L. Hawks	Henry Rosenberg
Joseph H. Haynes	Walter Russell
John G. Haynes	John Shaad
E. P. Hill	Patrick Shaen
L. Dana Hill	George Smith
Marvin Hinkley	David A. Squier
J. H. Humphreys	Charles Steele
Andy B. Johnson	William Stoddard
Joe Johnson	David Sutfin
Dennis Jordan	Aaron Sweet
J. D. Keables	Nathan Thomas
Anson B. Knight	Sela N. Thomas
Adelbert Kurtz	Gridley Toof
Charles Labadie	Theo. Trowbridge
Daniel Lee	Wm. H. Tucker
Hiram Lee	Wm. H. Tuttle
Levi Lisk	J. H. Tuttle
Henry Lurkins	Josiah Warner
Richard Lyon	Norman Webster
James Mahoney	Joseph P. Warner
Michael Mahoney	Eleanor Wheaton
Thos. Maxham	Perry M. Young
Geo. McCormick

J.G. HIRST

No single enterprise in a town or community takes a more active substantial interest in its upbuilding and trade expansion than do the lumbering concerns. They are usually among the first to take the initiative and by their example and enterprise pave the way for other industries and encourage capital.

The Decatur Hoop and Lumber Company owned and managed by Mr. J.G. Hirst, is no exception to the above general statement.

His yard, which is advantageously located on East Sherwood Street near the M.C.R.R. is completely stocked with all kinds of rough and finished lumber, doors, sashes, cement, brick, wood, slate and composition shingles, etc.

Mr. Hirst has in connection a well equipped hoop and planing mill. He manufactures hardwood lumber of all kinds, lengths and varieties of finished building material, which he supplies from his own plant. He also is an extensive manufacturer and dealer in barrel hoops, potato and celery crates and boxes.

KERN HOME SONG

The old Kern Homestead was located on the prairie between Decatur and Marcellus (Near Saddlebag Lake).

"Grandma" Kern was the mother and grandmother respectively, of Frank L. Kern and Bess M. Kern — who wrote this song.

By Frank L. and Bess M. Kern

I am dreaming all the day, of that land so far away,
Where I spent the days of childhood
long ago;
There's no spot so dear to me, as the place I long to see,
Tis the only home my heart could ever know.
I can see my mother dear, toiling on from year to year,
As by faith she made the sweetest blossoms grow!
Now I sing her this refrain, while my heart must there remain
In that happy home of childhood long ago.

REFRAIN:
Then, oh, let me go, to the dearest spot I know,
To the place where sweetest fruits and flowers grow;
By the prairie far and wide, near the woods and lakes beside,
Stands the happy home of childhood long ago.
Oh, some lovely spots, I've found, searching this old world around,
But no matter where my tired feet may roam;
That one place of all the rest, I shall always love the best,
For 'tis there I found my childhood's happy home.
Over on the golden shore, loving friends have gone before,
We shall join them when our final day appears;
But while waiting here below, 'tis a pleasant thought to know
That we loved them in our childhood's happy years.

WHERE SWEET ROSES ARE A BLOOMING ALL THE WHILE

Dear old California stretching down across the west!
Where all nature greets the tourist with a smile;
The land of life and beauty, peace, happiness and rest —
Where sweet roses are a blooming all the while,
They are blooming in the garden and climbing o'er the wall,
Red, yellow, white and pink of every style;
You may gather them in summer, in winter, spring and fall —
For our roses are a blooming all the while.

Yes, the heart goes back to loved ones where the frost king rules today,
And there's a genial warmth around the old tile hearth,
But we've found an earthly paradise and here we long to stay
Where sweet roses are a blooming all the while.
O, land of genial sunshine, along the sunset sea!
O, Golden State, your flowers and fruits beguile;
Here happy birds are singing to bind our hearts to theirs
Where sweet roses are a blooming all the while.

TEACHING INDIANS TO LIVE LIKE AMERICANS

NATIVES OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA HAVE MANY QUEER BELIEFS—SPANISH THE PREVAILING LANGUAGE, BUT FEW CAN READ OR WRITE IT

MR. AND MRS. LOUIS DWIGHT AT SANTA YSABEL

Santa Ysabel,
San Diego Co.,
Jan. 26, 1920.

Editor Republican,

Dear Friend:

I am enclosing check for my subscription, and will say that we are very glad to get the paper each week and learn all about what is going on in and around Decatur. It has been nearly 17 years since we lived in that vicinity, but we get news of lots of our friends through your paper.

We are still in the land of the Indian, trying to teach him the white man's way of living; sometimes it seems discouraging, and then again we think we can see some improvement occasionally, and get at it with increased vigor. These Indians are much different from those of the Great Plains, they all live in houses and wear the clothes of the whites and mingle very freely with white people. They all speak Spanish at home, and are not supposed to speak it at school, but they do get their English twisted pretty badly sometimes. But here is a curious thing, when the children go away and want to write back home, it has to be in English, for I think there is only man on the reservation who can read and write Spanish.

These Indians try to be like white folks, but they have some queer tastes and beliefs. They eat lots of the wild plants that grow on the mountain sides that taste horrible to us, but they seem to relish them. Their favorite dish, however, is beans—pink beans. They can eat them three times a day, and never seem to get tired of them. One of the Indian women made some tortillas for us one day while making a call; they are made somewhat like pie-crust, but are flattened out by hand, and baked on top of the bare stove. We liked them very much.

Indians Afraid of Large Cemeteries

The Indians have strange beliefs about their cemeteries, they will not lay out a large one, for fear they will all have to die presently to fill it, so they make a small one, and when it gets full, they do not dare to enlarge it for the same reason. So they keep on burying their dead in the same place, and the fact that the diggers frequently dig up the bones of some other Indian does not disturb them in the least. On the night of November 1 they burn candles over the graves all night long, providing it is not too windy.

When a person dies, he is taken to the church as soon as possible, and all the Indians gather there, children, dogs and all, and keep a vigil all night. The women stay in the church with the body, and keep up a continual wailing, but the men generally stay outside and keep the camp-fire burning. The next day the burial takes place. Generally some Indian says the service, and when it is over the hat is passed for him, and sometimes he gets as much as $45. But the nearest of kin have to provide food for the whole crowd, and generally a whole beef is consumed. On the anniversary of the death a mass is said by the priest, and again the relatives are called upon to feed the crowd. We never have any school on such occasions.

We were telling one of the Indians about the ice in Lake of the Woods a foot thick, and he could hardly believe it. We have some ice here, but nothing like that. In fact we have a little of nearly all kinds of weather here, and some kinds that others do not have. On Thanksgiving morning we awoke to find five inches of snow on the ground, and this "Sunny Southern California," where roses are supposed to bloom the year around. But "this was very unusual, I assure you."

We have travelled the whole length of this state, bu auto and team, from Oregon to Mexico, and have heard this same formula wherever we have chanced to be when a spell of nasty weather occurred, but just as sure as some bright days came along, "Now this is typical California weather" was what the song was. We have had no snow since Thanksgiving, however, and that storm lasted only a few days, and then it was cold (for California) for about a week. We had to have a stove put up to get warm by, the fireplace did not throw out enough heat. By Christmas it had warmed up and we sat out on the porch in our swing, with the doors all wide open. One day I counted of the 20 children that came to school that day only four were not bare-foot. And they all have shoes, too.

On the evening of the last day of the year we had an earthquake, (but I am not supposed to tell that). It made the house creak and groan for a few seconds, but did no damage. If some of the native Californians knew I sent such news out of the state, they would be sending a viligance committee after me.

East Wind Worst Enemy of Crops

We have a special curse in this locality known as the East wind. It comes with considerable force right off the desert, and dries up things in a hurry. If this wind starts blowing right after a heavy soaking rain, the dust will be blowing in 12 hours. It will blow all the loose dirt off the road, leaving it as bare as a pavement. The farmers do not like to plow when the east wind blows, because the ground is dried out before they can harrow it, and moisture in this part of the country is something that has to be conserved.

Carrie and I took a trip up to San Francisco in our Willys-Knight last September, and had a very enjoyable trip. We went by way of Riverside, Los Angeles, Santa Barabara, San Luis Obispo, etc. over what is known as the coast route. After we got to Temecula, 45 miles from here, it was payment all the rest of the way, except about 40 miles in all. We stayed two or three days in Pasadena with an old schoolmate of mine, Hubert Odell, and his sister Myrtle. They were very glad to see us, and we were glad to see them, too. We also saw their brother Lou, but did not have a chance to visit with him much.

Decatur Friends in California

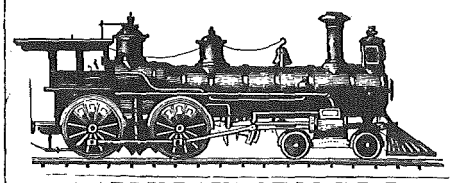
We got up to San Jose the day before the fleet came into San Francisco harbor, but we had already seen it come into San Diego, and as we knew what it was to be in a crowd in the metropolis, we did not bother to go up to the city. We stayed in San Jose several days with another old Decatur friend, Flue Bartholomew, and had a very pleasant time with him and family. He sold his ranch of 14 acres nearly a year ago for $19,000. It was all set out to fruit, or he could not have gotten such a price. I think this will beat anything around Decatur.

We came back the same way we went up, only came by way of San Diego instead of Riverside. We were gone about two weeks, and travelled 1700 miles. Had very little trouble on the whole trip.

Of course we all went down to San Diego when President Wilson was there in September. He spoke at the high school stadium, which seats 40,000 people. Every seat was taken, and it was estimated that at least 10,000 people stood up. I think it was the largest crowd I ever saw. They had an arrangement called a magnavox, that intensified his voice so that everybody in the stadium except those in the extreme end could hear what he had to say. It was only a few days after this that he broke down and had to give up his trip.

Well I think this is about all that I can write of interest for this time, so will close.

Very truly yours,
Louis D. Dwight.



EARLY DAYS OF M.C.R.R.

The Michigan investor says the M.C.R.R. was chartered June 29, 1832, under the name of the Detroit and St. Joseph railraod. Six years later in 1838, the railroad was opened for traffic to Ypsilanti, and an excursion was run from Detroit. On the return trip the engine gave out and as the railroad had but one engine, teams were procured to draw the train back to Detroit.

In 1839 the freight receipts averaged upwards of 300,000 per day, and it took until 1846 to complete the railroad to Kalamazoo. In the latter part of that year, the state, having expended $1,954,308 on the railroad, sold the railroad to a corporation for $2,000,000, and it required 6 years of further struggle to reach Chicago.

In fact, it took the railroad many years longer then that. The original charter called for the railroad to reach some point on the lake, and the state intended to go to St. Joe. When the company bought it they deflected to New Buffalo, their objective point being Chicago, but when they reached Michigan City they found the Michigan Southern strong enough with the legislature to keep them from getting a charter from the state of Indiana, and it was years before they finally did get one. They went into Chicago upon leased lines in the meantime.

Chas. W. Tucker

(Ancient History About Decatur Written by Ace Norwood Twenty Years Ago and Revised.)

Chas. W. Tucker was a Decatur merchant in the days of the Civil War and before. He occupied a frame building where Brigham's hardware store now stands.

He sold dry goods and groceries, hardware, crockery, drugs, fruits and vegetables, in fact almost everything known to the buying public in his time.

He also bought everything that was brought to him to be sold and did some shipping. He did a heavy credit business and this probably hastened his financial downfall.

When things went against him he began to borrow money in small sums, striking a friend for from $25 to $100 according to his ability to lend. In the course of time his store went by the boards and Tucker went west.

He was an odd, strange and eccentric character. He was reckless in his business and a prey to sharp practice strangers.

A stranger called one evening and showed him a piece of yellow metal, said it was gold and worth $100. He needed $20 at once and wanted to pawn it to Tucker for that amount. Tucker gave him the twenty but the stranger never returned.

Late one evening another stranger called and inquired if he bought furs. "Bet yer life," replied Tucker, "Buy everything." The stranger had what appeared to be a mink skin, a large one and nicely fixed for market. Mink skins were dear and Tucker gave a good round price for what the next morning proved to be a cat skin.

His knowledge of mathematics was limited and when he got into trouble he would call his son William Henry, the late lawyer. William Henry was his clerk in those days and he often called, "Bill Hen, Bill Hen, here quick."

He was always on the alert for customers and when anyone would enter his store he would meet him, salute and then commence,—"Well, friend, what can I do for you today?"

If the customer asked for an ax handle or anything else he had, Tucker would reply, "Yes, sir, you don't think we would be here without them, do you?"

In those days people burned wood buying 4 foot wood and cutting it in lengths to suit their stoves. There were "corporation fiddlers" who made a business of bucking wood, but Tucker didn't hire them. He had a clerk and in the mornings before trade commenced his clerk was compelled to put in time on the wood pile in the back yard.

"TOM" LYON VISITS DECATUR

Dr. T. E. Lyon has been a visitor to Decatur, his old home town, the past week. He came to Decatur for Memorial Day, leaving his wife at a Wisconsin town, where she visited the graves of her parents on that day. Mr. and Mrs. Lyon are enjoying an extended trip through the north and expect to [illegible] most of the summer [illegible] Dr. Lyon will go to Chicago to be in attendance at the National Republican convention. He is an alternate delegate from New Mexico and may be seated as a delegate in the convention if the regular delegates should fail to appear.

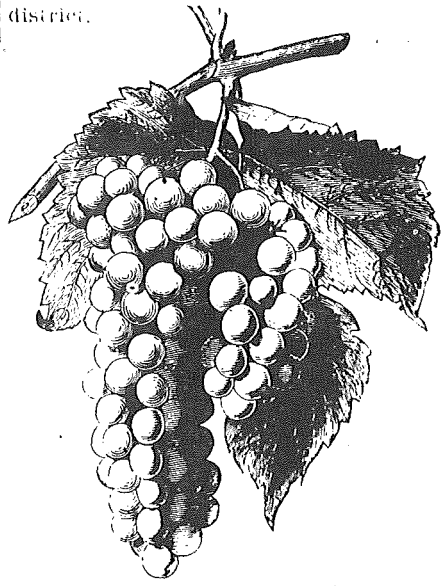
Dr. Lyon left Decatur many years ago, to begin the practice of his profession in the South. The memories of his boyhood days in Decatur, however, are fresh in his mind, and he has spent a delightful week, visiting with the few "old boys" who lived here, and went to school with his crowd. One of the most pleasant memories, Dr. Lyon says, is of the old Decatur band, of which he was a member. Under the instruction of Chas. Pritchard, and with the Russell boys, Charlie Rawson, and others as players, the band was an essential factor of political campaigns, and made the village ring with music and noise, at the time of presidential elections. Chas. Pritchard and Chas. Rawson are the only members of that band who are at present residing here. Mr. Russell, who now lives at Battle Creek, spent Memorial Day here.

Dr. Lyon has been very successful in his work at Raton, having charge of the miners' hospital. Raton is located in the center of a coal mining district.



DECATUR SHIPS 130 CARS OF GRAPES

IMPORTANCE OF INDUSTRY TO THIS VILLAGE BECOMES APPARENT WHEN HARVEST TOTALS ARE STRUCK

One hundred and thirty cars of grapes were shipped from Decatur this season. Forty-five cars were billed out through the Southern Michigan Fruit Association, Ward McKee shipped fifty-six, nineteen went to the Hungerford-Smith Grape Juice Company at Lawton and B. F. J. O'Dell shipped a number of cars, but his figures are not available at this time. It is estimated that Mr. O'Dell's shipments aggregated more than ten cars.

Ray Bowers, local manager for the Fruit Association, went to Lawton last Thursday to complete a settlement and file his report. The Association announced that day that over a million dollars would be distributed to Association members for grapes this fall.

Two hundred and twenty-four tons were sent to the juice factory from Decatur. Grapes prepared for shipment average twelve tons to the car, which brings the total of nineteen cars as stated above.

Decatur's increased importance as a shipping point for grapes is not entirely due to increased yields at local vineyards, shippers say. Growers residing at some distance from the village found here a convenient and satisfactory market, and avoided many of the difficulties experienced at larger shipping points.

The total number of cars of grapes shipped from this section runs over 1500. Figures secured at Lawton last week give the number of cars loaded at that station on the Michigan Central tracks as 487. At Mattawan on the Michigan Central 291 were loaded. Approximately 660 were loaded at the stations along the Fruit Belt railroad. These figures do not include grapes received by the grape juice factories, of which there are two at Lawton, and one each at Mattawan and Paw Paw.

The price of grapes advanced steadily during the closing days of the harvest, the quotations on jumbos reaching $135 per ton.

REPORT OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION

By Rev. D. D. King, Decatur's Delegate.

Everyone of us must give an account of himself before God. Some of us should give an account before men. I chance to belong to both groups. I count it a high privilege to be commissioned to attend the 20th Annual Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America at Washington, D. C., December 6, 7, and 8, 1921. I take a special pride in this service because I represented the first town of the first county of the state to go and stay dry. I do not, however, consider that I was in any way best fitted nor in any way deserving of this honor. There are others who could have qualified much better than myself. I beg, however, to thank the kind friends who entrusted so great a trust to me. I attended all services and tried to get the line on the real message in each address. As we had three addresses each evening and six both morning and afternoon, it would be unwise to try to report each address as an item in this heavily loaded and big-gunned artillery, for the speakers were Bishops, governors, chief justices, senators, attorney generals, U. S. commissioners and state officers from all parts of the U. S. I think all will agree with me that such an array of talent on such an occasion can not be designated in any other terms than "big guns" and that in military language is an artillery.

Then to think of a country guy with hay seed in his hair and moss on his back, figuratively speaking, having all this fired into him in so short a time. One gentleman, yes he is just that, took my hat off my head and examined it to see if the band was broken or if I had been obliged to get a new one. He did not suspicion that there was so much empty room before I went where all this could be stored and no bulge caused. But what did happen was even more serious. The facts there were verified respecting the real situations had near broken my heart. It may make a radical change in my life for the future. No man can go to such a convention and be the same man that he has been.

What Prohibition Has Accomplished

The plan then I shall attempt to follow in giving out a report will be to bring the representation of facts regarding conditions under prohibition in all parts of this great country of ours. Prohibition is not a failure. It is a huge success. It has eliminated 85 per cent of drunkeness. Has produced thrift and efficiency. Reduced accidents in shops and mines. Has made marvelous increase in savings deposits. Increased the ownership of homes among the laboring class. Health conditions vastly better. Has demonstrated its wholesome effect upon individuals, communities and states.

We do not want to lose sight of this important fact that these statements were made by authorities and were taken by reporters of the press and cannot be refuted by any denials, nor minified by any incredulous individuals. The benefits of prohibition have filtered to all forms and phases of life. Even distillers and brewers have frankly acknowledged that they were wrong. And several cases were cited where they were engaged in other legitimate business while they declare they would not think of going back to the former business. Some even have become Christian men and with families may be found in church worship on Sunday. As the South would not have slavery return, so the better part of the brewers and distillers would not have license return.

But there is violation of law everywhere, too. Small distills and brewing or numerous and importation is coming into the country from all sides. Bootlegging and moonshining are rampant. Lax law enforcement is evidenced in many quarters, open and blatant violation in some places. There are many types of law breakers. It does not seem to have occurred to many people that to break this 18th Amendment to the Constitution was to traduce the sacredness and dignity of the nation and trample upon stars and stripes of our liberty. To prohibit is the high duty of the government when it is for the protection of the innocent and the home. And the government cannot with impunity fail to do so even though she be offered a bribe of billions or even at a cost of billions to enforce such protection.

Wet Forces Still Fighting

There has been a note missing in the appeal chorus of the wet forces. It was a star play in the former combats of the west. They sang, "t is unconstitutional." Now it is constitutional forever more and can never be taken out of the constitution nor recalled.

But that is exactly what they are trying to do and they are openly declaring themselves that they are going to do this. They are putting ads in some newspapers that have a large circulation—display ads and bold headlines—"End Prohibition." I copied such an ad from a Detroit paper. It reads as follows, "End Prohibition (in large type). You must register your protest now against it. Become a part of this organization that is adding 20,000 new members every day, operating in 38 states and 216 cities. New branches forming everywhere. Somebody had to start this to bring back the freedom for which our fathers died. Saying to yourself, yes I am going to join is like winking to a girl in the dark; you know what you are doing, but no one else does. Every citizen of the state is welcome. The association against the prohibition amendment is incorporated at Washington, D. C., and is endorsed by the pulpit and the press. It is a patriotic organization of men and women in protest against the evils of prohibition. It is working toward the repeal of the Volstead act."

I will not quote further, but seek to impress the trenchant and covert sophistry of the enemies' argument and methods to make plausible this effort for annulling prohibition. Now we have to allow that others have a right to views different from ours. But to put their case in such construction as to deceive or mislead is the right of no one.

There are evils that have developed under prohibtion. But for which the principles of prohibition are in no sense responsible. The worst of all and most dangerous to any government is the disregard for law. Prohibition as such is not a reason for the disregard for law but it furnishes an opportunity for the disloyal citizen to show himself. Now we know who he is. He is the one who allows open violation. He is the judge who imposes so light penalty that the offender goes out to offend again. He is the high-honored citizen who has an appetite and uses and serves it in bon ton society. He is the officer who warns the dives before he makes the raid. He is the citizen who brews, distills or bootlegs or secretes—contary to the laws of the land and the state. Now there can be nothing worse than a citizenship which makes our future as a nation more dubious.

Now may we take a look at these leaders in this agitation for repeal. Leaders! mind you. These leaders have by some scheming or strategy associated with them a few names that astonish and disgust us so they can claim even "the pulpit and the press" to be with them. As to the leaders, who are they? They are the men who have made large fortunes from the business; debauching the manhood and womanhood of our nation, blighting childhood and blasting homes; corrupting politics and influencing legislatures to their favor. These men who when our nation was in war were agents of our enemy against us and represented a propaganda that cost us millions of money and great loss of life. This same crowd has put up, we are told, millions of money to get back into their old occupation. Do we want them back? A little chorus was sung often at the convention with words—

"We'll never let the devil win
We'll never compromise with him
Though he tries to give us beer and call it medicine,
We'll never let the devil win." ?

Wets in For Biggest Battle

The facts are that the wets were never better organized and never better financed than they are now. They are in for the biggest battle of their lives and it is up to the temperance people to make it the last great battle any way that they will ever be able to make. They now have to put up money out of their savings as we have always had to do, and are ready to do again. There are two familiar battle-fronts; one is on enforcement lines and the other on legislative lines. We must stand up close to our officers for enforcement. So close, one speaker said, that we can whisper encouragement when he does well and kick him when he does not do his full duty and kick him out if he refuses to uphold the law. The greatest danger is that we have thought that law enforced itself, which it never does. Or we have left the enforcement to Uncle Sam, forgetting who Uncle Sam was. Why Uncle Sam is just U.S. written with capitals—WE, US, YOU, ME. The federal government is to be heeded and dreaded but he can do little without all citizens co-operating who honor the government and are law abiding.

No violator of law ought to be shielded for personal friendship, nor even relationship. To have prohibition fail now would be a national calamity; for the world is looking at us. We are many times better situated to win now than formerly. We have the law now and the government is back of us. Our worst enemy now is indifference. Buffalo, N. Y., had just elected the worst type of an excuse as its next mayor by a majority vote of 5,000. Then it was found that 20,000 people who had registered failed to vote whose votes would have been against him. Our state of mind seems to be about like this when prohibition was ratified—

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the law strict watch to keep,
If I should wake before I die
I expect the country to be bone dry."

Yes sir, I composed that all myself. Then Muse came upon me and here it comes again:

"It is time for you to 'wake,
And give yourself a violent shake,
The law is not our Uncle Sam,
It is us—every woman, every man."

Now that the Muse has gone let us come back to sombre poise. There are two mighty forces to be overcome in the enforcement of prohibition that we have not reckoned with, according to their merits and importance. The first one I mention is appetite. Had you thought what a man will do and what he has done to satisfy his appetite. When you think, you realize as I do that we could easier tell what he has not done. What a criminal, what a friend, what a brute has man not been for this reason? And appetite has been cultivated for so long a time; any way since Noah, be that 4,000 or more years. What struggles men have with appetite! They have been locked up, Have locked themselves up and thrown the key away. Have sworn on bibles and at altars, but appetite has still won. Did we delude ourselves so much as to think men with appetites were going to be very submissive and yielding because prohibition had become a law? We have left it largely there. Let us just wake up and be very much awake to difficulties in the way of enforcement and swear by High Heaven no more appetites will be gained by our permission in the youth of our land.

The other force we must meet is the greed for gold. So long as violation of law is profitable it will prevail in our country. So long as bootlegging makes big money it is sure to do business. And this will be as long as people will pay big prices for the goods and little or no fines are imposed. The first will continue so long as men can get the price and the latter will continue until sentences will become bankrupting, instead of profitable. Also until the violators of law will be promptly condemned by imprisonment commensurate with the gravity of the offense.

But can prohibition be enforced? Why you are just jesting, why can it not be enforced? It is like any other law and there will be violations here and there, but that is so of all laws. But it costs so much! No it yields ten dollars for every one of cost in Ohio, the commissioner of that state told us; and the proceeds are more than the cost throughout the country now. Then suppose we get to doing business in the right way, it will be highly remunerative, until it ceases to struggle over honorable and profitable occupation.

How are we to meet all the conditions that are upon us? Organize, educate, vote! As we might expect there are many holding office upon whom enforcement falls who do not sympathize with the measure. If they had the right spirit they would uphold the law to the last measure of enforcement, even though personally they do not like the law. They have taken oath to do that. But many will not, though it be said to their credit, some do. Our duty and opportunity is plain in this matter. We must see to it that men are in these positions who will uphold the law. You will find a marvelous change in attitude if this purpose becomes clear and strong.

The matter of law enforcement is fought out with difficulty and danger. More than 20 lives have already been sacrificed in performance of duty, and many others doubtless will be, sacrificed. The cause is worthy and none but heroes are needed. It should be enough for us to know that murder is plotted deliberately and brutally carried out by our enemy. Commissioner Isaac R. Hitt of Washington, D. C., asked that great audience to stand with him to pray God's protection for those who should be called to enforce the law. Mr. Hitt was introduced as a lineal son of Isaac the first. A most impressive scene, a Jew noble, splendid looking man, calling a company of 2,000 gentiles to pray for God's protection and help in upholding a law that Mr. Hitt said proved that as a nation we were growing "wise and good." God said thou shalt not at an early date in dealing with man. It was not a limitation of his freedom, but the measure to larger freedom and greater good. And prohibition is just that—more men, more comforts, more homes, more happiness. Prohibition now and forever!

NORMAN EARL WEBSTER

WAS RESIDENT OF DECATUR FOR MANY YEARS—PASSED AWAY AT KALAMAZOO NOVEMBER 23 AT THE AGE OF 89 YEARS

Norman Earl Webster was born October 3, 1832, at Elba, Gennessee county, N. Y., and died November 23, 1921, at Kalamazoo, Michigan. He was the son of Earl Webster and Mary Howe, who moved from New York state to Michigan in 1835.. He was the eldest of five children, and the last surviving, the others being Luman Edward Webster, Mary Webster Simpson Dennis, Frances Elizabeth Webster Allan and Sylvia Abiah Webster Maxham.

His boyhood was spent in Calhoun county and as a young man he learned the carpenter's trade with William Knowlton at Coldwater, whose memory he always cherished, both as employer and a Christian gentleman.

On December 23, 1863, he married Jennie L. Chevelier at Decatur and for nearly fifty-eight years their home was in Decatur and Kalamazoo with shorter residence in Coldwater and Sturgis. and in Findlay, Ohio. At these places and others he was employed in the operation of wood working machinery, most recently with the Michigan Buggy Company of Kalamazoo, where he was employed for twenty years until he retired at the age of seventy-seven.

Mr. Webster and his wife united with the Presbyterian church while living in Coldwater, being received by the Reverend G. L. Foster, who afterward supplied the church in Decatur for a time. Later he was a member of the churches in. Decatur and Kalamazoo and in Decatur he was for many years a member of the choir and superintendent of the Sunday school.

He is survived by the widow and their only son, Norman Edward Webster, who resides in New York City.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. W. Dunning, at the Truesdale Chapel in Kalamazoo, and Rev. B. L. Bergstrom conducting the funeral services at the Presbyterian church, Decatur, on Saturday afternoon, November 26,, interment being in Lakeside cemetery.

Old friends of the family acted as pallbearers as follows: Lewis G. Stewart, Theodore Trowbridge, Perry M. Young, Malcolm S. Carney, John Shaad, Emory H. Squier.

REPUBLICAN NOT DECATUR'S FIRST PAPER

O. W. ROWLAND, ONCE DECATUR PUBLISHER, SAYS TRIBUNE WAS FIRST NEWSPAPER HERE, AND CLARION FOLLOWED, BUT BOTH WERE SHORT LIVED

"Mr. Bellows is a son of the late Professor C. F. R. Bellows, first principal of the Decatur schools, and one of the founders of the Van Buren County Republican, Decatur's first newspaper."

Absolutely correct, except as to the statement that the Van Buren County Republican was Decatur's first newspaper. Some seven years prior to founding of the Republican, one C. P. Sweet began publishing the Decatur Tribune, which lived about four years and then was permitted to depart in peace. In the summer of 1865 Moses Hill, a Kalamazoo man, launched the Decatur Clarion, conducted about six months, and then disposed of it to A. W. Briggs, who continued its publication for another half year, when it quietly and peacefully folded its pinions and stole away. Instead of being the first the Republican was the last newspaper to be started in Decatur.

It was founded under the name of the "Van Buren County Republican," in 1867, and has, with but a brief intermission, been continuously published ever since, being known by the above name or as the Decatur Republican and for a short time only as the "Decatur Independent."

The following named gentlemen have the honor of being its editors and publishers: Prof. C. F. R. Bellows, E. A. Blackman, H. C. Buffington, A. M. Wooster, Hon. Robt. L. Warren, Andrew Johnson, O. W. Rowland and his son M. O. Rowland, Messrs. Secord & Dewey, under whose management the paper bore the name of the "Decatur Independent," and lastly A. N. Moulton, under whose administration it has become an institution in which Decatur people have a just degree of pride and which is one of the best equipped print shops in Van Buren county.

O. W. Rowland.

GRANGE FAIR PLANS PROGRESS

EXPOSITION IN NEW GRANGE HALL OCTOBER 18, 19, 20, TO BE BEST IN YEARS

Plans are rapidly progressing for a successful Grange fair this year. The dates announced are October 18, 19, and 20. Farmers are urged to save the best of their produce for display at this exposition, and a department is to be devoted to poultry and rabbits.

An extensive premium list is now being compiled, and will be published within a short time. The hearty co-operation of farmers and townspeople generally is invited to make the Grange fair of 1921 the best ever held here.

The fair this year will be held in the new Grange hall on St. Mary street, where ample room will be allowed for displays of farm and garden products, and for mercantile displays by the local merchants.

A SOLDIER IN THE BRITISH ARMY

Horace Wright of North Hamilton was a pleasant caller last Saturday. Mr. Wright bought the Gla Brown farm some ten years ago and has done fairly well there, but now like other farmers he is having his struggle to make both ends meet. He is not disheartened, however, and says that one good thing about farming is that he can always get enough to eat.

Mr. Wright is 68 but hardly looks 60, and he has seen more of the world than most farmers of this community. He is a native of England and served 15 years in the British army. Five years of his service were spent in India and three years in South Africa. He served in the Boer war under General Kitchiner.

One day his regiment marched all day through the rain in South Africa and when camp was made at night a young boy was among the number chosen for outpost duty. He was the youngest in the regiment and not strong and rugged like the seasoned soldiers, but he went without a murmur.

During the night the Sergeant making the round of inspection found him asleep at his post, marched him into camp and sent another soldier to take his place.

The next morning the boy was taken before the Major, tried and sentenced to be shot.

Some of his soldier friends pleaded for him before General Kitchiner and after an investigation the General remitted the death penalty and sentenced him to two years in prison.

The soldiers all loved General Kitchiner.

THE FIRST WHITE CHILD BORN IN VAN BUREN COUNTY

Mrs. Gertrude Jewell Phillips of Richland, Kalamazoo county, sent the Republican a newspaper clipping of the story following. It is not dated as to the year, but is faded with age and is probably about forty years old.

Elias Morris was a son of Dolphin and Sarah Morris, the first settlers of Van Buren county. Upon retiring from his Cass county farm he and Mrs. Morris bought the Upton home on School street opposite the school house, now the home of members of the Van't Zelfde family. Mrs. R. J. Huyck is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Elias Morris.

The clipping:

Decatur, Mich., Feb. 12. — Elias Morris was born in Decatur township, Van Buren county, May 11, 1832. He holds the distinction of being the first white child born in Van Buren county, and is therefore the county's honored pioneer. His early years were spent upon his father's farm, and during his youth the family traded at LaGrange and Paw Paw. He had many thrilling experiences with the wolves and wildcats that roamed the forest, which frequently made great inroads upon his father's flock of sheep.

Mr. Morris' education was obtained from the country schools, supplemented with two years' work at the then Wesleyan seminary at Albion.

Mr. Morris was happily married March 12, 1857, to Charlotte Dunning, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Dunning of Edwardsburg, Cass county. To them were born five children, three of whom are dead. Raymond C. was graduated from the Rush Medical school in 1897, and now looks after his large stock and farming interests at Keeler. Carlton D. was graduated from the medical department of the University of Michigan in 1894 and is a practicing physician at Pontiac.

Mr. Morris moved upon his 240 acre farm in Volinia township, Cass county, in 1857, and resided upon the same farm forty years. Besides his Cass county interests he owns 290 acres in Decatur township and 160 acres in South Dakota. He is a member of the board of directors of the First National bank of Paw Paw.

TAN BARK USED EARLY FOR ROADS

OLD CESSPOOLS ON MAIN STREET ALSO OCCASION MUCH COMMENT AND DISCUSSION OF REMINISCENCES AMONG OLDER RESIDENTS

Preparation of the roadbed for the pavement on Sherwood street near Main last Friday brought to light the material which was first used for paving purposes in this village. It was tan bark found two to two and one-half feet below the surface of the old roadbed.

Decatur once had a tannery. It was destroyed by fire years ago. Older residents say that the pulverized tan bark, after its value as a coloring material had been destroyed, was placed on streets to make the roads better. The fact that the bark was lying below several courses of gravel and just above sand leads one to belive that it was the first material used in an attempt to improve the highways in the village.

Reminscences have filled the air this week since the discovery at the park end of Main street of an old cistern, one that was used as a fire cistern in the days when Decatur had no municipal water pumping system, and fires were fought by bucket lines from these cisterns to the conflagration.

The cistern had become buried and many of the older residents had forgotten its existence. Another larger cistern, in the center of the Delaware and Main intersection was also uncovered. The existence of the latter well has been known and an attempt was made a few years ago to have it filled up. It was filled with dirt from the street last week, and this old landmark passes into history.

The cistern at the park end of the street, however, will be preserved, as it becomes a catch basin for surface water from Main street. Before discovery of the cistern engineers had planned the construction of a catch basin near the park, but with the old cistern already built, it can be used for the purpose.

One of Decatur's best informed older residents hos promised the Republican a story of the old tannery and its tan bark by-product, which we hope to print within a week or so.

Twenty Years Ago In Decatur

Taken from the files of the Republican, 1901.

Fred Mielke, fashionable tailor, has a new line of fall and winter samples. Second hand clothing always in stock at various prices. Shop over Shaad's store.

John Brigham has purchased the Miss Mollie Brown residence, south of the railroad.

Livery and Feed Barn. I can furnish first class rigs at reasonable prices. Corner Main and St. Mary streets. Dell Adams.

The marriage of Fred A. Webb of Chicago to Miss Gertrude Lyle at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Levi Lyle, occurred Tuesday, November 5.

Some names are not very common, and the same can be said in compliment of the people who bear them.

Take the name 'Eckenberger,' for instance. We were discussing the subject of names with our old time friend and fellow citizen, Sela N. Eckenberger.

He stated that his name is not listed in the city directories of Detroit or Chicago. Those two cities represent a population of about five million souls without an Eckenberger, while in this village of fifteen hundred there are two, and in years past there have been as many as a dozen.

The family originated in Switzerland. In the Swiss language 'Ecken means corner, 'Berg,' mountain, and 'er' dweller, the literal translation of the name being, 'Dweller on the corner of a mountain.'

The members of the family who immigrated to America first located near Philadelphia and were of the pioneers known as 'Pennsylvania Dutch.'

From Philadelphia members of the family moved to Marietta, Ohio, and from there to Cass county, Michigan

---

John Eckenberger, father of our townsman, was born in Volinia township, near the farm now owned by Ezra Rutherford, in 1832.

"Consider Poor Lo"

Consider "Lo, the poor Indian." Untutored and uncivilized "poor Lo" goes his thoughtful way and keeps his mouth shut tight.

He soars not on a crazy boom nor sinks into a deep depression. He revels in no revolution nor is sucked into a World War. He supports no standing army, nor builds million-dollar battleships to go on the junk heap in a few years.

He does not send several hundred Big Indians to the Big Wigwam in Washington to make much big talk, 99 per cent of which counteth not to the value of a hill of beans. The Big Chief administers the law and the gospel, from which there is no appeal and no repeal.

If he raises more stuff in his little garden than he can eat, he does not proceed to destroy it so as to make his brother Indian, whose garden dried up, pay more for what he has to have, nor give him some wampum to buy it with.

Consider also Lo's poor squaw. She chases not after the fleeting fashions, nor quarrels over bridge, nor bothers about divorce and alimony. Verily, thrice blessed is Mrs. Lo.

Poor Lo believes in a Great Spirit. Are the white man's doctrines any more sensible or logical?

EVERGREEN BLUFF
An Ideal Place for Rest and Recreation
SOUTH HAVEN, MICHIGAN

SHOWS IN YOUR FACE

You don't have to tell how you live each day
You don't have to say if you work or play;
A tried true barometer serves in the place.

However you live, it shows in your face.

The faults, the deceit that you bear in your heart
Will not stay inside where it first got its start;
For sinew and blood are a thin veil of lace.

What you wear in your heart, you wear in your face.

If your life is unselfish, if for others you live,
For not what you get, but how much you can give;
If you live close to God in His infinite Grace,

You don't have to tell it, it shows in your face.

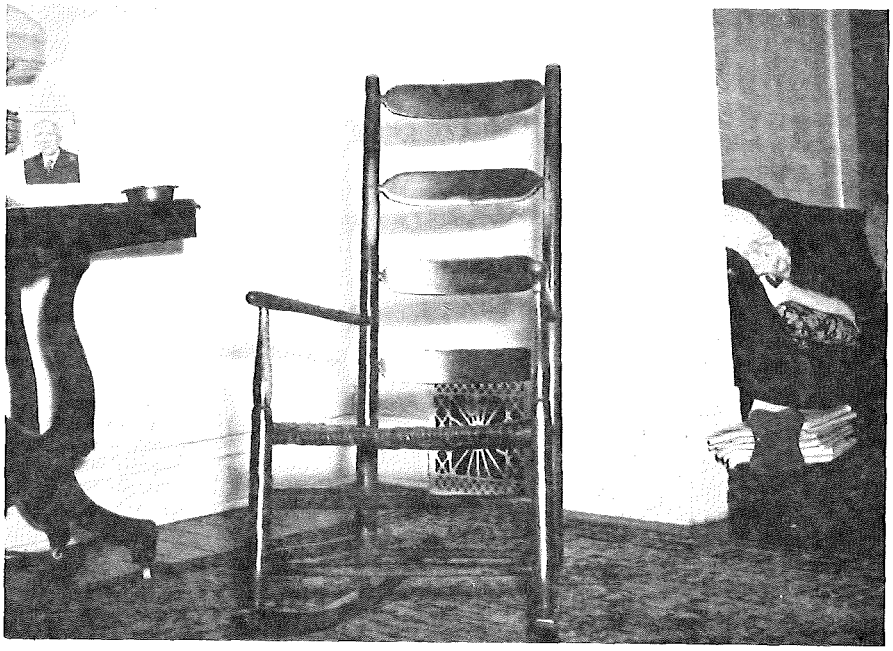
Great Grandmother Hoppin



Great Grandmother Hoppin's Rocking Chair

GREAT GRANDMOTHER HOPPIN'S CHAIR AS SHE AND HER ROCKER WERE CONNECTED WITH OUR FAMILY

Written by her oldest great-grand daughter – Carrie Vanderhoof Hall

When grandfather Hoppin's second wife died and left him with three small children, he also had three boys and two girls by his first wife — He owned and operated a hotel in South Haven (Michigan) and the future looked none too bright.

The oldest daughter, Ann, was about 16 and the second girl, Eliza, about 14.

The girls were too young to care for three small children and help their father with the hotel management, so, his mother Rebeckah Hoppin, and, his sister Ruth, came to live with him — Ruth taught school, and also went to school — Grandmother took over the management of the household, and, as she was not able to do much of the actual work, she sat in her rocker and directed the girls as to what was to be done, and she also supervised the "hired help."

She planned the meals, taught the girls how to care for the little children, the care of household linens; the rooms in the hotel, the preparation of foods — and things were always clean and food good.

The girls were taught to make the clothing for the family and, it was all handmade under her supervision.

She was the only mother the children ever knew. She was strict — yet very kind and they all loved her dearly, as they also loved their Aunt Ruth.

Grandmother sat in her rocker a great deal of the time and sewed or embroidered or did patch work quilts as she supervised the work of others —

For my mothers birthday one year she embroidered an "underskirt," and drew her own design — mother said she was so surprised and so happy to receive a gift which took so many hours to make.

I, the oldest great grand daughter, have a piece of that embroidered skirt which was made for my mother, her oldest grand daughter — Ann Hoppin. It is a treasured possession.

When grand father traded the hotel for a farm in Hamilton Township (on part of which his grandson, Amos Vanderhoof now lives and owns 160 acres of the old farm) the two girls, Ann and Eliza, were old enough to manage the home for their father, and care for the three small children — Ruth, Bessie and R.D. thanks to the careful training their grandmother had given them, so, when the trade was made and the family moved and settled on the Hamilton Township farm, great grandmother and Aunt Ruth returned to either Three Rivers or, to Parkville and took up their life together again but I think it was then that Aunt Ruth went as preceptress of Three Rivers High School.

When great grandmother became ill, Aunt gave up teaching and cared for her until the end came at Aunt Martha Reeds home — More Park.

The daughters had their mothers belongings, as is usually the case, and on my mothers return from Dakota, where she lived eleven years as a pioneer in that country, her Aunt Eliza Hoppin Kellogg thought she should have something which had belonged to her beloved grandmother and Aunt Ruth thought so too as did Martha Reed so, the rocker which was great grandmother's and in which she sat during those years in the home of her son Rossiter, and helped him to carry on, was given to my mother, his oldest daughter — Ann Hoppin Vanderhoof.

It so happened that the day father and mother went home from Aunts, was a cold stormy day and father did not like to risk tying the chair on the back of his "top buggy" so, in spite of mother's insistance that he do so he would not, but said they would come again when weather was warmer and there was less risk of losing or harming the chair — So, the beloved old rocker was left to be carried home another day.

Time went on and Aunt Eliza and Aunt Ruth died before they returned to get it.

Aunt Eliza's daughter knew of the gift but she never offered to give the chair to my mother and mother hesitated to ask for it and died without receiving it — and grieved over it as long as she lived.

After Emma's death her niece, Florence, (grand daughter of Eliza Hoppin Kellogg) learned the true story of the rocker, which already carried with it the story that great grandmother sat in it and drove a team of horses from New York State to Michigan about the year 1835 or 36 — as well as the story I have related above, she, very graciously decided that I was entitled to the rocker and was kind enough to bring it to me.

Nothing she could have given me would have made me as happy as that old rocker. I have spent hours and hours in that old rocker, doing the kind of fancy work my mother told me that my great grandmother used to do when she sat in it, and I love it and the comfort of it and my mind goes back to the stories my mother told me, and as my own grandmother died before my mother could remember her, grandmother was like a mother to her, and to me, she is the only grandmother I ever knew anything about, and, as I sit here alone in her old rocker, I feel that I really am not alone — memories of her are with me as I recall the stories my mother told me.

Aunt Ruth was a mother too, to the motherless children and was very dear to them, and to me, her oldest great niece.

I hope for a few more years to enjoy my great grandmother's old rocker, and — I hope with all my heart that my son will cherish it and pass it on to someone directly in line who will also love it — not — because it is "antique," but, because it has meant so much to the former owners, and, for the memories it brings to us, as a family.

A pioneer mother who rode in a covered wagon — drove a team of horses from New York state to Michigan — and grandfather drove the other team — and my mother, rode in a covered wagon to Dakota Territory in 1880 — and cared for brother Amos and I and did her best as wife and mother, just as her grandmother did — no other grandchild did as grandmother did — and so the aunts said she, my mother, should have the rocker — (I rode 700 miles in a covered wagon). I love the old rocking chair.

Claim to be direct descendants of Hugo de Maltby who was in the train of William the Conqueror (1060).

All American Maltbys belong to John Maltby of Kexby Hall, Lincolnshire, England, who was born about 1550.

He had a son Richard who was born in 1592 or 1593.

Richard had a son John (did not find his date of birth).

This John had a son William, who was born on March 16, 1644 or 1645 in England and it is this son William that your great-grandmother's family Maltby descended from. William evidently came to Branford, Connecticut from England in 1664 and he also lived in New Haven, Conn.

All American Maltbys descent directly from William, for while he had brothers, they had or left no offspring.

The earliest New England record of Maltbys is dated June 1664, so you see how real American you are on your father's side of the family.

Here is the line of lineage —

COPIED FROM THE SOUTH HAVEN SENTINEL
MARCH 18TH, 1872

Good morning, sir! By your looks I see
That you are a stranger in Number Three.
Just step this way for a quiet talk,
And tell me as onward slowly we walk,
If Nature's garb could more lovely be,
Than here in District Number Three.

O, a lovely district this Number Three;
Birds gaily carol in happy glee;
Flowers blossom, and fruits in plenty grow;
And music's sweetest melodies flow;
And our children, happy as youth can be,
Go to our school in Number Three.

And, with your leave sir, we'll go to-night
To our school house which is just in sight,
And you shall see that the truth I tell,
When I say that in learning our youth excel;
For with your own eyes you shall see
That we keep no dunces in Number Three.

Our officers, stately and stern, but true;
(Some of them wore the "Loyal blue";)
Perform their duties as they should,
For they punish the evil, but praise the good;
And so we are well behaved you see—
For why? We live in Number Three.

Then, too, our teacher; some folks say
"He's very quiet in his way";
I'll tell you in confidence; he's got grit,
Which is quite to his pupil's benefit;
And a very orderly school have we
Who live this winter in Number Three.

Our people are modest, and quiet, you know;
For to whisky saloons we do not go;
The consequence is, we are all quite steady,
And ever to do a kind deed are ready;
So I'm sure with me you will quite agree,
That I'm glad I live in Number Three.

Then the grand old Lake in summer time,
Fills our hearts with thoughts of things sublime
Who, seeing each day this lovely view,
Would not seek to be noble, good, and true.
O, yes, the Creator's hand we see
Who live in District Number Three.

So, because we're not rich, we do not fret,
Nor seek by treachery, money to get;
But labor patiently day by day,
To earn our bread as best we may;
Grateful for mercies past are we,
And content to live in Number Three.

Then hail to District Number Three!
And long may we live in harmony;
Long may our people with children be blest,
And long may our teacher teach his best,
And soon may the world our prosperity see,
Who live in happy Number Three.

And do you ask why I spend my time
In writing this useless, silly rhyme?
In putting this jingle of words together
In this beautiful and fair spring weather;
My answer is plain, as plain can be,
I live in District Number Three.

Recalling Former Days

Cecil Mahoney brought a cancelled check to the Republican office. He said he found it on the street but where it has been hiding for the past 26 years has not been disclosed.

The check is dated at Decatur October 10, 1915, is drawn on the Citizens' State Bank in favor of Butler Brothers by W. H. Fletcher, and the amount named is $13.12. It has been stamped 'paid' by the Citizens State Bank so is not now holding against the maker.

Will Fletcher spent his early years in Decatur. He clerked in Decatur stores and was for a while in the grocery business with his father. For the past 20 years he has been employed in the Parchment Paper Company and has risen to a position of responsibility and importance. Mrs. Fletcher also had her origin in Decatur and is well remembered by older residents as Edith Howe, an unusually efficient trained nurse.

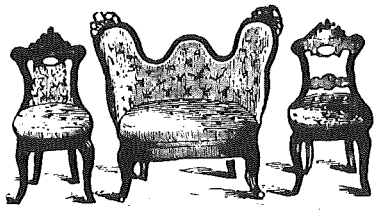
Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher rent an apartment in Kalamazoo through the winter months, and own a summer home at Gull Lake where they reside a large proportion of the time.

Butler Brothers is one of the oldest and largest wholesale merchandising establishments in the middle west.



SUPERVISOR DAVID A. SQUIER

Born Nov. 22, 1834, Died Nov. 19, 1907

David A. Squier, who passed from this life on the nineteenth day of November, as was recorded in the Republican last week, was born in Volinia township, Cass county, November 22, 1834. His seventy-third birthday was the day of his funeral.

He comes of a New England family which was founded in America in the early colonial days. His grandfather, William Squier, was born in New Jersey in 1756, and farming was his life's occupation. He moved to Pennsylvania where his son Daniel C., father of our deceased townsman, was born in 1800.

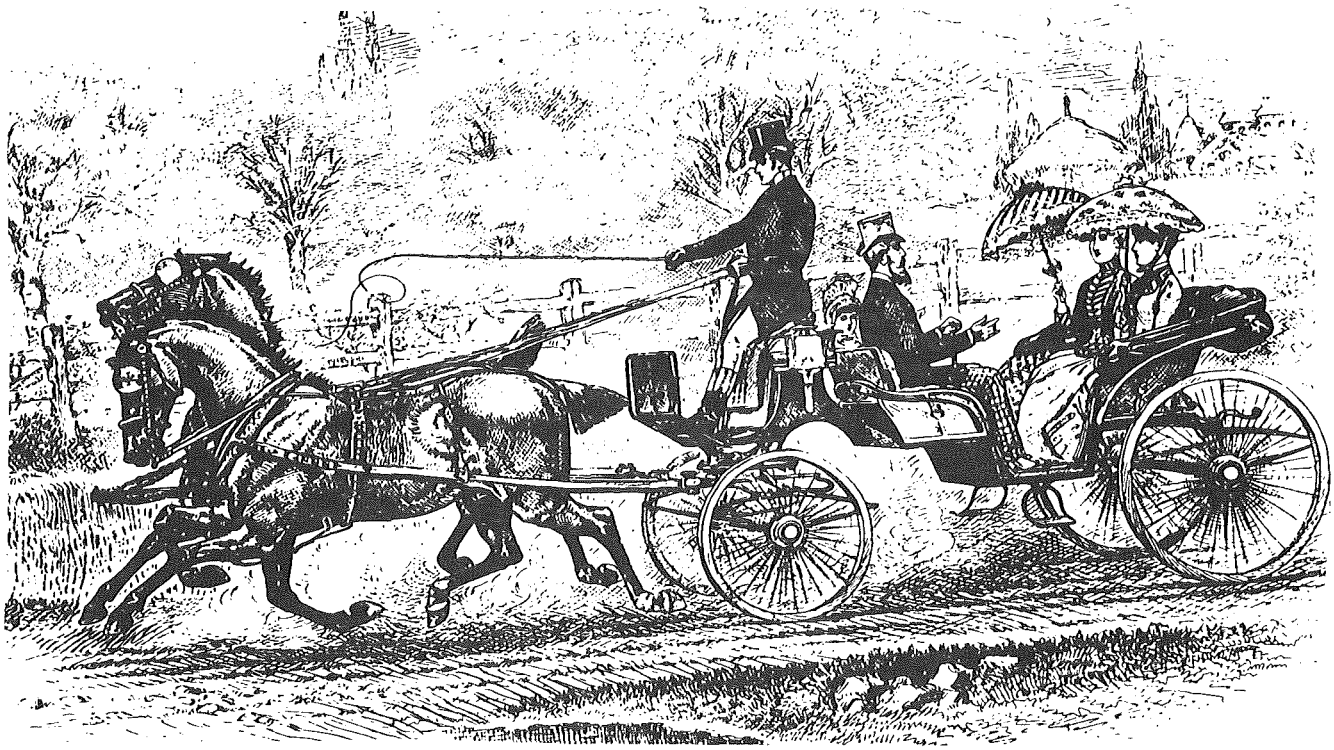
Daniel C. Squier emigrated to Volinia, Cass county, in 1831, and his father, who was with the family on a visit, died there in 1832. He was the first to be buried in Crane cemetery. Daniel C. Squier died in 1873 and his wife, who was Elizabeth Case, a native of Northumberland county, Penn., followed him in 1881.

David A. Squier was one of nine children, of whom but one, Mrs. Susanah Morlan, survives. He spent his boyhood days on the farm and was married November 18, 1860, to Miss Mary A. Rich, a daughter of Samuel A. Rich, who settled in Volinia in 1833.

Mr. Squier purchased forty acres of land which is now a part of the Lewis Morlan farm, and resided there until 1868 when he moved to Decatur. For ten years he was in the grocery business in this village, being associated for two years with Isaac B. Higgins. Since then he has been actively engaged in farming and his farm on the northern village limits is one of the finest in the county.

He was one of the stockholders of the Hinkley Stave Company, in the days when it was Decatur's best industry. He always found time to devote to public interests and in the years past has served as township treasurer, member of the school board, village assessor and village president. Fourteen years ago he was elected supervisor for the first time. The next year he did not run, but twelve years ago he was reelected and served continuously until his death. He was a Democrat in politics, but the people elected him year after year to a strong republican township. He was the oldest supervisor in point of service in the county and had twice been elected chairman of the board.

Mr. Squier was the father of two children, Harley E. and Eddy H. They and their mother survive him.



Danny's Thinker Goes 'Way Back

By Danny

I want to tell you a lot about the Decatur high school of the long ago—back 50 years and over—but leading up to that I want to tell you a "bunch of pioneer stuff"— mostly about the boys and girls of which schools are made. I wish I had the gift of words potent to make you visualize—to get a vivid mental picture of those early days so radically different from the present. Boys and men were "backwoodsens"—pants tucked into the boot tops. Boys' boots had copper toes; men's boots red facing at the front trop of boot leg. Fancy? Of course! A man with shoes on was a sissy or a tenderfoot.

The principal amusement of the young people was the country square dance with two fiddlers, but one would do. "Arkansas Traveller" and "Money Musk" were some of the few tunes the fiddlers sawed on cat-gut and the stentorian voice of the caller, who was usually one of the fiddlers, kept us on the jump--and jump is right. There was a "heap o' action" in even a little dance when the company got warmed up; some of the girls could double shuffle to queen's taste, and the boys, they would "stomp" hard enough and jump high enough to make the plaster fall—if there had been any plaster, which there wasn't, only whitewash.

You notice we don't have fiddles any more; they have graduated from college and are violins, and the performers are all violinists now even if they flat or sharp every note. Fights were not uncommon at those dances.

If the lie was passed, the fireworks began without useless waste of words, and usually we danced all night till broad day-light and went home with the girls in the morning. And those dances held mostly in log houses where the old elevated oven cook stove was set out in the snow to make room for one set, dimly lighted with a few tallow candles, was full of joy to us, not exceeded if held in the grand hall of the king's palace. And the girls, pretty? Sure, with glassy hair done up in nets, calico dresses with three thousand pearl buttons, more or less, up the back, long hoop expanded skirts; the bigger the hoops the more stylish the lady—and underneath, to keep those expensive skirts in proper form was a wealth of hand stitched lingerie—so I've been told. Say! Silk stockings, abbreviated skirts, bobbed hair, the lip stick and the eye-brow specialist hold no points over those girls of 60 years ago.

Fetching? I'll say so. They were spell-binders! Glorious eyes that told so much that meant so little—those carmine inviting lips—the bewitching smile, with a thousand little seductive arts and mannerisms common to the sex ever since Eve beguiled Adam, on down to A. D. 1922 in Decatur, Mich.; and they worked wonders and our girls with our new fads and frills are doing business at the old stand in the identical same old way. Yep! and we are mighty proud of them, too.

Barn Raisings Big Events

The pioneers were building barns. Barn raisings were many every summer and an event of neighborhood interest when all the men turned out to raise the heavy timbers and the women to prepare the supper; and often at raisings and logging bees whiskey was in large evidence with plenty of tin cups to drink "Your health, Sir," and often the connival spirit was stirred to dizzy heights.

The rivalry among the ladies of the different neighborhoods was who could get the best supper and finally this took form in pie. Other things being equal the one who had the most count and said it his stomach was India rubber he could eat the other piece. He was only sick two weeks, and had the doctor three times, and the neighbors had to get in his hay.

Hard continuous labor from sun up till sun down was universal and the big man of the community was the one that could do the biggest day's work, and sometimes one with a vivid imagination would tell how, when, and where he cradled ten acres of wheat in a day and it took two good men to "take it up" after him—about five acres was his limit in our neighborhood.

Jumping and wrestling were common pastimes. The little old red school house specialized in "reading, riting, rithmetic"; anything much outside of the three R's was superfluous and a waste of time and effort. Spelling schools—lots of them every winter; often a little neighborhood dance after.

The lumber wagon was the almost exclusive vehicle, going to mill or to meeting. A farmer with a buggy was a noted man for miles around. Peaches and apples rotted on the ground for lack of a market. Men, women and children worked overtime and by candle light drying fruit and every housewife made some "preserves," but there was no canned stuff in those days, and no sewing machines.

Horace Greely's Tribune in Pioneer Homes

If the best room had a carpet, it was a rag carpet. Our house had such a carpet, on the center table, made of plain boards, covered with a chenille spread, reposed the old family Bible. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the New York Weekly Tribune, edited and published by Horace Greely, and these three for a long time prior to and during the Civil War held about equal sway in our family, and each was read every evening. You of today will say our whole scheme of life was narrow and monotonous. So it was, but it had its compensations—in good health, strong nerves and peaceful, restful slumber.

One great outstanding yearly event that broke the monotony was the circus. Every year the front side of Sammy Cole's barn was covered with those grogeous, impossible, mammoth pictures of men and animals in lurid coloring and a line of seductive talk, detailing the wonders of the greatest show on earth in such glowing terms that you read it with abated breath. Those stunning pictures stopped everybody unless going for the doctor. Even the deacon studied them—of course with a frown—lamenting that the circus was a cunning device of the Devil to slide people into Hades—only in those days they used another word —and while the deacon thus expressed his mind about the circus he admitted the menagerie was a fine educational feature and likely he would take the boys to see the parade and the animals. He told his wife when he got home that this circus was different; it was all right. How do you suppose he knew? Yep, one 50 cent ticket admitted to both the menagerie and circus. Everybody wanted to hoe corn and every girl wanted to pick berries as soon as those pictures were posted, and any kid, ten or over, that failed to go to the circus was an object of pity in the country side. We planted corn one year on new ground with an ax. We harvested a fine crop of corn from that field—we mean the squirrels and us. The black squirrels harvested their full share. Most boys of a dozen years or more had a rifle and we shot oodles of black squirrels every year, but for many falls they made great havoc in the cornfields.

Those days have gone forever.

Well, Danny, you sure are some rambler—a long way from Decatur High. Have patience, I'm coming back.

In my last I told you mostly about the social and educational life of the young people with the little red school house the community center, the barn raisings, logging bees, and the lure of the circus. Now I want to tell you so much of that long, long ago, covering twenty odd years, in fact, nearly thirty years, which closed with the resumption of specie payment on January 1, 1879. The next cycle taking us from 1879 to 1900.

All too little has been written revealing and picturing the pioneer thought of that period—religious, political and financial. Their main purpose we well know—to hew a home out of the forest, gain a competency for old age, educate and provide for their children. Those old pioneers were intensely loyal, not only to the nation, the state and the fireside, but to their convictions and purposes. They were intensely frugal and thrifty, intensely progressive in thought, intensely active; in fact, as a whole, in-

As witness the birth of the Republican party under the oaks in Jackson July 6, 1854, whose object was to keep slavery from spreading, from entering the territories. It was founded on faith in the right, with not a ray of hope in sight. Its following so insignificant that the press of the country predicted it would die in the borning. What transpired during the next eleven years to the close of the Civil War is history with which all are, or ought to be, familiar, and I cannot refrain from quoting here the inscription on the bronze inset on a huge field stone that marks the spot, where our fathers pledged their faith in the right—

"Here under the oaks July 6, 1854, was born the Republican party, destined amid the throes of civil strife to abolish slavery, vindicate democracy and perpetuate the Union."

And it was our pioneer fathers and grandfathers of this Van Buren county and Berrien and Cass and most of the organized counties of southern Michigan. Those sturdy ancestors of ours could work from sun till sun, eat hog and hominy and wear coarse homespun, drink sassafras tea and bran coffee—go to mill with an ox team, and have the vision and faith to launch in action what they believed right—yes, they were men of action—to think was to act. Are we proud of them? Yes, of course, but how often do we think of it and really do we give them proper credit and consideration? I guess not. Their achievements are the heritage which we now enjoy.

And many an ample fortune was founded in those days by the most rigid economy and self denial. I'll tell you a true story to illustrate the point. One night in the early spring of 1856 B. A. Olney woke up his neighbor, Mr. Easton, living some three miles away, saying, "Vet, I want to borrow your best pants, as I am on the road to St. Joe with a big load of potatoes, and I can trade the potatoes for goods and I'll get a pair of good pants. Mine are not fit to wear on the street."

Coming back the next night he woke up Easton and gave him back his pants. Easton asked to see the new pants. Olney said, "I didn't buy any pants, potatoes were scarce and higher and I sold them for cash, so I could not afford the pants."

B. A. Olney died many years ago the richest man in three counties, if not in southwestern Michigan. He drew those potatoes 18 miles with an ox team, taking the most of two nights and one day. But for the last twenty years of his life B. A. Olney wore a silk hat and tailored clothes. One pioneer old lady told me some years ago that the paper of pins bought when they began housekeeping lasted 17 years. Another said their first box of matches lasted five years.

Only wheat, hogs and wool would bring money and before the Civil War wheat was less than a dollar a bushel and labor on the farms around seventy-five cents an hour! O, no seventy-five cents a day. An eight or ten hour day? No, a day was from sun-rise till sun-set, with a short hour for noon, haying and harvest a dollar to ten shillings. There was no granulated or white sugar, except loaf sugar, which was expensive. Maple sugar was cheap and plentiful in the timber, but every housewife had some "muscavado" sugar for company, and she had to give two pounds of maple for one of the "muscavado," which was a light colored brown sugar. Berries, when you could sell them, brought about four cents a quart—in trade. No boxes or crates. Those merchants took scripture measure, too, when buying. In those early days the merchandise was rather poor—poor quality, but high in price. But little ready made apparel was on the market. All women's wear was made in the home or neighborhood and most men's wear.

A merchant in a fair-sized town would not sell a dozen ready-made shirts in a year, but might sell a hundred bolts of "hickory" shirting, nankeen for boys' Sunday summer pants, and plenty of denims. Men's under clothes? Nix, nobody wore 'em, winter or summer. I never wore any 'till I went into the army the summer of '64.

The clothes—socks, stockings, and mittens—were made by the girls and women and the sewing was all done by hand; sewing machines were rare in 1870. I bought the first machine in our neighborhood in 1871, and was severely criticised by some of the able, forehanded farmers at my reckless extravagance for fooling away $75.00 for what they, their grandfathers, and so on back to the fig leaf never needed and the women folks better off without. Why you could buy a pretty good horse for $75.00.

In less than ten years they all had sewing machines and in less than twenty years men were buying all their clothes and footwear ready-made and the women to quite an extent, 'till now with women's wear it is also mostly shop-made.

I bought a riding cultivator about the time I got the sewing machine. Two of my neighbors, best corn raisers in the community, warned me against that cultivator. The double shovel was the one and only tool to raise good corn; cleaned twice with the hoe—couldn't possibly grow good corn without a double shovel plow—and twice hoeing, and besides that cultivator cost $40 and you can buy the double shovel for $3.50. But in less than ten years they had quit hoeing corn and used riding cultivators and the double shovel was sold for $1.50 at the neighbor's auction.

The use of the reaper in England was retarded many years—the people broke up the machines, labor would starve. Now there, as elsewhere, everything possible is done by machines, and since that day the population of England has doubled and there is less idleness now than when they destroyed the reapers.

Sure I've lost prestage for truth and veracity. Many say it's conceivable that a paper of pins might last a family 17 years, but a box of matches lasting five years; never! About a dozen have accused me of drawing the "long bow" or I am in my dotage, or a cog is missing in my head gear, and of course I'm writing all these reminiscences from memory, and am very liable to make mistakes as to dates; otherwise it's the truth. Now Mr. Doubter, listen! A box of matches 50 years ago contained probably 500 or more matches and cost 25 cents. Both of my grandfathers were grown up men and had families before there were any matches. If the fire went out they struck a flint stone with a piece of steel, making a spark that ignited a piece of punk and often it was a long, tedious process before they got a blaze and often in damp weather the punk would not ignite, and then what? Why take an iron skillet and go to the neighbor's and borrow some fire. Now just imagine a cold drizzling morning in the fall—no live coals under the ashes, punk damp—going half a mile and borrowing fire to cook breakfast. The fire never went out in cold weather. From force of habit matches were very precious for many years. The old lady who told me the match story reared a large family and said they usually kept a candle burning all night on account of getting up with the children; saying also that now, living in her son's family they only used one match in the evening to light the first lamp or candle; paper strips did the rest. Now why not a box of those old fashioned square matches last five years? Say, have you ever thought what we would do now if there were no matches? Just think it over.

The Neighborhood Radio

With no telephones or radio we had the near radio—locally—the neighborhood quilting bee. No women missed that unless sick or dead, and if one lady was not invited, it was a stigma on her and her family, and she was a social outcast in the community for many moons. And how fast those 15 or 20 quilters worked, marvelous! And as the needles speeded up, so did the ripping, tearing and rending of the absent lady's character—motives, actions, beliefs and after the big supper in solemn whispers they would all agree not to mention a word about the lambasting given Mrs. Taylor and in less than three days it was known in all its detail for miles around. But they made some beautiful quilts.

The religion of those early days was mostly the "Old Time" religion. The preaching mostly hell fire and brimstone or doctrinal sermons that continued into the forthly and fifthly and lastly.

Everybody went to meetin', which was never oftener than once in two weeks—sometimes only every four weeks. Every school district carried on a Sunday school only during the summer in the little red school house. No lesson leaves or Sunday school papers—lessons from the Bible, first commiting to memory the Ten Commandments—and two of the songs we often sung were "I Want to be an Angel and With the Angles Stand," and "Happy Day," and most people of the country-side, far and near, whether professed Christians or not, believed the Bible, and why not?

They had seen and felt, day by day, the influence of the simple implicit faith of their mothers and grandmothers through all the stresses of an arduous and self-sacrificing life. Had heard their prayers to the Father when in sore need of what the world could not give. Had seen those old wrinkled faces radiant from the simple unquestioned faith that never failed them in life, and finally with joy and perfect trust carried them through the Valley and Shadow, home to the better land, and my friends, that homely simple religion is just as good today to live by and die by as it was in the pioneer days of our grandmothers.

There was once a year when for a brief hour or so most of the men, to my notion, took off their religion and laid it on the shelf, and that was at the annual school meeting. Five minutes after coming to order the argument was on—ten minutes they were quarrelling and indulging in personalities—fifteen minutes all on their feet shaking fists and all yelling at once. The cause, the new general tax law, supporting the schools of the state by tax levied on all the property in the district instead of paying teachers by rate bills, which meant parents paid a flat rate for each scholar they sent to the school. And this is the way it works out: John Jones, a poor man with six children of school age, would keep his younger children out of school till they were eight or nine years old and likely not send any over, say fourteen, because he could not pay the two or three dollars apiece for tuition. The well-to-do men who had no children to send paid of course nothing. So you see the rate-bill method of paying teachers was really a premium on ignorance and being no compulsory attendance law the discretion of the parents and poverty or often avarice kept many children from school.

New School Tax Law Denounced

The new law was severely criticized throughout the state, in some instances by the press, and the taxpayers without children of school age denounced it unconstitutional and gross class legislation.

It happened in our district the heaviest taxpayers and most prominent men had no children of school age and they resented the depletion of their pocket-books to school other folks' brats. It was worse than highway robbery—a lot of poor, worthless devils the next thing would vote them out of house and home. So after quarrelling over what was already the law, while in the heat they quarrelled and jangled to cheapen the school—and they did. Teachers' wages were $20.00 to $25.00 per month for men in winter schools and less for women. Fuel, 4 foot wood, $1.00 to $1.25 per cord, but the old box stove was a great wood eater.

The big tax payers always tried to have a woman teacher in the winter as well as in the summer—cheaper. The teachers "boarded around" in those days and taught every other Saturday. But few women could handle a winter school, which was usually only three months—especially our school. Jud. Dyer went to be examined for a certificate to teach our school. He had been farming and was a little rusty and fearful he might not pass. The old Squire was quite short on book education, but long on good practical horse sense. Young ladies said the Squire was a terror on examinations, asking such unusual questions as "If an apple and a half costs a cent and three-quarters, how much will ten cost?" or "How much will two pounds of hay cost at ten dollars a ton?"

"Squire," says Mr. Dyer, "I hearn tell you're quite a 'rassler.'

"Who have you rassled with?" asked the Squire.

"Mr. Avery, Polk Everett and Pitt Bass."

"Well, did Mr. Avery throw you?"

"No."

"Well, I guess I've examined you on the principal branch for the Olds school, so I'll give you a second grade certificate, but if Avery had thrown you it would be third grade."

Jud. Dyer taught the best district school I ever attended. He jerked the coat collar off one husky, unmooring one end of the long desk in front. The husky stood on the floor and Jud held the fort.

WAS BLACKSMITH MAN OR WOMAN

MASQUERADED IN WOMAN'S CLOTHES FOR SEVERAL YEARS AND CONDUCTED BLACKSMITH SHOP WITHOUT HELP

Workmen on the Dixie trail this summer will pass near Osborne's corners, six miles north of Dowagiac the farm on which 60 years ago was located Ann Farcey's blacksmith shop, writes Abner Moon in the Democrat. This strange woman came into the community in the fifties from no one knew where, and bought 40 acres of land. She was a powerfully built woman, silent and uncommunicative, probably through a misfortune which had befallen her—the loss of one of her limbs. She supplied this loss with a wooden one.

She established a blacksmith shop on the place, and for a great many years operated it, always alone, and doing any kind of repair work which came to the shop, as well as shoeing horses, making wagons, sleds, etc. Owing to the location she was always busy. She was a good workman. On Sundays, she seldom missed one, she walked from her home to the Catholic church in Silver Creek, a distance of four miles, and she was an exemplary, valued member of that faith. She was as exemplary in other ways as she was in religious matters—courteous, but never sociable and talkative. In her Sunday attire she was attractive, but she made few friends. Many stories were told by the older residents of her great strength and skill, and when she finally sold the property and moved away she was missed. Later came the news that she was dead, and came rumors that Ann Farcey was really a man.

Just why this mysterious person should pose as a woman if really a man, could only be explained on the theory that he, or she, might be a fugitive from justice. The place was owned by the Holliday family over 40 years. Nelson Phelps later bought it, and it is now owned by Lewis Wright. The blacksmith shop long since disappeared, and there are but two or three persons in that vicinity who, as a child, remember Ann Farcey, the woman blacksmith, and the only one the state ever had, probably.

'Red' Woolfe Going Strong After 'Century' of Service

By RON McCREA
Gazette Staff Writer

DECATOR — Add up Elmer E. "Red" Woolfe's time with the Decatur Fire Department and his years with the Van Buren County Sheriff's Department and you come out with a total two years short of a century.

But for "Red," the record is tallied only in terms of people and projects.

Like the time he and his department convinced women to man cross-cut saws in a project to construct ballpark floodlights.

Or the time he and a lifesaving team consisted of a number ing team he had coached demonstrated first aid to the Marines. The team consisted of a number of Paw Paw boys during the 1940's who had requested instruction. A group of Marines asked that they show the newest methods of artificial respiration, and the group complied.

Or the times he and other Decatur firemen put on weekly shows for the public.

"When I joined the fire department in 1914, we fought fire the hard way with very rude equipment," he said. "We had an old hose cart that is now in the Henry Ford Museum, rubber buckets for the brigade, and hand pumping wagons."

He recalls with some pride the Decatur department's role in helping to extinguish the great stockyards fire in Chicago in 1934. Equipment was sent from Decatur to help out in the Windy City.

He also recalls with some embarrassment the time his own fire hall burned down and all the town's firefighting equipment was destroyed.

"Kalamazoo's Chief Russell helped us out then with loaned equipment until we could buy more," he said.

If Red is prouder of anything than the department he led as chief for 41 years, it is the people he served.

"People have always been so helpful," he said. "I recall when we used to put on our weekly shows. I told the people, "if you will stay here and be in order if a fire calls us out, I can stay and the show will go on. But if I have to leave to handle a crowd at a fire, there won't be any more programs.' "

"I never had to leave the stage," he said.

Woolfe, who has answered more than 1,000 fire calls, feels firefighting is more hazardous than police work, since "there are more chances of danger at a fire."

He speaks highly of the men who have served on the volunteer department under him.

"They were men of good ability, they liked their work, they were loyal. And I never asked any man in my department to do anything I wouldn't do or anything he couldn't do," he said.

Yet Red today maintains that the "kids were my best friends."

He said he "made quite an issue" of having every school child in the area come to the fire station, see the polished equipment, and talk to the firemen.

He served as advisor to many children.

"Once I picked up a 10-year-old boy and took him fishing after we got his granmother's permission. The boy later went to Arkansas.

"Then one day, 40 years later, he turned up in town to see me. I visited him a few years later in his state. He was a state senator—Gather Johnson.

Red returned from the visit with a certificate signed by Gov. Orval Faubus. It proclaims "Red" to be an official "Arkansas Traveler," an Ambassador of Good Will from Arkansas to the People of Other States, People of Nations Beyond the Borders of the Unites States, or Whereever this Ambassador of Arkansas May Reside."

Red served as deputy sheriff for 45 years, taking a three-year leave of absence for health reasons from 1959-64. He admits, "I have taken home more than I have arrested."

"Especially the young people," he said. "I used to give them a choice of who I could take them to for counseling — their parents, their clergyman, a teacher, or even me."

In addition to his roles as counselor, fire chief, law enforcer, community promoter, and first aid instructor, Red has taken on other tasks.

He as Decatur's first softball coach, and he says he prays "every time I go to a pro game that somebody will ask me to be umpire!"

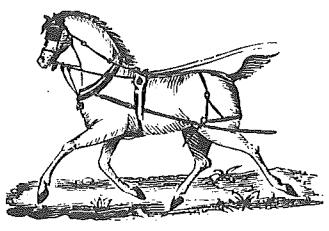
With all of this behind him, Red — who picked up the nickname when his hair was the color of flame — still puts in a four-day shift as a deputy in the lake patrol and telephone standby man for the fire department.

While his present work is not as rigorous as it was in other years. he confesses that the thrill of fire action is in his blood.

"Every time I hear the fire signal, I feel as important as anyone else. I want to get to the fire and start helping hook up hoses and work ladders," he said.

"But I know I can't do it. So I get out and direct traffic and help keep the people back."

Red and his wife, who have been married for 56 years, were recently honored at a dinner by more than 100 firemen from Decatur, Paw Paw and Keeler, members of the sheriff's depart-



Twenty Years Ago In Decatur

The following historical sketch of the Universalist Society is taken from the Decatur Headlight, a church paper published by the ladies of the Universalist church in 1901. The article is taken from the edition of August 3. A copy of the magazine was preserved by Mrs. L. D. Roberts, a member of the society, and loaned to the Republican.

The First Universalist Parish of Decatur, Michigan, was organized May 27, 1868. The following year the society purchased for a house of worship the church which had been occupied by the Presbyterians and is now owned by the Catholics. Rev. J. Merrifield was the first pastor and organized the church in January, 1869 with twenty-four members—Mrs. Elias Morris is the only one now living here of that number. The society continued services for a few years with Mr. Merrifield and Mr. Queal as pastors.

On account of deaths and removals the society was dormant until 1880, when services were begun in the town hall and Rev. A. J. Chapin was called as pastor to preach once in two weeks; she coming each time from her home in Eden, Michigan. The parish was reorganized January 2, 1881, and it was decided to build a church, Father Trowbridge donating the lot for the purpose. The church was dedicated free from debt November 22, 1881. Miss Chapin remained as pastor two years and was much respected and loved by the socity. Rev. Mr. Headle followed with a short pastorate and then Dr. Weaver came for a year from Chicago to preach once in two weeks. The pastors who succeeded him were Revs. Alcott, Colegrove, Marsh, June and Estey. The last one reorganized the church and organized a Young People's society. After his resignation there was no regular pastor for the next three years and only occasional preaching. The Y. P. C. U. held its meetings every Snday morning and the Snday school was held immediately after.

In March, 1895, a great disaster came to the faithful few in the loss of their church by fire, but, undaunted, the next Sunday morning found them in a hall holding Y. P. C. U. and Sunday school. To the insurance of $900 they decided to add enough to build a $1,500 church which was soon begun and was ready for dedication the next December.

The following June, in 1896, through the influence of Rev. W. E. Gibbs of Concord, Mich., who had taken a great interest in the society, Geo. B. Rogers, a student of Lombard Theological school, came to preach through his vacation of three months. The society was so pleased with him that when he returned to college it was with the understanding that he should be the pastor after he graduated the next year. He settled here in July, 1897, and remained as pastor till November, 1900. He was ordained in September, 1897, and in July, 1889, was married in the church to Miss Fannie Collins, who has been a faithful worker with him. Mr. Rogers' health compelled him to retire from preaching and pastoral work, but he still lives in the place and is of great help in all branches of the society.

This chuch is fortunate in having another ex-pastor, Rev. R. Queal, who has been a resident of Decatur twenty-nine years previous, but failing health and a failure in voice compelled him to retire from active pastoral work and he located here and devoted himself to the culture of fruit. * * *

The church is particularly fortunate in its present pastor, Rev. E. H. Minor, who was a classmate of Mr. Rogers and who came here upon his recommendation.

The Sunday school was organized in 1881 as soon as the new church was completed. It has been in active operation ever since. Although never large its members have been interested and faithful. L. D. Roberts has been for many years the efficient superintendent.

The Y. P. C. U. was organized in April, 1892. It took the place of the church service when there was no pastor, and it is believed that this society and the Sunday school kept the parish alive in days of discouragement.

The Ladies' Aid society of the church is an important auxiliary. It meets the first Wednesday in every month and plans an entertainment to raise money. It helps on the pastor's salary and sustains all incidental expenses. The latest and most enthusiastic organization at present is the Junior Y. P. C. U., which was established last April with Mrs. G. B. Rogers as superintendent. There are over twenty members and the meetings are conducted by the children, and enlivened by the use of the Junior song book. The officers are, president, Paul Squier; vice president, Myron Hinkley; secretary, Mary Vining; treasurer, Myra Lawrence.

MARRIED IN LONDON FIFTY YEARS AGO

MR. AND MRS. THOMAS CULVERHOUSE WILL CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY WITH FAMILY REUNION SUNDAY

Fifty years ago today, May 18, 1872, in the great city of London, England, Thomas Culverhouse and Susan Williams marched to the altar and were united in marriage.

Today, after fifty years of life together, years of joy and sorrow, happiness and hardships, Mr. and Mrs. Culverhouse are quietly celebrating the event at their comfortable home south of Decatur. Next Sunday, members of their family from Kalamazoo and Benton Harbor will come here to attend a golden wedding celebration and enjoy a family reunion.

Mr. and Mrs. Culverhouse have lived forty-eight of their fifty years of married life in Decatur. The former came to America soon after his wedding, and after working a year in northern Michigan, went back to England for his wife and a little son, who had come to live with them. South Bend was their first home in this country, but they lived there only a few months, before coming to Decatur.

Mr. Culverhouse bought a small tract of land just south of the village, which he cleared, and in 1880 built the house that has since been the family home.

Mrs. Culverhouse's father followed the business of shoemaker. She was born in Lambrook, Somersetshire, but the family moved to London when she was ten years old. Mr. Culverhouse's father was a grower of herbs just outside the city of London, and the boy was born there. As he grew up the parents were ambitious that he should be a jeweler, and he was bound out to a London jeweler for a term of apprenticeship. Tom learned the trade, but followed it only a short time after being released. He liked building better, and after coming to Decatur worked for Dan Carney to learn the trade of stone mason, which he has followed the most of his life. There is scarcely a building in Decatur that he has not had a hand in building or repairing.

In addition to his work as mason, Mr. Culverhouse has found time to till the gardens which surround his home, and much fine produce finds its way onto the Decatur market from these fields every year.

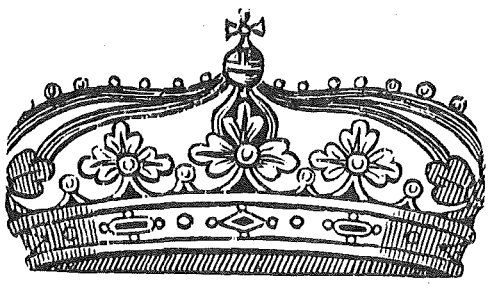
Mrs. Culverhouse has been busy rearing the family of three children, and keeping up the home. The children, George, Mabel and Bert, have long since gone out into the world and to homes of their own, but there are ten grandchildren and a little great grandchild, who frequently visit the old homestead, and liven things up with their laughter and funmaking. George, the eldest, passed away several years ago.

Mr. Culverhouse is now 71 years of age and his wife is three years his senior. Both are enjoying fairly good health. They are happy in the love of their children and are honored and esteemed by many friends. The Republican joins their friends in wishing them many more happy anniversaries together.



WAS OLD LANDMARK

PARDONET BUILDING TORN DOWN BY CHAS. UPFIELD, ONE OF THE OLDEST OF MAIN STREET STORES

One of the oldest landmarks of the village was torn down last week by Chas. Upfield. It was the old Pardonet building located just south of the village fire station.

This building was erected in an early day, and was occupied for many years by Peter Pardonet, a Frenchman, and harness maker. Pardonet had a shop in the front part of the building and lived in the rear. While he owned the building it was remodeled, to make more room. Pardonet died about twenty-five years ago, and his store passed into other hands. It has since been owned by a number of merchants, and been used for a number of different kinds of business, including shoe shop, meat market and machine shop.

L. G. Stewart, one of Decatur's oldest merchants, says that the building was standing when he came to Decatur in the late sixties, but cannot remember who was occupying it at that time. A saloon stood to the south of it and the Baker hotel, with a man by the name of Galloway for proprietor, stood south of that.

On of the corner where the McCook & Brigham hardware now stands was a frame grocery store owned by Trowbridge and Hill. Our townsman, Theodore Trowbridge, was clerk in this store, and his uncle, William Trowbridge, was one of the proprietors. This store burned one night, and the two buildings north of it were also burned. Mr. Trowbridge says he was a good sleeper in those days and did not know of the fire until the following morning, when he went to the store to sweep out.

The oldest building standing in Decatur at the present time is the building occupied by the Springet restaurant and the Roberts electric shop. This building is also the property of Mr. Upfield, and it is rumored that he intends to raze it also in the spring.

This building was years ago located on the corner where the Decatur Shoe store now stands. When L. D. Roberts and L. G. Stewart built the brick store now on that site, they sold the frame building to A. B. Copley for $500 and delivered it to the site where it now stands. The moving at that time cost $50. It was used for various purposes, and a few years ago fitted up for a hardware by George Roberts, and occupied by him as such for a number of years.

SPENT SEVEN MONTHS IN LIBBY PRISON

JAY SHERMAN, WHO PASSED AWAY AT MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., MAY 23, LIVED HERE MANY YEARS AGO

Died at [illegible] May 23, 1922, aged 77, John [illegible] Sherman well-known to old settlers of this vicinity.

As a boy of seventeen in Batavia, N. Y., he saw Lincoln on his way to be inaugurated at Washington and ran away from home to enlist in the 64th New York Infantry, but was taken home because under age. The following year he re-enlisted in the 8th New York Heavy Artillery. This regiment ranked second in the Union army in number of battle deaths and with them he served at Cold Harbor and elsewhere until mustered out on June 20, 1865. In the meantime he had spent seven terrible months in Libby and Salisbury prisons. During that time he had no change of clothes, no bath, no bed, no shelter but an old tent, water with green frog spittle upon it and for daily ration a lump of cornbread the size of a fist, made by grinding corn and cob together, moistening the meal with water and baking the cakes in the sun. If in the morning one could drag the corpse of a comrade to the deadline, he received extra rations for that day. Mr. Sherman lost ninety pounds in six months and suffered terribly with scurvy afterward.

In spite of these experiences he never regretted his service for his country and did a man's work until near the end of his seventy-seven years. When the United States entered the World War, his patriotism encouraged younger men to do their duty.

But those who knew him best will remember him also for his quaint humor, always to the point and reminiscent of the "early days," but even more for his kindliness. "To know him was to love him." He leaves a son, Robert, of Pekin, Ill., and two daughters, Florence and Mrs. Caroline Rickey, both of Minneapolis, Minn. A true gentleman has left us. The world is richer for his life and poorer for his death.

NINETEEN YEARS IN RURAL MAIL SERVICE

STEPHEN CALBETZOR STARTED ROUTE THREE AND IS STILL THERE—GUY CALBETZOR SENIOR MEMBER OF DELIVERY CREW HERE

Nineteen years ago the first of October Rural Routes Nos. 3 and 4 were established and started from Decatur. The carriers were Stephen Calbetzor, No. 3, and Arthur Brigham, No. 4. Mr. Calbetzor is still on the job, having served the district south of Decatur steadily for nineteen years. During the time he has lost very little time outside of vacations, and there were but few days during the time that the roads made it impossible for him to get the mail to the most of his patrons.

Guy Calbetzor, brother of Stephen, is the senior member of the rural mail crew in the Decatur postoffice. He has been carrier on Route No. 2 for over twenty years. This route and No. 2 were established March 1, 1902, and Guy and Maynard Thomas were the first carriers appointed. Route No. 5, with Harry Jones as first carrier, was established about fifteen years ago.

Frank Brigham was appointed carrier for Route No. 1 to succeed Maynard Thomas. When Mr. Jones left No. 5, Mr. Brigham was transferred to that route, and Elmer Graham was appointed carrier for No. 1. Fred Rafter succeeded Arthur Brigham as carier for Four, and when he was appointed postmaster, Dick Klinkers succeeded him.

AUSPICES PREBYTERIAN WOMAN'S SOCIETY

WOMANLESS WEDDING PLEASING SUCCESS

BUSINESS MEN LAY ASIDE CARES AND DON WIVES' APPAREL FOR AN EVENING—FUN, BUT WOULDN'T LIKE IT REGULAR, MEN SAY

There are about fifteen or twenty men in Decatur who will hereafter have a lot more patience with friend wife, or best girl, while waiting for her to get ready for an evening out. Pinched, pinned and sewed into their wives, or in most cases, some other larger, woman's garments, spending minutes that seemed hours, having the last clever touch to the hair, and walking up and down the room like a Paris model to get the right skirt effect. Once is enough, they say. Let wifey have her clothes and all the time she wants to put them on.

The "Womanless Wedding," staged Tuesday evening under the direction of Mrs. E. J. Rawson for the Woman's Society of the Presbyterian church, was a pleasing success. The big town hall was filled beyond seating capacity, in spite of the fact that the weather had turned suddenly cold, and roads were bad.

At 8:15 the guests began to arrive. A ripple of amusement passed through the audience when Mr. and Mrs. Hakes, uncle and aunt of the bride, were escorted to the stage by two well [illegible]ned ushers. The ripple grew [illegible]ch when Madame Samaroff arrived, and [illegible]he open merriment when Aunt [illegible] heeling the baby (a squalling [illegible] followed by two mischievous [illegible]big) youngsters, made her

But the audience could contain its mirth no longer when the bridal party, headed by four beautiful (hand painted) bridesmaids, wended its way slowly and impressively down the center aisle and took its position around the altar. The ceremony was read by Dr. R. W. McCook of the First Corner Hardware, who took his text from a bible familiar to many. The bride was the first to kiss the groom, lifting the little fellow a full foot and a half to effect the act, but she refused to accept the affections of a disappointed group of relatives and close friends.

Before the ceremony Madame Galli-Curci sang very impressively, "I Left My Heart in Ireland," and later in the vening the Faculty "mixed" quartette gave two much appreciated numbers. Madame Samaroff presided at the piano, and was given an opportunity to display his talents when the wedding party engaged in a Virginia reel to close the event.

The bride informs the Republican that he is very sorry he forgot to throw his bouquet before the curtain went down, but it was thrown and caught by a well known young bridesmaid, of more than usual proportions, whose engagement may be expected at any time.

A New Problem

When first the marriage knot was tied
Between my wife and me,
My age exceeded hers as much
As three times three does three.
But when ten years and half ten years
We married life had seen,
Her age came up as close to mine
As eight does to sixteen.
Find age when married and age now of each one.

CHAUTAUQUA OPENS HERE ON JULY 22

FIVE AFTERNOON AND EVENING PROGRAMS TO BE GIVEN LAST OF NEXT MONTH—GUARANTORS CALLED TO ORGANIZE

A meeting of the guarantors of the Chautauqua course which is scheduled to open here July 22 for a five day program, is called for Friday evening of this week at 7:30 at the Council rooms. Organization of an association as early as this is necessary to insure the success of the venture and to secure exemption from payment of war tax, if that privilege can be obtained.

Thirty local persons signed the Chautauqua contract which will bring these inspiring entertainments to Decatur. They are I. E. Roots, H. D. Wickett, Fred W. Read, J. E. Renne, Frank Flagg, J. C. DuBois, Orrin A. Isham, C. A. Hendricks, J. M. Ring, F. C. McWilliams, C. H. Lindsley, Albert Dwight, A. A. Kevan, Fred B. Buys, Calvin D. Mallard, O. W. Newell, John Vanderplough, R. W. McCook, M. A. Hinkley, W. E. Phillips, F. G. Rafter, Florence L. High, L. O. Hoxie, L. C. Gillesby, Carl N. Wickett, James McLeese, W. G. Lindsley, John F. Brigham, Lyle Graham, F. E. Lindsley.

The Chautauqua course this year contains features that promise much in the way of entertainment, the principal one of which is "The Shepherd of the Hills," Harold Bell Wright's popular novel, played by a large company.

Chautauqua patrons of last season will remember with considerable pleasure the program given by J. Lani Pa's Hawaiians, and other entertainers. This summer's program is certain to be as attractive, if not more so, than that of 1921. The Mutual Morgan Company, who furnish talent for the Chautauqua here, will give the programs in Dowagiac this season.

Decatur basket ball boys led over their opponents by a good margin last season. Stroh was high point man with a credit of 42 baskets. Ed. Conway chalked up 39 during the season and John Lawrence 21. Coach Ring, who developed this successful team, will go to St. Joe next season. His place will be taken by Ralph Wagner of Sturgis.

CUTTING ICE AT LAKE OF WOODS

HANEY CUTS SEVEN INCH ICE TO MAKE SURE OF A PORTION OF NEXT SUMMER'S SUPPLY

Fearing that the present winter may prove so mild that it will not be possible later to secure a supply of thick ice for his summer trade, Marlin Haney started last week the cutting of ice and filled his small ice house on the shores of Lake of the Woods.
